Earnings reports on 1953's first quarter—roughly coinciding with Pres. Eisenhower's "first 100 days" — are coming in. They are highlighted by reports of record sales and record profits by some of the nation's biggest basic industrial firms—U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, General Electric, American Telephone & Telegraph Co., etc.

"The first reports are full of cheer," Business Week magazine in its latest issue headlined a profits roundup on the '53 first quarter. Covering some 164 big firms, it reported sales climbed 19% and earnings 21% on the average.

A wider sample of 386 firms, reported by Labor Press Associated, listed profits as 10% higher than a year ago. And it pointed out that the predicted end of the excess profits tax on June 30 will mean another windfall for industry. Aircraft, food, railroads and utilities showed the largest gains.

Auto: General Motors Corp. announced a record $2.5 billion in sales during the first quarter. That was a $800 million increase over the previous year. Earnings climbed from $127 million to $151 million for the latest quarter. On a share basis, the increase was from $1.42 to $1.70.

Bethlehem—the industry's No. 2 producer—set new production and shipment records. Net income climbed from $18.9 million to $30,961,033 for comparable quarters. Per share earnings rose from $1.80 to $3.06.

Republic Steel Corp. boosted its sales 12% and its earnings 17% in the latest quarter. The earnings gain: from $11.7 million or $1.92 a share a year ago to $13.7 million or $2.26 a share. Jones & Laughlin Steel upped its quarterly dividend from 45c to 50c.

Electrical: Giant General Electric Co. reported the best quarter ever as '53 began. Sales jumped 39% to $777 millions, and profits jumped 58%. Earnings climbed from $29 million or $1.01 a share to $45 million or $1.59 a share.

Other big firms in the electrical industry were doing well, too. Sylvania Electric increased its earnings from $1.9 million or 87c a share a year ago to a record $3.6 million or $1.38 a share in the latest quarter. Westinghouse Electric climbed from $15.4 million or 96c a share to $16.8 million or $1.04 a share.

Utilities: A.T.&T.—the Bell System telephone holding company—upped its quarterly earnings by 17%, with officials saying "we have not been lax in going after rate increases." A.T.&T. earnings for the 12 months ending Mar. 31 were $373 million, compared with $333 million for the previous fiscal year.

On the same fiscal year, the Commonwealth Edison Co. of Chicago upped its earnings from $28 million or $2.03 a share to $34 million or $2.29 a share.

Oil: Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. increased its quarterly net earnings from $41 million to $44 million. Gulf Oil and Texas Co. reported steady earnings. Standard of N. J. reported a $6 million drop in estimated earnings.

Rubber: U. S. Rubber Co. reported net earnings climbed from $6.2 million to $7.1 million, or $1.10 a share.

Aircraft: North American Aviation climbed from $68 million or 49c a share to $149 million or 77c a share. Curtiss-Wright Corp. reported a profit increase from $1.7 million to $2.4 million.

Textiles: The Cone Mills Corp. reported earnings climbed from $2 million or 58c a share to $2.7 million or 78c a share.

Chemicals: Quarterly earnings of E. I. duPont climbed from $48 million or $1.06 a share to $56.9 million or $1.19 a share.

CIO Warns Of Hatchet Job By Big Business On Social Security

THE CIO last week lashed out at "wolf-in-sheep-clothing" proposals by big business groups which would endanger social security benefits now and in the future.

It also urged Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby, of the Health, Education and Welfare Dept., to appoint to key positions people "committed to public service rather than front men for organizations hostile to social security and to a decent governmental health program."

THE CIO statement, outlined in a telegram to Mrs. Hobby, was issued following a day-long meeting in Washington of the CIO Social Security Committee. The new committee chairman is CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Curran, who is also president of the National Maritime Union and a CIO vice president.

The CIO committee expressed "alarm" at recent developments in the social welfare field and Curran called upon Mrs. Hobby "to take courageous leadership against . . . insidious attacks upon the social security structure."

Curran detailed some of these attacks as follows: "Suggested abolition of federal grants to states and localities for public assistance, for hospitals, for maternal and child care, and for other welfare programs . . . reductions in budget requests and appropriations . . . for federal support for tuberculosis control and for research on cancer, heart disease and arthritis."

These slashes, the CIO committee said, "would cause vast distress and be a disastrous backward step in the long struggle for advancing human dignity and happiness."

In objecting to cuts in appropriations for medical research, Curran's wire observed:

"Money spent for medical research, for improving the nation's health, and for assisting young people to grow under constructive conditions should be considered an investment which is more than repaid by the results."

Other attacks have come from the Chamber of Commerce, whose latest proposals would put the social security fund into the middle of politics, resulting in foreseeable lower pensions.

Referring to the vacant positions of Commissioner of Social Security and of special assistant to the Secretary for Health and Medical Affairs, key positions in the new Cabinet-rank department, Curran said:

"The American Medical Association, the private insurance companies, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, or the National Association of Manufacturers—all four of which have consistently opposed the fundamental purposes of your department—are not apt to provide candidates for these offices who will instill public faith in the future of these social welfare programs."

THE TELEGRAM told Mrs. Hobby she has a "tremendous opportunity . . . to advance the interests of the people of America and to promote more effective leadership within the domain of your department. We hope you will meet this challenge. We know that this challenge cannot be met by appeasement of longtime foes of your department's program."

CIO, AFL Leaders Talk Pact To Prevent Raids

TOP OFFICIALS of the CIO and AFL, meeting last week in Washington, agreed "in principle" on a pact that would outlaw "raiding."

The meeting was the first held by a sub-committee of top officers of the two organizations appointed several weeks ago when first unity conferences were held in Washington. Next session of the full CIO-AFL group will be on June 2.

At the Apr. 7 meeting of the CIO and AFL unity committees, the six-man subcommittee was set up "to study the possibility of eliminating raiding between affiliates of the two organizations, as a prerequisite to achieving labor unity."

Following last week's meeting, it was reported that during the two-hours session both sides were agreed "in principle" on abolition of raiding.

A pact, which would bar attempts by one union to oust another as bargaining agent, will be presented to the next full unity conference.

OTHER problems which the subcommittee was named to study include "the structure and jurisdictional lines of the affiliated unions of the two organizations."

Sen. Ives Proposes Bias Bar As Amendment To T-H

A PROPOSAL to outlaw some racial and religious discrimination in employment, through the machinery of the Taft-Hartley Act, was introduced in the Senate last week.

Sponsored by Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.), who was joined by all members of the Senate Labor Committee except Sens. Taft (R. O.) and Hill (D. Ala.), the measure would make such discrimination an unfair labor practice, whether the employer or a union was the offender.

Under the Ives proposal, the NLRB would determine whether discrimination had been practiced. The New York senator called it "a new approach" and "important in itself." But, said Ives, the measure should not be considered a substitute for full FEPC which he has sponsored.

Sen. Taft immediately objected, telling reporters, "I don't think it should be part of this bill."

MEANTIME, CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne called for public hearings on proposals by Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), committee chairman, who would exempt public utilities from the national labor relations law.

"I would consider it grossly unjust," Beirne wrote Smith, "for you to even consider your bill in committee without having the benefit of public hearings."

Big Steel Parleys Set

WAGE negotiations between the CIO Steelworkers and big steel are scheduled to begin in Pittsburgh on May 14.

U. S. Steel, kingpin of basic steel, has agreed to begin negotiations on that date. Sessions will be held at the William Penn hotel.

The USA-CIO had earlier served notice on the industry that it desired to reopen wage negotiations, following a Wage Policy Committee meeting which voted to seek a general wage increase now and joint discussions on the guaranteed annual wage and improvements of present health and pension plans.

USA-CIO spokesmen said the union expected to begin negotiations shortly with other major producers, including Republic, Bethlehem and Jones & Laughlin.

Runaway Plants Protested By Springfield Delegation

A DELEGATION of New England CIO unionists—led by the CIO Electrical Workers—came to Washington last week in an effort to save more than 6000 jobs in the Springfield, Mass., area.

Five firms in the area have announced plans to move sections of their plants elsewhere, mostly to the South.

MOST SERIOUSLY affected will be members of IUE-CIO. Some 2500 IUE members will be jobless when Westinghouse moves its refrigeration work to Columbus, O., and American Bosch transfers its magneto production to Columbus, Miss.

The local CIO leaders said Westinghouse got a tax "write-off" certificate for the Columbus plant by representing it would make jet engines.

The plan to move the Ludlow Mill, near Springfield, to the South will throw 700 CIO Textile Workers on the street. Other plants in the area also have announced plans to move elsewhere.

The score of CIO and community leaders presented to their congressmen and government officials a program calling for:

- Ceasing to issue "certificates of necessity"—tax write-offs—to build new plants for defense progress when the new establishments are intended for civilian good production.
- Repealing the Fulbright Amendment to the Walsh-Healey Act which permits lower minimum wage rates on government contracts to be set in the South and West, and allows the courts to stop application of the minimum rates.
- Ceasing to issue trainee permits for hiring workers at 60c an hour and amending the Wage-Hour Act to boost the minimum wage from 75c to $1.25 an hour.

The delegation was led by Pres. Herman Greenberg of the Western Massachusetts CIO Council, which represents 30,000 workers.

Senate Votes Give-Away—

Oil Men Collect On GOP Campaign Promises

By MILTON PLUMB

THE COASTAL oil give-away is up to Pres. Eisenhower for decision.

After nearly five weeks of debate, the Senate last week passed the Administration-sponsored bill giving away the nation's offshore oil and gas deposits variously estimated to be worth from $50 billion to $300 billion.

The vote was 56 to 35—with enough opposed to uphold a Presidential veto should it be forthcoming.

A similar "give-away" bill passed the House earlier and Republican leaders predicted that the Senate version would be accepted. Speaker Martin said he expects the Senate bill will go to Pres. Eisenhower for his signature this week.

ALTHOUGH only a veto can now prevent what has been called "the biggest federal give-away in history," Eisenhower promised to sign such a bill during his campaign and has since made it a "must" in his legislative program. When Congress passed similar measures last year and six years earlier, they were successfully vetoed by former Pres. Truman.

Thirty-five Republicans and 21 Democrats, mostly from the South, voted for the bill. Twenty-five Democrats, nine Republicans and one Independent were opposed.

On the final vote, two Democratic Senators—who had voted "right" in the earlier effort to substitute the bill by Sens. Anderson (D. N. Mex.) and Hill (D. Ala.) to use offshore oil revenues for federal aid to education—shifted to support the give-away bill. They are Sens. Frear (Del.) and McClellan (Ark.)

BEFORE the bill was passed, one of Eisenhower's fellow Republicans, Sen. Aiken (Vt.), said the transfer of the oil lands to the states will lead to "raids" on other natural resources.

"Pres. Eisenhower is going to be put under greater pressure to permit the raiding of natural resources than has been put on for a generation," Aiken declared. "I hope that God will give him strength to resist."

Sens. Murray (D. Mont.) and Morse (Ind. Ore.) served notice, however, that the group of Senators who have fought the tidelands give-away will continue to fight against measures giving away other parts of the public domain. These include timber lands, grazing lands and the oil and gas deposits of the continental shelf seaward of the three and 10.5-mile limits set by the Holland Bill.

Morse said his record breaking 22-hour, 26-minute speech against the tidelands bill would be "just a start" toward what will happen if the Administration brings out another measure "to give away the natural resources of this country to the selfish economic interests."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) called the give-away bill "preposterous" and warned its backers that "there will be a day of reckoning when the American people realize we have only legalized the scandal of Teapot Dome on the floor."

The bill which the House approved earlier is broader than the Senate bill. The latter, gives the coastal states title to submerged oil lands extending offshore three miles in all cases except Texas and the Gulf coast of Florida, where the limit is 10.5 miles. The House bill also provides for federal development of the submerged land beyond these limits.

BOTH measures thus ignore three Supreme Court decisions which held that the federal government has "paramount" rights over the offshore deposits.

Enactment of the give-away bill will almost certainly bring suits to have the legislation ruled unconstitutional.

Gov. William Marland of West Virginia last week pledged a court fight to prevent the people of his state from being "robbed" of their stake in the offshore oil, by a "misguided" Congress. He ordered the State's attorney general to "take whatever action is necessary" to see that the interests of the state are protected.

IN ARKANSAS, Atty. Gen. Tom Gentry announced he is moving to file a test suit against the "tidelands" bill. Rhode Island earlier took preliminary steps to fight the give-away in the courts.

Right up until the final vote, opponents of the Holland Bill sought unsuccessfully to amend the measure to reduce the extent of the give-away. More than a dozen amendments, several of which sought to divert revenue from the offshore lands, to reduce the public debt, aid health, education and the blind and veterans programs, were overwhelmingly defeated.

A proposal by Sen. Kefauver to take the "highly explosive issue out of the area of politics" by setting up a commission to study the problem was defeated 59 to 32. The Senate rejected even more overwhelmingly proposals by Sens. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and Neely (D. W. Va.) which would have kept the lands under federal control and earmarked revenue for a variety of welfare projects.

SEEKING to "let all the states share in this grand giveaway scheme," Sen. Green (D. R. I.) offered an amendment calling for the appropriation of an educational fund equal to the amount of money the coastal states will receive in offshore oil revenue. The Senate shouted it down in a voice vote.

The closing debate was followed closely by Govs. Allan Shivers of Texas and Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana, representing two of the three states getting most of the multi-billion dollar handout. Kennon's lobbying even took him to the floor of the Senate at one point.

"Sorry, But We're Awfully Hard Up For Money"

What Logjam?

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch has forced the Associated Press to admit it distributed false reports about the lengthy debate on the oil give-away bill.

The AP had reported the offshore oil debate "has been blocking consideration of other important legislation."

When the Post-Dispatch demanded a list of this "other important legislation," AP several days later conceded there was no logjam of legislation.

Quote

"We're here in the saddle as an Administration representing business and industry."—Sec. of Interior Douglas McKay at U. S. Chamber of Commerce meeting.

THE CIO last week strongly condemned the coastal oil give-away as the "biggest steal in the history of America."

Noting that CIO has said it will support the Eisenhower Administration "when it is right and fight it when it is wrong," Reuther continued:

"We think it is wrong on the tidelands. If Jesse James were around, he would look like a reformer in comparison to the tidelands deal."

Sec. of Interior Douglas McKay last week announced the Administration's first major decision on power development—and it favored a big private utility.

AFTER clearing with Pres. Eisenhower and his Cabinet, McKay gave the nod to the Idaho Power Co. on its plans to build a series of low-level power dams along the Snake River in the Pacific Northwest.

McKay's action, in effect, pigeon-holed plans of the Interior Dept. under the Truman Administration to build the Hell's Canyon Dam, a high level structure even bigger than Hoover Dam. Hell's Canyon would have provided, directly and indirectly, 1.4 million kilowatts of power for the power-short Northwest. The Idaho Power dams will provide only 520,000 kilowatts.

McKay said the Administration's policy is "to let private industry build dams and develop power wherever it does not interfere with the orderly development of our natural resources." (See Willard Shelton's column, Page 5.)

'Watchdog' Group Urged To Guard U. S. Resources

CREATION of a "watchdog committee" to guard the nation's natural resources has been urged by Rep. Heller (D. N. Y.).

In a resolution introduced recently, Heller said the committee is necessary because "we do not want to have a situation where these businessmen who are working in the interests of the Government and the people, will find the means and the loopholes to take away that which rightfully belongs to the public and turn it over to private interests for their personal profit and then resign from the job."

By failing to guard the nation's resources, Heller said, "we shall be encouraging the schemers and the ill-intentioned, if there be any among this business cult (holding high posts in the new Administration), who may be planning the diversion of the public domain into private channels."

HELLER cited the huge give-away of offshore oil lands to the states; proposals to hand over U. S. public lands for exploitation by private interests; proposals by ex-Pres. Hoover and other Republicans to hand over federal power projects to private utilities; and the Eisenhower proposal that private rubber companies get the government's synthetic rubber plants.

The big questions arise, Heller said: "Is a big field day being planned for private business and will the country be shortchanged in the long run? Who, eventually, will be giving whom the business?"

Bob Wagner

An early associate in the New York Legislature of Franklin Roosevelt and Al Smith, Bob Wagner based his philosophy on the belief that government should help the people rather than the special interests. He was a strong right arm of FDR all during the New Deal, and his name kept bobbing up on a series of bills to strengthen New Deal programs.

The National Labor Relations Law—much better known as the Wagner Act—was the legislation that most popularized the Wagner name. But it was only one of many social laws sponsored by the New York Senator that have helped to improve America.

The Social Security Act was one; the first big federal slum clearance act was another; he fought for better health and better education for the children of the country.

Every worker whose union has won him better wages and working conditions; every family freed from the misery of slum living; every elder citizen to whom even modest pensions bring a measure of security—all of them owe a direct debt to Bob Wagner of New York.

Hot Water, Hot Oil

The Senate has voted, 56-35, to give away the oil reserves off the nation's coast-lines to the various states. The give-away is of tremendous proportions.

Resources whose value runs at least into hundred of billions have been taken from the people as a whole and handed over to three states; the real beneficiaries will be private interests which will pick up the rights of exploitation and make a "slaughter" in profits.

This is the states rights doctrine gone mad. Sure as shooting it will get us in trouble with other countries—for Congress in effect has "repealed" the international doctrine that the seas are free beyond the three-mile limit. Now, that doctrine applies everywhere but Texas and Florida—which go 10.5 miles off the coast. Russia or China have a precedent that they will certainly use against us some day soon.

The only silver lining on this beclouded Senate vote is the fact that the vast Continental underground shelf, which extends in some places hundreds of miles out, has not also been turned over to the states. But there is yet no guarantee that those vast areas may also be turned over to the states and the private interests at some future time.

Tidelands give-away bills have been passed by Congress before—and been vetoed. Pres. Eisenhower should be asked to veto this one, too. At the moment, he clearly favors the legislation, to which his party was pledged in its platform.

Both the bill and the platform will put the GOP in hot water, if not hot oil, when the size of the give-away and the effect on the country's resources, are fully realized. The best preventative would be a strongly-worded veto. Will we get it?

The Rigging Crew

In Other Words—

'Old New Dealer' Sees No Crash

Thurman Arnold, veteran New Dealer and trust-buster in the Justice Dept. from 1938 to 1943, believes there will not be another depression in our lifetime. Here is a digest of his recent article in Collier's Magazine:

By THURMAN ARNOLD

EVERY ONE OF US who has any sense wants an honorable, durable end to the hot war in Korea, and the cold war everywhere; but many at the same time are contemplating fearfully the economic consequences of a sharp falling off in war and defense expenditures.

I am an old New Dealer, who lived through the depression of the 1930s, took a small part in the efforts to get the American productive machine going again, participated in some errors but gained a lot of experience, and came through it all with faith in America's productive capacity and dedicated to the free-competitive-enterprise system.

My experience and faith convince me we will not have another great depression. We do not have to relive that experience. We know enough not to.

Neither you nor your children need fear that you will ever have to stand in bread lines, or sell apples—as tens of thousands did during the great depression of the thirties. If Americans will learn to understand the economic revolution which has come about in this country during the last few years, and if they will heed the lessons that it so clearly teaches, we can continue as a prosperous land, with an ever-increasing standard of living.

We Know Better Now

The vast economic pressure generated by our tremendous and accelerating production will force open new markets at home and abroad. We now know better than to shut off production in an effort to get our plants going again. We know better now than to deny credit when it is most needed, and to those who must have it if they are to remain assets to our economic system.

What I am saying is not intended as a commentary on any administration, present or past. I am talking about a thesis more fundamental than the policy of any political administration—the American economic ideal; and I am also talking about the vitality of the American economic system of free, competitive enterprise. This system is our distinctiveness and our strength. Neither socialism or cartels has a place in it.

What will happen when the war market is gone? Must we abandon the competitive ideal of the free enterprise system? Must we again run our industrial plant at half speed to avoid overproduction? Must the government continue spending to keep men employed? What is going to take the place of the Western frontier? The answer to all these questions is that America has before it other frontiers whose markets have no foreseeable limits.

After all, what is it that creates the frontiers which the world has grown rich in exploiting? Certainly not the mere existence of underdeveloped countries. New frontiers slowly emerge from great and unpredicted supplies of goods and labor at home, not from vacant spaces abroad. Sooner or later, the pressures of our expanding production will burst the narrow confines of old markets that have grown too small.

Optimism For Future

The economic pioneer in the frontiers of the 20th century will be its great business organization.

The reason is that 20th century business organization is the real wealth of nations today. In the 19th century, so-called capital goods—machinery, ships, railroads—were the principal assets of a nation. They no longer are. Our vast productive capacity comes primarily not from material things but rather from the modern art of industrial organization. That art is America's distinctive contribution to the 20th century industrial revolution.

My optimism for America's economic future is based on the outstanding fact that our national production is increasing in leaps and bounds in spite of the fact that we do not clearly see how that production can be sold when war spending ends. This attitude is the opposite of our former depression psychology, which led to shut down production to avoid a so-called ruinous surplus in terms of anticipated markets. American businessmen now realize that the standard of living is rising, that the luxuries of yesterday have become the necessities of today, and that the new markets at home and abroad are without limit.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

TWO BIG "GIVE-AWAYS" in a single day is a new high for Old Guard Republicans, but they made the grade when Sec. of the Interior McKay killed the public power program the same afternoon the Senate passed the offshore oil bill.

When he abandoned the proposed Hells Canyon Dam on the Snake River between Oregon and Idaho, McKay refused to admit frankly that this was his pattern for the future—that his Interior Dept. will not build any great multipurpose dams furnishing flood control, irrigation, navigation and recreational values, and low-cost public power.

This was, however, the unmistakable meaning.

The immediate issue was this: The Interior Dept. under former Sec. Oscar Chapman had recommended a tremendous dam on the Snake, and the privately-owned Idaho Power Co. didn't like the idea.

Idaho Power belatedly came up with a proposal to build a low level dam at about the same site as Hells Canyon and asked the Federal Power Commission for leave to seize the site through a permit for the low dam. Chapman intervened and opposed Idaho Power's request before the FPC.

McKay reversed Chapman and abandoned opposition to the private utility's demands. In a news conference—hectic in atmosphere—the new Interior Secretary made two extraordinary statements about the attitudes that guided him:

1. The Interior Dept., McKay claimed, is not a "policy-making" body in deciding where and what kind of hyrdoelectric dams shall be built. The "policy-making" authority, he said, has been vested by Congress with the Federal Power Commission.

2. In deciding not to continue opposition to Idaho Power, McKay admitted under questions, he did not even consider the difference in price to the ultimate consumer as between cheap power from a publicly-operated Hells Canyon project and the rates that might be charged by Idaho Power Co. This issue also, he said, was solely for FPC consideration.

There are two comments to make: It is preposterous to pretend that the weakling Power Commission is the real "policy-making" body on river dams and hydroelectric programs.

The FPC has no legal authority to build and finance multipurpose publicly controlled dams. Congress is the "policy-making" body that must authorize and appropriate money for such projects—and McKay's Interior Dept. is supposed to make recommendations to Congress about them.

McKay compounded the blunder by disregarding the fact that Hells Canyon public power, cheaper than Idaho Power Co.'s rates, would give the underdeveloped areas of Southwestern Idaho and Eastern Oregon a better chance for industrial expansion—new businesses paying taxes, new workers spending money and paying taxes, enterprises that are needed by the West.

If the Interior Dept. under Harold Ickes and Oscar Chapman across 20 years had taken this attitude, the great dams of the Columbia River would never have been built. A similar philosophy would have prevented construction of the great Tennessee Valley system.

Irrigation needs would have been financed by Hells Canyon power revenues. There are vast phosphate beds near the site that can be made into cheap fertilizers, urgently needed by Western farmers, with low-cost public power. The project would have been largely self-liquidating: it would have repaid to the federal government most of its cost, with interest.

It is sheer waste, not "economy," to abandon the dam project—but McKay in effect consented to let Idaho Power, offering neither irrigation help nor low-cost power, seize the site forever.

Dammit!

Pres. Eisenhower still hasn't had a really good day at Burning Tree Country Club, carefully guarded private golf course of the Capital's top politicians, lobbyists and publicists.

He plays twice a week, hasn't "broken 90" yet. Gov. Dan Thornton of Colorado, playing with the President once, may have agonized him by shooting in the low 70s.

● ● The offshore oil bill as it passed both House and Senate contained sections against which both Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell and State Dept. officials had argued, saying they would mess up national policy on the three-mile limit and freedom of the seas. Ike refused to support them.

● ● I reported last week that one Republican publicist was suffering financially because his "accounts," assuming they could get what they wanted for nothing from the New Administration, wiped him off their payrolls. Correction: Various kinds of new "accounts" are approaching him now—but in the dark interim he gave up his offices and client-impressing staff. Problem: How to do his new job without a trained staff?

● ● It isn't easy for a Cabinet officer with a big family to solve the Washington housing problem. Attorney Gen. Brownell and family finally bought a six-bedroom place, but first they had to live 10 weeks in a $75-a-day hotel suite, rent a house briefly, then return to the hotel suite pending alterations and redecoration of their new residence.

Better Health Care—

'Stunted Lives Are The Price Of AMA Scare Drive,' CIO Says

"STUNTED LIVES, needless deaths, and untold heartbreak" are the price that America is paying for failure to provide adequate medical care in the form of national health insurance

That's what the CIO Economic Outlook said in its current issue on "Union Action for Health."

The monthly review of the CIO Education & Research Dept. strongly condemned the American Medical Association for its high pressure campaign against health insurance as "socialized medicines," observing:

"After the smoke of AMA propaganda clears away, the basic health problems that cry for positive remedies still remain."

"Human lives," said the Outlook, "are the nation's most precious possession—the basic purpose for which our institutions exist. Good health, like education, must be made available to all the people.

Gap Is Too Great

"Medical knowledge is continually developing new marvels, and great strides have been made in providing better health protection for our (union) members.

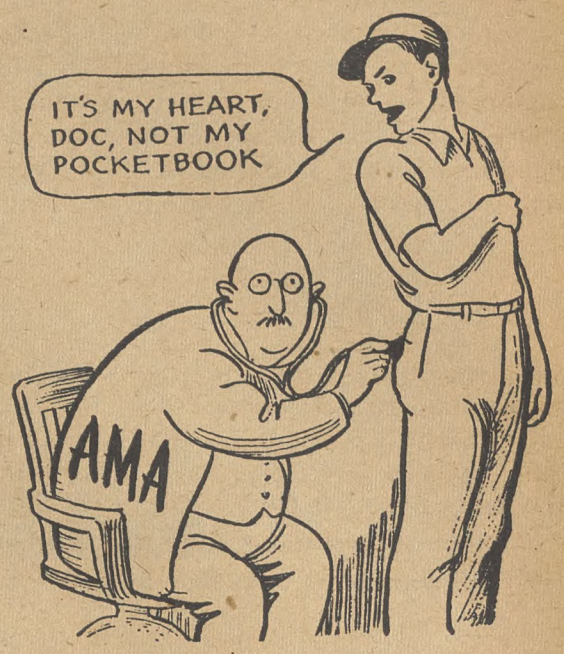
"But the gap throughout the United States between present arrangements and a really good health program is far too great. The price is paid daily in stunted lives, needless deaths and untold heartbreak."

Forecasting CIO's continued fight for health protection "available to all the people," the Outlook tabulated the gains made for CIO members and their families through union efforts.

"Higher wages have brought better diets . . . shorter hours, control of the speed-up and safer working conditions have helped maintain the health and vigor of American wage earners," the CIO publication said.

To these achievements, the Economic Outlook added the major gains achieved in contracts providing hospitalization and surgical insurance for workers and their families.

"But much remains to be done," the CIO said, citing the report of the Truman Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation on which CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther served.



"We in the CIO must continue the struggle for better health on many fronts. Under present political conditions, the greatest hope for progress lies through collective bargaining, but our accomplishments through that channel do not lessen the need for government action," the Outlook said.

It listed some of the gains which could be won through collective bargaining, including healthier and safer working conditions; improved protection against the costs of hospitalization and medical care; extension of existing plans to cover more workers with similar coverage for dependents, plus extension and improvement of cash sickness payments.

But there would be no relaxation in CIO's fight for national health insurance, the Outlook made clear, concluding:

"A national social insurance system in the field of health, along the lines labor has been demanding, remains the sound approach in spite of political difficulties."

Washington Window—

Headaches Ahead On Housing

By Public Affairs Institute

THERE ARE FORCES at work in Washington right now deciding the price of the roof over your head. Congress is removing many controls and protections which the home owner and the tenant had enjoyed since World War II. They say that controls and federal aid interfere with the housing market.

Without these controls and aids, the supply of houses will largely set the price. A shortage will raise it and a good supply could reduce it.

The lower and middle income groups will be hardest hit. Those are the areas of greatest shortage. Luxury housing is plentiful.

At a time when most other prices, including construction materials, are dropping or leveling off, the price on housing is likely to rise generally.

Interest Boost Cited

Much of this is due to the recent 30% increase in interest rates on the last issue of government bonds by the Treasury Dept. Already this has made home loans more costly. Here is a general survey of the housing field:

Low-cost housing ($6000 to $10,000): Good, low-cost housing is still difficult to obtain. Builders find high-cost housing more profitable to build. Construction costs have leveled off near their all-time peak.

Federal Housing Administration and Veterans Administration home loans have become more costly as interest rates rise. Small builders will leave the building industry as government support of FHA and VA loans is withdrawn.

Medium and high-cost housing ($10,000 and up): High-cost luxury housing continues to be plentiful. The supply of medium-cost housing is on the increase, but still short.

Older homes: The New York Journal of Commerce reports that average prices for older homes have dropped from 5% to 15% in the last year. It calls prices still "stratospheric compared with pre-war prices." Cost of increased interest on home purchase loans will lessen savings to prospective buyers.

Public housing: In 1949 Congress authorized the building of 135,000 low-cost public housing units each year for lower income families. Congress cut this figure to 50,000 in 1951 and 35,000 in 1952.

This year Pres. Eisenhower asked for 35,000 units. The House refused to provide money for any new public housing starts. It is predicted, however, that the Senate may vote for the 35,000 units and the final compromised figure should be about 20,000 or 25,000.

Pushed Out Of Picture

Almost unnoticed is the fact that most of the 640,000 starts already contracted for will be completed. Still, public housing is steadily being pushed out of the picture.

Slum clearance: Most low-cost and public housing construction is made possible through the federally assisted program of urban redevelopment and slum clearance. The House has voted to reduce these funds 28% to $1.5 million. The Senate is expected to restore some but not all of the cut. Slums won't be cleared rapidly.

Rents: The 1950 census listed 19 million rental housing units in this country. During World War II tenants in 16 million units had rent and eviction protection. Last year it was 5.5 million. Several cities and states have controls.

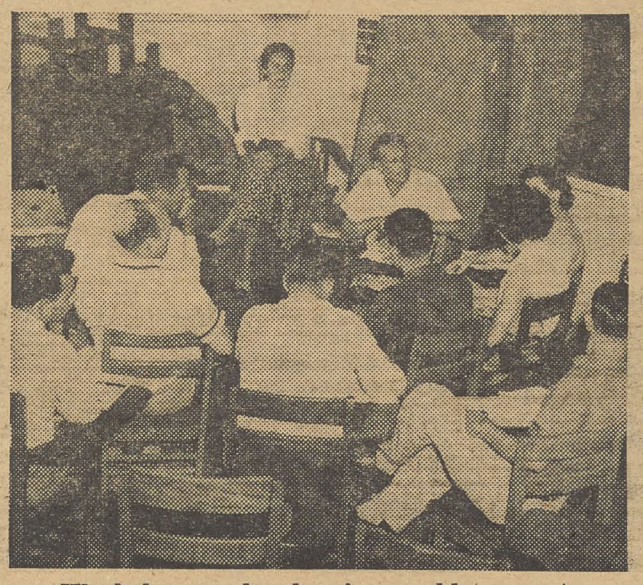
The new rent control bill just passed by Congress will end controls on 4.3 million ordinary defense housing units July 31. In theory, all critical defense rental housing controls will be continued until Apr. 30, 1954. This covered 1.3 million units in 1952.

There is a "sleeper" in this act. Controls are removed from rental units either constructed or converted after Feb. 1, 1947. The Office of Rent Stabilization says this will affect many of the 1.3 million units but it doesn't know exactly how many.

Biggest Program—

CIO Summer Schools Help Build Unions

Registration is rush time at CIO school.



Workshop on local union problem meets.

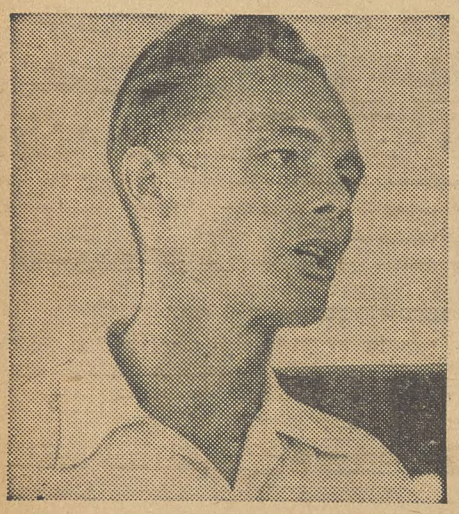
There is no discrimination here.



Schools teach public speaking.

SCHOOL DAYS soon will be over for children, but they're just beginning for hundreds of CIO union members.

The CIO Dept. of Education and Research, in cooperation with state CIO Councils and several international unions, has planned the most ambitious program of CIO summer schools ever undertaken.

Between 800 and 1000 CIO'ers are expected to attend the 15 schools that will be held throughout the U. S. The first of the schools is being held this week at De Haven North Star Camp, Marcelle, Minn.

Eleven schools were held last summer with 450 CIO members in attendance.

In addition to CIO international unions recruiting students for the schools, four unions are doing special recruiting jobs for 12 schools which they are cooperating in conducting. Two international unions aided last year in operating five schools.

The CIO Textile Workers are cooperating in conducting the Alabama, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and North Carolina schools. The Rubber Workers are urging members to attend Alabama, Tennessee and New Jersey sessions.

The Communications Workers are recruiting for the Oregon-Washington, Rocky Mountain, California and Oklahoma-Arkansas schools, and the Clothing Workers are calling on members to be present for the Missouri classes.

Classes are held on a wide range of general subjects, including labor history, national legislative issues, community relations and state legislative problems.

"Most of the delegates go away from the schools with the feeling that it is extremely important to build stronger unions," said George T. Guernsey, associate director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research in charge of education.

"They also learn that unions must work not only on collective bargaining issues but also have a basic political and community relations job to do."

Full information on the schools may be obtained by writing the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Here's Schedule

Here is the list of CIO summer schools:

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT and the late PHILIP MURRAY

EX-PRES. TRUMAN

FRANK P. GRAHAM

ARCHBISHOP HAAS

Five public leaders are among 13 distinguished Americans named to the Public Advisory Board of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation.

LED BY Former Pres. Truman, a group of 13 distinguished Americans will aid the newly-created Philip Murray Memorial Foundation.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, widow of the late President, will also be a member of the Public Advisory Board to the foundation, Chairman Emil Rieve announced last week.

On the six-month anniversary of the death of the late president of the CIO and the United Steelworkers, Rieve also announced that the foundation has received in payment or firm commitments the full million-dollar fund established as its goal.

The money came from the National CIO, from affiliated CIO unions and their members, and from individual contributions.

Rieve, who is also a CIO vice president and president of the Textile Workers, said that a combined meeting of the board of trustees, comprising CIO officials, and the new public advisory board, will be held in Washington on June 3.

THE 13-MAN Public Advisory Board is comprised of:

Former Pres. Truman.

W. Averill Harriman, former administrator, Mutual Security Administration.

Judge William H. Hastie, U. S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Eric A. Johnston, business executive and former administrator, Economic Stabilization Agency.

Henry J. Kaiser, industrialist.

Rt. Rev. Austin Pardue, bishop of Episcopal Diocese in Pittsburgh, Pa.

Miss Frances Perkins, former Secretary of Labor and former member of the U. S. Civil Service Commission.

Mrs. Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, former U. S. Representative to the United Nations General Assembly.

Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein, K.A.M. Temple, Chicago, Illinois.

The board of trustees is headed by Rieve and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who is also president of the IUE-CIO, is the foundation's secretary-treasurer. Other trustees are the executive officers and vice presidents of the CIO.

IN ANNOUNCING the members of the Public Advisory Board, Rieve said:

"The Philip Murray Memorial Foundation is now ready to function as a living and constructive tribute to one of the great Americans and one of the great labor leaders of the 20th century.

"The memory of Philip Murray will always be in the hearts and minds of American workers, for his endeavors to build a strong, free, democratic trade union movement and his contributions to the general welfare of America, were of prime magnitude.

"The officials of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation will seek to use this organization to carry on the great work to which Philip Murray so ably devoted his life. We seek, in ways to be defined, to create a truly living memorial — one whose good and constructive work will help all Americans, regardless of race, color, creed or economic position. Ours is a broad charter.

"We shall dedicate to the task that faces us in directing the Foundation all the experience and knowledge at our disposal. We are hopeful that in the years ahead, the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation will come to be regarded throughout the nation and the world as an instrument for the promotion of liberty, justice and the welfare of all mankind."

FORMER Sen. Robert F. Wagner, one of the nation's staunchest liberals and father of the Wagner Labor Relations Act, is dead.

The doughty New York Democrat, who served as U. S. senator for 23 years until ill health forced his retirement in 1949, died on May 5. Death came at the New York City home of his son, Robert F. Wagner, Jr., president of the Borough of Manhattan.

Sen. Wagner's death at 75, his son said, was due to "heart fatigue."

A Roman Catholic in his later years, the senator received the last rites of the church shortly before his death.

THE NAME of Robert Wagner was completely identified with the whole series of social welfare laws enacted during the New Deal.

A confirmed liberal and a staunch supporter of democratic unionism, Wagner was the architect of much of the New Deal. He was the living symbol of the better America created by Franklin Delano Roosevelt, his close friend, whose causes he championed in many a public battle.

Except for the fact that he was born in Germany, coming to this country at the age of eight, Wagner would have been a serious candidate for President on the Democratic ticket.

Handicapped by language difficulties and by family circumstances which forced him to sell papers on the street when most youngsters were playing baseball, Wagner nevertheless rose to the highest office the voters of New York could offer him.

AS SOON as he reached voting age, he entered politics. In 1904 he was elected to the State Assembly. Four years later, the voters promoted him to the State Senate where he served until 1919. Then he was elevated to the New York Supreme Court where he served until 1926 when he went to the U. S. Senate.

ROBERT F. WAGNER
Former senator and New Deal fighter dies at 75.

It was as a U. S. senator that the name of Robert Wagner became a household word throughout America. The first National Labor Relations Act, the first Social Security Act, housing acts, health insurance measures—legislation designed to better the standard of living of working America—all went into the Senate under his sponsorship.

He often explained his profound interest in social legislation with this remark:

"My boyhood was a pretty rough passage."

BY JUNE 1947, when the reactionary 80th Congress passed the Taft-Hartley Act over Pres. Truman's veto, thus wrecking the great labor law which Robert Wagner had fathered, the aging New York senator was too ill to participate in the debate. His health made it impossible for him to even cast a vote to sustain the President's veto.

In November 1948, the CIO paid tribute to the New York liberal when its Community Services Committee presented him with the annual Philip Murray award. The senator, too ill to attend the presentation ceremony, was represented by his son.

In making the presentation, the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray said that "almost every socially progressive bill in the Congress during the past 16 years bears a trademark: the name of Wagner. That in itself is a guarantee that the legislation has been drafted to help the citizens of America."

It was in recognition of that great record that the CIO executive officers said "no man in recent American history more deservedly won a reputation as a friend of the working people of this nation, as a staunch supporter of democratic unionism, as a true believer in the fundamental spirit of democracy."

Typical of the tributes paid the senator was that of the CIO Clothing Workers:

"He helped fashion a new life for countless millions of American workers, helped elevate their wage and working standards and helped them regain their dignity and self-respect."

FORMALLY representing CIO at the Senator's funeral were a ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council, and Pres. Michael J. Quill of the New York City CIO Council and of the Transport Workers.

CIO Praises Wagner As A 'Fighter For Common Good'

Following is the text of a telegram sent to Robert F. Wagner, Jr., son of the late Sen. Wagner, by the CIO Executive Officers, Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Exec. Vice Pres. John V. Riffe and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey:

PLEASE ACCEPT the heartfelt condolences of the officers and members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations upon the death of your illustrious father, Sen. Robert F. Wagner.

No man in recent American history more deservedly won a reputation as a friend of the working people of this nation, as a staunch supporter of democratic unionism, as a true believer in the fundamental spirit of democracy.

He won the people's affection not only through his sponsorship of the National Labor Relations Act but through the identification of his name with a whole series of legislative proposals in the fields of health, housing, education and social security.

Robert F. Wagner was known to every American working man and working woman as their champion and as an honest, dynamic and effective fighter for the common good.

Our American will be the poorer through the loss of Robert F. Wagner. We mourn his passing, but we know that his name will long live as a symbol of the best, the most humane thinking in American life.

In The Legislatures—

Lawmakers 'Wink At Bosses' $5 Million Jobless Pay Dodge

CRIES OF "chiselers on unemployment insurance" are an old, old story to organized labor in California, as in many other states.

Every time the Legislature is about to meet in Sacramento, the daily press blossoms out with big headlined "exposes." Employer groups come up with varying claims that working people are chiseling from $20 million to $35 million a year in fraudulent benefits.

It's all part of the state-by-state drive of business groups to cut down on present unemployment, workmen's compensation or disability insurance benefits and to block any and all improvements necessary to bring them into line with present-day living costs.

But when organized labor has a factual story of "chiseling" by employers in evading their unemployment insurance contributions, that's another matter.

The California Legislature just isn't interested in hearing about such matters, even when the loss amounts to at least $5 million.

Such was the situation that developed recently before a special committee of the California Assembly investigating fraudulent claims. The committee flatly refused to listen to evidence of chiseling by employers prepared by Anthony Ramuglia, State CIO Council research director. The committee's excuse was that it could consider only employe frauds.

ON THAT point Ramuglia's statement said "the State CIO Council deplores any and all chiseling (we of the CIO are not only workers, we are citizens too)" and added it wanted "to help bring about a situation where thieving either by fraudulent claims or tax evasion can be minimized if not totally eliminated."

Citing figures from the State Dept. of Employment, Ramuglia then pointed out:

"Figures obtained from the department tax collection division show employer accounts were delinquent at the end of 1952 in the amount of $4,932,424. They also reveal a total of 6297 delinquent tax cases at the end of 1952."

THESE FIGURES were based on random checking of California business firms by the state's 240 auditors—less than one auditor per 1000 employers.

"The actual cheating by employers," the CIO aide estimated, "may run into $30 million per year."

But that wasn't considered pertinent by the legislative investigating committee in California.

Reuther Honored At Dinner Given By Wayne County CIO

"WE HAVE won material gains, but more important we have established the basis so that democracy can flourish in the industrial world. We have given the phrase 'human brotherhood' substance and meaning."

That's what Walter P. Reuther said at a dinner given by the Wayne County CIO Council in Detroit.

The affair was in honor of his election to the CIO presidency and the completion of 17 years as an officer of the CIO Auto Workers, of which he has been president since 1946.

Reuther predicted the UAW-CIO will win the guaranteed annual wage because paying workers by the hour and the piece "is not suited to our dynamic economy." He said the guaranteed annual wage is needed to end the double standard which finds executives paid by the year but workers by the hour.

Toastmaster George Edwards, judge of Wayne County probate court, set the tone of the testimonial dinner by referring to Reuther as a person "who has made good not for himself, but for our city, for the working people of the nation and for the whole world."

Speakers included John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president; UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, and R. J. Thomas, assistant to Riffe and a former UAW president. Wayne County CIO Pres. Mike Novak was chairman of the event. Pres. August Scholle and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins represented the Michigan CIO Council at the speakers' table.

GOP Scuttles Civil Rights Proposals In Legislatures

REPUBLICAN campaign promises on civil rights are being forgotten by Republican lawmakers running most of the state legislatures.

In California, a CIO and AFL-supported bill for an effective state Fair Employment Practices Act was killed by a 7-to-6 vote of an Assembly committee.

All Republican members of the committee voted no, despite a recent State GOP declaration in support of equal opportunity legislation. All Democrats voted for the bill.

Another bill to outlaw discrimination in hiring of school teachers was defeated in committee.

In Ohio, the House Labor Committee rejected two effective fair practices bills but approved a compromise measure introduced by GOP Assemblyman Burton of Cleveland. The vote was 8-to-7, with all Republican committee members opposing even the modified measure.

Citing the GOP no vote, the Ohio CIO Council predicted "even the none-too-robust, mild Burton FEPC bill will have no daisy path to tread in this session of the Legislature."

Arthur Chapin, State CIO civil rights director, said the GOP caucus had blocked a bill giving the State Division Against Discrimination "power to enforce the ban on such segregation" now existing in 21 New Jersey cities.

A recent federal court decision upholding segregation in public housing will be challenged in the U. S. Court of Appeals by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

IN MISSOURI, a committee of the State House of Representatives has approved two bills ending segregation in all public schools—elementary, high and colleges. Various civic, religious and Negro groups supported the measures, and no opponents testified at the hearings.

In Cleveland, the local CIO and AFL Councils have formed a Labor Committee for Human Rights to improve the work of the labor movement in this field. Secs. James C. Quinn of the CIO Council and William Finnegan of the AFL Council are serving as co-chairmen of the joint group.

Auto Union Backs NAACP Campaign

"Full cooperation" of the CIO Auto Workers has been pledged to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in its drive for 300,000 new members.

The pledge was voiced by UAW and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther. Similar support on behalf of the CIO was offered recently by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who is chairman of the CIO Civil Rights Committee.

Reuther said the UAW "wholeheartedly" supports the NAACP "in the great task ahead of abolishing second class citizenship and establishing equality of opportunity for every American."

High Court Hits Bias Voting Bar

The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled unconstitutional another Southern device to bar Negroes from voting in Democratic primaries. On a suit brought by five Negroes, the court tossed out discriminatory voting procedures followed by the Jaybird Democratic Association in Fort Bend County, Tex.

Grass-Roots PAC Problems Studied By Georgia CIOers

GRASS-ROOTS political education has been on trial in Georgia and the response from Georgia CIO members has been enthusiastic, State Council Pres. W. H. Crawford reports.

In a series of five political education institutes, 92 CIO members from all over the Cracker State got the low-down on state and national politics.

National CIO and National CIO-PAC provided discussion leaders, who joined with Georgia CIO leaders in conducting the sessions. They were held at Savannah, Moultrie, Rome and Atlanta.

David S. Burgess, executive secretary of the Georgia CIO Council, said the sessions were divided under two basic headings—political issues and political techniques.

Under the first heading, the students discussed the "giveaway" tactics of the majority in Congress, Point Four and forworkmen's compensation law, anti-union statutes and other restrictive and inadequate laws.

THE SECOND section was devoted to techniques of conducting PAC dollar drives, registration campaigns and ward and precinct organization.

Student reaction to the sessions was summed up by John Davis of UAW Local 10 in Doraville, who said, "I feel that I will be more able to go back to my local and get across the necessity for political action."

No Appeal Loyalty Rule Is Criticized

THE MAN who has headed the government's loyalty program for the last three years has condemned a big gap—denial of the right to appeal—in the sweeping revision recently announced by Pres. Eisenhower.

He is Hiram Bingham, head of the outgoing Civil Service Loyalty Review Board and a Republican.

The new security program was extended from a few major U. S. departments to all government agencies. And there is no provision for appeal.

"With no appeal for the employe outside his agency under the new program," Bingham said, "it's just not the American way of doing things.

"It is a lack of knowledge of human nature to think that the heads of 60 agencies making individual decisions will always do justice to the individuals."

IN PENNSYLVANIA, the CIO-opposed state loyalty oath was declared constitutional by Judge Curtis Bok of Philadelphia Common Pleas Court.

Judge Bok declared he acted reluctantly and only because the U. S. Supreme Court had approved similar laws in other states.

"Were it not for the federal cases, we would unhesitatingly strike down this act," the jurist said in his opinion.

"If our basic liberties, forged when the enemy was on our soil, were good enough to bring our country to birth and make it great, they should be good enough so long as America shall endure."

Ike Whacks Foreign Aid And GOP Plans Deeper Slashes

THE EISENHOWER Administration last week announced deep slashes in the budget for defense and for foreign aid and then began a battle against threats of even deeper cuts by Republican congressional leaders.

The President trimmed $1.8 billion from former Pres. Truman's request for military and economic aid abroad. At the same time, defense officials announced plans to reduce U. S. armed forces by 200,000 men for a $1 billion slash in the military spending program. Another cut of $1.1 billion was scheduled in military procurement.

Overall, the new Administration's reductions in the Truman budget for all government operations amount to a claimed $8.5 billion.

IN A message to Congress, Eisenhower emphasized that his $5.8 billion foreign aid budget was the bare minimum this country must spend to bolster the defense efforts and economies of its allies. Administration spokesmen told a joint hearing of the House and Senate Foreign Relations Committees that "it would be imprudent and dangerous" to vote less.

Said Sec. of State John Foster Dulles:

"It is the judgment of the President and his Cabinet and of the National Security Council, after the most intensive investigation, that the program here presented is, on the one hand, within the capabilities of the U. S. and consistent with moving as rapidly as possible toward a balanced budget, and, on the other hand, that anything appreciably less would be dangerous to our peace and security."

DULLES added that the mutual security program "will produce more real security for the people of the U. S. than we could get by spending the same amount of money on a purely national program."

The President's request was also backed by Sec. of Defense Charles E. Wilson, Mutual Security Dir. Harold E. Stassen and Sec. of the Treasury George M. Humphrey. All said that any further reduction would be a serious blow to national security.

In spite of these warnings, Sen. Millikin (R. Colo.), chairman of the Senate Republican Conference, said that Congress will take a "rather merciless attitude" toward the foreign aid program. And Chairman Taber (R. N.Y.), of the House Appropriations Committee, predicted the final total may be as little as $4 billon.

Leading Democrats indicated they would go along, at least tentatively, with the President's cuts on condition that the Reciprocal Trade Act be extended.

DEMOCRATS also expressed misgivings about the projected military cuts, but withheld specific comments until the President submits the new figures.

Sen. Symington (D. Mo.), who was the nation's first air secretary, said there is no justification for a cutback in military spending and that there is a real possibility that more—not less—should be spent.

The Secretary of Defense, Symington added, should not try to be a "Secretary of Economy" and no one "at any level has the right to place solvency above security."

RESIGNS. — Paul M. Herzog, for eight years chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, has resigned. Pres. Eisenhower, accepting the resignation, praised Herzog for "performing a difficult task ably and well."

World Of Labor—

Vic Reuther Challenges Reds At Free Berlin Rally

A SIMPLE test to determine how sincere the Communists are in their current "peace" talk was given half a million German workers at a May Day rally in West Berlin by Victor G. Reuther, CIO Representative in Europe.

"If the Communists allow workers in East Berlin and other cities behind the Iron Curtain to organize in free trade unions instead of regimented Red Fronts," he said, "and if they allow the people in the East to decide their own fates in free elections, then the miracle has happened—the peace offer is not a cold war maneuver."

However, he added, it will take some time to separate the truth from Communist trickery.

"Out of past bitterness," he said, "we know that it would be fatal to slacken our vigilance."

Canada

The Canadian Congress of Labor has filed a brief with the House of Commons Industrial Relations Committee approving a pending bill to prevent discrimination in employment. However, it proposed several revisions aimed at making the measure more realistic, including one which would provide a program of public education on fair employment practices.

The CCL also supported a pending bill authorizing the voluntary, revocable checkoff. The labor organization described the "meagre additional status" as "the least contentious form of union security," and said it would contribute greatly to stable industrial relations.

ILO

The hope that lessening defense needs may mean more help for the world fight against poverty, especially in the underdeveloped countries, was expressed by David A. Morse, director-general of the Intl. Labor Organization, in his report to the 36th ILO conference.

"The world's needs for expenditure on economic development and for the raising of living standards among the lower-income groups are limitless," he said. "We have indeed cause for thankfulness if needs for arms expenditures turn out to be limited."

Britain

The British Trades Union Congress—like the CIO several years ago—has had trouble with subsidiaries similar to industrial union councils getting into the hands of the Communists.

It has just completed setting up a new London Trade Council, to replace a predecessor from which recognition was withdrawn because of Red domination. The new council represents 212,000 members in 28 unions.

The new council is pledged to "reestablish the prestige and authority of the organized trade union movement and to guard against any attempt to divert the council from its proper functions." Robert Willis, TUC General Council member, was elected chairman. G.N.L.

Aid Urged For Korean Teachers

The National Education Association has reactivated its Overseas Teacher Fund to provide aid to impoverished teachers in Korea.

Some 50,000 teachers, still carrying on in fields or in damaged buildings, are not eligible for relief because they are employed, but their salaries remain at pre-war levels although the cost of living is 50 times greater.

High Tariff Advocates Get Concessions At Hearing

THE ADMINISTRATION made three major concessions to high-tariff congressmen last week in a move to win extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act pending a full-scale study of U. S. foreign trade policies.

1. Sec. of State John Foster Dulles pledged the Administration to end the bipartisan character of the Federal Tariff Commission by promising it would not oppose the addition of one Republican member. This would give the GOP a majority. The commission has always been bipartisan, six-man group.

2. Dulles pledged that if the law is extended for a year, no new reciprocal trade agreements will be negotiated.

3. Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks pledged the Administration not to bar substantial changes in the law at some time in the future.

The pledges were given to the House Ways and Means Committee, dominated by Republican economic isolationists. They came during hearings on a bill sponsored by Rep. Simpson (R. Pa.), to extend the act for a year beyond its June 12 expiration date. The bill also would seriously weaken the trade agreements program.

Dulles and Weeks, along with Sec. of the Treasury George M. Humphrey and Mutual Security Administrator Harold E. Stassen, presented the Administration's case against the Simpson Bill. All asked for extension of the present law for a year while the study is being made.

THEIR PLEAS were buttressed by a letter, a few days before, from Pres. Eisenhower to Vice Pres. Nixon and Speaker of the House Martin in which he formally proposed a bipartisan committee to make "a thorough reexamination of our whole economic policy."

The President proposed that Nixon and Martin each name three members of the body, while he would name five citizens to complete it.

'German Workers Like Voice In Industry'

GERMAN workers covered by the co-determination law like a voice in management and feel it has benefited them, according to Matthias Foecher, vice president of the German Federation of Labor (DGB).

Foecher is visiting the United States under the State Dept. exchange program, and expects to remain for six weeks. Accompanying him is Karl Pottman, of the DGB foreign office. They conferred with CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey on a visit to National CIO headquarters.

At a luncheon in Washington given in his honor by the CIO International Committee, Foecher explained that Germany's iron, steel and coal industries, where the co-determination law applies, had grown so arrogant they showed no concern whatever for the human rights of their employes.

"Now things are changed," Foecher said. "The workers have a voice in management. The personnel director, one of three top executives, must be a union member or designee. The union has representation on the board of directors equal to that of management, with a neutral member to break ties.

"The workers feel that for the first time the human being is recognized. They feel more secure, they work with more satisfaction than before, and absenteeism has been cut considerably. And the workers in other industries want co-determination."

Foecher, a leader of the former Christian union movement before the non-political, non-religious DGB was organized after World War II, discounted reports of growing differences between Christian and Socialist elements in the German unions.

They are caused by extremists on both sides, he said, and have practically no support among the rank and file. The DGB, he said, has made its position clear to the Catholic bishops and to the papal nuncio, Bishop Alois J. Meunch, of Fargo, N. D.

TWUA Wins At 9 Mills

THE CIO Textile Workers have defeated the AFL textile union at nine Fieldcrest mills in North Carolina by a vote of 1414 to 1230 in a run-off election.

R. J. Ramsey, Bi-County joint board manager, called the result "a real victory for all southern textile workers."

"It shows," he continued, "that the men and the women in one of the oldest and strongest centers of textile unionism want the kind of a union TWUA is."

You And Your Money—

Bankers Get Another Windfall As Home Loan Interest Climbs

"THE BIG SQUEEZE" against the nation's consumers and wage earners is on. Starting last week, it will cost you more—plenty more—to raise a mortgage, to buy a home or to finance a car on an installment contract.

The cause: Long-predicted increases in interest rates were put in effect by the government and by big financing corporations.

Both boosts were direct consequences of the deflationary "hard money" policy proclaimed by the Eisenhower Administration and begun a few weeks ago in refunding part of the national debt. That action—a new $1 billion bond issue bearing 3.25%—will cost U. S. citizens as taxpayers an additional $225 million in higher interest rates over a 30-year period.

Last week's action extended the interest boosting bonanza—called by CIO "nothing more than a heavy windfall for the banking community"—to the fields of housing and consumer purchase. The developments were:

• The Veterans Administration and Federal Housing Administration boosted interest rates on mortgages insured by those agencies. The VA's rate on GI home loans went from 4 to 4.5%. The FHA increase was from 4.25 to 4.5%, with an additional .5% service charge.

The two agencies estimated the interest boosts would cost home buyers from $1.50 to $2.43 monthly on $10,000 mortgages. Figured over a 20-year-loan, however, it has been estimated that the interest boosts will cost home buyers an additional $1000 for higher interest payments.

• The big three auto finance companies—CIT Financial Corp., General Motors Acceptance Corp., and Commercial Credit Co.—have hiked their rates by .5%. For the average car buyer, interest cost in dollars and cents will be up some 9%. (Commercial Credit earnings were $5.4 million or $1.20 a share in the first quarter this year, $4.5 million or $1 a share a year ago.

The higher cost of home financing comes at a period when more homes are being built than are being sold.

THE CIO Economic Policy Committee recently pointed out that the deflationary interest boosts come at a time when "there are indications that unless great care is exercised, present high levels of economic activity can quickly change to a growing economic recession."

CIO supported moderate interest rates which "would help small businessmen, home owners and consumers generally" and warned:

"Ill-conceived deflationary policies, based primarily on the needs of bankers rather than of the community as a whole, can have the same evil results as similar policies did in 1920 and 1929." W.M.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THIS DEPARTMENT has received many questions about television sets, many asking specifically about the value and quality of certain brands.

In general, these points will help you select good value in a set:

Avoid too heavy an investment, especially in a big console set. You'll pay $20-$70 more for the same set in a console cabinet which may be a loss in case radical improvements make a set obsolete.

Generally speaking, there are two grades or qualities of TV sets. There are the so-called "metropolitan" receivers with 16-18 tubes which often give satisfactory reception if you live less than 15-20 miles from the broadcasting center. The more expensive "full-quality" sets necessary when receiving conditions are more difficult, generally have 22 or more tubes.

The number of tubes is not the only factor in the quality of a television set. Compare for yourself the clarity and steadiness of the pictures received, and watch out for distortion, especially at the edges of the screen. Listen carefully to the sound reception. It ought to be at least as good as your radio, not only for enjoyment but because that's another clue to the quality of the entire set.

ARRANGE for a home trial if possible to make sure the set can resist interference in your location. Because your neighbor gets good reception is no guarantee you will. Also, one make may provide better reception in a certain area than another.

In areas where telecasting is just starting there is often a rush among all kinds of stores to sell sets. There have also been reports that poor-quality models which failed to sell in established television centers have been shipped to new areas to take advantage of the scramble for sets.

In these areas particularly it's advisable to buy a set only from a reliable, established dealer who specializes in radio and other electronics equipment and who can help back up the guarantee on the set.

The most widely-sold make of television set is now the Admiral, which offers outstanding comparative values in good-quality sets. Admiral 21-inch sets cost no more than 17-inch sets in some brands. Another outstanding value is the Emerson 17-inch set for about $170 in a leatherette-covered table model, which is about $20 less than other full-quality sets of this size. RCA sets are also considered to be high quality.

AMONG the highest-quality sets, according to television technicians, but also among the costliest, are Hoffman, DuMont, Fleetmaster (with remote cable for turning the set off and on) and Andrea. Servicemen say Hoffman sets stand up exceptionally well.

Other makes often mentioned as good quality include Philco, Zenith, Stromberg, Carlson, Westinghouse, Motorola, GE, Sentinel, Pilot and Tech Master. Philco dealers are closely supervised and reported to give good service if sometimes a little slow.

Note that these national brands are widely available at discounts. Many independent retailers including neighborhood radio and TV stores give 20-25% off on television sets. A 25% discount on the Emerson 17-inch set brings it down to below $130.

'Butterleggers' Face Checkup

The Food & Drug Administration, in a recent test case, obtained a $10 fine against a Pawtucket, R. I., lunchroom proprietor who served oleo without labeling it, as required by a 1950 law.

In the past year, FDA found some 3300 eating places were serving oleo and calling it butter—at butter prices.

Shelley Asks Lowered Age For Widow's Pension Pay

THE AGE at which widows and dependent mothers of deceased workers covered by social security are eligible to receive survivors' benefits would be reduced from 65 to 55 under a bill introduced by Rep. Shelley (D. Calif.).

Urging Chairman Reed (R. Ill.) of the House Ways and Means Committee to act on his measure at this session despite the Republican leadership's announced intention of delaying any broadening of social security benefits, Shelley declared:

"It seems to me that the distressed situation of an elderly woman suddenly deprived of companionship and support by the death of a husband or child is so perfectly clear as not to require the lengthy 'study' which has been advanced as the reason for failing to act on social security bills."

Shelley pointed out that few women of 55 who have spent most of their lives as homemakers are qualified for more than the most menial of jobs. "Women over 40, regardless of experience, are given short shrift when it comes to applying for work," he said.

In many cases brought to his attention, Shelley said, the women involved have had to seek public assistance.

"I don't believe that this should be necessary for a woman who has spent her best years making a home for the breadwinner of her family," he declared.

Senate Unit Kills Housing Fund Cut

A Senate Appropriations subcommittee last week restored funds for 35,000 public housing units which the House had cut from the appropriations bill. The action went to the entire committee.

"MESSENGERS OF HOPE"—Poster children of United Cerebral Palsey fund drive meet with Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin as national drive for $7.5 million begins. They're Patricia Sprofera, Maureen Jameson and Jimmy Eischen. Durkin heads labor section of palsey fund campaign.

Handicapped Budget Cut Is Protested

A STRONG protest against GOP Administration cuts in the budget for the Bureau of Employment Security has been filed with the chairmen of House and Senate Appropriations subcommittees by the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped.

Paul A. Strachan, AFPH president, called upon Congress to expand rather than contract the appropriations. He pointed out that the Administration cuts, if sustained, will result in "less employment of handicapped workers."

"Consequently," he added, "there will be greater demands for public assistance, the cost of which will far exceed what is appropriated for special services to handicapped in the Employment Service."

MEANWHILE, bills creating a new independent Federal Agency for the Handicapped and making 14 other major provisions to aid disabled workers has been introduced by Rep. Wier (D. Minn.) and 11 other congressmen, including Reps. Withrow (R. Wis.), Rhodes (D. Pa.), McCormack (D. Mass.), Chudoff (D. Pa.), Kelley (D. Pa.), Perkins (D. Ky.), Tollefson (R. Wash.), Celler (D.-Lib. N. Y.) and Doyle (D. Calif.).

Wier's bill, now before the House Labor Committee, is similar to one which the committee approved by a 13 to 12 vote in 1948. It would set up a comprehensive program of rehabilitation, training and aid to the physically and mentally handicapped, including grants to the states for the establishment of workshops, direct help and safety programs.

A $10 million revolving loan fund would be set up from which states could borrow money for vocational rehabilitation whenever their own funds were exhausted.

CIO Urges Full U. S. Grant To UN Children's Fund

CIO HAS urged Congress to vote the full U. S. contribution for the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, calling it "one of the most effective agencies in the United Nations."

The request was voiced by Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee and Dir. Nathan E. Cowan of the CIO Legislative Dept. in joint letters to Rep. Taber (R. N. Y.) and Sen. Bridges (R. N.H.), appropriations committee chairmen of the two houses of Congress.

Pointing out that "every other country has come through with its pledge," the CIO spokesmen said that "both humanitarian and practical considerations should determine U. S. policy on this important matter." UNICEF, they added, is better known in many countries of the world than even the UN itself because of its "consistently fine" work.

Millions of hungry, ill-clad and sick children have been provided with food, clothing, medicine and other forms of assistance by the fund. The U. S. share is $9.8 million.

"The withholding of the United States' share of appropriations for the UNICEF would in effect destroy the program," Potofsky and Cowan said.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

DURING the last 10 days, the writer has been conducting a series of meetings around the country with CIO regional directors and staff representatives. Meetings have been held or are planned for Washington, Chicago, Atlanta, Denver and San Francisco.

The purpose of these meetings is to revamp the set-up of the Organizational Dept. so that we can better do the primary job of the CIO—organize the unorganized.

Sometime during the coming week we plan to announce the complete details of this new organizational program which we are convinced will make for a more efficient and effective operation.

Today there are millions of unorganized workers who need and want the benefits of unionism. It is our job to give them the leadership and help they want so they too will win the great advances CIO members have achieved over the years.

Organizing the unorganized workers was the great goal of our beloved Philip Murray and our equally beloved Allan Haywood. Doing that job, effectively and efficiently, is the best tribute we can pay their memory.

IUE Wins At Big GE Plant In Alabama

By JOHN THOMASON

THE CIO Electrical Workers racked up one of CIO's largest election victories in the South in recent months when 1500 employes at the Anniston, Ala., General Electric Tube Works voted "yes" in an NLRB runoff election.

The results of the bargaining election on Apr. 30 were 715 "yes," 587 "no," 3 challenged and 2 void.

The AFL Machinists were eliminated in the first election on Apr. 16 when the result was 551 IUE-CIO, 525 no union and 266 IAM-AFL.

IUE-CIO overcame GE's letter and newspaper ad campaign by sticking to the issues — wages and working conditions in the Anniston GE plant far below those won by the IUE elsewhere in the GE chain.

The victory was the result of the combined efforts of a hard-working shop committee aided by CIO and Southern Organizing Committee staff members, IUE-CIO representatives and volunteer assistance from organizers of other international unions stationed in the Anniston area.

The success of the IUE-CIO campagin has opened the entire area to other CIO internationals. Campaigns are getting under way in textile, clothing and steel plants in the city.

CWA Signs Another Pact

ANOTHER agreement was reached last week by the CIO Communications Workers with a unit of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. The pact covers 16,500 Western Electric exchange equipment installers in 43 states and provides increases averaging 8.5c an hour.

Workers with 5.5 or more years service receive increases of 13c an hour. Other gains include two additional paid holidays in three areas, reclassification of job clerks and arbitration of discharges for employes with more than six months' service.

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne was polling the CWA executive board for authority to call a strike, effective on his discretion, against another AT&T subsidiary, the Michigan Bell Telephone Co.

Rep. Withers Is Dead From Stroke

Funeral services were held last week at Dixon, Ky., for Rep. Withers (D. Ky.), who died suddenly from a stroke while working in his office on Capitol Hill. He was 69.

Withers was elected to Congress in a special election last August and re-elected in November, with CIO-PAC support. Earlier he had been appointed to the Senate to serve out the unexpired term of former Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley.

3 Top Assistants To Riffe Named

ORAL GARRISON

R. J. THOMAS

C. A. McPEAK

APPOINTMENT of three top assistants to John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, was announced last week.

They are:

R. J. Thomas, named an assistant on organizing.

Oral Garrison, a pioneer of the CIO and formerly of the CIO Organizing Committee in Atlanta, named an assistant on organizing.

Carl A. McPeak, Texas state CIO director, named an assistant in charge of field administration and councils.

The appointments are part of a program, now being developed by Riffe and CIO national officers, to strengthen the Organizational Dept.

Anthony Wayne Smith, who had served as assistant director of CIO councils and as executive secretary of the CIO Regional Development and Conservation Committee, will continue in the latter post.

GARRISON'S labor career parallels Riffe's in many ways. Both first were members of the Miners and then of the Steelworkers. And when Riffe was director of the CIO Organizing Committee in the South in recent years, Garrison was the committee's secretary-treasurer.

Garrison was born in the southern Illinois mine country of a union family. In 1920, Garrison became secretary to Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers and continued in that and other UMW posts for 20 years.

In 1935, he was among the unionists who participated in the initial meeting of the Committee for Industrial Organization and joined in all of the early meetings leading to the birth of the CIO.

IN 1936, Garrison served as comptroller of Labor's Non-Partisan League in the campaign for re-election of Franklin D. Roosevelt. During World War II, he represented the Miners with war agencies.

In 1949, Garrison was named by the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray as secretary-treasurer of the CIO Organizing Committee in the South. Garrison is a member and a staff representative of the CIO Steelworkers.

R. J. "Tommy" Thomas is a past international president of the CIO Auto Workers and has been a CIO national officer for many years.

In 1946, he was named CIO assistant director of organization, serving with the late Allan S. Haywood. In 1951 he also became chairman of the Department Store Workers Organizing Committee.

Born in 1900 in East Palestine, O., Thomas studied at Wooster College, worked briefly for the Bell Telephone Co., went to Detroit and worked as a welder in the Cadillac and Chrysler plants.

Thomas was a leader in the first organization of local unions of automobile workers, and participated in the founding convention of the UAW, at which he was elected a vice president. In 1939, Thomas became UAW-CIO president, a post he held until 1946, when he was succeeded by Walter P. Reuther.

McPEAK, Riffe's new assistant in charge of field administration and councils, comes to the national CIO after long service in the labor movement in Texas and other southwestern states.

Born in 1905, he was a railroad worker at the age of 12 and was blacklisted after a strike in 1922. McPeak moved on to the Oklahoma oil fields and in the early Thirties helped in the rebuilding of the Oil Workers Intl. Union.

After the last war, McPeak served for two years as Southwestern director for the CIO Political Action Committee. In 1947, he became assistant state director in Texas for the CIO Organizing Committee and in 1950 became state director.

Reuther Hits GOP Drive For Sales Tax

CONGRESS will remove the excess profits tax on big corporations and enact a federal sales tax which will hit workers and consumers hardest.

That prediction was made last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a speech before the CIO Shoe Workers convention in Atlantic City.

Reuther said such action by Congress would save corporations billions of dollars and the tax burden would be "shifted to the little guy."

Calling the much-discussed Reed bill, for an 11% across the board tax reduction, "a smoke screen," Reuther predicted it would not be adopted.

(Full reports of Shoe Workers' convention will be published in the next issue of The CIO News.)

House Increases Anti-Trust Top Fine To $50,000

THE HOUSE has passed the bill by Rep. Celler (D.-Lib. N. Y.) which would boost from $5000 to $50,000 the maximum fine for each violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Action came by voice vote after the House Judiciary Committee reported that the measure would "enable the judge to make the punishment more appropriately fit the crime."

The committee said that the present penalty is so low that the Justice Dept. reported seven years ago that "violation is regarded by businessmen as a good business risk."

Austrian Reds Say 'Thanks Joe'

The Austrian Communist weekly "Die Union," of Vienna, last week published an editorial entitled "Thank you, Mr. McCarthy."

The editorial expressed Communist gratitude to the Wisconsin senator for "uncovering the fact that the U. S. State Dept. is subsidizing the German and Austrian press."

UPWA Asks Wage Boost For 130,000

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers are seeking wage increases for 130,000 members.

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein last week notified the packing industry's Big Four that the union wants "early negotiations" under wage reopening clauses of existing contracts. The Big Four are Swift, Wilson, Armour and Cudahy, who employ some 80,000 UPWA members.

A UPWA spokesman said the negotiations are expected to set a pattern for an additional 50,000 union members who work for smaller packers.

Some 400 delegates from locals throughout the country will attend UPWA's second biennial national wage and contract conference in Chicago May 15-17. Policy on wage demands and medical and hospital coverage will be set for pending negotiations.

Story Of A Strike—

'New South' In Palatka Needs Your Help

By JULES WEINBERG

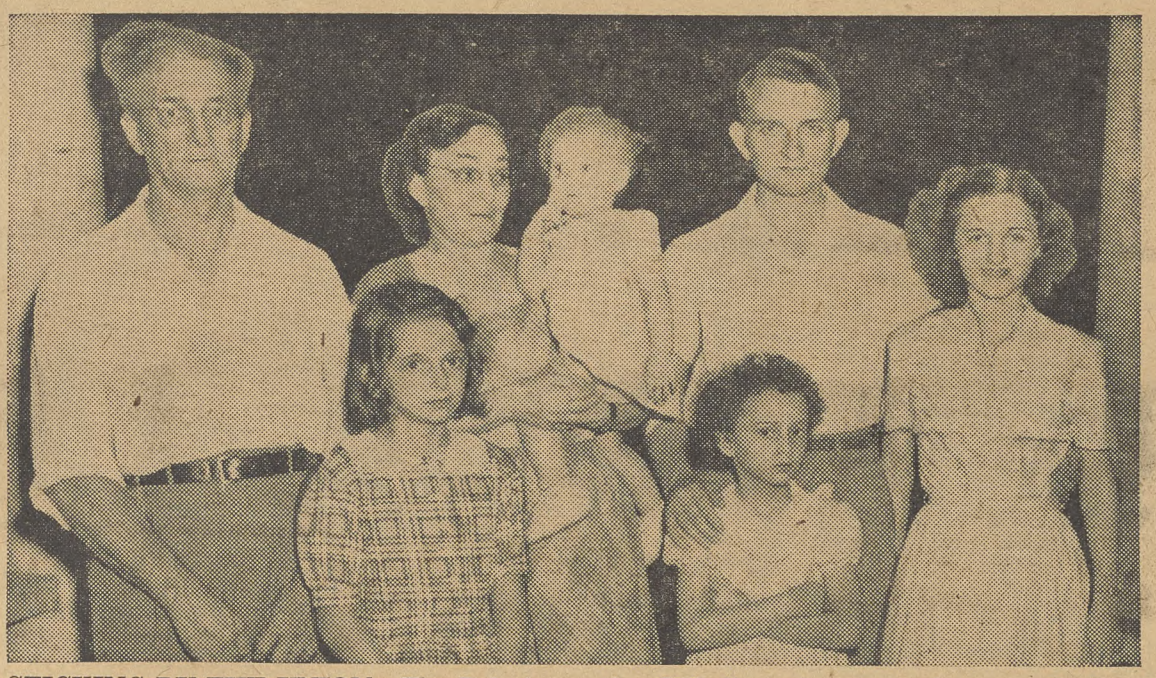
AN ELDERLY man in work-worn overhauls came to the back of the County Court House bandstand and called Bill Smith, CIO assistant regional director in Florida.

He pressed a quarter into Bill Smith's hand, closed Bill's fingers and said "God bless you."

He was one of 600 townspeople of Palatka, Fla., who had come to an open forum in defense of 130 furniture workers on strike against Florida Furniture Industries, Inc.

ALONG WITH other workers who poured on to the bandstand to contribute, the elderly man was typical of a new spirit in the South where workers—despite all the pressure of union-busting managements and their lawyers—are rallying to the CIO.

Other workers in the town, and merchants and professional men, too, came up to contribute. For the CIO furniture strikers of Palatka have won the goodwill of the entire community. They have taken what appeared to be a hopeless situation and made it into an exemplification of the spirit of CIO.



STICKING BY THE UNION—The Palatka furniture strike is a family affair for the Rigdons. Father Rigdon spent 11 years at sweatshop wages, Mrs. Rigdon helps run the CIO Commissary, and young Garland Rigdon walks the picket line. They're all counting on CIO for strike assistance to help continue their fight for decent wages.

Palatka is in northern Florida, an area of anti-union sentiment. Industries there have counted for years upon the prejudices aroused by a bigoted coalition of politicians and management to keep the unions out. Yet Palatka may one day be a monument to the crusading spirit of CIO in the South.

The workers of Florida Furniture Industries have suffered for years under conditions that would shock a sweatshop operator. Their wages are the bare legal minimum of 75c an hour. A few highly-skilled people earn as much as 90c and an absolute top of $1.35. They work a 50-hour week, but even with the legal overtime it's impossible for them to keep body and soul together.

No promises of "pie in the sky" brought the Palatka workers to the picket lines. The appeal to the strikers was the old-fashioned crusade of CIO:

Remember that you fight first for the right to call your soul your own, and material benefits will come out of winning this battle.

John Ramsay of the National Religion & Labor Foundation went into Palatka and talked to everyone he could buttonhole—editors, radio station managers, ministers. They knew the plight of the strikers but the question was would they treat them fairly.

The publisher of the Palatka Daily News, despite many sharp differences with the CIO, considered the union's case a fair one. He made a personal attempt to bring the company to the bargaining table in good faith.

The operator of the local radio station joined in the effort. The mayor of the town voiced his sympathy. The people of Palatka were aroused to a realization that they had a stake in the victory of their neighbors on strike.

Close teamwork between Charles Cowl, Florida state CIO director, and Smith built the picket lines from a few scattered strikers into demonstrations of the workers' will to win.

THE AFL unions in the Palatka area walked the picket lines with their CIO brothers. Some gave money. CIO opened commissaries so that workers could be fed. But the struggle is not yet won.

Because the furniture strikers of Palatka have placed their faith in the brotherhood of the CIO, Ramsay issued this appeal:

"We call now upon every union across this nation to make their strike a memorial to the new spirit of the South. We ask that every CIO union, and AFL union, too, consider the cause of these people and give what they can so that the Palatka strikers can go back in that plant as free men in CIO and not in hunger and want."

NMU Asks Pay Hikes As Talks Near

WIDESPREAD revisions of two major contracts which expire next month have been prepared by the CIO Maritime Union for presentation to employers associations when negotiations open next week.

The proposals are based on recommendations received by the union during the past year from rank and file members, crews of vessels, and union officials.

They will be presented to the deep sea cargo and passenger ship companies operating out of East and Gulf Coast ports, and to the owners of deep sea tankers. Contracts with both groups expire in mid-June.

NMU PRES. Joseph N. Curran said every effort will be made to bring the two deep sea agreements and the lakes and rivers contract to a common June 15 expiration date.

The proposals include unspecified general wage increases; higher overtime and penalty rate provisions; increases in subsistence rates, traveling rates, pension and welfare contributions, maintenance and care rates, rates for supplying own tools or uniforms, and rates for serving special meals.

The union also wants wage inequities eliminated, and the language and rates in various overtime clauses revised. Clarification of working rules in all departments will be sought.

Auto Union Wins GM Plant

THE LAST non-union stronghold in the General Motors industrial empire, the Rochester Products Div. at Rochester, N. Y., has fallen to the CIO Auto Workers.

"This overwhelming victory, which saw 2222 votes cast for the UAW-CIO as against 1137 for no union, completes the full circle of UAW-CIO organization in all GM manufacturing plants throughout the United States and Canada," said Vice Pres. John W. Livingston, head of the UAW-CIO General Motors Dept.

The latest victory raises to 108 the number of GM locals within the international union. The Rochester plant was the only one not represented at the union's recent Atlantic City convention.

Livingston said the victory has special significance, as GM had always given the Rochester workers the same gains won by the union through collective bargaining for other plants.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

The general lack of legislative activity during the opening months of the 83rd Congress did not make it feasible to publish The CIO News "Keep Your Eye on Congress" column prior to this issue.

Because of the many requests, this feature is now being resumed in a slightly different form. Instead of listing most major bills in which the CIO has an interest, it will be limited to a weekly listing of pending bills which should have immediate attention from the people back home.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
CIO program for amendment of Taft-Hartley Act.	Restores workers' rights denied by T-H Act.	Before House and Senate Labor Coms.	Write to Representatives and Senators urging support for CIO program.

UAW Urges Inquiry On GE Scabbing

THE GENERAL Electric Corp. is using public funds for strike-breaking purposes at its jet-engine plant in Evendale.

That charge was made last week by the CIO Auto Workers Executive Board as they demanded a Senate Labor Committee inquiry.

Noting the jet engine plant is "taxpayer financed" and "produces jet engines solely for the government," the UAW urged an immediate investigation.

The board urged the committee to "take immediate action to prevent General Electric from passing the cost of its strike-breaking activities on to the Federal government through cost-plus or renegotiated contracts."

The Evendale strike, now seven weeks old, began when GE refused to bargain in good faith and rejected arbitration proposals of the Federal Conciliation Service. The union had accepted the proposals.

UAW LOCAL 647 is seeking wage rates on a par with the rest of the jet industry, standard seniority protection, a standard arbitration clause and other regular benefits already in effect in other GE plants.

GE's present practices, which the union insists must be halted, even penalizes workers who lose time for illness or injury stemming from their job and permits the company to cancel all job rights of some veteran employes ill or injured for more than six months.

The UAW-CIO continued its offer to arbitrate the issues in dispute as the Conciliation Service had suggested. GE continued to refuse.

Everything's Up To Date

. . . in the modernistic, glass-front architecture of Lever House, the New York City headquarters of Lever Brothers Co. But the same can't be said for labor relations policy of the big British-Dutch soap firm, which has forced CIO Chemical Workers on strike. Some 1000 members of UGCCWA Local 336 are out at Lever's Hammond, Ind., plant. They're also picketing the New York company office. On the picket line (inset photo upper left) are Winifred Downing (left) and Fred York of Local 336, with Marion Bacigal of the international. Pickets at the Hammond plant are at left. Wages and seniority are major issues in the strike. (Story on Page 2.)

Reuther Approves Merger Plan Of CIO Retail Union And DPO

NATIONAL CIO approval of a proposed merger of two unions in the retail-wholesale field was announced last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Involved are the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union and the unaffiliated Distributive, Processing & Office Workers.

Reuther made his announcement after a conference in Washington with RWDSU Pres. Irving Simon, DPO Pres. Arthur Osman and other officials of the two organization.

The proposal to merge the two unions into a unified CIO affiliate—with an estimated total membership of some 130,000—would be brought before conventions of the two organizations in October. If ratified, a joint convention would be held and a new organization would be chartered by CIO.

IN APPROVING the merger proposal, Reuther predicted a single union would "bring the full benefits of democratic CIO unionism to the workers in the retail, wholesale and department store fields who constitute one of the large remaining areas of lack of organization in our economic society."

Arrangements for the proposed merger were handled for National CIO by Louis Hollander, CIO Clothing Workers vice president and New York State CIO Council president. He was assisted by R. J. Thomas, assistant to John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils.

The CIO officials expressed hope that Local 1-S of the CIO United Department Store Workers—representing several thousand R. H. Macy's employes in the New York area—would move to join the unified organization.

IN HIS ANNOUNCEMENT (see adjoining column), Reuther noted that in the past "the policies of the DPO strongly appeared to be in support of the Communist Party line" but that "for approximately two years, however, a major change in the union's structure and ideology has been developing."

"Intensive study by leading CIO union officials in the New York area," Reuther continued, "resulted in a conclusion that the officers of the DPO had sincerely and irrevocably broken with the Communist Party, and the Communist Party has been vigorously critical of these men for the past year or more."

The CIO president released correspondence with officials of the DPO, in which he had spelled out CIO's constitutional rejection of communism and all other totalitarian political groups as anti-union organizations. He cited specifically constitutional provisions banning Communist-dominated organizations as CIO affiliates.

REUTHER further released a statement by the DPO National Executive Board, adopted at a May 8 meeting in Atlantic City, which said in part:

"DPO repudiates the Communist Party, its principles and purposes, and regards them as sinister, disruptive and incompatible with the spirit, aims and objectives of a free democratic trade union movement such as CIO."

The so-far successful negotiations for a merger of RWDSU and DPO were praised by Retail Workers Pres. Simon in a letter to Reuther, predicting the new international union "will effectively exploit the possibilities in our jurisdiction."

Simon voiced thanks of the RWDSU Executive Board for the work of Hollander and Thomas in effecting the merger agreement.

Reuther Statement On Merger

Here is a statement by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther on the pending merger of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union and the unaffiliated Distributive, Processing & Office Workers:

I AM PLEASED that merger discussions between the CIO Retail, Wholesale, & Department Store Union and the Distributive, Processing & Office Workers of America have been successfully concluded.

The unified organization will be in a strong position to carry on the work of organizing the unorganized in the jurisdiction covered by that union.

In the interim period before the merger Convention, DPO will become part of the CIO, pay per capita obligations to National CIO, join in the various CIO regional bodies and participate in the CIO jurisdictional disputes plan.

Accordingly, we welcome the DPO into the ranks of CIO at this time, and pledge them our fraternal support.

THE MERGED UNION will have the full support of the CIO and its affiliates in its future organizing efforts. We are convinced that a basis has been established to bring the full benefits of democratic CIO unionism to the workers in the retail, wholesale and department store fields who constitute one of the large remaining areas of lack of organization in our economic society.

An important factor throughout these merger discussions was the question of the past history of the DPO. For some years, the policies of the DPO strongly appeared to be in support of the Communist Party line. For approximately two years, however, a major change in that union's structure and ideology has been developing.

Intensive study by leading CIO union officials in the New York area—men who have had great experience in combatting the Communist problem—resulted in a conclusion that the officers of the DPO had sincerely and irrevocably broken with the Communist Party; and the Communist Party has been vigorously critical of these men for the past year or more.

The attitude of the CIO officials who have investigated the DPO on behalf of the National CIO was further confirmed by a number of independent labor experts who have closely followed the activities of this union.

THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD of the DPO has implemented its anti-totalitarian position by a statement of policy which pledges that the DPO, both by word and deed, "will manifest an aggressive, affirmative support for democracy and democratic institutions and at the same time vigorously oppose and distrust all forms of totalitarianism and all forms of outside interference in the conduct of union affairs."

The Executive Board of the DPO has also fully endorsed the provisions of the CIO Constitution explicitly denouncing Communist infiltration.

Under these circumstances, we have confidence that the DPO will provide a constructive and useful function in the unified organization. Thus, we give our approval to this merger and pledge our support to the new organization, whose final merger action will take place at a joint convention next October.

Time For Lifebuoy—

Chemical Strikers Battle Lever Brothers

THE CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers think it high time that Lever Brothers Co. used a little Lifebuoy to clean up its labor relations.

About 1000 members of UGCCW Local 336 have been on strike at the Hammond, Ind., plant of the company, a subsidiary of the British-Dutch soap and margarine trust.

Their picket line has foamed over from Hammond to New York City, where two strikers have been picketing the ultra-modernistic glass tower, Lever House, which contains the firm's general offices. (Pictures on Page 1.)

THE UNION went on strike Mar. 20 after negotiations for a new contract broke down over wages — both amount and method of application—and restrictions on seniority.

Their walkout halted production at the Hammond plant of such household commonplaces as Lifebuoy, Rinso, Lux toilet soap and flakes, Silver Dust, Swan, Breeze, Surf, Spry shortening and Good Luck oleomargarine.

For two years before the strike, the union and the company had agreements which provided cost of living wage increases, but no improvement factor.

"The technological advancement of the industry, and more particularly of this plant, has been very substantial," declared Pres. Robert E. Jones of Local 336, "and it is for recognition of this fact by management that we are basically striking."

THERE WAS no disagreement over an employe benefits program that included both contributory and non-contributory life insurance with a face value of $6 million, and hospital-surgical-medical insurance covering all workers and their families.

But the company, in its drive to break up the union, discontinued its share of this coverage after its employes walked out—first time a firm has done this in the highly industrialized Chicago-Northern Indiana area.

To protect the members against possible hardship, the local has taken on the burden of financing the premium payments to the tune of $2845 a week—a major task for a local of 1000 members.

HOWEVER, this added load ate so quickly into what was a substantial strike fund when the walkout began that the local has been forced to appeal for help.

The pickets who have been parading in front of the company's New York headquarters are Winifred Downing, a soap inspector with 18 years' service with Lever Brothers, and Fred York, a warehouse checker with 10 years' seniority.

They frequently have been accompanied by Marion Bacigal, of the international union, and were looking forward to entertaining on their picket line UGCCW members from New York locals, who work for such firms as Richard Hudnut, Squibb & Co. and Helena Rubenstein.

Pay Hike Urged For Congressmen, Federal Judges

THE SENATE Judiciary Committee last week approved a bill boosting the pay of all members of Congress and virtually all federal judges.

The measure would hike the salaries of congressmen and senators from the present $12,500 a year, plus $2500 expenses, to a straight $25,000. No change was proposed in the $40,000 now paid the speaker of the House. The raise, first since 1946, would give members of Congress about the same purchasing power they had in 1939, the committee said.

In the courts, the bill would raise the salaries of federal district judges from $15,000 to $25,000 a year; circuit judges from $17,500 to $27,500; associate justices of the Supreme Court from $25,000 to $35,000, and the chief justice from $25,500 to $40,000.

Phone Union Gets Hike In 2 More Pacts

THE CIO Communications Workers have won contracts with two more units of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., bringing wage increases and other benefits to more than 23,000 employes.

The agreements cover 17,000 CWA members at Michigan Bell, and 6500 others in Western Electric warehouses and repair shops throughout the country.

With the signing of these contracts, CWA has reached agreements with eight AT&T subsidiaries employing 70,000 — about a fifth of the union's membership.

Wages were not an issue in Michigan since agreement had been reached on raises from $2 to $3 a week. As a result of the CWA's strike authorization, the firm agreed to upgrade several towns and to cut the progression schedule by six months to bring these items in line with other pacts signed this spring.

More than 5000 CWA members went on strike last week at three WE plants in North Carolina after a 20-hour negotiating session broke up without agreement on a new contract. The plants are at Winston-Salem, Greensboro and Burlington.

Reuther Urges Ike To Veto Give-Away

CIO LAST WEEK urged Pres. Eisenhower to veto the congressionally-approved costal oil give-away bill as a measure "from which the public will receive little benefit and the corporations great profit and other advantages." The appeal was voiced by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther after the House approved the Senate's oil lands bill by a 278 to 116 vote and sent it on to the White House.

Terming the give-away measure a "hasty and ill-considered deal" reversing conservation policies established by past Republican Administrations, Reuther emphasized in his letter to Eisenhower:

"More than oil is involved in the principles underlying this piece of legislation.

"SPECIAL interests which have long looked greedily at the great public land domain regard this bill as a precedent to end federal ownership or control of great areas of grazing land, of recreation facilities, and of timber lands and mineral deposits.

"If the offshore oil bill becomes law, these forces will be encouraged to launch a stronger and accelerated campaign to take from the people of America these great areas of public land Thus, the oil lands bill represents a first step—but a long and probably decisive one—in turning America away from its splended, historic, bi-partisan conservation program."

Reuther also wrote the President that his signature to the bill would "cause great apprehension on the part of the American people generally" because it would reverse past U. S. Supreme Court decisions tht the coastal oil resources "are the property of all the people."

Under the bill voted by Congress, Reuther continued, "there is no question that the exploitation of these submerged lands will benefit a tiny minority of the American public and, most specifically, certain corporate interests which are eager to exploit these natural resources for their own private profit."

In approving the Senate bill granting states title to coastal oil lands to their "historic" boundaries, the House avoided the usual conference procedure for compromising measures voted by each body.

REPS. CELLER (D.-Lib. N. Y.) and Feighan (D. O.) opposed the refusal to send the bill to conference. They pointed out that the Senate has refused to act on federal control of the outer continental shelf.

Shortly before approving the Senate measure, the House passed a separate bill authorizing federal development of the oil, gas and mineral resources in the shelf beyond the area turned over to the states. The vote was 309 to 91.

Republican Leader Hallock, supporting the two-package approach, assured the House that Senate GOP leaders have promised to enact legislation dealing with the outer shelf in a seperate bill. Rep. Walter (D. Pa.), who had also favored the give-away bill, said passage of the second measure put it "squarely up to the Senate to live up to assurances" it will enact outer shelf legislation.

TELL THEIR CONGRESSMEN—Group of CIO Communications Workers meet with CWA international leaders in Washington before going to Capitol Hill to talk with lawmakers on Sen. Smith's (R. N.J.) proposed Taft-Hartley amendment leaving utility workers at mercy of states. In rear (center) is CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne.

CWA Leaders Visit Capital

SOME 25 local officers and staff representatives of the CIO Communications Workers went to Capitol Hill last week to protest the proposed Smith Bill to amend the Taft-Hartley Act.

They came from Virginia, Maryland and Washington, D. C. The Smith measure they opposed would weaken federal labor regulation, strengthen the states' powers in that field, and exempt many utility workers from present coverage of the National Labor Relations Act.

They "buttonholed" 62 senators to urge them to press for public hearings on the Smith proposal and to support fair revision of T-H, as pledged by the Eisenhower Administration.

Before going to the Hill, the delegation was briefed by CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who objected to the Smith Bill when it was introduced. Ben Blankenship, CWA-CIO legislative director, accompanied the group.

Ike Slashes TVA By $63 Million

Pres. Eisenhower has cut from the budget more than $63 million requested by former Pres. Truman for the Tennessee Valley Authority for next fiscal year.

Most of the cut, $61 million, came from funds for the construction of power facilities. Biggest individual reduction was the elimination of $30 million for two units of a steam power plant near Memphis.

All State CIO Councils were alerted last week to urge Congress to restore the full $178 million TVA appropriation. Anthony W. Smith, CIO Regional Development & Conservation Committee executive secretary, said "the full original appropriations" should be voted. (More on TVA, Page 9.)

Steel Wage Parleys Get Under Way

THE CIO Steelworkers, led by Pres. David J. McDonald, opened negotiations for 1953 wage increases at a series of bargaining sessions last week.

The first meetings were held May 14 with U. S. Steel in Pittsburgh, with McDonald leading the USA-CIO bargaining committee. Acting for the world's largest steel producer, which ordinarily sets the industry's wage pattern, was a group headed by John A. Stephens, vice president in charge of industrial relations.

The company agreed to hear arguments supporting the union's proposal for a joint study of a guaranteed annual wage.

ON THE SAME DAY, the union, represented by other negotiating committees, began sessions with the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. at Youngstown, O., and the Inland Steel Co. at Indiana Harbor, Ind.

This week initial meetings were to be held with the Republic Steel Co. and the Bethlehem Steel Co.

The USA-CIO went into negotiations without having spelled out the amount of the general wage increase it was authorized to seek at a meeting of the Intl. Wage Policy Committee in Atlantic City last month.

IN A PRELIMINARY statement made as the negotiations with U. S. Steel began, McDonald said the union hoped "to arrive at a speedy and equitable agreement."

The Steelworkers need a general wage increase now, he declared. They are entitled to it because of the continually increasing productivity of the industry, he continued, while the growing earnings of the producers, including U. S. Steel, make it possible.

Those profits were boosted substantially by price increases imposed by the industry over the last few weeks, especially in extra charges for product processing. U. S. Steel's net profit for the first three months of 1953 was equal to $1.60 a share; it paid out a 75c dividend.

Shipbuilders' Chief Defeats Gang Attacks, Elected Hoboken Mayor

THE CIO'S John J. Grogan, onetime pipefitter who rose to the presidency of the CIO Shipbuilding Union, was elected mayor of Hoboken, N. J., last week after one of the most turbulent campaigns in that city's tumultuous political history.

Grogan campaigned on a pledge of clean government and good government, and a promise to clean up a racket-ridden waterfront which has shared in the charges of corruption hurled at pier operations throughout the Port of New York area.

He drove out of office Mayor Fred M. De Sapio, cousin of Carmen De Sapio, New York Tammany leader, by a vote of 11,303 to 9359. And Grogan carried in with him seven of the nine members of the City Council. One De Sapio supporter was elected to the council, while the victor in the remaining contest will be decided in a runoff election.

BOTH GROGAN and De Sapio are Democrats. There was no Republican candidate. Two independents finished far behind the top vote-getters.

Grogan's victory was hailed by a cheering throng of his supporters who staged an impromptu parade into Hoboken's City Hall and greeted him in his office.

"I'm deeply appreciative of the opportunity to serve the people of Hoboken," he said. "My running mates and myself will do everything in our power to keep faith with the citizens and to carry out the pledges we made to build a better city."

The election climaxed a long, determined fight by organized labor and other responsible elements among the people, led by Grogan, to restore decency to Hoboken, a city of 50,000.

It started in 1947, when Grogan and his political allies ran a fusion ticket that unseated a City Commission that owed its allegiance to the old McFeely machine, which worked closely with that of former Mayor Frank Hague in neighboring Jersey City.

GROGAN and De Sapio both were elected commissioners, the latter becoming mayor.

Over the years Grogan and De Sapio split. The latter built up a powerful machine, which Grogan refused to join.

The big split came last year when Grogan headed a campaign to replace the city's commission form of government with a mayor and council elected directly by the people.

JOHN J. GROGAN

THE FIGHT was bitter. De Sapio repeatedly went to the courts to block Grogan's campaign to put the issue to the voters for a decision, but was beaten back at every turn. The election was finally held last November, and resulted in a thumping victory for the Grogan-led forces.

The campaign was marked by considerable violence as Grogan, with the full support of organized labor, turned his vaunted political oratory on the corrupt waterfront and De Sapio's alleged tie—which he has denied—to it.

STONES were hurled through the windows of Grogan's campaign headquarters, his campaign workers' cars were overturned and damaged and billboards were fired. Gangs tried to break up rallies, but this strongarm tactic ended when husky shipyard workers and other Grogan supporters adopted protective measures.

Grogan, who worked as pipefitter in the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co. Hoboken yard, is the son of a longshoreman. He has a long record of activity both in his union and in politics. He was elected vice president of IUMSWA-CIO in 1944 and served until he became president in 1951. He has been a member of several CIO committees.

Brewers Out In Milwaukee

The CIO Brewery Workers went on strike last week against six big Milwaukee breweries, halting production in one of the country's biggest brewing centers.

The walkout started after negotiations for a new contract broke down over wages and the 35-hour week. The vote to halt work was 6652 to 108, or better than 60 to 1.

Smaller Unions Growing

The recent convention of the United Shoe Workers offers a good reminder that the smaller unions of the CIO, as well as the big outfits like auto and steel, have been steadily growing in size and influence.

The Shoe union started off small; it has often been harassed by reactionary employers and fly-by-night operators; and it, like other unions, has felt the sting of Taft-Hartley.

Yet the Shoe Workers membership is now up to about 65,000. It has done a substantial amount of new organizing. Its organizing activities have forced many open shop employers to raise wages and increase benefits.

The Shoe Workers can thus be proud of their record. And the CIO can well be proud of the record of the Shoe Workers and its other smaller unions, which have carried the message and creed of CIO to hundreds of thousands of American workers.

Quick, Herman, the Cop!

The other day Mr. Stichman took some community leaders on a tour of Brooklyn slums. They were bad, very bad.

The Republican official had an "explanation." He said the trouble was inadequate and inefficient enforcement.

That may be part of the truth. But the whole truth is that New York's slums, and the slums of every other big city, won't be eliminated by more cops and sanitary experts.

Slums will be cleared out by a long-range, intelligent program of building decent homes for low-income families. That costs money, which antagonizes GOP economizers—but it also ends slums, which police and health inspectors, no matter how many you have, simply cannot do.

It's A New South

A Negro citizen has been elected to the school board in Atlanta, Ga., by a big majority over the white incumbent. Two Negroes were elected to the Democratic Party's County Committee in the same Atlanta election.

This is something new in a section that prides itself on being the "new South." Such elections results would have been unthinkable just a few years ago. The people of Atlanta should take pride in the fact that color is no longer an automatic bar to public office.

The Atlanta elections will not get much space in the newspapers of Moscow—we're willing to bet a buffalo nickel to a paper rouble on that one. The Communists have pretended to be the friend of the non-white races, not in order to help them but to help emphasize the frictions that plague our democratic society.

The people who believe in democracy fight for Negro rights so that the Negroes may achieve full justice in our society, which will in turn strengthen our democracy still more.

Those believers in democracy have scored a win in Atlanta, and Moscow will do its best to keep it a secret.

In Other Words—

Answer To The Book-Banners

The developing censorship campaign in America was condemned by James T. Farrell, well-known novelist, in this recent statement to the Minneapolis Star.

By JAMES T. FARRELL

BEHIND THE Iron Curtain in Berlin and Vienna, I have lectured on American literature and American life. I have spoken of our freedom and have taunted the Communists.

I have pointed out that the fundamental distinction between our democratic society and Stalin's slave land of totalitarianism lies in the basic fact that we possess rights, the rights to freedom of speech, press assembly and worship. I have emphasized that we have freedom of access to information and to culture.

Abraham Linclon described our country as "the last best hope" of the world. Now more than ever, his words are pregnantly true. And our democracy, our freedom, our way of life is and will depend largely on what we think of ourselves, on how we value, use, cherish and defend our liberty.

Freedom Is Indivisible

Cultural freedom, the right to free expression, the freedom of choice on the part of the reader of books, is an integral part of our freedom. It is indivisible with our other freedoms. But again and again in this country, it has been menaced by censors, by pressure groups, by sundry persons and organizations which falsely hold that a serious, honest and realistic fiction is obscene, blasphemous, immoral, a danger to the youth and even to the very foundations of this republic.

Again and again, such groups have attempted, by unconstitutional means, to ban and to censor honest and serious books. Almost every serious American novelist of this country has been the victim of this kind of unconstitutional, unfair and prejudiced type of action.

Such action is based on fear and distrust. It treats the citizens of this nation as citizens incapable of making up their own minds and unable to read without becoming demoralized and depraved. It treats youth as though the young people of this nation were still in swaddling clothes and unable to bear facing a simple representation of the facts of life. It puts the honest efforts of literary artists in the category of vice and depravity.

This is unfair. It violates the basic spirit of fair play which has so often been one of the most praiseworthy aspects of our life here in America. It is unconstitutional and substitutes private censorship, private prejudice and private pressure for constitutional action.

Now I understand that this is happening in Detroit and in some cities of Minnesota. In the past, it has happened in other parts of the country. It has failed to achieve the claimed benefits which censors want to achieve.

Fear And Apprehension

The effort to censor serious books has not helped to eliminate vice; it has not lessened or reduced the incidence of juvenile delinquency; it has not rid the land of poverty; it has not conquered disease; it has not reduced the number of dope addicts; it has not caused a lowering of the venereal disease rate; it has not saved souls from perdition.

It has only created confusion, fear, apprehension. It cannot contribute to our social and moral progress because it is a threat to our freedom, and it cuts at the very nerves of honest expression.

I have no objection to anyone telling people not to read my books. I ask no one to like them. Nobody puts a gun to the head of anyone and forces him to read "A World I Never Made" and "Gashouse McGinty." But some people want to use all forces of the law and order to prevent American citizens from access to these and to other books, if they so wish. This is unfair.

As an American writer, all I have ever asked for is liberty. I have boasted and asserted with pride, in this country, in Europe, and behind the Iron Curtain, that I come from a country where there is liberty. But we have here a tendency which will seriously limit our liberty, if it is successful. I am convinced that this kind of censorship will fail now, as it has in the past.

Our great task in America is to be free. Our job is to make democracy work. But we are failing in our task, and neglecting it, when we sidetrack ourselves with book-banning, with unfair, unwarranted and wholly unnecessary attacks on our American literature.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ALL IS NO LONGER beer and skittles between the Eisenhower "new team" and the businessmen who lined up practically unanimously for the Republicans last year.

The "new team" leaders now under severe criticism by some business spokesmen are the ones who originally made the best impression on official Washington—Treasury Sec. George Humphrey and his deputy, Randolph Burgess.

To the auto manufacturers of Detroit, the Humphrey-Burgess policy of forcing up interest rates threatens their mass markets. As interest rates rise — for houses, auto loans and everything else—people have less money left to spend on Detroit's products.

The influential McGraw Hill magazine, Business Week, almost violently attacked Humphrey in an editorial "Time to Ease the Money Squeeze." Humphrey has moved too fast and too far toward what the economists call a "hard money" policy, Business Week argued.

WE'VE HEARD a lot of mumbo-jumbo in recent years about how high prices could be better discouraged through manipulation of credit policies than by direct price controls.

But Business Week now admits that it is easier to stop "inflation" by credit controls and manipulation of interest rates than to reverse the ruinous "deflation"—meaning panic, joblessness, and destruction of the mass purchasing power that is the foundation of American business sales and profits.

No one has a greater stake in a "sound dollar" than ordinary working people.

Wages historically lag behind rising prices during an inflation. Many unions have fixed-sum agreements on retirement and welfare funds. Workers have individual fixed-sum insurance policies and retire on fixed-sum Social Security payments; they get fixed-sum payments in unemployment compensation.

But it's a dangerous thing for Humphrey deliberately to "deflate" the economy by raising interest rates sharply while the government is also following other "hard money" policies such as cutting the budget. So, at least, think many businessmen who once thought all their troubles would be ended if they got rid of the Fair Deal.

THERE IS A CURIOUS GOP theory about government workers—a theory most recently revealed when Miss Bertha Adkins, of the Republican National Committee, triumphantly claimed that in this glad new day federal workers in the District of Columbia are rushing to work half an hour earlier than they did under the Democrats.

The implication, one supposes, is that the lazy wretches loafed under the Democrats but are being driven to work hard by the "efficient" Republicans.

Several Cabinet members—Benson in Agriculture, McKay in Interior, Brownell in Justice—began their careers by ordering "full hours," etc. Morning "coffee breaks" were curtailed; the White House ordered lowly file clerks to stop smoking in their offices; a general policy of lecturing and hectoring federal workers was ushered in.

Private business has spent big money to learn by "research" that "coffee breaks" and decent, fair treament improve employe morale and actually increase productivity. The "business administration" seems to have forgotten all this when it suddenly finds itself in control of rather badly-paid federal workers.

For the record, Miss Adkins was wrong in her claim that capital workers were "30 minutes earlier" than they used to be.

Official District of Columbia traffic checks, at standard points, show almost no change in the "peak hour" of the morning traffic jam between typical months in 1951 and 1952 and comparable months this year.

● ● The President's last trip on the yacht Williamsburg was to Williamsburg, Va., where he was privileged to view the original of the Virginia Resolution of Independence, predecessor of Declaration of Independence of all the colonies. For the occasion, Williamsburg borrowed the precious document from the National Archives in Washington—about three-quarters of a mile from the White House.

● ● Sen. Taft's triumph in the area of military policy is even bigger than originally reported. He successfully got Ike to throw out the present Joint Chiefs of Staff, in whom the Senator had declared "non-confidence," and to make Adm. Radford, an Asia-firster and fight-Red-China fire-eater, chairman in place of wise Uncle Omar Bradley.

Even Air Force budget cuts do not challenge the Taft thesis that U. S. ground troops should really stay out of Europe and this country function as a base for sea and air power and a "mobile reserve" for defense of the West.

Air Force cuts will reduce our tactical air-power—the capacity to give close ground support to troops—but not our strategic power to strike in retaliation with long-range bombers if Russia moves in Europe.

Pres. Eisenhower was guest of honor at the annual dinner of the White House Correspondents Association.

'What's Labor Looking For?'—

'We Want A World Of Peace And Social Justice,' Says Reuther

THE GOALS of the American labor movement were spelled out for some 900 members of the Catholic Labor Alliance of Chicago last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Reuther, principal speaker at the Alliance's John A. Ryan Forum, spoke on "What's Labor Looking For?"

"We're looking for precisely the same thing that men of good will everywhere are looking for," he said.

"We want a world where the children of God can live in peace with each other, as He meant them to; a world where we can supply all the needs of the people, where we can apply a full measure of social and economic justice.

"The American labor movement is conscious that the future of free labor is woven together with the future of other people. We have come to realize that we can solve our own problems only by joining with other men of good will to help solve our common problems."

Reuther's speech marked the 10th anniversary of the forum, named for the late Msgr. John A. Ryan, distinguished Catholic educator.

3 Goals Of Labor

The American labor movement has before it three basic tasks, Reuther said. These are:

"To complete the tremendous job of organizing the unorganized so they can act together with the rest of their fellow-workers for the good of all."

"To organize the organized," because "millions of union members are still just card-carriers who think their responsibility ends when they pay dues."

"To work hard with other groups in the community to solve the broad problems that affect all of us, because only to the extent that we can share in the common effort can we find the solutions that will be lasting and will be right."

The task of organizing the organized will be simplified, Reuther said, if current merger negotiations between CIO and AFL are successful. The meetings that have taken place so far, he said, are a "hopeful sign" for a united labor movement.

He stressed the need for finding a formula to end raiding, and indicated that progress was being made along those lines in the negotiations that are under way.

The job of "organizing the organized" calls for broader trade union education programs, he said.

Weapon Against Communism

"We must make our members realize," he went on, "that their union is not just a set of tools they can use to work together to solve their economic and social problems, and to contribute to solving the problems of the community. We have to make people understand that they get out of organized labor only what they put into it."

Reuther called for a renewed and vigorous effort to strengthen moral and spiritual values both for the betterment of the United States and the world, and as a counter-weapon against Communist propaganda.

The current drive of some CIO unions for the guaranteed annual wage is one expression of this, he added, explaining it is being pushed not only as one means of attaining full employment in peacetime, but "as a matter of economic justice."

"Our wage structure is as antiquated as the ox-cart is in the field of transportation," he maintained. "We have to re-evaluate the whole scheme of wage payments, and the guaranteed annual wage is one means of bringing them up to date."

Washington Window—

The Fight Over Power Resources

By Public Affairs Institute

ELECTRICITY directly affects practically everyone. Cheap electric energy has made big industry possible. It has provided new metals, radio, TV and new machines. It means freedom from backbreaking labor on the farm, in the factory or home. It is the basis for a better life.

Demand for electricity in this country is ever growing. It doubles every eight years. In rural areas it doubles every four years. Such expansion is essential to a healthy, prosperous country.

The power issue, now developing in Washington, revolves around just how we must fill today's and tomorrow's need for low-cost electricity.

One group would give the big power sites on our rivers to private utilities and let them produce all the power.

Belong To All The People

The other group contends that the rivers belong to all the people. They advocate many public projects to serve multi-purpose ends such as flood control, power production, irrigation and navigation.

The public power group says that only gigantic projects such as government alone can build can serve these inseparable purposes. And such projects also establish a cost yardstick, keeping charges low and allowing widest possible use of electricity.

The new Administration is proposing to Congress that some 89 public power projects in 38 states be either slowed up or stopped. In setting this new policy, Sec. of Interior Douglas McKay is reversing his predecessor's action on constructing the big Hell's Canyon project in Idaho.

There has been considerable opposition to this. Some point to the report last year of the President's Materials Policy Commission to show that in the years ahead we cannot afford to lose this power. The report stated:

"Shortages of electricity and rising costs would impede economic growth; they could throttle the nation's effort in the event of war."

Actually our power load is pretty close to capacity now. In 1951 we had only 7% reserve and last year 9.5%. A reserve less than 15% is considered critical.

The United States is divided into eight power regions. In 1952 this 15% reserve was attained in only three. In the Pacific Northwest power shortage became so critical due to drouth that the government had to limit consumption of electricity.

U. S. agencies estimate that we must increase our generating capacity 9.5 million kilowatts this year just to meet current needs. Even with all the tax write-offs and other inducements to private utilities, we increased our capacity in our biggest year, 1951, by only 7 million KW. In that year public projects generated less than 12% of all power in the U. S.

Advocates of government power contend that we cannot possibly reach the generating capacity needed in the years ahead unless both private companies and the government build plants as rapidly as possible.

Without this added capacity many of our heavy industries such as aluminum plants will be forced to curtail operations. And a prosperous fully-employed America in the years ahead is conditioned on a continued expanding economy. Cutbacks in the program for low-cost electricity can seriously impair such expansion.

In Shoe Factories—

Grandmothers Are Good 'Union Guys'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

SHE WAS sitting in the hotel lobby talking to a group of men and women delegates when she was pointed out to me that first evening of the CIO Shoe Workers convention—a bright-eyed, smiling little lady with short-cropped curly white hair brushed back from a smooth tranquil face.

Mrs. Mae Young, of Lynn, Mass., was one of the five women members of the USWA's General Executive Board, who with some 40 other women came as delegates to the convention at Atlantic City.

Altogether more than 300 men and women delegates — representing a total membership of around 65,000, about 60% of them women — attended the USWA convention.

You could not call Mrs. Young a "typical" woman delegate exactly, for she and all the other women there had very distinct personalities and stories of their own. But Mae did represent several things common to most of them.

Long Records

The greater part of them were married, quite a few of them were grandmothers; they had long work records in the shoe industry, and they were warm and active union members, giving a great deal of their time to activity in their locals.

Talking to these women, you got a strong impression of what a big part the factories they work in and the union they belong to play in their lives. A good part of them work for the older, well-established shoe companies such as International Shoe, Florsheim, and Brown, and have spent their working lives with the same firm. Others work for small, less known companies.

Together with the men delegates, they represented shoe locals in 26 states, in the East, Midwest, South and as far away as California.

For long service both in the shoe industry and in union activity, Mrs. Young topped the list among the five women on the GEB. She has worked 43 years in shoes and joined her first union when she was 14. As she recalls it, this was the United Shoe Stitchers & Buttonhole Operators.

The Stormy Years

Later she joined other early unions that rose and fell in New England in those stormy years, and when the Lynn shoe workers, together with other groups in the area, joined the CIO in '37, she was elected to the USWA's first general executive board.

It was not until '51 that she again sat on the GEB, to finish out the unexpired term of a resigned member, but she was active in union legislation work, serving on a Government board, as well as holding office in her local during the intervening years. In 1952 she was elected to a two-year term on the present GEB.

Mae Young was born and has lived all her life in Lynn which is the oldest shoe center in the country. Her grandparents, who came from Ireland many years ago, settled in Lynn and the family has lived there ever since.

Mrs. Young comes by her unionism naturally, for both her father and mother were shoe workers and belonged to the old Knights of Labor. She remembers that her mother, an ardent unionist, was active in the famous strike of 1902-3 in Lynn.

Next in length of service in the shoe industry among the women of the GEB is Mrs. Harriet Morin of Chicago who works for the Florsheim Shoe Co. She doesn't show it, but she has spent 35 years in the industry, 19 of them at Florsheim (recently taken over by International Shoe).

A Union Veteran

Harriet has dark hair rippling high over her forehead and dimples when she smiles. She has been on the GEB since 1947, and has attended every USWA convention since 1946 when her local was organized.

About 3000 workers altogether are employed at the three Florsheim shoe factories in Chicago. Harriet's shop, which makes women's shoes, has about 450 workers, a large part of them women. She is a fitter, working on shoe uppers.

Mrs. Estelle Beigler of Columbus, O., a third woman member of the GEB now serving her first term, has worked 26 years for the Godman Shoe Co., makers of girls' shoes. She is a treer—that is, she puts shoes on a last and irons out wrinkles, etc.

Tough On The Feet

Behind her horn-rimmed glasses, Estella's eyes have a friendly look and she gives you a warm smile. Asked what was the hardest thing about her job, Mrs. Beigler said it was standing on her feet all day, as her particular work requires.

The noise the different kinds of machinery make can get on your nerves sometimes too, she said, but you get used to that and most of the time hardly notice the bang, rattle, roar, clang, click and chatter the various machines make.

The other two women members of the GEB, Mrs. Florence Lynch of St. Louis, Mo., and Mrs. Waunita Long of Los Angeles, Calif., both have worked in the shoe industry for 20 years. Florence works in a leather heel plant of the International Shoe Co., which at present employs about 250 workers, at least half of them women.

Hired in '33 as a temporary worker, Florence has been there ever since, and has belonged to the union since '41 when the USWA won an election at her plant. This is her second term on the GEB.

Average pay for women is around $1.40 an hour. Mostly women have their own particular kind of jobs, but if a woman is put on work usually done by a man, she gets the same rate of pay as a man, Florence said. Her factory, which makes all the leather heels for International Shoe, has been working full time for about a year and a half.

New Industry Trend

Not long ago, International Shoe in St. Louis was broken up into five small units scattered in and around St. Louis, an example of a "decentralization" trend now going on in the industry which is creating difficulties for the union.

Mrs. Long, who is serving her first term on the GEB, is a stitcher in a Los Angeles shoe shop. Originally from Missouri, where she went to work in a shoe factory at 16, Waunita moved to California six years ago, and got a job in the same industry there.

Mrs. Alice Krejci, a delegate from the same local in Los Angeles as Mrs. Long, has worked in the shoe industry 35 years. She came from Massachusetts where she started to work as a table girl in the Regal Shoe Co. plant.

Two women delegates from the New York shoe center, also with exceptionally long service in the industry, were Mrs. Ann Brown, with 41 years to her credit, and Mrs. Minna Lopez, with 30 years.

From the New England shoe area came white-haired, dark-eyed Mrs. Margaret Duard of Spencer, Mass., who works at the Kleven Shoe Co., an all-union shop, and has been in the industry about 25 years. Her husband works at the Brown Shoe Co. in nearby Worcester.

In addition to a long work record in the shoe industry, Mrs. Duard expressed another outstanding thing which most of the women delegates to the shoe convention seemed to have in common. They like to work.

What Union Gained

This wasn't always true in her case, Mrs. Duard said. At first it was pretty hard, and she worked then only because she had to, but now the union has improved wages and conditions and it is much easier. Besides that, she likes the sociability of her job and her union activities which take up much of her time.

She gets lonely when work is short and she has to stay home. At such times she looks forward eagerly to going back to the shop. She admits, however, that there are times when things go wrong, such as having to listen to a woman worker who "yaketyyaks" in her ear all day with petty complaints. (Mrs. Duard is on the local grievance committee, and some people expect the union to perform miracles, she said.)

The women delegates to the USWA convention make up only a small segment of millions of working women in this country who help make the shoes, textiles, clothes, canned and packaged foods, autos and countless other consumer goods essential to our everyday living.

But it was surprising to find how well they illustrated trends hidden behind dry statistics and rather dull factual studies.

Today women are a powerful economic factor in our economic life whose important role is as yet not fully realized. Their influence in industry is tremendous.

THE CIO SHOE Workers union has the distinction of having five women on its General Executive Board. They are (from left): Mae Young, Lynn, Mass.; Harriet Morin, Chicago; Waunita Long, Los Angeles; Florence Lynch, St. Louis; Estelle Beigler, Columbus, O. Women comprise about 60% of the Shoe Workers' membership.

FORTY-THREE years in the shoe industry is the record of Mrs. Mae Young of Lynn, Mass.

Brophy Urges Contributions To Free World Labor Fund

CIO SHOE Workers were told that they, like other American union members, have a deep obligation to help build democratic union organizations in other parts of the world.

Urging the shoe union to contribute to the CIO's Free World Labor Fund was John Brophy, who is in charge of the CIO fund-raising drive for the CIO's International and Community Services Committees.

Mutual Security and Technical Assistance programs by the government to help people in under-developed areas are fine, Brophy said. But they must be supplemented by "a trade union Point Four program."

"We must help to create a strong and independent democratic trade union movement in affiliation with the ICFTU in the Far Eastern countries and other under-developed areas," Brophy told the Shoe Workers convention.

"Through informed trade union centers, the workers there can be prepared to take steps to foster the economic and social development of their respective countries."

"BROTHERS of the Brush" says the lapel badge of bearded Henry Hartzell, Shoe Workers' delegate from Edgerton, Wis., which is marking centennial.

Shoe Workers At Top Membership, Plan Organizing, Pension Drives

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

STEADILY GROWING, and at the highest membership peak in its 17-year history, the CIO Shoe Workers last week set plans for greater organizing of the unorganized and for a pension welfare program.

At a busy four-day convention in Atlantic City, N. J., union officers reported the USWA's membership had reached approximately 65,000 and is steadily moving upwards.

Pres. Russ Taylor, marking the first anniversary of his election to the union's top post, and veteran Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell both reminded the 400 convention delegates that they cannot afford to rest on the laurels of the last two years.

A KEY POINT in the union's hopes for added membership is the Pennsylvania shoe manufacturing area, where a number of runaway plants have moved in recent years. A special organizing committee financed by the CIO and the shoe union has been active there for several months, under the direction of Walter Harris of the CIO staff.

Harris' leadership of the organizing campaign there won the convention's praise, and it moved to establish the drive on a "permanent basis" with all possible support from the union.

Pres. Taylor's report noted that the shoe industry has been "fortunate" during the past several months, having enjoyed one of its best years of steady employment in most sections.

Although the Pennsylvania organizing drive is in its early stages, he noted that it had already brought major benefits.

At 15 plants where the union passed out leaflets, Taylor said, wages have been raised by 5% and 10%, paid holidays have been granted for the first time, life insurance and hospitalization programs instituted, and vacations-with-pay given to employes.

"THIS HAS all been done by the manufacturers in order to keep the workers from signing cards in our union," Taylor said—but he predicted it would fail as an anti-union move because workers are realizing the USWA is directly responsible for the better conditions.

Pensions of $100 a month for older workers were established by the convention as a goal in coming contract negotiations with employers. The needs of shoe workers for health, welfare and pension benefits are "immediate and compelling," a resolution said.

Taking note of USWA's gains, Reuther pledged the help of CIO to "make your union grow into one of the strongest unions in the CIO.

Praising the great accomplishments of the late Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood, Reuther said the best "living memorial" that CIO can build in their name is to organize the unorganized, and to "unionize and educate the organized."

TOO MANY union members in America, the CIO president pointed out, "have the mistaken notion that when you pay your dues, your responsibility is finished. But the union is not a slot machine; it is a set of tools with which workers have to build. You get out of your union exactly what you put into it."

"We've got a super de luxe jet-propelled production machine in American industry, he told the shoe workers, but we also have "a broken-down, worn-out system of distribution.

"We're the only country in the world that is 'smart' enough to go hungry when there is too much to eat."

THE CONVENTION paid tribute to the memory of Murray and Haywood, and to two leading figures in the shoe union who have died since the 1950 convention.

They were William E. Thornton, who died while serving as president of the union, and Isidore Rosenberg, for many years head of the USWA joint board in New York City, who died just two weeks before the delegates met.

Pres. Taylor and Sec.-Treas. Mitchell had words of praise, in their report, for the work of the union's territorial representatives. Their activities in the field were directly linked to many of the union's gains, the national officers said.

Union Card And Shoes To Boot

CIO Pres. Reuther picked up another union membership last week—when he received an honorary life-time card in the United Shoe Workers.

The honorary membership was voted him by convention delegates. He also received a gift of two pairs of shoes for himself and a pair for Mrs. Reuther.

"When I'm dancing the light fantastic with Mrs. Reuther this summer, we'll remember that you people made the shoes we dance in," the CIO head promised the delegates.

ReutherWarns Of Drive To Cripple UN

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther called on the whole CIO last week to get into the fight against efforts of "reckless individuals and organizations" to destroy the faith of Americans in the United Nations.

The summons went out in a letter to the presidents of CIO international unions, to CIO regional directors and to all CIO councils. In the letter, Reuther recalled that the CIO participated in the founding of the UN in 1945, and has since reaffirmed support at each convention.

"We are, therefore, unalterably opposed to the efforts of a few misguided and unscrupulous organizations to undermine the faith of the American people in the United Nations," he wrote. "It is clear that there are groups in America who aim to destroy the UN, if they can, in a burst of isolationist nationalism."

Wide-Open Border—

Wetback Patrol Funds Slashed

THE REPUBLICAN Administration, which favors continuation of the $2.7 million annual subsidy to big corporation farms for importation of low-paid Mexican workers, says $94,000 is too much for effective air patrol of the Mexican border.

Officials estimate that 4.5 million aliens are illegally entering from Mexico each year. Subversives and criminals are among them, and traffic in dope and contrabrand is flourishing. Less than half are being caught.

Former Pres. Truman asked Congress to increase enforcement officers along the southern border by 335 men and to replace four of the 12 airplanes which have proved one of the most effective weapons for spotting wetbacks crossing the Rio Grande.

THE NEW Administration, however, not only eliminated the request for an increase but it cut the present staff by 11 men. And it completely eliminated funds for the plane spotting service, which costs only $94,000 a year.

There was no consultation with the Immigration and Naturalization Service before the budget cuts were made. Officials of the Budget Bureau said the logic they followed in making the cuts was that Congress has shown no interest in tightening the Mexican border, so they might as well oblige.

In contrast, the appropriations bill just reported out by the House Appropriations Committee will increase total funds for the Immigration Service next year by over $1.8 million. This will be used to enforce the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act along the East and West Coasts.

But figures just released show that these sea boundaries are a comparatively minor patrol problem. Last February and March a total of 135,589 illegal aliens were taken into custody throughout the entire U. S. by the Border Patrol. All but 1317 apprehended were Mexicans. Only 3% of the total were picked up along the two coasts.

'Twistems'—A Gyp That Failed

Large scale farm operators of the Southwest who have shortchanged about 100,000 low-paid Mexican contract workers of between $500,000 and $1 million are going to have to pay up.

Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin ruled that charging them for "twistems," paper covered wires used to tie carrots, is illegal. The treaty with Mexico requires employers to furnish them to workers without charge.

Workers in the Salinas Valley of California have had $3 a week or more deducted from their wages for "twistems."

World of Labor—

CIO Urges U. S. Purchases To Aid Bolivian Tin Miners

PLEAS on behalf of two groups of Latin American workers were addressed to the State Dept. last week by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee.

At the request of the executive board of the General Confederation of Bolivian Workers, the CIO spokesman urged the U. S. to resume purchases of tin from Bolivia through the Reconstruction Finance Corp.

"The communication from the Bolivian workers," Potofsky wrote John M. Cabot, Assistant Sec. of State for Inter-American Affairs, "informs us that there has been a suspension of tin purchases, which had resulted in an economic crisis which threatens actual starvation for workers."

The CIO believes that resumption of the purchases "will strengthen the democratic tendencies in that country and prevent the outright victory of totalitarian forces," he added.

In a second letter to Cabot, Potofsky asked that the State Dept. use its good offices to convey to the government of Venezuela "the resentment of American workers" at the recent imprisonment of Ramon Guijada.

Guijada, national agricultural secretary of the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela, has been acting president of the organization since the elected leader, Perez Salinas, was jailed by police of the Venezuelan dictatorship.

The CIO letter pointed out that the arrest of Guijada was keenly disappointing to free labor throughout the world in view of earlier developments which indicated that free trade unions might again function in Venezuela without government interference.

ICFTU

Union leaders representing the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will protest to the U. S. government against the pending proposal to give military and economic aid to Spain "while human rights are denied the Spanish people as a whole and trade union rights to Spanish workers."

The action was announced by a subcommittee of the ICFTU at a meeting in Brussels. The group also announced it will file a formal complaint with the United Nations on the suppression of union rights in Spain, as was done last year with relation to Russia.

Britain

The Labor Party took 350 seats from their Conservative holders in recent elections for town and borough council posts throughout the country, regaining some of the ground it had lost in previous comparable elections.

'The Things He Stood For—'

Reuther Dedicates Philip Murray Homes

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A WORTHY memorial to a worthy American has been dedicated out on the prairie in the southeast corner of Chicago.

There the great and the small met on May 6 to pay honor to the memory of Philip Murray, and to give his name to a new 500-unit low-rent housing project where the working people for whom he lived and died might find shelter fit for bringing up their children decently.

Many of the residents of the adjoining Altgeld Gardens, named in honor of the late liberal Gov. John P. Altgeld of Illinois, turned out for the brief ceremony—wondering, perhaps, what neighbors would join them in the Philip Murray Homes.

THE BAND from Carver High School—named in memory of one of America's greatest figures, the Negro scientist George Washington Carver—supplied the music. The pastors of the community churches said prayers. Locals of the CIO Steelworkers, which Murray headed along with his job as president of the CIO, sent delegations. Other workers were present, and so were the great from Chicago's civic life.

"He'd have been glad to have his name associated with this magnificent project," said Murray's successor as president of the CIO, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, "and glad to have it adjoin Altgeld Gardens, for both of them were fighters for human decency and dignity."

"There could be no more fitting memory to Philip Murray and the things he stood for than the Philip Murray Homes," declared Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the Steelworkers.

"It is a great tribute that this great project should be known as the Philip Murray Homes," said Joseph Germano, USA-CIO district director in the Chicago area.

John L. Yancey, treasurer of the Chicago Housing Authority and a member of the National CIO Social Security Committee, presided. He expressed the hope that "the name of Philip Murray will be in the hearts and minds of the people who live here."

"It is the hope of all," he said, "that you who dwell here—and all Chicago—may live according to the principles of Philip Murray, and that the time may come when all of those principles can be put into effect."

Frank Cronin, CIO regional director, presented to Mrs. Anthony Chenault and her four-year-old daughter, Charleen, a certificate from the Chicago Industrial Union Council attesting that they were the first family to move into the project. Mrs. Chenault's husband is a member of UAW-CIO Local 551, at the Ford Motor Co.

In his speech, Reuther stressed the need for more and better housing for the millions of Americans who are forced to live in substandard dwellings.

"PHILIP MURRAY understood that the home is the foundation of the family, and that the family is the foundation of society," he said, "and that what is done to strengthen the home strengthens our society.

"If he were here today, he would say that this project is just one step down the road to completing the job we have to do in the vineyard of America.

"We have to build two million homes a year for 20 years to satisfy the need. But we find that men of little faith, who appropriate billions and billions and billions for the weapons of destruction, haven't enough courage to appropriate money to build homes for people who need them."

Reuther referred to the recent action of the House in cutting out all funds for new low-cost housing project starts, and slashing funds for slum clearance.

"Philip Murray understood," he continued, "that the true greatness of a civilization is not the measure of its material wealth, but the sense of moral and social responsibility society shows in translating material values into spiritual values and the good things of life."

He called on the 100 spectators to rededicate themselves to the moral values for which Murray stood, "so we can build a better world."

At the conclusion of his speech, Reuther unveiled a bronze plaque memorializing the construction of the project and its dedication.

Thimmes also called on the people who will live in the new project to join with others in the fight to provide decent housing for the "too many millions who don't have homes like this."

"We set goals like these as we struggle toward them," he observed. "The fathers of our nation set a goal—not a fact—that all men, not just men of one type or color, are entitled to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

"That's the program of the United States and of the CIO. The struggle is still going on. I know that Walter Reuther as president of the CIO will carry on the fight for the same goals that Philip Murray carried on."

Thirty-six of the units, in one building, are already occupied. Another building will be ready for its tenants within a few days, and two more by July 1. Another will be ready by Sept. 1, and the rest by the end of the year. The project cost $4.8 million.

FIRST family to occupy a unit in Philip Murray Homes was that of Anthony Chenault, member of CIO Auto Workers Local 551. Here Frank Cronin, CIO regional director, presents certificate of salute from Chicago CIO Council to Mrs. Chenault and daughter Carleen, 4.

'Phil Murray Had Earned It'

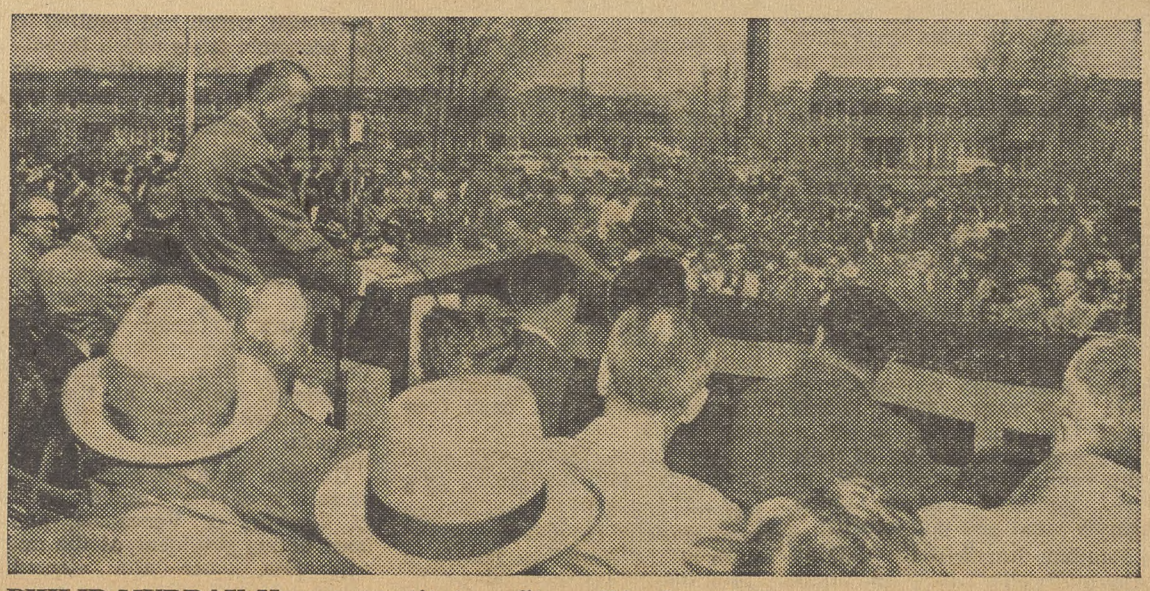
CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther won a minor reputation as a weather prophet when he predicted clear skies and bright sun for the dedication of the Philip Murray Homes in Chicago.

"They told me it has rained for 12 days here," he said in his speech. "I told them not to worry, that God would give us good weather today because Phil Murray had earned it from Him."

CIO Asks Citizens' Voice On Housing

The Chicago Industrial Union Council has asked Mayor Martin H. Kennelly to create a public advisory committee to recommend candidates for appointment to the Chicago Housing Authority.

The procedure is now used in selecting new members for the city's Board of Education. In a letter to the Mayor, Council Sec. Ellsworth M. Smith wrote that an advisory committee of "representatives of the many citizens' groups familiar with housing problems in the city could be of real assistance" in filling vacancies.



PHILIP MURRAY Homes constitute a fitting and proper memorial to late president of CIO and Steelworkers, USA-CIO Dist. Dir. Joseph Germano said in speech at dedication ceremony. In background are some units of Altgeld Gardens, adjoining project.

Vet Home Loan Program Gets House Unit Approval

A WATERED-DOWN version of the bill by Rep. Rains (D. Ala.) continuing the direct home loan program for veterans has been approved by the House Veterans Committee.

The committee acted shortly after CIO's Housing and Veterans Committees joined in an appeal to "expand and extend" the program by approving the Rains Bill.

INSTEAD, the committee voted out a measure introduced by Rep. Ayres (R. O.) which cut from $650 million to $475 million the additional funds to be made available. The bill also authorized a 4.5% interest rate at the "discretion" of the Veterans Administrator.

James G. Thimmes, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, and L. S. Buckmaster, head of the CIO Veterans Committee, had written each member of the committee pointing out that the program, due to expire next month, is needed now even more than in the past because of the recent increase in interest rates on guaranteed loans from 4% to 4.5%.

"This country owes an obligation to former service men; not to the money lenders," the CIO spokesmen said. "If it be argued that fiscal reasons compel raising of the guaranteed rate to 4.5% then it can equally well be argued that the financial need of large numbers of our ex-GIs requires an extension and expansion of the direct loan program."

UNLIKE the Ayres Bill, Rains' measure would have continued the program at the 4% interest rate. Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), sponsor of the original 1950 law which set up the current program, has introduced a similar measure in the Senate.

On another housing front, Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N. Y.) has introduced the Middle Income Housing Bill of 1953 aimed at helping the approximately 10 million families with incomes between $3500 and $4500 annually.

Javits pointed out that families in the middle income brackets are generally ineligible for public housing and that the rental or cost of financing private housing today is beyond their ability to pay.

TVA Celebrates 20th Birthday; Here's Summary Of What It's Done

By Labor Press Associated

TVA—the Tennessee Valley Authority that draws visitors from around the world—is 20 years old this week.

It took three attempts under that many political administrations to get legislation setting up TVA. Pres. Coolidge and Hoover both vetoed TVA. The bill which finally brought TVA into existence was signed by Pres. Roosevelt on May 18, 1933.

Here are the highlights of TVA's accomplishments in the 20 years since then:

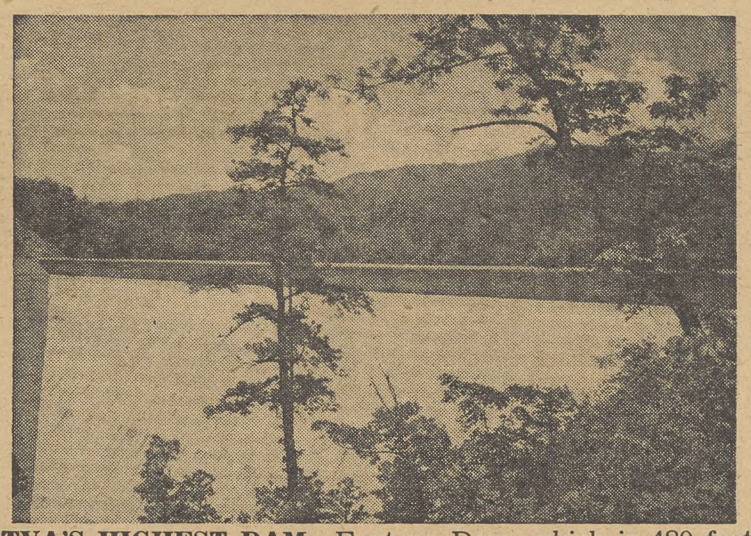
Navigation: Nine strategically-placed dams have increased the Tennessee River channel depth to the point where boats and barges drawing nine feet of water can get through. This has increased river traffic from 33 million ton-miles in 1933 to 800 million ton-miles at present.

Flood Controls: There was none before TVA, but now there are nine dams on the main river and 26 on tributaries. Estimated annual flood damage savings are $11 million. More than half of this is outside the Tennessee Valley and results from the fact that TVA dams help reduce flood crests on the lower Ohio River and on the Mississippi River south of Cairo, Ill.

Fertilizer Development: TVA operates the government's only large-scale laboratory and experimental center for the development of fertilizers. TVA's chemical plants produced 60% of the elemental phosphorus required by the armed forces in World War II, plus making ammonium nitrate for munitions and calcium carbide for synthetic rubber.

Forestry: About 250 million trees have been produced at TVA nurseries and planted on private and public lands in a program to develop forest resources. There is organized fire protection in 85% of the valley forests and many timberland owners have adopted sustained yield cutting practices. Estimated annual income from valley forest products is $350 million.

Recreation: TVA lakes have opened new recreational areas to millions of people and have created new businesses for suppliers of boats, fishing tackle and other such equipment.



TVA'S HIGHEST DAM—Fontana Dam, which is 480 feet high, is on the Little Tennessee River near the Great Smoky Mountains. It is the highest dam east of Rocky Mountains.

Results

Economic expansion of the TVA area has been reflected in the rising individual incomes of its residents.

Average per capita income 20 years ago was only 40% of the national average. Today, while far from reaching equality with the rest of the nation, average per capita income for the valley has risen to 60% of the national average.

Power: Power is the paying partner of the TVA program. In 1952, TVA sold more than 20 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity, for gross operating revenues of $95 million and net revenues of $25,839,000, representing a 4.7% return on net power investments.

TVA has repaid more than $66 million of investment, either in direct repayments to the U. S. Treasury or in redemption of outstanding bonds. An additional $140.9 million from power revenues has been reinvested in power facilities.

There are about 1.25 million users of TVA power, about a million of them residential customers who now use an average of 4000 kilowatt-hours of electricity a year compared with 2155 for the nation as a whole. TVA customers pay an average of 1.33c a kwh, while the average for the nation is 2.77c.

Locally-owned cooperatives and municipal systems distributing TVA power had a combined net income of $17,412,000 in 1952 and paid $4,333,240 in state and local taxes. This is in addition to the $3,036,207 in taxes paid by TVA itself.

TVA power production has changed the economy of the area from one predominantly agricultural to one that is now more dependent on industry. Much of the power goes to the region's farms and homes, greatly increasing the market for electrical appliances.

CIO, Farm Groups Hit Kansas Dam

A SOLID FRONT of mid-Kansas farmers and organized workers represented by the CIO lined up against big city financial and industrial interests before Congress last week in a fight to preserve nine small rural communities, 55,000 acres of rich land and $6 million in annual food production.

The farmers and workers appeared before House and Senate Appropriation Committees to ask that they keep out of this year's budget $15.8 million earmarked by the Truman Administration, and trimmed out by its successor, for construction of the proposed Tuttle Creek flood control dam on the Kansas River.

The legislators were treated to the unusual spectacle of a labor representative appearing not only on behalf of the people he normally acts for, but also in the interest of the farmers and of a group of his fellow-citizens.

He spoke as the head of the CIO Council, as treasurer of the Kansas Watershed Association, composed of farmers organized in watershed districts within the State, and as representative of a Topeka citizens' committee opposed to the dam.

Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the National CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, also testified against the appropriation.

Earlier, he and Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director, had wired members of the appropriations committee that "inundation of good farms and communities under big reservoirs is brutal and stupid."

REP. Howard S. Miller (D. Kan.), first Democrat to be elected to Congress from Kansas in a decade, represents the district in which the dam would be built. He told the House Appropriations Committee that his upset election over former Rep. Cole (R.) was due to the fact that he opposed the dam and Cole favored it.

Urging construction of the dam were the Chambers of Commerce of Topeka and Kansas City, Kan., and Kansas City, Mo. They declared it would stop disastrous floods in their cities, but the CIO and the farmers maintained the same result could be achieved by soil conservation and watershed control which would not destroy homes and farm land.

The CIO and Kansas farm groups also asked other House and Senate committees to authorize the Dept. of Agriculture to restore cuts in tentative appropriations for flood prevention by upstream control through soil conservation, catch basins, etc.

CIO Urges Stronger Bill On Seaway

PRES. EISENHOWER and his Cabinet have called for U. S. participation in the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.

The plan they approved urged the U. S. to join Canada in building a channel through the international channel of the St. Lawrence River to enable seagoing vessels to enter Lake Erie.

The points cited in the White House plan implied endorsement of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project Bill (S.589) introduced by Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.).

John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, gave qualified CIO support to the bill. He told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the measure "is complete in respect to navigation and has the major defect of leaving out vital safeguards in respect to power."

"As we understand S. 589, this legislation does the biggest single part of the whole job and leaves to other legislation the deepening of the connecting channels in the upper lakes. Clearly this piecemeal approach has its drawbacks," Edelman said.

Urging amendment of the measure, the CIO spokesman said that a provision should be written into the law authorizing the federal government to build and operate the hydroelectric stations.

Lehman, FDR Ask Public Gain From Niagara Project

CALLING Republican efforts to turn the power potential of Niagara Falls over to private interests "a pure giveaway," Sen. Lehman (D.-Lib. N.Y.) and Rep. Roosevelt (D.-Lib. N.Y.) have introduced companion bills for Niagara power development "for the public use and benefit."

"This great potential belongs to the people," the New Yorkers said. "It should be developed for the benefit of the nation."

The Lehman-Roosevelt measure, similar to legislation they sponsored in 1950 and 1951, would provide for federal construction of the Niagara project and for turning the project over to New York State under safeguards of the national and consumer interests, upon repayment of the cost of construction.

The only other pending proposal for Niagara development was introduced by Rep. Miller (R. N.Y.). His bill would turn the river over to private utilities for development.

ROOSEVELT and Lehman said this would violate the terms of the 1950 treaty with Canada which made the international waters available for power development. The Senate, in approving the treaty, attached a reservation "expressly forbidding the leasing of these waters to private enterprise."

Pointing out that the private power interests spent more for lobbying in Washington last year "than any other single special interest group in America," the sponsors of the new bill charged private power interests with "fighting the naked battle for private monopoly and usurpation of public resources."

McCarthy 'Perverts Loyalty, Tries To Gag Critics'—Celler

SEN. McCARTHY (R. Wis.) is using his Senate Committee "to pervert the meaning of loyalty and patriotism, to silence criticism, and to further his own brand of politics," Rep. Celler (D.-Lib. N.Y.) charged last week.

Declaring that the Eisenhower Administration "has chosen the path of appeasement with McCarthy," Celler told the House that Congress "must not permit such abuse to discredit the investigative process." He added that "Sen. McCarthy must be brought before the bar of public opinion."

The New Yorker said he will introduce legislation requiring investigation of subversive activities to be handled "exclusively" by a joint committee composed of House and Senate Judiciary Committee members. The Legislative Reorganization Act already gives these committees such jurisdiction, but Congress has recently failed to apply strictly the law which governs its own affairs.

Celler also criticized the methods of Chairmen Velde (R. Ill.) of the House Un-American Committee and Jenner (R. Ind.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee. McCarthy, he said, has been "flattered by their imitation and rivalry."

"Every evidence of Mr. Wechsler's vigorous anti-Communist stand was brushed aside by McCarthy," Celler said. "The intent of the inquiry stood out clearly—an attempt to crush Wechsler and discredit the New York Post for its opposition to McCarthy."

CIO Warns Of Stockmen's Drive Against Public Lands

A FIGHT against the proposed steal of federally-owned grazing lands was begun by the CIO last week with an appeal to councils and regional directors throughout the country to get into the battle to protect the public interest.

The attack is aimed specifically at the so-called Stockmen's Bill, introduced in the House by Rep. D'Ewart (R. Mont.) and in the Senate by Sen. Butler (R. Neb.) and Sen. Barrett (R. Wyo.). The bill would give private interests everything but actual title to the lands, opening the way to speculation and unlimited exploitation and injury.

Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, warned CIO units that the bill represents the views of only part of a "privileged minority which claims license interests in the public lands."

The Emergency Committee on Natural Resources, which includes the CIO as well as soil, forest, wild life and recreation groups, is strongly opposed to the bill.

Your Kids Will Pay—

Humphrey Protests School Fund Cut

GOP MOVES to "build a record of economy at the expense of the school children of this country" were protested by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

In a letter to Sec. of Health Oveta Culp Hobby, Humphrey said he was "dismayed" to learn of her recommendations for crippling the Office of Education by budget slashes amounting to 68% of funds currently available.

Humphrey recalled the Administration's campaign pledges of cutting expenditures by eliminating waste, bungling and inefficiency. He pointed out that of a $193,636,891 "economy" reduction proposed, all but $324,000 was for assistance to local school programs and facilities throughout the country.

"Is it now the contention of this Administration that the states have wasted and bungled and otherwise inefficiently used these grants in the past?" he asked. "If so, it's an unjustifiable reflection upon the local school boards of America."

He said he was particularly concerned with a proposed slash of one-fourth in the allocation to states for vocational education programs.

CIO-CSC Training Institute Prepares Local Counsellors

THE NATIONAL Training Institute of the CIO Community Services Committee which is being held this week at Ottawa, Ill., will hear an address by CSC Chairman Joseph A. Beirne.

Beirne, who is president of the CIO Communications Workers, will speak on "The Policies and Program of CIO-CSC."

The annual Michigan CIO community services conference will be held June 6 and 7 at the FDR-CIO Labor Center on Lake Huron nine miles north of Port Huron.

Bread Softener Ban Enforced

If your bread tastes better, thank the Food and Drug Administration.

FDA Commissioner Charles W. Crawford said last week enforcement of the ban on chemical bread softners would begin immediately.

FDA issued the ban a year ago, after extended hearings. Enforcement was held up pending court action against the edict by three manufacturers of the chemical. The way for enforcement was cleared last week when a U. S. Circuit Court at St. Louis vacated a previous stay against enforcement.

Phony Ads On Appliances Under Fire

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission and the Association of Better Business Bureaus, in separate actions, have cracked down on fraudulent advertising.

The FTC action was aimed at firms selling foreign-made sewing machines, or machines with foreign-made heads, without conspicuously labeling them as foreign made.

The Better Business Bureaus strongly condemned "bait advertising" indulged in by concerns handling new and used vacuum cleaners and sewing machines.

In three actions, the FTC stopped the Belvedere Sewing Machine Co., Inc., and the Belvedere Sales Corp. of Los Angeles and the Del Mar Sewing Machine Co. of San Francisco from fooling the public with foreign-made sewing machines.

THE FTC ANNOUNCED that all three firms had signed consent agreements, which prohibit selling these machines without clearly and conspicuously disclosing, in such manner that it will not be hidden or obliterated the name of the country where the machines were made.

The Del Mar Co. also agreed not to represent the machines were being offered for sale at a reduced price when there was no price reduction in effect.

Hitting out at "smooth techniques and strong-arm methods," the Better Business Bureaus charged that in at least 53 cities concerns were using unethical advertising tactics.

USED AND NEW vacuum cleaners and sewing machines, the Bureaus said, were being misrepresented, "false advertising and false pretense" were being indulged in and "tricky terms" in guarantees were fooling the public.

The problem is larger and tougher than it had believed, despite a two-year campaign to curb it, the Bureaus said, charging "bait advertisers" were making wide use of radio and television advertising to sell the wares.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THE HIGHER INTEREST rates now effective on new mortgage loans are a blow to home-seekers and actually will tend to boost rent charges, too. It may have the further damaging effect of retarding construction of additional homes if more people are forced out of the market by the higher carrying charges.

Examples

If you have a house with the lower-rate mortgage, your present home takes on additional value. (Understand that the increase in mortgage rates does not apply to houses bought before May 5.)

But if you're planning to buy, you ought to scrutinize the mortgage deal on a house as carefully as the roof or furnace (it costs more). Consider that a second-hand house with a lower-rate mortgage set up before May 5 is worth several hundred dollars more to you (all other things being equal).

In any case, insist on a "right to prepay" clause in your mortgage so you can pay in extra cash when you have it, to reduce the mortgage. Also try to get a grace period of at least six months during which you can miss payments without fear of foreclosure.

The interest on a mortgage is the largest single item in the cost of a home. Now the rate on mortgages for veterans has been raised from 4% to the new rate of 4.25%. The rate on FHA mortgages for non-vets has been lifted from the previous 4.25% to 4.5% in addition to .5% charge for the FHA mortgage guarantee, making a total rate of 5%. (There is no extra charge for mortgage guarantee on VA loans.)

ACCORDING to the Veterans Administration, the increase in the rate of one-half of 1% means $2.43 a month added to carrying charges on a typical $9000 20-year mortgage. Over the life of the mortgage, this boost in the interest rate thus adds on $583 to the cost of the house. At the new rate of interest the vet will repay a total of $13,672 to clear off his $9000 mortgage. Thus the famous GI Bill of Rights, widely-heralded after World War II as a readjustment aid for veterans, turns out to be more of a boon for banks and builders, who have a profitable lending deal entailing no risk for them since the payments are guaranteed by the Government.

A SPOKESMAN for the Long Island, N. Y., Home Builders Institute says builders hope to make the boost painless by extending term of mortgage to 25 or 30 years. That, however, will mean a family will have its income drained even more deeply in the long run by interest charges.

Extending the same $9000 mortgage to 25 years instead of 20 means you finally repay $15,012. On a $10,000 house the cost of hiring the mortgage money thus is about $6000, much more than the cost of all materials or the labor cost of building it.

Non-vets will pay even more to hire the money for the house since they also pay the extra .5% for the mortgage guarantee (guaranteeing the lender against any loss). If there's any money left in the FHA guarantee pool when the mortgage is paid up, the homeowner gets back a proportionate share.

Why this boost when homes are already so expensive? For almost two years the VA and the FHA had been under pressure from mortgage bankers to raise the rate. But with the backing of the previous administration, the Government resisted the pressure.

HOWEVER, when the Eisenhower Administration recently raised the interest rate on Government bonds (but not the "E" bonds the little man owns), the die was cast.

Lenders were able to secure a pretty good return for their money in Government bonds without the necessity of clerical work, etc., of investing in mortgages. Or so they claimed. In any case, many bankers throughout the country recently have been refusing to lend on mortgages at the previous rates.

In the past few months a hidden rate increase was actually put into effect in some cases. Many builders have been selling the houses with the former lower-rate mortgages, and then re-selling the mortgages to banks at discounts. The money-lender would give the builder $500 less than the face amount of his mortgage, that way getting the equivalent of an increase in the interest rate. That $500 "discount" was concealed in the price of the house.

Mental Care Drive Backed

ON BEHALF of the CIO, Pres. Walter P. Reuther has signed a statement endorsing the National Mental Health Sponsors Committee for its work in encouraging a nationwide fight against mental and emotional illness.

The statement calls for expansion and extension of the campaign being waged, through prevention, adequate treatment and care, research and education, to curb such illnesses.

"Early treatment and arrestment of mental disease represents the most constructive method of solving the problem," Reuther wrote. "While we strive to achieve this ultimate goal, we must continue to insist upon adequate care and treatment of those already afflicted."

UWUA Gains 8c To 10c In 3 Big Pacts

THE CIO Utility Workers have won increases of 8c to 10c an hour in new agreements with the Consumers Power Co. of Michigan, Cleveland Electric and the West Penn Power companies.

The Consumers Power pact provides a general wage raise of 10c hourly, and includes increases in holiday allowances and premium pay for the afternoon and night shifts. This agreement was won after extended negotiations and after the union rejected the intervention of a special Michigan State commission.

Just a few hours before the old contract expired, UWUA obtained a new agreement with the Cleveland firm. It provides for a general wage increase of 8c an hour, reclassification of specific jobs, increased benefit payments for incapacitated workers, and other gains.

The West Penn pact yielded an 8c hourly raise in base rates, and 1c to 16c an hour on some 40 job classifications, all retroactive to May 1. The base pay adjustments follow an agreement reached on Mar. 16 on a job evaluation plan.

Civil Rights Plan Given To Brownell

A PROGRAM for strengthening civil rights machinery in the Justice Dept. and eliminating job discrimination by firms with U. S. contracts has been presented to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights.

A memorandum presented to Brownell by a LCCR delegation pointed out that only seven lawyers are now assigned to the civil rights section of his department.

A second memorandum charged that failure to enforce non-discrimination provisions in government contracts has resulted in "conspicuous, consistent and widespread violations."

THE CONFERENCE urged that a single federal agency be given responsibility for enforcement, that all contractors be required to certify willingness to comply with non-discrimination requirements, and that specific penalties, other than contract termination, be imposed on wilful violators.

Included in the delegation which called on the Attorney General were Tom Harris, CIO assistant general counsel; Paul Sifton, legislative representative of the CIO Auto Workers, and Boyd Wilson, of the anti-discrimination section of the CIO Steelworkers.

Shipbuilders Ask General Pay Boost

IUMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan said union negotiating teams plan to meet soon with representatives of the three companies involved.

The firms are the Bethlehem Steel Co. with eight yards in New York, Boston and Baltimore; the Todd Shipyards Corp., with two yards in New York City, and the Maryland Dry Dock Co., Baltimore.

The present contract runs through June 23, 1954, but provides for a wage review at this time.

MEANWHILE, Rep. Yorty (D. Calif.) attacked the House action slashing from the budget $118.5 million proposed for construction of five merchant marine ships.

Yorty called the move "false economy," and said it "will mean that more American workmen will be deprived of jobs."

He added that "in 1947 there were 160,000 workers employed in shipbuilding and repairing. By 1950 the employment figure had dropped to 84,000, a decrease of nearly 50% in four years."

GOP Chiefs Disagree On Budget-Balancing Pledges

REMEMBER all those Republican promises to balance the budget, reduce the national debt and cut taxes? Forget 'em.

That's what top Republicans themselves have been saying in Washington. Now they say they can't balance the budget, that the national debt is going up, and that the only tax cut this year will be the demise of the excess profits levy as per schedule—which will help big business plenty.

The possibility of a balanced budget in the fiscal year beginning July 1 was written off by Sec. of the Treasury George M. Humphrey himself — and he ought to know as Pres. Eisenhower's top financial aide.

Not until the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1954, does the Administration hope to have its income and spending on an even keel, he told Republican congressional leaders at a White House conference.

Sec. of Defense Charles E. Wilson took issue with him. It will take two or three years to balance income and outgo, he told a House Appropriations Subcommittee at a closed hearing.

Pres. Eisenhower may clear up the Administration confusion in a special tax message which he is expected to send to Congress this week.

Humphrey also appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. There he said there "is no prospect at all for anything but an increase in the national debt" at the present. It now stands at $265.5 billion. The legal limit is $275 billion—and Congress may have to boost it, he added.

The trouble is, he explained, that 65% to 70% of the expenditures are for various security measures, and half the remainder is for fixed charges like interest on the national debt. This leaves only 15% to 17% of the total budget that can be worked on for cuts unless the national security is endangered, he said.

Kentucky CIO Mourns Foss

Foss was a delegate to the 1936 convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Tin and Steel Workers which merged that organization with the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee, which subsequently became the CIO Steelworkers.

Foss was chosen secretary-treasurer of the Kentucky CIO Council in 1943. He also served as the CIO's legislative representative at Frankford, Kentucky's capital, and led the fight that won improvements in the workmen's compensation and insurance programs.

CIO Renews Plea For 135,000 Housing Units

That's what Ben Fischer, secretary of the CIO Housing Committee told the National Housing Conference last week.

Speaking before 500 delegates to the 22nd annual meeting of the Washington conference, Fischer called upon the group to remember that "what we are fighting for are our own housing goals and not the totally inadequate goals of the administration."

THE 35,000 public housing units approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee, he said, are "mere crumbs" and won't begin to meet the nation's housing needs. He called on the 50 other national organizations present to join CIO in demanding the entire 135,000 low-rent units called for in the Housing Act.

Slapping at the Administration's slash in the program while the need is "under study," Fischer was applauded when he declared:

"We all know that the Housing Act of 1949 doesn't need further study. It's already been studied enough. What it does need is an Administration determined to use it."

FISCHER spoke on behalf of CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, who was unable to attend because of the opening of wage negotiations between the CIO Steelworkers and the basic steel industry in Pittsburgh. Thimmes is vice president of the Steelworkers.

A message from Thimmes read to the conference said that NHC activity over the years "has been of inestimable value to the plain people of our nation."

At the same time he scored the building industry for having "failed miserably" and said this is "inexcusable" since the nation has the capacity, skilled workmen, wealth and need for adequate housing.

The reading of Thimmes message was interrupted with heavy applause when he declared:

"The bold solution to our own housing situation can do more for the fight against communism than the antics of congressional investigators. The climate of fear of liberalism which is being cultivated by irresponsible Congressional Committees does not bother the Communists.

"The advocates of a sound housing program cannot retreat in the face of the present political atmosphere. Now, more than ever, we must move forward to arouse the people to the practical steps that can be taken to house America adequately and properly."

IN INTRODUCING the new secretary of the CIO Housing Committee to the conference, Chairman Nathan Straus — who was the first administrator of the U. S. Housing Authority—paid tribute to the work done by Leo Goodman, whom Fischer has succeeded.

Thimmes was elected fourth vice president, replacing CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who was formerly head of the CIO Housing Committee.

Senate Unit Restores Public Housing Fund

The Senate Appropriations Committee after "considerable discussion" last week restored funds for 35,000 housing units which had been killed by the House.

The Senate is expected to approve the provision, but not without an argument. If approved by the Senate, the bill will go to conference, where another fight on the housing provision certainly will occur.

'Hard Money' Policies Extended By GOP As Democrats Fear Crash

"HARD MONEY" policies of the Eisenhower Administration were extended to a new field last week, amid increasing congressional Democratic warnings that the GOP interest-boosting operations could lead to a "serious economic recession" or a "disastrous depression."

With higher interest rates previously extended from government bond financing to GI and FHA housing loans, farm credit, and consumer installment loans, there were these additional developments last week:

- Sec. of Treasury George M. Humphrey nearly doubled interest rates on short-term U. S. savings notes. They were advanced from a range of 1.44 to 1.88% to 2.16 to 2.47%. And their term was cut from three to two years.
- Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) charged Pres. Eisenhower is permitting "Wall Street" to fix the nation's fiscal policy, warning higher interest "is an act calculated to lead to a recession."
- Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) similarly warned that the payoff to banks in the form of higher interest could speed a depression. He recalled that "such policies as the Administration is now following brought on the depression of the 1920s."
- A group of 20 Democratic members of the House and Senate, in a joint resolution, urged that the Treasury Dept. and Federal Reserve System reverse the present hard money policy, resume supporting U. S. savings bonds at par and thereby end the present interest-boosting policies which ultimately will cost taxpayers and consumers millions.

FOR THE group, Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) and Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) said:

"The refusal of the Federal Reserve System to support the credit of the U. S. would be bad enough if it resulted only in additional billions of dollars in government expenditures and the national debt.

"But it has also led to a dangerous spiral of interest rate increases for private borrowers.

"First, there was an increase in the interest on support loans to farmers. Then came an increase in the commercial bank rate on prime business loans. This was followed by a rise in rate on consumer loans . . . The interest rate on VA and FHA-insured home mortgages was boosted.

"The adoption of our resolution will help protect American farmers, veterans, home buyers and small businessmen against the harmful effects of further interest rate boosts and of undue tightening in the supply of credit.

"THE ADOPTION of our resolution will also provide invaluable insurance against the threat of future depressions, foreclosures, bankruptcies and unemployment."

With Murray and Patman, other Democratic lawmakers sponsoring the resolution are Sens. Humphrey (Minn.), Long (La.), Green (R.I.), Kilgore (W. Va.), Magnuson (Wash.), and Mansfield (Mont.) and Reps. Rayburn (Tex.), McCormack (Mass.), Multer (N. Y.), Bailey (W. Va.), Price (Ill.), Eberharter (Pa.), O'Hara (Ill.), Addonizio (N. J.), Rogers (Colo.), Spence (Ky.), Rains (Ala.), and Deane (N. C.).

CIO Urges Controls Bill Redrafting

STAND-BY economic controls, rather than 90-day "freeze" legislation, should be formulated now, the CIO Legislative Dept. said last week in urging the Senate to send the Capehart Bill back to committee for redrafting.

Nathan E. Cowan, director of the department, wrote each Senator that the measure approved by the Senate Banking Committee "is no real answer to the problems of inflation in the future." He said the Senate should send it back to the committee with instructions to report out a comprehensive stand-by bill.

Recalling that wholesale prices jumped 15% and consumer prices rose over 6% in the six months following the outbreak of war in Korea, Cowan said such "great damage must not be allowed to recur in any future emergency."

"THERE IS NO wisdom in deferring to some indefinite future crisis the writing of a comprehensive, carefully conceived control bill," Cowan wrote. "The Congress can only assure Americans of fair and equitable treatment in any future emergency by enacting now a well thought out comprehensive stand-by control bill."

Such a bill, he added, should "spell out the general wage, price and production rules which will guide the economy and prevent inflation."

N. Y. Guild Gets $159 Top Wage

A new top minimum of $159 a week for writers and general 5% increases have been negotiated by the CIO New York Newspaper Guild and Newsweek magazine under a wage reopening in the current contract. The Guild also won five weeks' vacation after 15 years, while retaining the previous three weeks after one year.

CIO Wins On Wages

UAW Signs Big 3 Auto Firms; IUE Gains at RCA, Philco

UAW Gains At Big 3 In Revision of 5-Year Pacts

THE CIO Auto Workers' long fight to reopen their five-year contracts in mid-term and make them "living documents" ended in victory last week.

They reached agreements with the General Motors Corp., Ford Motor Co., and the Chrysler Corp.

The settlements raised the wages of skilled workers, and gave production workers greater wage security and a promise of future productivity increases at a faster rate.

In addition, the union won pension boosts from Ford and Chrysler, and later returned to GM to secure the same agreement.

The new terms were worked out after the UAW-CIO had notified the employers that unless settlements were reached by June 1, it would "not consider the renegotiation of any long term agreement." Present contracts expire in mid-1955.

All three settlements provided:

1. An increase in the annual improvement factor from four cents to five cents an hour.

2. Addition to base rates of 19 cents of the 24 cents per hour now paid under the cost of living allowance. This means that only five cents per hour will be subject to future cuts, no matter how much the cost of living might go down.

3. An increase of ten cents an hour for all skilled workers in recognition of inequities, growing out of the Korean conflict, between craftsmen employed by the two companies and those who work in jobbing shops.

4. Adjustment of the escalator clause to reflect the change from the "old" to the "new" Consumers Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The agreements provide for a one cent an hour increase for each rise of .6 points in the index and for a decrease of one cent for each drop of .68 points. Under the old formula, wages were adjusted one cent up or down for each corresponding movement of 1.14 points in the index.

The Ford and Chrysler settlements also yielded an additional ten cents an hour, or a total of 20 cents, for die sinkers and patternmakers, and a new pension plan with a maximum of $135 a month. In addition, Ford agreed to permit retired employes to buy hospitalization and surgical insurance under group rates.

THE NEW pension arrangement was made applicable to retired workers, as well as to present employes who retire in the future. The increases raise the top monthly payment, after 30 years of service and including social security, to $137.50 a month.

Employes with 10 years service, who got only their $85 a month social security benefits under the old Ford formula, will receive $102.50. Workers with 20 years, who also got only the $85, will jump to $120. Ford pensions previously were slightly less than at GM and Chrysler.

Gratification over the successful conclusion of negotiations was expressed by UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther; Vice Pres. John W. Livingston, director of the union's GM Dept.; Kenneth Bannon, Ford Dept. director; Pres. Harlowe Curtice of GM, and Vice Pres. John W. Bugas, in charge of Ford industrial relations.

"Your father just got his retroactive pay raise, so now we're going to eat a few retroactive meals!"

Reuther and Livingston said of the GM settlement:

"We are pleased that GM has accepted the principle that a collective bargaining agreement must be a living document under which the workers' equity is maintained in the face of circumstances impossible for the parties to foresee when the contract was originally negotiated.

"We believe that our agreement shows that free labor and free management, exercising their responsibilities and using their common sense, can, in our kind of democracy, work out their problems across the bargaining table."

MEANTIME, Reuther warned of widespread layoffs in the industry later this year unless manufacturers slow down their present high production rate.

He told industry executives, in a letter, that attempting to produce more than 60% of the year's output in the first six months "is economically unsound and morally wrong."

Declaring the UAW-CIO is "deeply disturbed" over job prospects in the second half of the year, he asked the executives what employment their companies expected to maintain if each kept in the latter half of the year the share of total production it has in the first half.

Unless production is levelled off, Reuther warned, the industry's unemployment may cause widespread fear, seriously affect the nation's economy, and contribute to a recession.

IUE Seeks GE Talks as GM Signs

AN AGREEMENT modifying the current five-year contract between the CIO Electrical Workers and the General Motors Co., covering 40,000 employes of the GM Electric Div., has been reached on terms similar to the company's settlement with the CIO Auto Workers.

The changes "are completely justified by the productivity of GM workers, the company's profits and the need for economic stability," according to IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey.

The settlement, he said, "will come as a jolt to some big employers in the electrical industry who have been refusing to bargain seriously."

"THESE employers, like General Electric, will be obliged to change their present attitude," he said, "and provide a more realistic solution than the pitiful 1% to 1.5% offer they have made."

He promptly wired Vice Pres. Lemual Boulware of GE and George Pfeif, manager of union relations, a proposal that negotiations be resumed promptly and that "we keep at them until we have arrived at a settlement which represents justice for GE workers."

Negotiations were suspended, subject to call, at the last meeting on May 19.

The settlement with GM included a boost in the annual the productivity raise from 4 cents to 5 cents an hour; factoring of 19 cents of the 24 cents in cost of living increases into the base rate; an increase of 10 cents an hour for skilled tradesmen, and adjustment of the escalator clause on the same basis as the UAW-CIO and the company reached.

Wage Gains Extended By Amalgamated

THE CIO Clothing Workers have won a wage increase of 10 cents an hour and fringe benefits for thousands of workers in the sportswear, single pants, work clothes and several miscellaneous industries.

With the conclusion of bargaining for these groups, ACWA-CIO has gained raises of 10 to 12.5 cents an hour and fringe benefits for virtually all 375,000 members. All increases went into effect last week.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, who led the union negotiators, said:

"GENERALLY speaking, the increases reflect the rise in the living costs since our last wage boosts. The Amalgamated had refrained from seeking increases during the depressed period in the industry.

"Fortunately, there are now signs of substantial recovery and the employers understand fully the need to meet the extra burdens that increased cost of living had imposed on workers in the clothing and allied industries."

In furtherance of the Amalgamated union label campaign, ACWA-CIO obtained an agreement from the sportswear, outerwear and single pants trades to use the label.

Rep. Howell Heads N. J. Demo Group

New Jersey liberals scored a notable victory in the election of Rep. Howell (D. N. J.) as chairman of the state Democratic Committee.

Howell, a member of the House Labor Committee, has had the support of the CIO Political Action Committee in his campaigns for Congress. He has consistently worked for fair labor legislation and other measure in the public interest.

Big Steel Talks Resume

NEGOTIATIONS for a wage increase under the reopener in the contract between the CIO Steelworkers and the U. S. Steel Corp. were to be resumed this week in Pittsburgh.

Sessions began May 14 and were recessed the next day, after a committee headed by USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald had presented the union's full case. The company asked the recess for time to study the proposals.

Requests for "substantial" pay boosts also have been served on other major producers, along with arguments buttressing the union case. All firms in addition got a union proposal for the establishment of two joint committees, one to study the possibility of the guaranteed annual wage and the other to study improved pension and insurance plans.

Companies studying the union demands, in addition to U. S. Steel, were Bethlehem, Republic, Inland, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Jones & Laughlin.

THE CIO Electrical Workers have won wage increases of from 6c to 30c an hour for 11,000 employes of the Radio Corp. of America in four cities.

IUE-CIO also obtained a company-paid health and welfare program worth 5.25c an hour for 12,000 members at Philco Corp. The agreement covers two plants in Philadelphia, two in Sandusky, Ohio, and one in Bedford, Ind.

Most of the workers at RCA plants received a 13c hourly raise in the settlement, which was negotiated after a strike vote was approved by better than 200 to 1 majority.

The new rates were added to the base rates on incentives. Skilled workers received increases of from 17c to 30c.

IUE-CIO at RCA also won: double time after 12 hours, severance pay of two weeks for every four years, instead of five years, and improved sick leave and hospitalization, which the firm already paid in entirety for workers and dependents.

THE AGREEMENT covers plants at Camden and Moorestown, N. J.; Cincinnati and Los Angeles. Almost 9,000 workers voted for ratification, with only one dissenting.

The wage increase brings the toolmaker's rate to $2.40 an hour. The lowest rate—on women's jobs—now is $1.41 an hour. Since most of the women are on a piece work basis, most of them make from $1.80 to $1.90 an hour.

The contract already has a model pension plan, a full union shop and other major benefits.

At Philco, with the improved health and welfare program, IUE-CIO has won a package worth almost 49c an hour in the past three years. Included were 32c an hour in across-the-board increases, 3c hourly in adjustments of inequities and 8.5c an hour for a company-paid pension plan.

The health and welfare program provides maximum sickness and accident benefits of $40 weekly for 13 weeks, Blue Cross hospital coverage for 70 days, Blue Shield coverage for all hospital surgical costs, payment of certain doctor's fees including 21 visits a year to the doctor's office, $5,000 polio benefits, $1,000 life insurance for retired workers, and insurance for others equal to annual earnings.

U. S. Okeh Of Genocide Pact Urged

THE SENATE out of "common respect for human decency" has an obligation to give prompt ratification to the United Nations Genocide Convention, Rep. Dodd (D. Conn.) told Congress.

The U. S. has not ratified the convention, which the UN gave the status of international law in 1951. It makes it a crime to destroy national, racial, religious or ethnical groups by such acts as killings, mutilations, deportations, concentration and slave labor camps, etc.

Pointing out that "without ratification the U. S. government is precluded from protecting its kin and friends behind the Iron Curtain from Soviet genocide," Dodd said that "positive action by the U. S. is long overdue."

He reminded the Senate that it has had before it a recommendation for ratification since 1950 when the late Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.) submitted a subcommittee report recommending such action.

Announcement

For the first time in the 16-year history of The CIO News, publication of this newspaper was interrupted by a strike of AFL printers which began on May 18 against more than 30 commercial printing firms in Washington, D. C.

Mercury Press, printers of The CIO News, IUE-CIO News and several other CIO national union papers, was among the plants struck by the Columbia Typographical Union, one of the nation's oldest local unions. Wage scales and vacation benefits are among the strike issues.

Publication of this combined Issue No. 21-22, with the cooperation of typographical union officials, was from another Washington printing firm operating under union contract and not affected by the strike.

New CIO Organizing Setup Told

A LONG-RANGE program streamlining CIO operations so as to boost efficiency in organizing and to improve service to industrial union councils was announced last week by Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

Organizing and servicing functions of the CIO field staff will be divorced, he explained.

A number of organizing offices will be established on a temporary, flexible basis, in various parts of the country, to permit more direct assistance to CIO unions engaged in organizational drives. The locations will be based on organizing needs and programs at particular times.

THE PRESENT 50 CIO regional offices will be consolidated into 13 major regional offices, with a number of sub-regional offices. They will be staffed to assist state, county and city industrial union councils in such varied matters as legislative work, political action, community services and other CIO activities not directly related to organizing or collective bargaining.

Among the first industries in which the new organizing technique will be applied are telephones and communications, chemicals and textile. Some organizers have already been assigned to their campaigns, Riffe said, and others will be added.

AS THE new operation gets under way, assignments will be made to organizational drives of other CIO unions as they are needed, he said. When a particular campaign is finished, the organizers will move to new assignments, he explained.

"There are still millions of unorganized workers in America who need and want the benefits derived from honest, democratic, militant CIO trade unions," Riffe said.

"I pledge, on behalf of the entire CIO staff, that we will carry out this assignment with determination and with all possible speed."

Activities of the CIO Organizing Committee in the Southern organizing drive, which Riffe formerly headed, will be continued "for several months at least" from the Atlanta, Ga., headquarters under the direction of Loren Nelles.

Cities where the regional offices are located are Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Knoxville, Tenn.; Atlanta, Columbus, Ohio; Detroit, Chicago, St. Paul, Minn.; St. Louis, Dallas, Tex.; Denver and San Francisco. (See full list of new regional directors in adjoining column).

"The decision to consolidate the CIO regional offices into 13 in key cities throughout the country," Riffe said, "is one phase of a program to increase the effectiveness of the CIO field staff.

"CIO WORK in the field takes two major forms: (1) organizing the unorganized, and (2) providing service for CIO councils in the various cities, counties and states.

"In the past few years, the regional offices have attempted to fill both functions. This has provided a strain on the regional staffs who have been faced with heavy workloads of a most varied nature.

"It is the belief of the executive officers of the CIO that the division of functions incorporated into the CIO's field staff reorganization plan will permit greater specialization and more intensive work in the fields of both organizing and service.

"This program does not contemplate lay-offs or terminations. It does call for a considerable shifting of assignments. It is a long-range program and will not be completed for perhaps 15 months or two years. By that time, we believe that the CIO will have far more men available for organizing than it has had in the past.

"Organizing offices will be set up from time to time in those areas where major organizing campaigns are being conducted. When a campaign is concluded, the offices will be closed and the organizing staff reassigned to other organizing activities in other areas.

"IT WILL be the policy of the CIO Dept. of Organization to make organizers available to the various affiliated national unions of the CIO for significant organizing activities.

"A number of regional staff people have already received such assignments to work with the Communications Workers of America, the United Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers of America, and other CIO affiliates.

"Other assignments will be made in the next few weeks and months. Discussions with leaders of the Textile Workers Union of America will be held to plan an organizing drive among unorganized workers in that industry. The CIO will be prepared to make available a large number of men for such a campaign.

"WE BELIEVE that this campaign will receive the wholehearted cooperation of CIO officials and members for it represents a determined effort to carry on successfully the work of organizing the unorganized, to which the late Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood were pledged and to which CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has directed me to give primary emphasis.

"There are still millions of unorganized workers in America who need and want the benefits derived from honest, democratic, militant CIO trade unions. I pledge, on behalf of the entire CIO staff, that we will carry out this assignment with determination and with all possible speed."

Feinsinger Succeeds Taylor As CIO Arbitrator

CIO'S NEW organizational disputes arbitrator is Nathan P. Feinsinger. He succeeds George W. Taylor, who resigned after 15 months' service.

Announcing the new appointment, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther explained Taylor has agreed to serve only while the program, to end jurisdictional disputes was being established.

TAYLOR resigned because "my other commitments — many of them long standing—simply do not leave sufficient time for me to carry on the responsibilities of that post in the way I feel is necessary for the continued success of the program."

Reuther said the CIO arbitrator was "directly responsible only to his own conscience and judgment . . . he serves essentially as a one-man Supreme Court."

"All of us in CIO," Reuther said, "recognize that only if the functions of the arbitrator are exercised in a completely independent and quasi-judicial manner can there be assurance that the organizational disputes program will work for the best interests of the CIO and the nation."

Calling the CIO agreement "a statesmanlike approach to the solution of a difficult problem," Taylor said it was also "a pioneering step in the use of arbitration."

"The success which has so far attended the program," Taylor wrote Reuther, "is thus an achievement of which the CIO can justly be proud."

Accepting Taylor's resignation with "reluctance," Reuther said:

"In helping us solve jurisdictional problems through the orderly process of mediation and arbitration, you have laid the groundwork for the continued success of our program. We are justly proud of this success and we know that you must share this pride since you have contributed so effectively to the program's beneficial operation."

In offering the post to Feinsinger, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board in 1951 and 1952 and professor of law at the Univ. of Wisconsin Law School, Reuther described the CIO program in detail.

CREATED at the CIO's 1951 convention in New York City, the plan is designed to prevent jurisdictional conflicts between CIO unions. The program, ratified by each CIO affiliate, reposes final determination of competing jurisdictional claims in the hands of a single, independent arbitrator, whose decisions are final and binding.

During the first year the program was in operation, 32 jurisdidictional cases were brought to the attention of the National CIO. Of that number, 19 were settled before reaching arbitration, seven were arbitrated, and six were pending at the end of the first year.

"Your own experience — as a professor of law, as a keen student of labor and of labor-management relations, as a leading member of the War Labor Board in World War II and as chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board during the period of Korean conflict—makes you," Reuther wrote Feinsinger, "the inevitable choice for this post. We share, with responsible students of government and of labor-management relations, an unwaivering belief in your integrity and rigid devotion to fairness and justice."

In accepting the post, Feinsinger outlined his own belief in "the peaceful settlement of inter-union jurisdictional disputes, without government intervention, as one of the most desired objectives in the field of labor-management relations, in our time."

"The maximum good can come of the arbitration phase of your agreement," Feinsinger said, "only if (1) competing unions make every effort to settle their disputes by direct negotiation and mediation, using arbitration only as a last resort; (2) the constituent unions of the CIO and its officers continue to cooperate with the Arbitrator to the fullest possible extent; (3) the Arbitrator continues to be assured of complete independence in the performance of the quasi-judicial functions of his office."

Feinsinger noted Reuther had "given me firm assurance in these respects" and that hearings will be scheduled to "prevent or minimize interference with my teaching duties."

Dividends Climb By 4%

DRY THEM TEARS, son. Business ain't near as "ruined by taxes" as its spokesmen have been claiming.

Latest reports show that corporation dividend payments in April ranged up to 15% more than the same month a year ago and averaged 4% higher.

During the first four months of this year, they ran 4.5% ahead of the same period in 1952.

The figures came from the Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of Business Economics, headed by Big Businessman Sinclair Weeks.

CIO Board, Unity Group Plan Meeting

A SERIES of important CIO meetings has been scheduled for Washington during the first week of June. The timetable follows:

June 2—CIO-AFL unity committees will meet in the Hotel Statler.

June 3—CIO Executive Committee will meet at CIO headquarters.

June 3—First meeting of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation will be held at the Hotel Statler with the Foundation Trustees and Public Advisory Board present.

June 4—CIO Executive Board will meet at CIO headquarters.

Auto Worker Named As a Father of Year

AN ACTIVE CIO Auto Worker has been named the 1953 national "Worker Father of the Year."

He is Frank Fischetta, who is employed at Ronson Art Metal Works, Newark, N. J., where he formerly served as a shop steward. Fischetta, who has two daughters and a son, was given the title by the National Father's Day Committee to represent the country's labor force on Father's Day, June 21.

An Army veteran, Fischetta plays on the Ronson softball and bowling teams, and is a surf fisherman. All these activities have not kept him from being active in his UAW-CIO local since it was formed eight years ago. (LPA)

Living Contracts

The United Automobile Workers and the big companies in the auto industry deserve praise for both the spirit and the accomplishments of the recent negotiations in Detroit.

By agreeing with the UAW-CIO that the contracts should be considered "living documents" and opened up by mutual agreement for important revisions, the auto industry has shown an enlightened regard for the general welfare.

The UAW-CIO and its members have shown militance and disciplined patience during the past few months. Those qualities have paid off in the very substantial benefits won for the union by Pres. Reuther and the negotiating committees.

The Auto Workers are now guaranteed wage security against possible, though not now foreseeable, major drops in the Consumer Price Index. Likewise they win higher automatic wage increases in the future and other improvements. And in gaining higher pensions for retired workers—whose number is constantly increasing — the UAW, like other unions, has shown its deep sense of social responsibility.

These are big victories for the workers. The country has received another demonstration that organized labor and enlightened management can use the collective bargaining process to advance the welfare of all the people.

That's easy to see and to understand; it's unfortunate that so many conservative members of Congress, hypnotized by slogans and Taft-Hartley, can't see the realities.

Queen Elizabeth

Queen Elizabeth II, a gracious and charming lady, this week will be crowned in elaborate ceremonies in London.

On behalf of CIO members in the United States and the Dominion of Canada, we express our hope that her reign may be long, peaceful, prosperous and productive of continued progress toward the ideals of democracy and liberty.

During a period of 20th century turbulence and conflict, the British royal house has demonstrated wisdom and humanitarianism.

The limited constitutional monarchy has shown ability to change with the times as the old-fashioned concepts of British imperialism have gone through great modifications. It is reasonable to expect that under Queen Elizabeth II, this trend will continue toward full recognition of human rights and liberties and toward expansion of the concepts of a cooperatively-governed commonwealth.

For its sense of dignity and adaptability, the British royal family has won the deep affection of British citizens and the respect of democratic peoples everywhere. The new queen, we feel certain, will live up to her great heritage.

Isolationism, 1953 Model

Fancy, modern concepts about world peace, cooperation and brotherhood disturb him as little as the fly on the nose of a sleepy hound. He learned his isolationism when he was young, and nothin's gonna change him.

There was an idea, once widely spread by Republican apologists, that isolationism was dead.

Taft, in his Cincinnati speech, proves them wrong. He wants us to "go it alone" — without the United Nations, without democratic peoples elsewhere—against the 750 million force of the Soviet bloc of nations and satellites.

Taft acknowledges that his ideas are "going to shock a good many people who still believe in the United Nations." For once, Taft is right.

We are shocked; we hope the Republican Party is also shocked; and we sincerely hope that before the consequences of the Taft speech become too serious throughout the world, the GOP will repudiate the Ohio Senator's dinosaur-like thinking.

'Operation Was a Success'

In Other Words—

CIO Can Count On Miss Lucy

Here is an article in the Atlanta Constitution by Celestine Sibley on Lucy Randolph Mason's book "To Win These Rights." The article was entitled "CIO Can Count On Miss Lucy".

By CELESTINE SIBLEY

WORD HAS JUST COME that Lucy Randolph Mason's book, "To Win These Rights," which was published by Harper in 1951, has gone into its second printing—proof that the small volume which Miss Lucy began, innocently enough, as a sort of personal history, has found itself a solid place in contemporary literature.

In fact, according to publishers, college professors and students of sociology have created quite a sizable demand for "To Win These Rights" because it is a readable, name and anecdote-filled account of the growth of the CIO movement in the South.

It is "must" reading on the list of anybody who is interested in the social revolution which has taken place in the South in the last couple of decades but it is interesting to me chiefly because I can't get over the phenomenon of Miss Lucy herself.

She's Full of Fight

Seventy years old now, white-haired, bright-eyed and patrician-looking, Lucy Randolph Mason is what I like to think of as an original, unretouched "Southern lady." She has the background for the role. (Her great-great-great-grandfather, George Mason, wrote the Virginia Bill of Rights. Three of her kinsmen signed the Declaration of Indeepndence: Her family tree abounds with such magicky names as Marshall, Lee and Randolph.)

But the authentic thing about Miss Lucy is that like all true Southern ladies she is full of fight and a passion for justice and truth. She looks delicate but she is indomitable.

The daughter of an Episcopal minister, she became concerned with the problems of other people at an early age. Her mother and father were concerned and Miss Lucy remembers very well her mother's Sunday school class in the state penitentiary in Richmond and how many of her mother's pupils, when they were released from prison, stopped at the Mason home until they could find jobs. Through these people her mother learned of atrocious cruelties that went on within the prison walls and when other means failed she and some friends filled the state of Virginia with leaflets exposing prison conditions.

It was an endeavor that led to prison reform and must have shown young Lucy at an early age that there is real efficacy in "letting the people know." Anyhow, she grew up to work first for woman suffrage.

I asked her why and she looked at me sharply.

"For the same reason that I later went to work for the CIO," she said. "I believe women have something valuable to give to society. They are the humanizing element. Later I went to work for the CIO because I saw that women and unions wanted the same thing—decent lives for their children."

Her work has not always been genteel and high-toned sounding. The growth of a labor movement, as she tells you plainly in her book, is watered with sweat and bloodshed.

She has fought tooth and toenail where fighting was necessary. When Communists invaded the CIO, as they invaded every other field of American life, Miss Lucy sternly repulsed them. When she found she was working side by side with one she marched into headquarters and flatly demanded the Communist's removal from her enterprise.

"Oh, I've heard myself called a 'Parlor Pink,'" she admitted, smiling gently. "And a Bolshevik. But I knew the difference and it didn't bother me. I was also called, from time to time, 'cussedly conservative.'"

Somehow Miss Lucy earned and kept the respect of all hands on both sides of controversies and the "aristocrat" tag which is frequently put on her touches her. She has her own definition for an aristocrat and she gives it in her book:

"My years with the industrial unions of the CIO have taught me that out of them come the true aristocrats of our time: leaders who earnestly seek to serve their fellowmen."

Mullady Named

APPOINTMENT of Bernard R. Mullady as director of Labor Press Associated was announced last week by Reuben Levin, LPA president.

Mullady, a charter member of the CIO Newspaper Guild and a government press officer for 15 years, has already taken over operation of the cooperative labor news and feature service.

He succeeds Irving Fagan, who remains with LPA in an editorial capacity.

Mullady served in the Labor Dept., Federal Works Agency, Maritime Commission and Commerce Dept. and was with the Office of Salary Stabilization on his most recent government assignment.

He was press officer of the U. S. delegation to the Intl. Labor Conference in 1944, 1946 and 1947.

It's Your Washington

By Willard Shelton

SEVERAL COLUMNISTS and commentators recently suggested practically simultaneously that Mr. Eisenhower had suddenly decided to become a "strong" President, and that his hastily scheduled series of radio, television and "whistle stop" speeches in the Midwest meant a deliberate appeal to the people for support of "Eisenhower policies."

Silence

He indicated that he considered the case a clear-cut example of attempted intimidation of the press. But no one in the White House says anything about the case publicly.

The circumstances indicate that these columnists and commentators were briefed by the White House, that they were intentionally given an insight into the President's private thoughts and plans. The circumstances indicate that the "leaks" about Ike's desire to wage a real fight against Old Guardsmen in his own Republican party were part of a master plan for regaining White House initiative in the government.

One must point out, even at the risk of seeming a carping critic, that the only "Eisenhower policy" on which the President thus far has challenged the Old Guard is in the field of taxation and military spending.

Tax-hating old Uncle Dan'l Reed of New York, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, promptly denounced Ike's demand for renewal of the excess profits tax for the slender period of six months.

THE MORNING after the President's radio appeal to the people Taft told Ohio farm spokesmen that he was "very much disappointed" that Ike had not slashed the military and foreign-aid budget from $50 billion to $40 billion.

It isn't easy for the President to push through a military spending and tax program which Taft is "disappointed" in and which Reed resents and resists. Ike will need all the popular support he can drum up to get his tax and appropriation proposals through Congress—plus the practically unanimous support of the Democratic congressmen who are technically the President's "opposition."

Still, just to keep the record straight, the Republican Old Guard is doing pretty well in running everything except the security and tax program.

No one has seen an "Eisenhower policy" that opposes the packing of regulatory commissions with agents of industry and people who think the government has no function in protecting consumers.

THERE WAS NO "Eisenhower policy" that kept the Old Guard from prohibiting a proposed Federal Trade Commission study to discover why city people last year paid more for food than in 1951, although farmers received less money for their products—to find out, specifically, how middlemen were profiteering.

There is no "Eisenhower policy" on public power that keeps Interior Sec. McKay from junking the Hells Canyon project to produce power for the industrialization of eastern Oregon and western Idaho.

There is no "Eisenhower policy" that prevents Health Sec. Hobby and Agriculture Sec. Benson from junking the inspection program that protected the public from contaminated grain.

There is as yet no "Eisenhower policy" on Taft-Hartley revision, tax philosophy, public housing, the financing of Social Security.

A "strong" President must have positive convictions on many issues before he can successfully appeal to the people over the heads of the Old Guard congressional leaders.

THE SITUATION in Washington is such that the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, rather than Congress or reporters, gets the big scoops on labor news.

A C-of-C report to its members had a detailed report on Labor Sec. Martin Durkin's proposals to the White House on revision of the Taft-Hartley law even before these proposals had been cleared by Ike and the Cabinet, before any newspaperman learned about them. Durkin was trying to "wreck" Taft-Hartley, claimed the C-of-C report.

Actually the Durkin program was a perfectly straightforward one—to get rid of proved abuses in the law, to reject proposed amendments that would make the law worse, to improve the present "unfair and unworkable national emergency disputes provisions."

Labor Dept. spokesmen would not confirm for reporters, even after the C-of-C report, that Durkin had made these exact recommendations to the White House.

Certain facts, however, were obtainable, Sec. Durkin himself told reporters a little earlier that Under-Sec. Lloyd A. Mashburn was conferring with Commerce Dept. officials to learn if Taft-Hartley revisions could be jointly proposed.

If not, he indicated, he would send his own proposals to the White House.

Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks, a Cabinet official who enjoys bragging publicly about the "businessmen's" government now in power, would naturally be horrified by Durkin's recommendations.

Wilson hasn't learned a thing about dealing with Congress since he tried to get himself and assistants into office without obeying laws forbidding certain private business interests.

Sen. Smith (R. Me.) is furious because Wilson declined to say whether Air Force budget cuts were approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, fired a long list of written questions to Wilson and demanded answers "from those capable of providing them."

At ADA Convention—

GOP 'Stacked Deal' Slipping Deuces To Labor, Carey Says

UNDER THE Republican "Stacked Deal," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Americans for Democratic Action convention, "the cards are being stacked against the little man, the wage earner, the mass of the American people."

In a blast at Republican rule, Carey said that under Pres. Eisenhower the GOP has stopped being a mere front for big business, and today is "more and more a messenger boy, a subservient caddy for big business' golf clubs."

Warning that liberals must not take the unthinking position that it is not "charitable" to judge the new Administration too soon, Carey said that this could lead to "a tragic mistake." The goals of reaction are already quite clear, he declared.

Cabinet Like NAM Board

"Big business has taken over the President's Cabinet to the extent that it looks like a meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of Manufacturers," he said. "Not one part of the Stacked Deal's legislative program that we know to date is designed to benefit working men and women or the mass of the American people."

Carey said that the nation is facing a tightening not only of political freedom but of economic freedom. The goal of the Stacked Deal, he added is that of reaction in all periods of history—reduction of the democratic political and economic power of the mass of the people and placing it instead in the hands of an oligarchy of big businessmen and industrialists.

Calling Eisenhower "a compliant captive of Old Guard Republicanism, of big business, industry and reaction," Carey emphasized that "there are men in and behind the Administration who desperately want to see organized labor either destroyed or weakened to the point of impotency."

This is only to be expected, he said, because the forces of reaction know that there is no chance for an effective counter-attack by liberalism if trade unionism is crippled. What mass base liberalism has in this country, he pointed out, lies in the labor movement.

Ike No Leader for Liberals

Declaring that Eisenhower, as the nation's chief executive, should have liberals' support whenever he acts on behalf of all the people, Carey warned against looking to his leadership "on issues where liberal ideals are involved or where we seek fundamental extensions of economic and political democracy."

"Native American liberalism and radicalism has never sought or needed a 'messiah' or superleader," he said. "Let us look to the liberal movement and to labor for leadership and for our rank-and-file strength."

Carey, a charter member of ADA, was introduced to the convention by its acting chairman, James Loeb, as "a great liberal" and "an elder statesman of the American labor movement."

Loeb read to the convention a telegram from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who had been prevented from speaking by negotiations of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit.

"A vigorous, courageous and intelligent leadership by American liberals will be sorely needed in this country in the critical months ahead," Reuther told the delegates.

Washington Window—

How T-H Turns Back The Clock

(By Public Affairs Institute)

IT HAS BEEN SAID that "the Taft-Hartley Labor Relations Law is a confused and mongrel collection of six syllable words exclusively of, by and for the lawyers of the country, it is a plot of lawyers to increase the take of the legal profession."

While this is an exaggeration, it does serve to illustrate just how madly confusing labor laws are today. Usually only lawyers can decipher them.

Hearings are now being held before congressional committees on possible changes in these laws. Testimony on both sides has become so involved that the press has given it little publicity. And many are wondering if these hearings will have any real meaning.

It seems that labor-management issues are seldom discussed so that the people they affect most—both workers and employers—can really understand them. In recognition of this, the Public Affairs Institute has just completed a new study of nine important problems in labor-management relations.

Revives Old Practices

The study sets forth in simple words some major issues with which Congress must deal in considering labor-management laws. It evaluates these issues in light of historical precedent and present needs.

The study, "Issues in Labor-Management Relations," by John Shott, discusses such issues as free speech, national emergency strikes, injunctions, industry-wide bargaining and the secondary boycott. The author is a former regional director of the National Labor Relations Board.

He notes that in 1947, in passing the Taft-Hartley Act, Congress reverted to methods of solving labor disputes that previous Congresses and Presidents had discarded. In effect, then, we are trying to solve today's disputes on the basis of the relationship that existed between the worker and his employer a century ago.

The injunction, for example, first appeared in labor disputes in Great Britain but actually the British rarely used it and it has long since been discarded.

In this country the injunction in labor disputes was virtually eliminated when President Hoover signed the Norris-LaGuardia Act in 1932. The Taft-Hartley Act revived it, making "legal a summary method of dealing with labor disputes found in no other industrial nation."

The present "free speech" doctrine, Shott says, is a return to the time before the Wagner Act when employers could openly denounce unions in any fashion they liked before "captive audiences."

Under this provision of Taft-Hartley, management may express its opinion of unions short of open threat or promise of reward. Supporters of this provision have called it "equalizing" the balance between the union and the employer.

The author questions whether the balance could be "equalized" even if employees or union representatives were given the right to make pro-union comments and speeches before the workers on company time and company property. The pro-union speech could scarcely match the force or influence behind an employer's statement.

The late Justice Holmes stated that constitutional guarantees of free speech did not protect a man from those who utter "words that have all the effect of force."

Thus, the study points out, that perhaps what is needed is a new, realistic appraisal of the real force that lies behind the statements of "the man who hand out the paycheck."

These are several examples of rules discarded in the past that have been revived as part of our present labor-management relations laws.

Sidelights

● ● Vivian Kellems, the Connecticut female industrialist who hates the income tax, has the bright idea that we can cancel all taxes for one year merely by using $89 billion in previously appropriated funds. So she told an audience of the so-called Liberty Belles who agree with her in hating taxes. To use the $89 billion would dry up production lines for aircraft, tanks, guns, and ships that take a long time between drawing board and actual output, but Miss Kellems doesn't trouble her head about that.

● ● Saddest U. S. Senator these days is Indiana's Republican Homer Capehart, whose favorite occupation used to be to sabotage price controls. Now that the Republicans are in, Capehart begged them to act responsibly, to act like the governing party, to give the President authority to freeze wages and prices for three months in case of a national emergency. Sen. Taft called the scheme "socialistic"—and Capehart's feelings are hurt.

Fair Competition—

Plan To Save New England Jobs Urged By Sen. Kennedy

FAIR LABOR standards throughout the U. S. are the cornerstone of a many-sided federal program drawn up by Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) to help solve New England's economic problems.

The Kennedy Plan, outlined in Senate speeches after several months study, calls for elimination of many labor law inequities as part of its two-score proposals for legislative action on several fronts.

Concerned with the need for action to remedy current unemployment and economic dislocations in New England, Kennedy nevertheless emphasized that his plan was primarily national in scope. He said it "will benefit all parts of the country."

Stressing throughout the theme of fair competition, the Bay State Senator declared that New England welcomes the industrial development of other regions and does not fear honest competition. But he added:

"We cannot approve the abandonment of plants and thousands of workers for what we consider to be the exploitation of unfair methods of competition."

Kennedy said that, while state and regional action was essential to New England's prosperity, federal measures were also needed. He called on Congress to adopt policies which would:

1. Promote diversification and expansion of industrial activities in labor surplus areas.
2. Prevent further decline and dislocation of business.
3. Reduce hardships caused by recession and dislocation.

To realize the second of these goals, he said, Congress must act to "equalize the cost of labor" by making it impossible for "sweatshop" employers to penalize New England for demanding adequate economic safeguards for its workers.

"The exploitation of labor or lack of adequate standards should not be a factor in fair competition," he declared. "WHETHER such workers are non-union, in sweatshops, children, learners or Puerto Ricans, or whether they are denied adequate wages, pensions or unemployment benefits, the effect is to damage the well-being of not only those workers, but employers, employees and the public everywhere."

Devoting most of one speech to labor problems, Kennedy called on Congress to boost the minimum wage to "at least $1.00 an hour," and otherwise to improve the Fair Labor Standards Act, and to strengthen the protections of the Walsh-Healey Act. He asked stronger enforcement of child labor laws and abolition of learner permits which permit less-than-minimum wages.

Kennedy also called for an end to the exemption of Puerto Rican labor from the Fair Labor Standards Act and enactment of legislation to prevent exploitation of minority labor. He said Congress should pass a federal Equal Opportunity Law and insist on enforcement of non-discrimination clauses in federal contracts.

NON-WAGE payroll costs, he pointed out, also are an unfair competitive factor whenever minimum standards of decency are not met. To eliminate such conditions, he said, a more adequate social security program, including minimum standards of unemployment compensation and reinsurance of state unemployment funds.

Hitting hard at the Taft-Hartley Act for the damage it is doing to the nation as a whole, Kennedy said extensive changes are necessary "to provide at least a free opportunity for an equalization of the degree of unionization in various sectors of the country."

Kennedy singled out provisions "which have seriously retarded unionization in southern and other areas which were industrialized and unionized earlier." These include, he said, Taft-Hartley's employer "free speech" provision, the barring of economic strikers from voting, and granting of precedence to state laws banning the union shop.

CIO Backs $5 Billion Aid Bill as Absolute Minimum

APPROPRIATION of an "absolute minimum" of $5.8 billion as requested by Pres. Eisenhower for the foreign aid program has been urged on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by the CIO.

"We do not appear here arguing on behalf of any particular or sectional interest," the committee was told by Thomas R. Owens, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee of the CIO Legislative Committee.

"BEHIND the Iron Curtain, the interests of all social groupings of free people are completely ignored. The alternatives before the free world are still the preservation of freedom and democracy on the one hand, and the spread of totalitarian darkness on the other.

"It is for these reasons that we urge the Congress to appropriate the greatest possible amount for the foreign aid program consistent with our own economic security."

Owens recalled for the committee the CIO's consistent support of the foreign aid program as necessary to the free world's security. It believes now, he continued, that the need for such a program is no less acute than formerly.

"WE BELIEVE that it must continue to be administered with a proper regard for, and a proper balance among, the military, economic and social needs of our allies," he added.

"We are disturbed by the recurrent tendency to belittle or ignore the social aspects and to concentrate on the purely military or 'big business' phases. We call for a continuation of those balanced principles which originally characterized our foreign aid program."

He stressed the essentiality of free trade unions as "the economic mechanism for more equitable sharing of the national product and as a force creating the incentives leading to an expanding economy" which, in Europe, is necessary for the security of the free world.

GE Scabherding Charged By Carey In N.Y. Strike

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, flew to Syracuse to meet with management late last week after a dozen pickets were arrested and several were hurt as office workers broke through the picket line.

The strike of 5000 IUE-CIO production workers began two months ago after management failed to act on a mountain of grievances, including inequities in the Syracuse wage structure compared with other GE plants, and a speed-up.

"This mass strikebreaking is a desperate move by GE management on the very morning that IUE-CIO strikers, after seven weeks' wait required by law, became eligible for unemployment compensation," Carey said.

"The trouble with these non-union, white collar jobs is—You must have a good front, but you don't have any backing!"

"Moreover, this attempt to break not only our strike but also our local union, becomes even more reprehensible in the light of the fact that Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service several days ago started efforts to resolve the dispute.

"GE MANAGEMENT at Syracuse has tried every conceivable method of breaking this IUE-CIO walkout. It has spent more than a quarter million dollars on newspaper advertising, on daily radio programs, on intimidating visits by foremen to workers' homes, on phony 'end-the-strike' votes—all designed to break the back of this walkout.

"Having failed in all these, GE management is now desperately provoking violence in an attempt to achieve by bloodshed what it refused to achieve by peaceful, equitable collective bargaining. This stubborn, unrelenting stand by Syracuse GE management in refusing to make a single concession to its employes has so far made uttely futile the best efforts of Federal Mediation & Conciliation to settle this dispute."

Carey compared GE's tactics with the conclusion by IUE of peaceful negotiations with General Motors, Radio Corp. of America and the Philco Corp.

John J. Maurillo, CIO regional director at Syracuse, was among those arrested as other CIO union members joined IUE strikers on the picket line.

Kansas Dam Funds Vetoed By House

THE CIO and the mid-Kansas farmers allied with it scored a major congressional victory last week when the House refused to provide funds to continue construction of Tuttle Creek Dam across the Blue River near Manhattan, Kan.

The CIO and farmers opposed it at hearings because it would inundate some 55,000 acres of farm land and destroy several rural communities. Flood control could be better accomplished by less expensive up-stream measures, they pointed out.

Earlier Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development & Conservation, testified against the dam before the Senate Appropriations Committee. He called for the standard land treatment program of the U. S. Soil Conservation Service, plus construction of detention basins and, if needed, small catch dams on the upper tributaries of rivers.

TUTTLE Creek Dam was planned by the Army Engineers to prevent floods in Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kan. Smith opposed it on behalf of CIO members in these and other downstream cities.

In Central Kansas, where the dam would be built, the CIO has joined with the farmers whose homes, farms and communities would be inundated to fight it. The Senate Committe considering restoration of $15.8 million proposed for its construction by the Truman Administration, but eliminated by the Eisenhower Administration.

Smith told the committee that a soil conservation program, with needed detention basins and check dams, would increase agricultural production by 25% to 30% instead of flooding the land and taking it out of production.

THE CIO National Maritime Union and the Atlantic and Gulf Coast ship owners broke off negotiations last week.

With the contracts expiring June 15, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran said: "I don't know what will happen at that time, but the men never worked without a contract."

The NMU presented its demands several weeks ago to the American Merchant Marine Institute, which bargains for the ship owners. The institute last week rejected 100 union proposals, called for weakening the existing pact, and later refused to bargain on any demand that would increase costs of operation.

Curran said the operators, who demanded the inclusion of a management prerogative clause, "want the so-called good old days of hiring off the docks, out of the gin mills. They want to promote and transfer with no restrictions and go back to the days of the blacklist when there was no union.

"ANY REMOVAL of the protection of the central hiring hall would lead to the greatest strike they ever saw. If ever a union would go down fighting, the NMU would on the hiring hall issue, every man. That's our lifeblood."

The NMU president also took issue with the institute's statement that the average seaman receives $465 a month. He said an able seaman's monthly wages are $302 a month on a 40-hour week basis, but his gross earnings for a 30-day month including four Saturdays and Sundays at overtime would amount to $422.

He said a shipyard rigger, who has a comparable shore job, would receive $558 for the same hours, or an average of $2.33, compared with an hourly average of $1.76 for the able seaman.

Curran scoffed at the operators' cry of bankruptcy. He said the net profits after taxes of the American Export Lines in the last two years ranged from $2.2 to $3.8 million; Moore-McCormack Lines from $9 to $10 million, and United States Lines from $7 to $10.5 million.

UAW Settles Jet Strike

SOME 4,500 CIO Auto Workers won increases of six cents to eight cents an hour in the settlement of a 65-day-old strike at the General Electric jet engine plant at Evendale, near Cincinnati.

The union also obtained improved seniority and grievance provisions and some adjustment in classifications at the factory, which is the nation's biggest producer of jet engines.

The UAW members voted almost unanimously to accept the settlement. In a simultaneous meeting the AFL Machinists, whose 1,000 members also were involved, also decided to end their walkout.

Promises Forgotten –

GOP Uses a Hatchet On Labor Agencies

"The Administration intends to strengthen and to improve the services which the Dept. of Labor can render to the worker and to the whole national community." —Pres. Eisenhower's State of the Union message, February 1953.

By MILTON PLUMB

REPUBLICAN campaign promises that the Eisenhower Administration would build up the Labor Dept. and carry forward the social welfare gains of the last 20 years have been scuttled by the House Appropriations Committee.

Most of its slashes were upheld last week by the House.

The GOP-controlled committee, over protests of Democratic members, bit deeply into funds for the Labor and Health, Education & Welfare Depts. and three independent labor agencies. Overall, the cut was $289,199,730 or 31% below appropriations made for the same activities last year.

Right down the line, each agency was cut back far beyond the amounts recommended by both former Pres. Truman and Pres. Eisenhower. The distribution went:

Labor Dept.—$254,424,000 allowed as compared with $296,818,600 asked by Truman and $284,915,600 by Eisenhower.

Health, Education and Welfare Dept.—$1,697,833,570 compared with $1,786,528,761 (Truman) and $1,722,544,870 (Eisenhower).

National Labor Relations Board—$9 million compared with $9.8 million (Truman) and $9.5 million (Eisenhower).

National Mediation Board — $1,064,000 compared with

Mediation and Conciliation Service—$3,210,000 compared with $3,747,500 (Truman) and $3,407,000 (Eisenhower).

Exclusive of fixed expenditures such as the $1.3 billion earmarked for public assistance grants to the states, the total cuts amounted to 17% of the Truman budget and 9% of the amount recommended in Eisenhower's revised estimates.

The reduction made in funds for the labor and welfare programs was thus much deeper than the average which the committee has inflicted on other agencies. The average cut made in all money bills reported to date amounts to little more than 10% of Truman's estimates.

The committee cut especially deep into funds for education, hospital construction, medical research and public health. The new HEW department was given 25% less than the amount Truman recommended, or $286,706,601 less than it got as an independent agency last year.

THE OFFICE of Education budget was cut by $15.3 million, the committee allowing only $79 million for its work in 1954. Its appropriations last year were $279.6 million, most of which went for school construction grants not renewed this year.

New hospital construction was slashed one-third, being chopped from $75 million to $50 million. The National Institutes of Health, which carry on the government's research program in medicine, were reduced from $85 million to $61.5 million. Total cuts in the Public Health Service amounted to $63,802,800. Funds for the Food & Drug Administration were cut $663,000.

THE LABOR Dept., which has never fully recovered from blows it received under the Republican-controlled 80th Congress, was handed a cut of 19% in its administrative funds—and an overall cut of 14.7%. The administrative staff in the secretary's office, its legal staff, the Bureau of Labor Standards, the Mexican farm labor program, and the Wage and Hour Division were all slashed by more than 20%.

The cuts called for elimination of 623 jobs, or over 10% of the department's present 5900 employes. The reductions come on top of a 40% cut in both funds and personnel which the Republicans inflicted in the 80th Congress, reducing the number of Labor Dept. employes from 7200 to under 4000.

After the cuts were announced Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin declared that the committee's action would make it "quite a difficult task to fulfill what I believe to be the correct function of the department."

Asked about Eisenhower's campaign promise to "build up the Labor Dept., Durkin said only that "The promise speaks for itself." He indicated that the whole matter would definitely be brought to the President's attention.

All agencies of the department were cut by at least 8%. The hardest hit was the Bureau of Labor Standards, which administers the Fair Labor Standards Act and programs of job safety. Despite a mounting industrial accident rate, it was slashed 37%.

The Wage & Hour Division, which protects workers from chiseling employers, was cut from $7,739,000 to $6 million, or over 21%. The amount allowed means that some of the division's regional field offices will have to be closed and the department's investigations held down to little more than action on complaints received.

Over half of the jobs eliminated in the department are in the Wage and Hours Division.

A 23% CUT in funds for the Solicitor's Office will reduce its staff to a level smaller than before the Fair Labor Standards Act was passed.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics budget was cut by $689,000, with a loss of 51 employes. Nevertheless, the committee directed BLS to maintain the consumer price index "beyond reasonable question."

Other deep cuts included reductions of $30.7 million for grants to states for unemployment compensation and $6 million for unemployment compensation for veterans.

EVEN THE understaffed Women's Bureau, which looks after the welfare of women workers on a budget of only $360,000, took a committee cut of over 16%.

Rep. Fogarty (D. R.I.), ranking minority member of the appropriations subcommittee reporting the bill, led a successful fight on the floor to repair some of the damage. The House overruled the committee and voted the full amounts asked in the Truman budget for the Women's Bureau, the apprenticeship program, and vocational rehabilitation.

It also voted to restore some $6.7 million in federal aid for schools, but left this figure still some $8 million below the amount Truman requested. Altogether, $15 million cut by the committee was restored.

Ad Policemen Powers of FTC Hit By Decision

FEDERAL policing of misleading cigaret ads has been drastically curtailed by a Supreme Court decision which the Federal Trade Commission will not appeal.

The court ruled the government cannot consider cigarets as a "drug," subject to summary injunction procedure instead of lengthy administrative procedure, the only other weapon available to combat false cigaret ads.

The test case involved Chesterfields, whose ads claim tests of smokers of its brand showed no "adverse effects" upon the noses, throats and accessory organs.

The FTC sought to consider tobacco as a drug and use the injunction procedure, because slow-moving machinery previously used blocked effective enforcement. Under the administrative process, FTC said, by the time rulings become final advertising men have devised new schemes, and the job must start all over again.

CIO Protests Shocking Cut In Labor Funds

THE CIO vigorously protested the "shocking double standard" applied to appropriations for the Labor Dept. and welfare agencies.

In a letter to House Republican and Democratic leaders, Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director, charged that if Appropriations Committee cuts were not restored "millions of American workers will, in fact, be denied protections and rights" which the law assures them.

CIO pointed out that the House had voted $712 million for "an Agriculture Dept. created to serve six million farm families."

ONE DAY later, Cowan observed, the House took up committee recommendations for a budget of only $267 million "for the Labor Dept., the National Labor Relations Boards, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the National Mediation Board, all intended to protect and promote the welfare of more than 47 million wage and salary earners."

These promises, he charged, "are not merely ignored" by the House committee. "The exact opposite is proposed," he pointed out.

"The trade union movement," he wrote congressional leaders, "has a direct interest in the maintenance of the vital administrative, research and enforcement functions of the Dept. of Labor.

"If the wholesale slashes" recommended by the committee are not rescinded, he continued, workers would lose protections which the law now provides. These workers, he warned, "will know that these protections and rights have been denied them."

Sec. Hobby Urges Handicapped Aid

"All of us can work for wider acceptance of the handicapped," says Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, Secretary of Health, in an editorial in Performance magazine.

The magazine is published monthly by the Labor Dept. for the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped. Mrs. Hobby calls for measures to cut accidents, rehabilitation and finding jobs for the handicapped.

Tariff Boosts Hit –

CIO Asks Extension Of Trade Program

EXTENSION of the reciprocal trade agreement program for another year was urged last week by CIO in testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee.

Testifying for CIO, Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg of the Education and Research Dept. opposed the Simpson Bill which would create new tariff barriers and interfere with free trade.

He urged the committee to continue unchanged the reciprocal trade program for a year while the "most intensive and thorough study and analysis of the role which reciprocal trade plays in the entire field of international economics" is being made.

"We believe that substantial levels of international trade must continue and that interferences with trade through various types of barriers—such as quotas, duties, customs regulations, etc.—is not in the best interests of our country or our allies and friends around the world," Ruttenberg said.

RECIPROCAL trade, he said, "in many ways, is a program designed to help American industry and American workers. However, we must simultaneously find solutions to the problems in the American economy that are created by increased trade."

Ruttenberg labeled the "trade, not aid" slogan of the Republican Party as "not a cure-all" for the problems of European allies or the U. S.

He noted that European Communists are now "strong supporters of 'trade, not aid'" and added that congressional moves simultaneously cutting aid and curtailing trade were playing "into the hands of the Communist elements who are waiting for an opportunity to take advantage of unfavorable economic developments in the European countries."

THE SIMPSON Bill, by increasing duties, establishing quotas and developing further barriers to trade, would unfavorably affect U. S. relations with other free countries and the position of workers in those countries.

U. S. workers and industry dependent upon substantial foreign sales would also be affected, he added.

Ruttenberg also raised "a fundamental question . . . talked about, talked around, but not approached positively by responsible Congressional and Executive authority." That question, he said, was "how the United States can continue to promote necessary trade with countries abroad and still minimize the effect that such trade has upon American workers, American plants and American communities."

He called for devoting the coming year to that kind of study but urged "we not move backward in our trade policy," as the Simpson Bill proposes, "but should remain at least where we are today."

THE U. S., the CIO spokesman said, would "move backward trade-wise unless we face up to the government's responsibility in this whole area of giving aid and assistance to plants, communities and workers affected by increased imports."

Included in this category would be retraining, relocating and transporting workers affected by increased imports with supplemental unemployment compensation during the period of dislocation. It also would mean, he said, financial assistance to communities affected, plus aid to plants or companies to convert to other production or to improve production methods to meet competition.

That tablespoon of applesauce was flipped at delegates to the National Conference on Weights and Measures in Washington by Assistant Sec. of Commerce Craig R. Sheaffer, who a moment before had been introduced by Dr. Allen V. Astin, president of the organization.

Astin also is director, on temporary basis, of the U. S. Bureau of Standards. He was fired a few weeks ago by Sec. Sinclair Weeks, on Shaeffer's recommendation, in a dispute over a battery booster, and was restored temporarily to the job when scientists throughout the country protested.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

They weigh, grade and pack sliced bacon; wash and trim pork and beef tongues; stuff sausages; grade and trim sweetbreads; put smoked meats in muslin bags; and mix spices for sausages. They also staple cartons, fold boxes; work in a dog food plant that uses horse meat; candle eggs; scale, wrap and stencil packaged meats; sew casings for sausages on power machines; bone hams; inspect products for defects.

Some of them wear high rubber boots and long, hot rubber aprons that come down to the tops of their boots; and work on wet, slippery floors. Now and then one skids and falls, breaking an arm or leg. Others lift heavy loads of sausage or other meats off a conveyor up onto a carriage. Or stand on their feet all day at noisy machines.

These are just a few of the kinds of jobs in today's complex meat packing industry done by some of the rank and file delegates to the CIO Packinghouse Workers' first National Conference on Women's Activities held recently in Chicago.

THE CONFERENCE was called by UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein to take up special problems affecting an estimated 40,000 women who compose from 20% to 25% of all production workers in the meat packing industry.

More than 200 delegates attended the conference, representing a total union membership of some 130,000 workers in locals at the Big Four packing companies—Swift, Armour, Cudahy and Wilson—as well as many large and small independents in centers in the country.

The bulk of the delegates were women, but also present were several dozen men, mostly key local, district and international union officials and representatives.

"The purpose of this conference," Helstein said to the women in his opening speech, "is to find out what you want, why you want it and what you think is the best way to get it."

The contributions that women make to the nation, their local communities and to the union have never received proper recognition, Helstein said. "We hope that out of this conference will come a program that will enable us to bring the women membership of our union into full complete participation on every level of activity."

MOST OF the conference time was taken up in discussing and voting on a series of reports and recommendations drawn up earlier by special panels at the conference. These were designed to act as guides to union negotiating committees in their efforts to remove some of the unfairness and discrimination against women workers both in the industry and in the union.

It's hard, dirty business working in the meat packing industry. Women workers often are forced to suffer from poor conditions which could be improved, although they are now vastly better off than they were in the years before the packinghouse workers were organized.

One of the chief complaints of the women is that they get lower pay than men even when they do the same type of work. The union has conducted a stubborn fight on this issue and finally succeeded in getting the wage differential for women cut from 10 cents to 5 cents an hour. The conference recommended that efforts be pressed to further lessen the gap, looking toward its final elimination.

Starting rates for women workers in the major portion of the industry are $1.40, while the rate for men is $1.45. A similar spread continues into the higher skilled jobs.

Delegates also urged that inequalities existing in women's rates be ironed out so that all comparable jobs in a particular plant being performed by women receive equal rates.

3 Million Women Now Union Members

The Labor Dept. estimated that nearly three million of the 19.25 million women in the nation's labor force now are union members.

Many of these women union members are employed in the apparel and service trades, communications work, textile mills and electrical goods manufacturing.

As of March, 18.5 million of the women in the labor force were employed, and more than a half million were jobless. The demand for women workers in certain occupational groups exceeded the local supply.

CIO Charter Proposal Wins In Newark

FOUR of the five CIO-endorsed candidates have been elected to the Newark, N. J., city commission.

A CIO-back referendum establishing a charter commission to recommend a new form of government also carried by a landslide of 62,687 to 8,168.

James T. Callahan, treasurer of Dist. 4, CIO Electrical Workers, and nominee of the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council for charter commission, polled the highest number of votes of all candidates for the five-man board.

The charter commission will recommend a new form of government which will go to the voters for final approval in November.

The campaign for the charter referendum was sponsored by the Newark Citizens Committee on Municipal Government, which was established on the recommendation of Joel R. Jacobson, executive secretary of the CIO Council, and George Pfaus, state chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action. Other groups supporting the NCCMG included the AFL, the Chamber of Commerce and the Parent-Teacher Association.

UAW Auxiliaries Push PAC Work

A call for "renewed PAC effort" was sounded at the recent meeting of the Women's Auxiliaries of Region 3 of the CIO Auto Workers. Meeting in New Castle, Ind., the auxiliaries also pledged support to CIO-PAC on a year-around basis.

More than 80 delegates participated in the all-day conference which awarded first prize in a membership drive contest to Auxiliary 41 of South Bend, Ind. Sessions were held in the new hall of Local 371, UAW-CIO.

UFW Pension Fund Okehed

THE U. S. Treasury Dept. has approved the CIO Furniture Workers' pension plan covering all branches of the furniture industry.

Main features of the plan are that it is completely financed by employer payments based on payroll, benefits are over and above social security benefits, and retirement at the age of 65 is possible but not compulsory.

UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer, who is chairman of the UFWA Pension Fund, said the fund "will begin to collect monies due from employers who have already agreed to participate, and UFWA-CIO will be better able to launch an intensive drive to extend coverage to workers in shops not yet participating."

CIO Calls Reed Jobless Bill Peril to Social Security

PASSAGE of the Reed Bill amending the unemployment compensation program not only will "seriously damage" the jobless insurance system, but "will be a grave omen for the entire social security program," the CIO warned the House.

In a letter to all members of the lower body of Congress, CIO Vice Pres. Joseph N. Curran, chairman of the Social Security Committee, and Nathan Cowan, director of the Legislative Dept., asked them to disregard the approval given the measure by a majority of the House Ways and Means Committee.

They asked the members to accept Administration - sponsored amendments proposed by a three-man Democratic majority, and to vote against the bill unless the changes are approved.

"If this bill, the first bill on social security to be considered by the 83d Congress, is passed in its present form . . . it will be a long and tragic step in the repeal of 20 years of progress," they wrote.

Curran also is president of the CIO Maritime Union. The bill he and Cowan oppose on behalf of the CIO bears the name of the Ways and Means Committee chairman, Rep. Reed (R. N. Y.). It is based on measures introduced by Reps. Mason (R. Ill.) and Mills (D. Ark.).

CURRAN and Cowan told the congressmen the CIO has two main objections which it shares with the Eisenhower Administration and the Democratic minority of the committee—Reps. Dingell (Mich.), Forand (R. I.) and Eberharter (Pa.).

One is that it would foreclose effective relief for heavily-industrialized states, such as Rhode Island, which suffer serious unemployment and have exhausted or nearly exhausted their reserves for benefits.

The other is that it would automatically give the states money which could be used to pay the same administrative expenses for which Congress has already appropriated funds. The letter posed a query:

"Are states, such as Rhode Island, which suffer through no fault of their own from a high unemployment rate, to have the advantage of a national pooling of the cost of unemployment, which is, as the Supreme Court found in upholding the Social Security Act, a national problem? Or will the impact of unemployment upon these states be made more intense by this bill's harsh provisions which will result in raising their payroll tax rate substantially above those in other states?"

Compensation Pay Upped in 12 States

SOLID PROGRESS toward bringing state unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation benefits closer in line with present-day living costs has been made by organized labor in a dozen state legislatures.

With about half of the 1953 legislative sessions completed, a recent tabulation shows that a dozen states have voted to increase compensation benefits from $3 to $4 weekly. Other states have acted favorably on unemployment and disability benefits.

These gains have been won in the face of strong employer opposition, as well as the counter-drive for so-called "right to work" laws which so far have been defeated in every state where they have been an issue this year.

STATES which have liberalized workmen's compensation benefits include Indiana, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, South Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia and Wyoming.

In Connecticut, the General Assembly's joint labor committee voted to boost workmen's compensation from the present $36 to $40 weekly and unemployment insurance from $26 to $30.

On workmen's compensation, Indiana raised benefits from $27 to $30 weekly; Colorado boosted benefits by $1 to $29.75 or two-thirds of average weekly pay, whichever is lower; Idaho increased weekly benefits by $3 and upped maximum death benefits from $10,000 to $14,000; Kansas upped benefits from $25 to $29; West Virginia increased payments for temporarily disability from $25 to $30; Tennessee upped benefits from $25 to $28; South Carolina went from $25 to $35; and Nevada upped compensation benefits by an average of $25 monthly.

ON THE other hand, improved compensation benefits have been rejected by legislatures in several important industrial states, including New York, Michigan, California and also Maryland, North Carolina, Utah, Iowa, Washington and New Mexico.

The Ohio and Pennsylvania State CIO Councils are mobilizing support for unemployment and workmen's compensation bills in their respective legislatures.

Ohio CIO reported that labor-backed compensation and FEPC bills are "at a crucial crossroads" and urged a labor mail campaign to counteract employer demands for defeat of the CIO-endorsed bills. The Ohio State Senate already has voted a bill reducing employers' unemployment tax payments by approximately $40 million a year.

In New Jersey, Sen. Bodine, new state Republican chairman, has introduced a bill to cut unemployment compensation by the amount of any disability or pension allowances received from a past employer. Several CIO-supported bills to increase jobless and disability benefits were killed earlier.

IN MICHIGAN, the Republican-controlled State Senate has turned down a proposed $3 weekly increase in jobless benefits. It also has voted a bill, called "General Motors' baby," giving big manufacturers "merit rating" savings on their unemployment insurance tax payments.

In California—one of the few states with a separate disability insurance program—an Assembly committee voted to increase weekly benefits from $30 to $35. The committee, however, tacked on several crippling amendments pushed by lobbyists for private insurance firms.

Ohio GOP Spurns Ike On Tax Dodge

Eighteen Republican members of the Ohio Senate, spurning Pres. Eisenhower's advice, have voted for the "millionaire's amendment" to shift the tax burdent from the rich to the poor.

The Senate adopted a resolution, 18 to 14, calling for a Constitutional amendment limiting income, inheritance and gift taxes to 25%. The result would be to raise taxes on low-income groups.

Action came immediately after a Democratic senator read a letter from Eisenhower expressing disapproval of the scheme. Eleven Democrats and three Republicans followed the Republican President's advice.

2 States Beat Union Curbs

ANTI-UNION legislation has been turned down by two more state legislatures, in Ohio and California.

The Ohio House Labor Committee pigeonholed the French Bill, which would have outlawed union shop agreements and even banned some forms of peaceful picketing.

In California, an Assembly committee tabled a "right to work" bill by Assemblyman Harold Levering, GOP majority leader. The vote was 8 to 2.

Labor Backs Drive To Save Pension Law

A COUNTER-ATTACK against increasing attempts to put the country's retired workers on a bread and water diet by destroying social security has been started by a group of men and women from 32 labor, welfare, veterans, church and civic organizations.

The fight got under way at a Citizens Conference on Social Security they recently held in Washington. As a result, a committee was named to urge Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Oveta Hobby to resist efforts of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and other groups to trim old age benefits to a parody on pensions.

THE COMMITTEE included Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, CIO associate director of research, who also was one of the group sponsoring the conference and is a member of Mrs. Hobby's Social Security Advisory Committee.

The conference acted after hearing a series of discussions on social security during which Dr. Edwin C. Witte, professor of economics at the Univ. of Wisconsin, described the C. of C. plan for "universal coverage" on a "pay-as-you-go" basis as a "baby Townsend plan."

"Under it," he declared, "the Santa is not the government, but the employes and employers who contribute to the Old Age & Survivors Insurance Fund."

THE CHAMBER proposes to blanket in everybody under social security, whether or not he has contributed to the OASI fund, and pay everybody over 65 years of age $25 a month out of the $18 billion kitty built up by employer and employe contributions over the years.

The fund would be maintained at the $18 billion level by a payroll tax levied each year by Congress to make up for the amount spent. The pay-as-you-go feature would eventually push the tax so high the people would rebel, benefits would be frozen at a low level or reduced, and the chance of improving them would be negligible.

Witte warned that unless effective action is taken to beat down the attacks being made on social security, there is a grave danger not only of failing to secure improvements in the public welfare, but of losing gains made during the last 15 years.

TWO EXPERTS from the field of labor were among speakers at the Citizens Conference on Social Security in Washington. They were Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, secretary of the CIO Social Security Committee and associate research director, and Nelson Cruikshank, AFL social security and pension authority.

Curran Warns of Press Drive Against Pensions

A SHARP warning that magazine and newspaper articles apparently aimed at undermining public confidence in Social Security should be read with "extreme care" was sounded last week by Joseph N. Curran, CIO vice president and chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee.

Curran, who also is president of the CIO Maritime Union, called for the precaution when he was interviewed by Leon Pearson on the NBC radio program, Viewpoint USA. He suggested that such articles be read with "several things" in mind.

"For example," he said, "do they attempt to point out the reasons for the present program? Do they emphasize its good features, or are they apparently at pains to point out every fault that can be found—every apparent inconsistency?

"Most important of all, where do the articles end up? Do they propose a concrete, positive program, explaining what changes for the better could be made? Do they call for larger benefits? Or do they propose a flat benefit, or a so-called pay-as-you-go system?

"WE WOULD advise that everyone beware of the latter, for the people who talk about flat minimum benefits for everyone do not favor more than a $25 a month, an obviously fantistically low figure.

"The very people who favor such a system are the ones in the forefront of any fight to prevent benefits reaching an adequate level."

The CIO readily concedes that the Social Security program could be improved, Curran said. Many changes are necessary to make it a better program covering more people and covering them in better fashion, he added.

"We advocate universal coverage, for there are far too many workers in the civilian labor force who still are not protected," he explained.

"We think the benefit levels are in need of substantial improvement."

Pres. Eisenhower's campaign statements indicate he shares this view, Curran said. He added the CIO's hope that the President will fight for such improvements even if he has to fight his own party, for "much of the political opposition to expanded social security comes from Republicans in Congress."

THE CIO also favors extending social security protection to the families of breadwinners totally and permanently disabled before reaching the age of 65, he said.

"Let me tell you what we in the CIO intend to do," he concluded.

"We are going to continue to fight with all our vigor and energy on the legislative front, and we shall continue to push the fight for decent pensions in our collective bargaining with employers.

"We don't intend to relax one little bit. We intend to keep on fighting."

GOP Treasury Chiefs Hint Drive For Federal Sales Tax

TOP REPUBLICAN Treasury Department officials have voiced new hints of a drive for a federal sales tax, in the wake of Pres. Eisenhower's declaration shelving for at least six months the GOP's campaign promises of income tax cuts.

The latest indications of Administration sympathy for a business-inspired national sales tax came from Treasury Sec. George M. Humphrey and from Treasury Undersec. Marion Folsom.

HUMPHREY said he is working up a "brand-new tax law." Asked if he were considering a federal sales levy, the Treasury chief said:

"We are going to consider everything. I am approaching this with a completely open mind."

Folsom, testifying before a House Small Business Subcommittee, said Treasury Dept. tax experts were studying the "whole field of excise taxation," presumably including a sales tax which would fall hardest on low-income families.

Pres. Eisenhower—in radio and TV addresses and a message to Congress—earlier set aside GOP promises of quick tax cuts.

HE URGED Congress to extend the excess profits tax for another six-months, to next Jan. 1, when a previously scheduled cut in personal income taxes also would take effect.

The President's proposal brought a storm of protest from right-wing Republicans in Congress. Chairman Reed (R. N.Y.), head of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, promised a bitter fight against Eisenhower's proposals. He called the excess profits tax "oppressive."

Reed demanded death for the excess profits tax on June 30, its present deadline, and a 10% across-the-board tax cut for individuals on July 1. Both proposals would benefit high-income taxpayers and huge corporations while handing the average worker enough to buy two extra packs of cigarets a week.

CIO's proposal for tax reductions, when federal expenditures permit, is to increase personal exemptions from $600 to $800. This would provide greatest tax relief for small income families.

EISENHOWER, saying Americans live "not in an instant of danger but an age of danger" also asked continuation of the 52% corporation tax rate beyond next Apr. 1 and continuation of excise tax levies due to expire Apr. 1.

Only the social security tax boost due to increase automatically next Jan. 1, could be avoided the President said. He proposed postponement of the automatic increase.

FDA Asks Power to Check Pure Food Law Violations

CONSUMERS have a $50 million-a-year stake in the power of the U. S. Food & Drug Administration to inspect food processing plants to protect the nation's health from impure foods.

That was made plain as the House Commerce Committee heard testimony supporting a bill spelling out the FDA's plant inspection powers.

SUCH POWER to enforce the pure food laws was curtailed by a Supreme Court decision, which held that a plant management must agree before an FDA inspector could check the premises.

FDA Commissioner C. W. Crawford told the committee "the need for prompt amendment to permit inspection is urgent" to protect buyers of $50 million a year worth of goods.

Since the court decision, Crawford said, FDA inspectors have been blocked from checking many plants. He cited this example:

"The manager of one of the largest warehouses in the United States has informed us that no further inspections will be permitted until the law is changed.

"This warehouse was visited regularly from 1944 to 1952, during which time 29 seizures were made that included over 75 tons of adulterated or misbranded nuts, flour, rice, peas, butter, fish and frozen foods."

The corrective bill, restoring FDA's inspection powers, also was backed by Rep. Fogarty (D. R. I.)

"Without factory inspection authority," he said, "the enforcement of several vital provisions of the (pure food) act is impossible. Adulterations and misbranding can best be detected by going into the plant and seeing what is being done."

Rockefeller Named To Health Dept.

Pres. Eisenhower last week nominated Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Under Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. If confirmed by the Senate, he will be the second highest official in the new department which was set up as a result of a plan he helped draft.

FUEL BRIGADE.—It got so cold the water pipes froze at Minnesota CIO's recent summer school at North Star Lake, near Marcell, Minn. So the fuel brigade was kept busy hauling firewood. In the group (from left) were: Anna Slepica, Textile; Joe Wiesinger, Brewery; Minnie Anderson, Retail-Wholesale; Darrell Smith, National CIO-PAC; and (kneeling) Emil Wiitala, Electrical Workers.

Senate Kills Consumer Survey Fund

The Senate has voted 45 to 29 to go along with the House in slashing from the independent offices appropriation bill a $186,000 item for a survey for that purpose. Both houses also agreed on a specific directive forbidding the Federal Trade Commission from making the study.

FORMER Pres. Truman had directed the FTC to find out what happens to the consumer's dollar when he spends it, and had asked the $186,000 to finance the job.

"Obviously," he said, "none of these special interests wants the public to know precisely how much of the consumer's dollar it is getting."

Sen. Langer (D. N. D.) tried to get the Senate to reverse the House, but failed. Farmers and others who are plagued by rising costs, he said, have a right to know where their money is going and "who's getting the gravy."

It was the gravy, particularly in foods, that prompted Truman to ask for the survey.

FIGURES compiled by the Democratic National Committee show that it seems to be the middlemen who get it.

Last year, for instance, the average family of three persons paid $739.70 for what it bought from farmers, or $17.45 more than it spent in 1952. But the farmer got only $352.87 for this food, or $7.03 less than he received the year before.

What this means is that the farmer got 48c out of every consumer in 1952, instead of the 50c he got in 1951. It also means that the middlemen collected $24.48 more in 1952 then they did in 1951.

Employment Slips

Although April employment was slightly lower than in March, there were 61.2 million employed and 1.5 million jobless in April, according to the Dept. of Commerce. Unemployment was lowest of any April since World War II.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

FROM beef to washing machines, there are some good buys available this month for alert shoppers. Even in a time of inflated living costs, there's an ebb and flow in prices that enable a family to get good values for its money if it watches price trends and seizes buying opportunities as they arise. Here are tips on price trends and specific buying opportunities for June:

Best Buys

Beef remains at low prices and is the outstanding value in meats. Chuck is particularly reasonable. You can often save even more by buying a larger cut like a chuck arm roast, and using the boneless end for beef stew, the center chunk for pot roast and the remaining piece for Swiss steaks.

Pork and lamb are more expensive now, but some cuts of veal are reasonable, especially shoulder roast, and roasting chickens have dropped in price.

Note the cut-rate specials on frozen juices, due to heavy storage stocks. The brands that are least well known are often least expensive.

Washing Machines: Not only are retailers cutting prices on automatic washers, with some manufacturers trimming costs too, but new and improved models are appearing, including more smaller washers for homes and apartments. Some independent retailers and discount houses are offering the Thor fully-automatic model for as little as $200.

Others of the good automatics are available for $250 or less. More and more automatics are shock-mounted so they need no bolting down. Sears Roebuck has a new version of its Kenmore automatic (about $240) which needs not be bolted down.

Other good automatics widely available at discount bringing prices down to $250-$260 are Maytag, Apex, ABC, General Electric and the new Kelvinator, designed to minimize wear on clothes and protect fragile fabrics.

Clothing: Prices of garments made of synthetic fibers like Orlon and nylon are starting to come down. The synthetics have particular usefulness for clothes that must be laundered frequently, such as summer apparel. It's significant that the Army now specifies a blend of nylon and Dacron for its nurses uniforms.

One of the best values currently available is Orlon-wool skirts offered by many stores this season for $4-$5, and as low as $3 in some stores. Many of these are pleated, which is more practical for a skirt containing Orlon than an all-wool one, since the synthetic fiber has a high degree of stability which helps pleats keep their shape. However, check quality carefully. Some of the cheaper skirts are cut skimpily to save yardage.

The falling cost of the synthetic fibers is also making available lower-priced men's sportswear. One of the best buys in summer slacks this year is rayon types blended with 15% nylon which adds durability to the rayon. Such slacks are now available for as little as $4. But be sure they're labeled "CRF" meaning crease-resistant finish, which helps rayon keep its press better.

Furniture: Mass-production methods introduced into furniture manufacturing are now opening up prospects for household goods at lower cost, especially living room chairs and sofas. Kroehler furniture now being produced by these methods offers good value, except that much of it is sold in credit stores which juggle the prices so that the good value disappears. They do this largely through a step-up technique. For example they may offer a set in a choice of a mediocre or more attractive fabric, and charge as much as $100 more for the same set in the better fabric although the actual difference in fabric cost is only a few dollars.

Price Index Close To Peak

FOR THE SECOND month in a row, the government's "new" consumer price index moved upward and is now within .5% of the all-time record.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, in its latest report, said the price figures climbed to 113.7 in mid-April. It was a monthly increase of one-tenth of 1%. Prices of goods and services and medical care showed the greatest increase.

BLS reported food prices are on the increase, and the latest Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index was $6.47—the highest level in eight months.

Jury Checks on Bramblett; 6 Named for Job-Peddling

AN INVESTIGATION into charges that Rep. Ernest K. Bramblett (R. Cal.) got kickbacks from his office employes for political purposes was started by a federal grand jury in Washington last week.

Meantime, three Republican political leaders in Georgia, indicted with three other persons on charges of postoffice job-peddling, posted $1,000 bail each and prepared to face a jury.

In South Carolina a former party official was indicted, also on a charge of selling postoffice jobs.

In another case involving a political figure, Rep. John L. McMillan (D. S. C.) was found not guilty of a charge of illegally leasing U. S.-owned oil lands.

The complaints against Bramblett were first made several months ago. Preliminary investigations have been made by the Justice Dept. and the office of U. S. Attorney Leo A. Rover in Washington.

Incidentally, while in private practice in 1951, Rover unsuccessfully defended former Rep. Walter E. Brehm (R. O.) on a similar charge. Brehm, fined $5,000 and given a suspended sentence of five to 15 months, did not seek reelection.

The Georgia Republicans indicted in the alleged job-selling deal were Tom C. Williams, Waycross, chairman of the GOP committee in the 8th congressional district; Isaac J. White, Blackshear, chairman in Pierce County, and James M. Kent, St. Simons, party vice chairman in the 8th district.

A federal grand jury at Charleston, S. C., returned an indictment against Gerard Hartzog, former vice chairman of the Republican State Committee, on a charge of attempting to sell his influence to obtain a postmastership.

McMILLAN was accused of violating a federal law forbidding a member of Congress from entering into contracts with the government. He had applied for a lease on about 1,480 acres of land in Utah which he planned to explore for oil. The Bureau of Land Management granted the lease, later cancelled it on the ground he was not eligible.

McMillan was found not guilty by Judge T. Blake Kennedy of Wyoming, who was serving as a visiting judge when the Congressman went on trial in March. In a written opinion, Judge Kennedy said there was no showing of criminal intent on McMillan's part, and that the laws under which he was tried "shrouded" the case in a "degree of doubt."

TWUA Wins Case, Pay Cut Barred For 14,000 Workers

THE DRIVE of the American Woolen Co., biggest firm in the woolen and worsted industry, to cut wages has been stopped and stopped cold.

The campaign ground to a stop when Arbitrator Raymond E. O'Connell turned down the company's request to cut wages by 31 cents an hour.

The decision covers 14,000 workers in 16 plants, all but two of them in New England. They were represented at the hearings before the arbitrator by the CIO Textile Workers which fought the company's proposals.

"Naturally we are pleased that Mr. O'Connell agreed with us that a wage cut is no way to approach the problems of the American Woolen Co," said TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka. He also is director of the union's woolen and worsted division.

"HOWEVER, we do not look on this decision simply as a victory . . . we regard it as the removal of an obstacle which stood in the way of a sound, workable solution to the company's problems.

"We repeat that we stand ready to offer our wholehearted cooperation to American Woolen in reaching a solution. We want the mills to operate, and we realize that in order to operate, they must be profitable."

O'Connell said the fact that the company showed a loss in 1952, the first in 14 years, does not alone justify a wage reduction. He added:

"It would be improper to institute a policy of adjusting wage rates to the financial experience of a company during the previous year . . . this would disregard the established yardstick of the value of the services performed, and would be to adopt a new policy of fitting wages to the fortunes of management."

THE ARBITRATOR also pointed out that the present national trend is toward more wage increases.

"And with the wages of these employes not excessive, an arbitrator would hardly be expected to direct a reduction in the large amount requested here, which at most would give only partial relief," he said.

The union said a major reason for American Woolen's declining earnings was its failure to use new "miracle fibers" to blend with wool to create new fabrics demanded by consumers.

TWUA also pointed out at the hearings that there is an increased demand for men's and women's woolen clothing, a fact which O'Connell also emphasized when he said:

"With business generally healthy at present, and expected to hold firm for the balance of this year, the market for textile products should be much better . . . although not booming by any means."

NATHAN E. COWAN

WILLIAM LAVELLE

Cowan, Lavelle Quit CIO Legislative Posts

THE RESIGNATIONS of Nathan E. Cowan and William Lavelle as CIO legislative director and assistant legislative director have been announced by Pres. Walter P. Reuther. He accepted them with words of regret and appreciation for past services.

Cowan and Lavelle ended their legislative assignments for the CIO effective May 31, and the following day rejoined the staff of the CIO Steelworkers, with which they have both been long connected.

In their new posts, the USA-CIO announced, Cowan will serve as coordinator of all legislative matters affecting the union, both in Washington and in the states.

Lavelle will be in charge of the union's expanded program in the fields of state unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation legislation. Both will be stationed in Washington.

Cowan came to Washington in 1941, after many years of service as a Steelworkers organizer. Lavelle became affiliated with the steelworkers organization in 1938 during the steel organizing drive, and was later secretary-treasurer of the Ohio State CIO Council. He became assistant legislative director of the CIO in 1949.

IN A LETTER to Cowan, Reuther said he accepted the resignation with regret.

"You have given long and faithful service to the CIO in this important office, and well deserve the wholehearted praise of the CIO officers and members for your excellent work," the CIO president wrote.

"I want to extend my warmest personal wishes for success in your new duties. I know well that the Steelworkers and all of CIO will benefit from your efforts, based, as they always have been, on an intense desire to serve the fine cause of trade unionism."

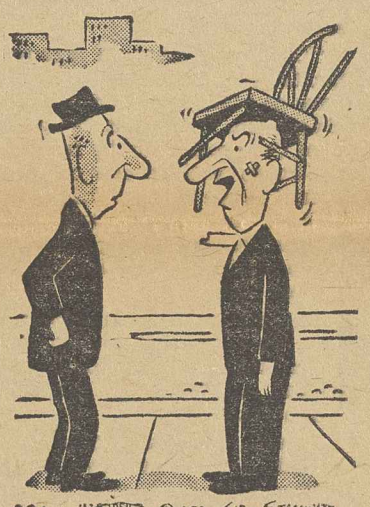
In a similar letter to Lavelle, Reuther said "you have served the CIO with distinction and competence, during a period when the trade union movement has been under serious attack from determined foes.

"You have been a vigorous and intelligent fighter for trade unionism, and the record of legislative battles which we have won and in which you played a major role is long and impressive."

State Labor Act Urged on Coast

The California CIO Council has urged the State Assembly to adopt a measure establishing a state labor relations board. The board would have jurisdiction in intra-state commerce.

John A. Despol, Council secretary-treasurer, said the CIO-sponsored bill would reduce costly and unnecessary work stoppages, grant workers in intra-state commerce rights long held by other workers and promote free and peaceful collective bargaining.



"I sneaked into a Union meeting to heckle them, but I was ruled out of order by the chair!"

GOP Strangling Of REA Charged

Proposals now before Congress would strangle development of rural electrification, according to the National Rural Electric Cooperative Assn.

John E. Olson charged proposed appropriations for REA would not stretch to cover generating and transmission loans. Under pending proposals, the coop spokesman said, "the generation and transmission program (of the REA) is virtually dead."

Women's Wage Rule Tossed Out

Minimum wage regulations for "miscellaneous" white collar women workers in Washington, D. C., were declared invalid by the U. S. Court of Appeals last week.

The court acted on a case involving five women employes of an undertaker who said they worked nights without receiving the minimum wage.

CIO Warns GOP Labor Bill Is 'Far Worse' Than T-H

"FAR WORSE" than Taft-Hartley as it now stands—that's CIO's description of the latest Republican unveiled effort to twist labor legislation even more against organized labor.

And with the condemnation of a proposed new bill, CIO urged that the Eisenhower Administration come forth with its own program to carry out the President's promises to liberalize T-H.

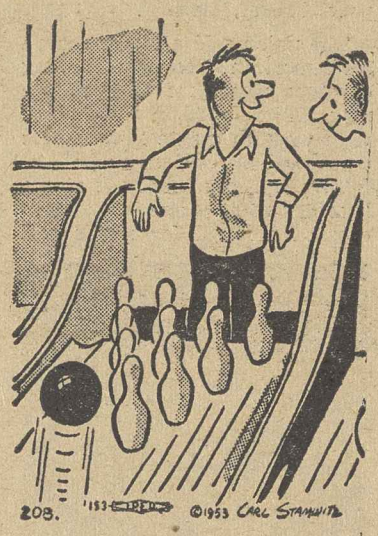
The comments were voiced by CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg on a Senate Labor Committee staff report released by Chairman Smith (R. N. J.). Commenting on the report, Goldberg said:

"EISENHOWER promised that Taft-Hartley—in some aspects he called it union-busting—ought to be improved.

"This bill is a far cry from the assurance made during the campaign and at the opening of Congress that liberalizing improvements would be made. This is a much worse bill than Taft-Hartley.

"We think the time has come for the Eisenhower Administration to make known its views on liberalizing amendments to Taft-Hartley. We think it is late in the day for the Administration to make known its views. In this situation, silence can be interpreted as acquiescence."

Criticism of the staff proposals released by Sen. Smith came also from Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.). He warned the proposals would



"That company union team is bowling against their bosses, and none of them dares to strike!"

"give away the rights of labor, labor's protection against coercive practices, protection of collective bargaining, and protection of peaceful picketing."

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) supported CIO's demand that the Eisenhower Administration now present its program for Taft-Hartley amendments. But the Senate Labor Committee last week lacked a quorum, put over its next session to June 3.

The Senate staff report proposals for toughening up Taft-Hartley were sweeping in scope. They would strike out flatly the declaration of policy encouraging union organization and free collective bargaining. They would go on to cripple the National Labor Relations Board, give more loopholes to anti-union employers and give priority to more restrictive state anti-labor laws. (See details in adjoining column.)

And the CIO general counsel challenged Sen. Smith's disclaimer that his committee staff report did not "necessarily" represent the Labor Committee's majority views.

"IF THESE are not the views of the chairman," Goldberg asked, "whose are they? If the staff doesn't work for him or the Republican majority on the committee, for whom do they work?"

Goldberg noted that the only favorable changes proposed in the the staff report were to give economic strikers the right to vote in NLRB elections and to modify the union shop restrictions in fields of casual employment. And these proposals, he said, "are not substantial compliance with Eisenhower's promises of 'fairness and justice' in the law."

Goldberg noted that "perhaps the most evil of these proposals, because it is the most far-reaching, is that to give the states a free hand to restrict strikes, lockouts and picketing, regardless of the federal law.

"THIS IS strictly a one-way proposition. The states would not be allowed to increase workers' protection or give them greater rights than those given to them by federal law, but only to impose more restrictions on them.

"Clearly, this scheme emanated from employer groups who are, even now, engaged in moving their plants from advanced industrial areas into areas where they can get away with substandard wages and union-busting."

"This union-busting measure runs directly counter to Pres. Eisenhower's assurance of fairness and justice in our labor law. It is certainly time for the Administration, until now completely silent on Taft-Hartley, to speak up against this measure."

Goldberg Tells Nine Repressive Proposals In Staff Report

The Senate Labor Committee staff proposals are "more repressive than Taft-Hartley in at least nine material respects," said CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, pointing to these provisions:

1. An open invitation to state legislatures to be more anti-union than Congress dares to be;
2. Political packing of the National Labor Relations Board in order to insure anti-labor decisions;
3. Licensing the firing of present board personnel "without regard to the provisions of the civil service and veteran preference laws", thus opening up board appointments to the spoils system;
4. Creating an administrative monstrosity out of the board by providing for a separate administrator in place of the board's general counsel, which can only result in open warfare between the board and the administrator;
5. New devices for employers to delay board cases, which are already inordinately slow;
6. An absurd proposal under which the Labor Board would decide whether work performed is "relevant or useful";
7. Further encouragement of intimidation of workers by employers;
8. An unnecessary extension of the non-Communist affidavit, conceded on all sides to be useless, to employers. A similarly unnecessary and far more burdensome provision to extend this affidavit to union members "in a policy forming or governing activity", which could include thousands of rank and file delegates to union conventions.
9. Pandering to powerful employers by overruling particular court decisions which have gone against them.

Sparkman Asks Small Business Aid

Small businesses, in need of financing, would receive aid under two bills introduced in the Senate by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.)

One bill provides:

Federal Reserve Board insurance up to 90% of loans by private banks to small business enterprises, with a limit of $250,000 and five years on each loan.

GOP 'Hard Money' Policies Hit

THE EISENHOWER Administration's "hard money" policies "represent a real danger to the future health and stability of the economy," Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Economic Policy Committee, told the Senate Banking Committee.

In a statement opposing proposals to abolish the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Rieve, who is president of the CIO Textile Workers, cited a number of recent cases in which RFC loans kept textile firms out of bankruptcy and prevented unemployment.

The move to kill RFC, he said, "is just another in the mounting line of actions destined to make life more pleasant for the nation's private bankers." Referring to the bank holiday that marked the change in administration 20 years ago, Rieve added:

Rieve criticized the Administration's action boosting the interest rate on the federal debt and on veterans and FHA home loans.

RFC's RECORD of saving thousands of businesses over the last 20 years shows that "small and independent businesses not tied in with the giant financial trusts will always need a back-stop such as the RFC," Rieve declared.

Rieve said pending small business loan proposals "make a joke of the hallowed notion of free, private enterprise" by turning RFC functions over to private companies under government insurance.

"Under the proposed arrangements the Government would have no real voice in making decisions on loans, but it would take the great risks by insuring the bonds of these new corporations," Rieve said. "This is socialism in reverse, with the Government socializing the risks, while leaving the profits for the private lenders."

In the light of these proposals, talk that the RFC is dangerous government interference or socialism is "obviously absurd," Rieve declared.

Rieve's statement was presented on his behalf by Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research, and Everett M. Kassalow, executive secretary of the CIO Economic Policy Committee.

ASK BIG LEAGUE WAGES.—CIO Brewery Workers at Milwaukee demand 35-hour week and 25 cents hourly wage boost to bring conditions in line with those of other brewery centers. Here they picket one of half dozen struck plants.

Brewers Gain Backing In Milwaukee Strike

THE BEER that made Milwaukee famous wasn't being brewed last week. Some 7,500 members of Local 9, CIO Brewery Workers, were on strike at all six Milwaukee breweries, Schlitz, Pabst, Miller, Blatz, Gettelman, and Independent.

The walkout began after two months of negotiations failed to produce any progress. BW-CIO Pres. Karl Feller was in Milwaukee several days to assist in the negotiations and muster support for the strike.

The main issues are the union's proposals for a reduction in the work week from 40 hours to 35 hours with no loss in pay and a 25-cent hourly wage increase.

FELLER said the 35-hour week was "a standard provision" in many brewery contracts and that the Milwaukee members would still be behind those of other American brewing centers if they win their full demands.

Local union officials said increased productivity of the workers and technological advances threaten to put many of the union members out of jobs unless the work week is cut to 35 hours.

They pointed out the breweries have enjoyed "tremendous profits" and "can afford what we ask."

"The interests of the community as a whole justify our demands," they said. "It would be bad for Milwaukee if more and more were laid off."

As the strike started the CIO Community Services Dept. in Milwaukee County and Local 9 Community Services Committee set up machinery for strike relief.

Some 5,500 CIO Brewery Workers last week won wage increases of 7.5 cents and 17.5 cents an hour at seven New York City breweries. Production workers and hourly rated drivers will receive the larger boost, and drivers on a delivery rate schedule will get the smaller hike, both effective June 1. Also won were three weeks' vacation after five years' service.

CIO Supports Ives' Discrimination Curb

CIO HAS endorsed the principles of the proposed Ives anti-discrimination amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act as a step in the direction of fair employment practices legislation.

The comments were voiced by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey as head of the CIO Civil Rights Committee.

Carey urged that the proposal by Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.) be clarified to protect all workers by making discrimination an unfair labor practice.

IN A LETTER to Chairman Smith (R. N. J.) of the Senate Labor Committee, Carey said of the Ives' proposal:

"The CIO has long supported FEPC legislation and will continue to fight for its enactment by the Congress. To the extent that S.1831 is a step in this direction, we support it. We will not, however, relax our efforts to secure the passage of FEPC legislation."

Discussing some of the language of the Ives bill, Carey said it "is not clear" whether it protects only workers represented by labor organizations or whether its coverage extends also to union members in unorganized plants.

"There is, of course, not the slightest justification for confining the provisions against discrimination in employment on account of race only to plants in which there is a certified or recognized union," Carey said.

"INDEED, the evil of discrimination in employment on account of race is far more prevalent in unorganized plants than in organized."

Noting that it is a "fixed policy" of the CIO to fight discrimination, Carey pointed out that under this interpretation, "employers whose plants are unorganized are free to discriminate if they so desire."

Still another interpretation of the Ives bill language, Carey said in his letter, is that it protects union members against discrimination wherever they are employed.

"While this construction would broaden the coverage of the bill somewhat, and that is desirable, it is difficult in principle to justify protecting union members from racial discrimination, while denying such protection to non-union members similarly situated," he said.

Sales Tax Hit

Tax Relief For Consumers Urged By CIO

"WHAT AMERICA needs is less talk of incentives to already highly profitable businesses, corporations and investors, and more talk of incentives to the great multitude of taxpayer-consumers."

That's what CIO's Executive Board said last week in a full-dress condemnation of Republican-big business plans to ease up on corporation taxes and impose a federal sales tax.

"If consumers are not given incentives through tax cuts," CIO said, it will not do much good to give businesses, corporations and investors incentives, because there will be no market for the goods industry produces."

AND CIO proposed "relief to consumers" by raising the individual income tax exemption from the present level of $600 a year to at least $800 or $1000 "as the revenue needs of the federal government permit."

The CIO board's statement examined the "flood of contradictory rumors, half-truths, untruths and expressions of wishful thinking" about taxes since the Republican's campaign promises.

On the basis of Republican promises and performance to date, CIO warned, "the facts all point in one direction: The millions of people in the middle and lower income brackets and the tremendously profitable big corporations will be paying less taxes."

The CIO statement exposed the meager benefits for workers from the individual income tax reduction scheduled for next Jan. 1, and said "there will be no benefit to the great majority of Americans . . . if it is followed by enactment of a federal sales tax."

The individual tax cuts next Jan. 1 will mean "only 35c a week" for the $3000-a-year wage earner as compared with "relief" of $75 a week for those in the $100,000-a-year bracket.

The CIO statement also questioned Eisenhower Administration pleas to extend the excess profits tax from June 30 to next Jan. 1—a move opposed by many Republicans in Congress.

Urging that "excess profits taxes be collected as long as needed," CIO said by its removal "big corporations will gain great benefits" while "smaller, less profitable firms will have to make up in their taxes at least part of the lost revenue."

Removal of the excess profits tax also would be "a step toward future passage of a sales tax," which Sec. of Treasury George Humphrey repeatedly has said is under Administration consideration.

"There is no question," CIO said, that a sales tax is unfair and unjust. It hits most heavily at those least able to pay.

"Yet, influential Administration leaders appear ready to substitute an unfair sales tax for the excess profits tax and for fair income taxes on those in the high and upper-middle-income brackets.

"WE DO NOT think there is either fairness or equity in these tax-juggling schemes. The average American taxpayers will not tolerate any such scheme to aid the big corporations, the bankers and the wealthy taxpayers at the expense of the general public."

The CIO board reaffirmed support of a tax program including: Retention of the excess profits tax for the duration of the national emergency; an equitable income tax schedule, with higher personal exemptions; "unequivocal opposition to any type of sales tax"; and closing of existing tax loopholes.

CIO Challenges Eisenhower To Oppose 'New Isolationists'

A WARNING that the dangerous isolationist — "big business as usual" trend in U. S. foreign policy, "which has already shaken the unity of the free world," must be halted was voiced by the CIO Executive Board.

The board recalled Pres. Eisenhower's recent statement that "no single nation can live in the world alone," and described it as representative of the views of the American people.

"We believe it is his duty," the board continued, "to reiterate this simple truth and not remain silent when contrary policies are voiced by senatorial spokesmen.

"We trust that this clear principle will be enforced by the Administration and not abandoned at the bidding of senators without hope, without courage and without faith."

The CIO leadership warned that the "new isolationists" in Congress already have caused a sense of alarm and futility in other parts of the world which are fearful over failure of the U. S. to assume the responsibilities of world leadership.

"Abroad, the voice of Taft and the voice of McCarthy appear to be the Voice of America," the board said.

"We hope that the President, the elected leader of the American people, will pursue the policy announced in his inaugural address so that the achievement of collective security will not be endangered.

"How long will it be before the U. S. finds itself alone, whether the American people as a whole like it or not?

"The basic cause of the apparent lessening of pressure by the Soviet Union was the strong beginning made by the U. S. and her allies in rebuilding their strength. The present divisions among the allies, the undercurrents of suspicion and distrust, will encourage Soviet imperialism to increase its pressures and foment new aggressions."

THE BOARD noted that labor participation in the Mutual Security program is being undermined despite the fact that it has accounted for much of the popular success of the program.

"Operation Tycoon," the junket of 54 businessmen to "evaluate" MSA on the scene, resulted in a report, the board said, which betrays "a narrow economic and business point of view, neglecting the social and political sides of a sound foreign program."

It also pointed to the decline of labor's role in the U. S. Foreign Service. Particularly cited was curtailment of the labor attache program, "although the U. S. has to deal with many countries that have labor governments or strong labor minorities and although the infusion of trade unionists in the foreign service has had admittedly beneficial effects."

TIME OUT.—Students at Four-State CIO Summer School at Talladega, Ala., relax after class. The women here represent Clothing and Textile Workers, and Retail Union.

Bricker Curb Okehed By Senate Unit

A SENATE committee "turned back the clock" last week by approving the Bricker constitutional amendment curbing the President's powers to negotiate foreign treaties.

The Judiciary Committee's vote of approval was 8 to 4.

CIO has warned the amendment—if finally voted by Congress and approved by the states—would "turn the clock back to a period when the U. S. was a much less significant force in the world."

CIO ALSO said the amendment would "negate the role of the U. S. within the United Nations and its specialized agencies and through international negotiations to increase the security, the material well-being and the rights of individuals throughout the world."

The Bricker proposal—going beyond present constitutional provisions—would give Congress power to "regulate" any U. S. agreements with another nation or world organization.

The proposed amendment has been opposed by several Eisenhower Administration officials, including Sec. of State John Foster Dulles.

Food Aid Asked For Pakistan

A bill introduced by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), asking Congress to authorize emergency loans of government-owned wheat or other food to alleviate famine conditions in Pakistan, has been referred to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Steel Wage Parleys Speeded Up

THE CIO Steelworkers resumed their campaign for wage increases last week when negotiations with the U. S. Steel Corp. were renewed in Pittsburgh after an 18-day recess.

The full membership of the two negotiating committees—70 men—met for three hours on June 3. Then USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald and Vice Pres. John A. Stephens of the company, both in conspicuously good humor, announced a streamlining of sessions in order to reach a settlement as quickly as possible.

The first step was the appointment of a number of joint subcommittees, which began meetings the following day on various phases of the union's demand for a general pay boost.

THE UNION is seeking an unspecified wage hike under a reopening clause in the two-year contract that ended last year's strike. If agreement is not reached by June 30, it can call another walkout. It also has asked for the establishment of joint committees to study the possibilities of a guaranteed annual wage and a better pension and welfare plane.

The demands have been served on other basic major producers in addition to U. S. Steel, which had asked the 18-day recess in order to study the union's proposals.

'Ideal Mother' Named

Mrs. Leroy R. Coles, 57, wife of a CIO Steelworker, has been named "ideal mother" of the Ellicott District of Buffalo, N. Y., for 1953. All their five children went to college.

Free Labor Fund Grants Urged By Vic Reuther

THE CIO Free World Labor Fund is "an effective answer to the most powerful anti-American transmitter now in operation, Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.)," the CIO's representative in Europe, Victor G. Reuther, said last week in Paris.

"The CIO Free World Labor Fund, better than any other activity, can persuade workers everywhere that Station McCarthy is not the Voice of America," he said.

"SINCE the Republican victory last November gave Station McCarthy its extra power and more favorable time, doubt about American democracy and its will for peace and freedom has spread throughout the world."

McCarthy's operation is dangerous, Reuther maintained, because it often attacks those who have put up the best fight for democratic American principles. He cited McCarthy's attacks on Clement Atlee, British Labor Party leader, who "has contributed as much to the defense of the free world as McCarthy has spent in its sabotage."

"The CIO Free World Labor Fund," Reuther continued, "by helping workers organize into unions, by helping them win better wages and working conditions and higher standards of living through a CIO Point Four program, by CIO's visible, tangible work for international solidarity, gives convincing proof to the workers of the world that Station McCarthy, despite its sound and fury, actually signifies nothing.

"The Free World Labor Fund was established by the CIO at its last convention. By contributions from unions and individuals, the CIO hopes it will raise money to support the worldwide organizing and educational activities of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the international trade secretariats."

CIO Southern Students Learn Lobbying Lesson

While the school was meeting, the Alabama Legislature at Montgomery was considering a right-to-work bill and another measure to deny union membership to State and city employes.

The union fight against the bill became so hot that two students belonging to Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee left for Montgomery. Jerome Cooper, attorney for the CIO Organizing Committee, came to the school to tell of the fight and explain the significance of these measures and the Taft-Hartley Act.

George Mitchell of the Southern Regional Council traced the economic development of the South. He urged stronger unions, family-type farms to replace the plantation system, and better schools with costly segregation eliminated.

A SESSION on organizing the unorganized was conducted by Ray Nixon, southern director of the Rubber Workers; Carey Haigler, CIO Alabama director, and Lucy Randolph Mason, of the staff of the CIO Organizing Committee.

Ten international unions were represented at the school, which was held under the auspices of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research in cooperation with the CIO councils of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and Mississippi.

Larry Rogin and Joe Glazer, educational directors of the Textile Workers and the Rubber Workers respectively, were in charge of special classes for members of their unions.

House Unit Okehs Alaska Statehood

The House Interior Committee last week aproved a bill giving statehood to Alaska by a 19 to 4 vote.

Rep. Saylor (R., Pa.), the sponsor, conceded backers "have a problem" in the Rules Committee, to which it was sent, because it does not have Administration approval. Senate hearings on another bill tying statehood for Alaska to an Administration-backed proposal to admit Hawaii were still not scheduled.

CIO, AFL Agree To Ban Raids

TOP OFFICIALS of the CIO and AFL last week agreed in principle on a two-year pact to outlaw raiding between rival unions.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany, in a joint press conference in Washington, announced that both organizations were in agreement on general purposes and machinery for a "no-raiding agreement."

Language of the agreement "will be finalized" by a six-man subcommittee, Reuther said, and will then be submitted to the AFL Executive Council and the CIO Executive Board for action.

Meany and Reuther said they expected both boards would recommend adoption of the agreement at the fall conventions of each organization.

THE PACT would go into effect on Jan. 1, 1954, and be for a two-year period, Reuther said.

Reuther told newsmen he considered the agreement as "real substantial progress" toward organic unity. Meany instantly agreed as did CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and AFL Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, who were also present at the press conference.

As the pact was described to newsmen, it defines raiding as an attempt by a rival union to obtain jurisdiction in a plant where a union already has a contract or where it has recognition from the management or certification from the NLRB.

The agreement will provide machinery for processing cases where a violation is charged, with the final determination in the hands of an impartial umpire, whose decisions shall be final and binding. The umpire will be jointly named by AFL and CIO.

Future plans call for the subcommittee, composed of three members from each organization, to draft final language. Meany and Reuther said they anticipated no trouble in working out the language.

They also anticipated that if the agreement won approval of the conventions of each federation, which they predicted, then the affiliated unions would ratify the agreement.

Representing CIO on the subcommittee will be Reuther, Carey and Steelworker Pres. David J. McDonald.

Representing the AFL will be Meany, Schnitzler and Vice-Pres. Matthew Woll.

Adoption of the agreement, the CIO president said, would lay the basis for greater stability in the labor movement and would release manpower and energy for organizing the unorganized.

Both Meany and Reuther agreed that the joint committee felt the "no-raiding agreement" would provide a sound basis for organic unity.

Unity talks, they said, would continue, with no specific date set for resumption. Many complicated problems, they agreed, still remained to be worked out, although they called the raiding problem the biggest roadblock to eventual organic unity.

REUTHER told reporters the conferees had statistical data from the NLRB files which revealed there were a total of 1245 raids between rival CIO and AFL unions during 1951 and 1952. Involved were more than 350,000 workers.

When the victories were finally tabulated, less than 2%, or less than 5000 workers in all, had shifted allegiance from one union to another.

It proves, said Reuther, that "raiding doesn't pay."

CIO Board Okehs 'No-Raid' Pact

By AL ZACK

FULL APPROVAL of action of the CIO Unity Committee in reaching preliminary agreement on a "no-raiding" pact with the AFL came last week from the CIO Executive Board.

Meeting in Washington, the board agreed the two-year pact was the first, basic step toward eventual organic unity of the two labor organizations, and would benefit not only labor, but the nation.

The full-day session at CIO headquarters opened on a note of sadness as the officers and executive board members paid tribute to their beloved friend, Allan S. Haywood.

Unveiling a heart-warming portrait of the late executive vice-president and an engrossed scroll, signed by each board member, the CIO officials paid tribute to his memory and praised his long and faithful service to the men and women of labor.

Following a minute of silent tribute to Haywood and other great CIO leaders, Philip Murray, Van Bittner and Sidney Hillman, the Board swung into a full agenda. Highlights of the meeting included:

1. Approved the proposed merger of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers and the independent Distributive, Processing & Office Workers Union.

The board expressed the hope that when the merger is completed at the fall conventions of the two organizations, the CIO Department Store Workers Local S-1 in New York City will join the merged organization.

2. Heard Pres. Walter P. Reuther praise Nathan Cowan, who earlier had resigned as CIO legislative director, a post he held for many years. Reuther called Cowan's resignation "a great loss to CIO" but noted he would be undertaking new and important duties for his union, the CIO Steelworkers.

Reuther reported the Executive Committee had approved the appointment of Robert Oliver, assistant to the president, to coordinate CIO legislative affairs. The appointment, Reuther explained, would bring legislative matters directly under the guidance of the president's office.

Oliver, a long-time CIO official who had represented the CIO with the Mutual Security Administration for two years, was appointed assistant to the president shortly after the last CIO convention.

3. The board approved the appointment of Dr. Nathan P. Feinsinger to be CIO organizational disputes arbitrator to succeed Dr. George W. Taylor who resigned because of the pressure of other commitments.

4. Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers and chairman of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, reported on the first meeting of the Foundation's trustees and public advisory members.

Rieve said the foundation officials and advisers had fully discussed proposals to honor the memory of the late president of the CIO and the Steelworkers but said no definite action was taken pending further study of projects which would commemorate "our beloved leader."

5. The board approved a full-dress statement condemning Republican-big business proposals to ease the tax burden on the wealthy and transfer it to the backs of workers and consumers.

ROBERT OLIVER

Charging that present proposals would give tax relief to those who do not need it and impose new taxes, through enactment of a sales tax, on the already overburdened worker, the board demanded the first tax cut come in the form of raising individual exemptions from the present $600 level to at least $800 or $1000.

6. In a statement on foreign policy, which expressed alarm over the dangerous isolationist-"big business as usual" trend in U. S. foreign policy, the board said it believed Pres. Eisenhower's duty compelled him to speak up against "the voice of Taft and the voice of McCarthy."

7. Adopted a resolution charging that strikebreaking activities of certain Milwaukee breweries are resulting in the beer-consuming public being defrauded. The barrels of certain strike-bound breweries are being filled with the beer of other breweries, and the consumers are being misled.

8. PAC Dir. Jack Kroll reported on present activities of the Political Action Committee. Kroll emphasized that PAC was a continuing, day-to-day job, and he discussed the importance of off-year, municipal elections to be held in 1953.

9. The board unanimously approved a recommendation of the executive committee for a new, expanded public relations program, with emphasis on radio and television. Authorizing the program, the board agreed with Reuther as to the necessity of bringing the story of the CIO, its accomplishments, aims and aspirations to the public, with emphasis on the CIO belief that its members made progress as the whole community made progress.

10. The board also received reports from the Civil Rights, Community Services, Economic Policy, International Development and Social Security Affairs, Resources and Regional Committees.

'That's Not Schlitz!' Struck Brewers Are Getting Away With Murder

THAT BEER with the Schlitz and Blatz labels isn't the beer that made Milwaukee famous — it's strictly a "fraud" against beer drinkers in certain taverns and bars.

So charged the CIO Executive Board last week, accusing six big Milwaukee breweries with engaging in an "extensive strikebreaking campaign" against 7000 striking members of the CIO Brewery Workers.

CIO said the beer "is commonly misrepresented to the consuming public as being 'Schlitz' or 'Blatz' or other brands of Milwaukee beer when it is sold at taverns and at bars all over the United States."

Such practices violate the U. S. Internal Revenue Code, the CIO board said in demanding that the Internal Revenue commissioner "investigate and put an end to such strikebreaking practices."

CIO ASKED the Senate and House Labor Committees to look into the situation. The board charged existence of an "unfair and discriminatory legal situation under which brewery owners involved in a strike are permitted to have their barrels filled by other breweries by virtue of the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, while the union is hampered in its ability to cope with this strikebreaking move by the secondary boycott provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law."

CIO joined with the Brewery Workers in protesting such management tactics, and pledged full support to the Milwuakee strikers, who have been out four weeks. Major strike issues are a 25c hourly wage increase and a cut in the work week from 40 to 35 hours.

Brewery Local 9, representing the Milwaukee workers, has challenged the companies to let the union state its case to stockholders' meetings.

N. Y. Pickets Have Coronation Day All Their Own

STRIKING members of Dist. 65-CIO crowned a "Queen of the Picket Line" and a "consort" as they halted their picketing of Hearn's Department Store in New York on the day of the British coronation.

"The "queen" was Eleanora Cerro, 28-year-old telephone operator and a veteran of eight years with the store. Her "consort" was Stephen Canestra, who has sold lamps there for nine years. About 800 union members are striking because of discharges of employes with 20 to 40 years of service without proper notice or adequate severance pay. (LPA)

Daniel Named To Denver Post

Appointment of Franz Daniel as CIO regional director in the Rocky Mountain states was announced last week by John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils.

Under the recently-announced reorganization of the CIO Organizing Dept., Daniel will serve as director of Region XII covering the states of Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho and Wyoming.

Give A Buck To PAC

A Step Ahead

When the CIO and AFL a short two months ago resumed negotiations seeking to achieve labor unity, the Doubting Thomases were many. But their predictions were upset by the good faith demonstrated by both sides in their full discussions of the many problems involved in unifying the American free labor movement.

Now these discussions have brought their first, and important, accomplishment in the form of a "no-raiding agreement."

While the terms of the agreement are subject to final drafting and ratification by both CIO and AFL, the joint announcement last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany is good news for labor and the nation.

The agreement, as Reuther commented, means "real substantial progress" toward an ultimate amalgamation of the two big labor federations.

And more immediately, the prospect of eliminating bitter and usually futile contests for already-organized industries will free the energies of both CIO and AFL unions for the really important job of bringing the gains of unionism to millions of Americans in unorganized industries, shops, stores and offices.

CIO's increasing efforts will be in that direction. That was made plain by the revamping of CIO's organizing and field staff throughout the nation, as announced recently by Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

"There are still millions of unorganized workers in America," as Riffe said, "who need and want the benefits derived from honest, democratic, militant CIO trade unions. . . . We will carry on this assignment with determination and with all possible speed."

Against Isolationism

". . . No single nation can live in the world alone," Pres. Eisenhower said the other day, in answer to Sen. Taft's revived isolationist philosophy.

Those were good words, and obvious ones; but they need action to make them effective. And they need defense against appeasement at home.

The CIO Executive Board put its finger on the fears of many million Americans when it warned that these clear principles of international cooperation must not be "abandoned at the bidding of senators without hope, without courage and without faith."

These are real fears. The record of Senator McCarthy and his group, and the words of Taft more recently, have caused real fear among many of America's best friends in other parts of the world.

Walter Lippmann, the foreign affairs columnist, noted this strongly in a report on his trip to Europe. Members of the American foreign service, who act as our eyes and ears abroad, are reportedly in a low state of morale as a result of the attack on the State Department's policies. Union officials who have visited in other countries, or talked to union leaders who have come here, report much the same trend.

Leadership of the free world's forces does not come automatically to the United States; like other forms of leadership it must be based on respect, on a degree of faith and trust.

Acts, as well as words, provide the foundation for those qualities. And that foundation we must strengthen.

Old Shell Game

The wonders of living in the Communist "People's Democracies," as they call them, never cease.

The Communists in Czechoslovakia have just announced a sweeping currency devaluation that is a sure sign of economic headaches in that terror-ruled land.

Along with shaking up Czech currency to bring it in line with the Soviet ruble, the Communists announced that they would trim prices by as much as 37% and slash wages by 80%—which leaves Czech workers at least 50% behind their previous starvation level.

In Other Words –

Looking To The IFCTU Meet

The following views of the British Trades Union Congress on the role of organized labor in the development of backward countries are reprinted from Labour, the TUC official monthly publication.

WHEN representatives of 53 million trade unionsts meet in Stockholm in July a major subject for discussion and action concerns those countries where hunger, disease and undernourishment are all too common.

Delegates at the third World Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will be asking what progress has been made in raising living standards and whether the contributions the free trade unions have made so far have been effective.

Action in the underdeveloped countries has been a high priority for the ICFTU since its beginning.

Not only has the confederation given positive help in building up new trade unions, but it has supported those agencies who face the same enemies of progress. Its ambition is to greet the day when the West no longer looks upon the rest of the world as underdeveloped.

Progress Is Too Slow

Toward that goal, progress has been slow—too slow, some ICFTU spokesmen declared when the Economics Commission for Asia met at Bandong, Indonesia, this year.

Industrialization—the key to better living standards—so far has had little effect. Southeast Asia is still predominantly dependent for earnings and jobs on agricultural and mineral products. And even in these fields there is cause for alarm.

The food situation is now worse than before the war. The population has increased by one in 10 during the last 13 years but the output of food is still less than in 1939. In bringing methods of cultivation up to date, no real progress has been made.

To cultivate more land is only part of the answer to this pressing problem, said Dyhan Mungat and M. P. Rajagopal, the two Indians chosen to put the free trade union view to the economic experts of the United Nations.

Land reform is urgently needed. To give farmers the incentive to grow more food the land should be shared out fairly, marketing services organized and technical advice centers set up.

Orderly Development

Another danger to jobs and living standards is the swing of raw material prices when the world demand rises and falls. The free trade unions want an end to fluctuations which virtually tie wages and jobs to the current needs of the industrialized nations. Flexible international agreements are needed to provide for the buying of buffer stocks when demand is slack and to allow for the control of prices.

Yet, in the end, the development of new industries is the only way to tackle unemployment and underemployment. This, the ICFTU spokesmen insisted, must be done in an orderly way. They do not want to see slum factories in slum towns as a result of uncontrolled industrial expansion.

A practical, immediate possibility, said the ICFTU, is to develop cottage industries as a balance with small industrial undertakings and larger industries. Nevertheless the long-term investment on the large scale required will have to come through international action so as to avoid the dangers of exploitation.

In such enterprise the trade unions must be free to defend their members' interests. They must be the partners and not the tools of government in helping forward progressive policies. But until all governments have freed unions from hampering restrictions and recognize their rights to bargain collectively with employers and, if necessary to strike, the democratic trade union movement will be prevented from making its most effective contribution.

This same theme of partnership for progress was developed when ICFTU leaders met in Brussels in March and stressed again the backing of the free trade unions for the UN Technical Assistance Program.

They felt that experienced union officials should be included on any mission of technical experts to ensure that public health, social security, housing and industrial relations are not neglected when huge projects for industrialization are put in hand.

Other suggestions were that the free trade unions be consulted when scholarships were awarded to teams of workers and technicians and that such teams not be sent to visit firms with no union agreements.

U. S. Labor Warns On Russ Threat

Concern at continuing threats to freedom from totalitarianism and colonialism was expressed by the CIO, AFL and Mine Workers in a joint statement on the coming ICFTU World Congress.

"We are concerned at the perils to free trade unionism inherent in Soviet totalitarianism, a threat in no way diminished by Stalin's death, papier mache Soviet peace doves, or Communist 'united front' appeals," they said.

"The dangers of Peronism and military authoritarianism make us more fearful for the future of free trade unionism in parts of Central and South America. We are distressed at the stubborn colonialist policies still pursued by several democratic countries to the detriment of free trade unionism.

"The Third World Congress must grapple with these and other issues confronting international labor and emerge with a program which will satisfy the hopes of the millions of workers for whom the ICFTU speaks. To this end American labor . . . seeks the liberation of workers everywhere, whether from totalitarian slavery or colonial exploitation, whether from economic crisis or political reaction."

By Willard Shelton

MARK DOWN June 2 not only as the day when Britain's young Queen was crowned but also as the day on which President Eisenhower first exerted major leadership to force Old Guard leaders of his own party in Congress to accept White House foreign policy.

He summoned congressional leaders into conference, refusing to excuse Sen. Bridges, who tried to pretend that a scheduled Appropriations Committee meeting was more important. He demanded—and got—abolition of the Red China "rider" to a State Dept. money bill.

Bridges in the rider tried to push through a law saying in effect that we would walk out of the United Nations the day Red China was admitted to the Security Council. The President bluntly called the rider an unwise "threat" to the UN and an infringement of his executive authority in foreign policy.

Bridges and Sen. Knowland backed down like lambs and agreed to kill the rider.

On June 2, as well, a formula was revealed for getting Congress to extend for one year the reciprocal trade pacts law. Rep. Simpson (R., Pa.), whose own "extension" bill was loaded with gadgets, agreed to split the measure into two sections.

The first, which will pass, extends the law about as it is. The second, which will not pass, covers proposals to impose quotas on imports and raise tariffs. Simpson is allowed to save face because he can still talk about quotas, maybe even hold hearings.

EISENHOWER EXECUTIVES even showed signs of working harder to get the excess profits tax extended for six short months. On June 2 they had not yet bulled over the opposition of tax-hating G. O. P. Rep. Daniel Reed of New York. But Treasury spokesmen were softening up conservative businessmen's groups, the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

The President has dropped the theory that his only function is to make proposals and let Congress go its own sweet way. He dropped it because Republican Old Guardsmen made him recognize that pressure was necessary to sway them. He not only summons White House conferences but also personally telephones individual congressmen asking for their votes.

PRESSURE was the only recourse left on excess profits taxes. The Democratic minority warned that it refused to "save" Ike if he couldn't persuade the Republicans to support him.

One reason is that Democrats are getting tired of the excuse that all the new Administration's problems are "inherited" from the Truman Administration. They reason that Eisenhower should have known last year, when free-wheeling tax-cutting pledges were winning votes, that big mobilization means either big taxes or a heavier deficit.

● The President still doesn't have a domestic program, and the Fair Deal is being gutted by cuts in appropriations for welfare and social programs. Ike isn't fighting the Old Guard in this field, But at last is trying to frame a sensible Eisenhower foreign policy, economic and political.

THERE IS A QUIET, persistent demand for the Senate subcommittee report on Sen. McCarthy's financial affairs, and reprints are selling well.

The report became suddenly unobtainable from the government when McCarthy's good friend, Sen. Jenner of Indiana, became chairman of the Rules Committee.

The New Republic, however, published long excerpts, has sold 175,000 copies in 16-page reprint form, has another printing on order. Americans for Democratic Action photographed and reprinted the full 400-page report, complete with documentary evidence, and has sold more than 2700 copies, individually ordered, at $2 each.

The 16-page reprint is available at 10 cents a copy, $6 per 100, at 1825 Jefferson Place N. W., Washington, D. C. The ADA full report, which is also going into another printing, can be obtained from 1341 Connecticut Ave. N. W., Washington, D. C.

● ● CBS and NBC, the two big television networks, reached almost childish extremes in their anxiety to score a half-minute or two-minute "beat" in being first to show British coronation films.

When NBC arranged to use a Venezuelan jet bomber, freshly purchased from the British, to fly its films direct to New York, CBS protested to the State Dept. and clamored that it wanted a jet bomber, too. No luck—but NBC's scheme collapsed when the Venezuelan jet had fuel trouble over the Atlantic and had to turn back.

Americans saw the first films through simple arrangements with the Canadian Broadcasting Co.—a government-owned enterprise which got its films first because its facilities are closer to Britain than American facilities. The films, when shown, were a credit to their British producers and the energy of all concerned.

No Joke

Maybe Ike's big day was not June 2, as reported above, but the previous Wednesday, May 27. That's when the President "broke 90" for the first time at Burning Tree Country Club, the Capital's swankest gathering place of top-flight politicians, lobbyists and public relations men.

Eisenhower's score: 87. And he ruined a local joke by breaking 90 before Treasury Sec. Humphrey's slumping U. S. bonds dropped from a par of 100 to less than 90. For weeks the betting was even that Humphrey's "hard money" bonds would beat the President in the race.

'Golden Curtain' Of Big Business Is Lifted By A GE Insider

THE "GOLDEN CURTAIN" that shrouds big business in an aura of glamor and mystery has been ripped aside by a man who really knows, a former top-ranking executive of General Electric.

T. K. Quinn, former vice-president of GE, who for many years was on the inside of big business, has just written a free-swinging expose, "Giant Business: Threat to Democracy."

Quinn resigned his GE post because he was convinced that super-sized corporations are threatening American political liberties and are leading this nation down the road to totalitarianism.

The same belief led him to write this book.

"Corporate Bigness," Quinn says, "is an evil per se in any society devoted to the freedom and independence of the individual."

"Worshippers of Giantism and the colossal in business," Quinn continues, "in their individual collectivism, are closer than they think to socialism and the Marxian mystique, both of which are ultimate expressions of Bigness, because they pretend to comprehend the whole of society . . . the privately owned super-giants are the forerunnners of the super-state . . . The officers and directors of our giant corporations are self-elected and self-perpetuating. The system is more Russian than it is American."

How Top Brass Is Treated

In describing his days with GE when he was heir apparent to the throne which later went to Charles E. Wilson, and and also was president of the GE Finance Corp., Quinn reveals the way management treats top brass which lacks the protection of a union.

"I shall never forget one experience," Quinn wrote. "My father had died in Chicago and I postponed a meeting of the Sales Committee to attend his funeral.

"When I returned, I was asked (by GE Pres. Gerard Swope) why the meeting had been postponed. The answer to my perfectly reasonable explanation was that the business was not to be neglected in that way. I was thus reprimanded for taking a day off to attend my father's funeral."

Before his resignation from GE, Quinn reports he had made it apparent to top GE leadership that "I was not in sympathy with our (GE) reactionary labor policy."

"In one discussion," he recalls, "I was able to sway the committee to a voluntary pay increase at the Schenectady Works and to secure a favorable vote. But the committee was merely 'advisory' to Messrs. Young and Swope. The final decision was up to them and the increase never materialized."

Bigger Than The State

Pointing to the increasing number of powerful, billionaire corporations, many of them bigger and richer than the political states in the Union, Quinn insists that opportunities for really independent business are rapidly declining.

"Small business can continue to exist by sufferance only so long as monster corporations choose not to enter the competition against them," he observes.

Quinn began his business career as an $8-a-week-employe, and then as an officer of the National Lamp Works. When that company joined GE, Quinn moved up the ladder of the GE hierarchy.

After quitting GE, Quinn became president of the national advertising agency, Maxon, Inc., where he remained until the war broke out. Called to Washington, he served with the War Production Board and today is president of the T. K. Quinn Co. of New York City.

From a long career in big business, he is well qualified to tell the "inside facts" about America's giant industries. That's just what he does in "Giant Business: Threat to Democracy." —A. Z.

"Giant Business: Threat to Democracy," $3.75, is published by Exposition Press, Inc., 386 Fourth Ave., New York 16.

Congress Kills Housing Studies

(By Public Affairs Institute)

THE DRIVE to reduce government spending is underway. Each day newspaper headlines announce such proposed cuts as $5 billion in the Air Force budget. This is the big news.

Many budget reductions of major importance, however, get little or no press. An example is housing research. The entire division is being wiped out.

This will save the taxpayers $800,000 next fiscal year—the amount requested by Pres. Eisenhower to keep the division operating. In turn, the taxpayers lose the services of the agency.

The chances are that you've never heard of the research division. It has no funds for general publicity. The building industry—from contractor to builder to plumber to financier—often used the division's services. Its job is to aid them while protecting the interests of the home purchaser.

Aid To Home Buyers

The Housing Act of 1949 set up the division to undertake and contract for research and other efforts to improve the science of housing and to reduce its costs.

The housing industry is not dominated by a few giants like autos or steel. Instead, it is made up of thousands of small builders who construct from five to twenty-five houses per year. Few are large enough to do their own research.

The research division, since it opened shop in January, 1950, has served as a clearing house to assist the contractor, the builder, the supplier and the home purchaser.

The division cannot order these groups to do anything. However, it has shown them the advisability of doing certain things. They have urged, for example, uniform building and plumbing codes.

Nonstandard codes have been a major factor in high building costs. Now, some 41 cities have adopted model plumbing codes, while 150 others have, in effect, accepted them.

Example Of Savings

When the division determines that some type of research is needed, it usually contracts with experts in nonprofit institutions like universities or foundations. Sometimes it undertakes the research itself.

Here are some examples of savings that can be made now as a result of housing research:

● The roof of a medium-priced home can now be cut $180 or roughly 34% of the cost.

● A frame wall in a medium-cost home can now be constructed at a saving of about $210.

● Builders have been shown how they save from $40 to $50 for each house by proper planning of the arrangements of the plumbing fixtures and pipes.

● The model plumbing code, if adopted, would save approximately $150 for each house built.

The research division estimates that if any single one of these methods were used for only one-fifth of the houses built in any one year, the total savings would range from a low of $8 million to a possible $108 million.

The issue before Congress was whether the $800,000 should be spent for the program next fiscal year. Following are selected quotes from each side:

Sen. Ferguson (R., Mich.) — Against the program—"Here we have a typical example of bureaucracy which I think evidences a desire to compete with architects and construction companies as well as with individuals who desire to build homes."

Sen. Dennis Chavez (D., N. Mex.)—For the program—"The research is not being done for the Federal government. The information is channeled to private industry . . . I hope the Senate and the Congress will never forget that if it had not been for research in every line of endeavor, which affects everyday American life, we would not today occupy the position we do throughout the world."

"I hate to spoil the start of a beautiful day, but did you take a peek at your right rear tire?"

Visit To Blantyre—Home Town C

Miners Recall Late CIO Chief

By LEWIS CARLINER

BLANTYRE, a half-dozen miles up the Clyde River from Glasgow, is the chief town in the Scottish mining valley where Philip Murray was born.

His cousin, Mrs. Cecelia Kelly, still lives there. So does his boyhood chum, Edward Daly. Together he and Philip Murray started and were graduated from St. Joseph's School, which still stands on the edge of the town along the road from Glasgow.

In the Blantyre Miners Welfare Institute, where the miners want to erect a plaque in honor of Philip Murray, old men who sit at the tables playing dominoes or look out the windows into the sun remember working in the Bardyke mine with Philip Murray. They remember, too, working with his father, William Murray, and his uncle, a famous football player whose prowess is still cited in public house conversations.

Philip Murray was not Blantyre's only famous son. Another was David Livingstone, the explorer of Africa. At the railroad station—the same station from which William Murray, his wife and their children started their long trip to the United States in 1902—a sign directs visitors to a Livingstone memorial.

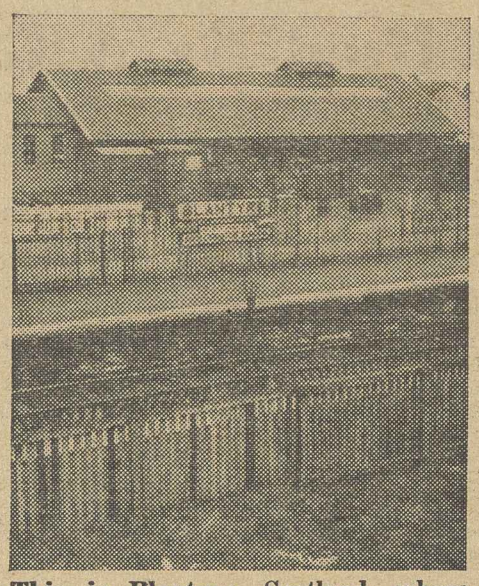
Mines Fall Off

The town and the railroad station are less important now than they were on the day the Murrays waved goodbye.

In 1902, more than 15 of the biggest and most productive coal mines in Scotland made Blantyre the grimy support of one of the most heavily industrialized areas in the world. In the half-century since then, the steel and metal industry along the Clyde has grown so that the town survives as a Glasgow suburb. Only three of its original mines are still in production.

Mrs. Kelly lives in an attractive detached home. It was built by the Labor Party government of Lanark, the county in which Glasgow and Blantyre are located, and is a pleasant place with lawn in front, garden in the rear, hot water and central heat.

Her mother, who was Philip Murray's aunt, died last year. Her husband, Edward Kelly, has been a miner and an active member of the Miners Union since he was a boy. Today he is caretaker of the Miners Welfare Institute.



This is Blantyre, Scotland, where CIO's Philip Murray grew up.

Miner Frank Travers and wife live in house where Philip Murray was bor They talk with CIO Rep. Lewis Carliner and James Jack of Scottish TU

Mr. and Mrs. Kelly knew Philip Murray, but they have only the most distant memory of him. They recall him as a clever boy, always buying books, reading and studying. They recall his father as a serious and religious man, as they are themselves.

A Studious Youth

The Kellys have five children, all married. One, Mrs. Peggy McGowan, has two children attending the same grade school Philip Murray went to when he was a boy. She and her husband, Frank, a steel worker are preparing to migrate to the United States. They plan to go to Pittsburgh, where Frank hopes to get a job in a steel mill.

Not long ago James Malone, a second cousin of Philip Murray, went back to visit Blantyre, where he was born. He is a coin collector for the telephone company on Long Island.

The McGowans were impressed by the fact that their cousin, an ordinary American working man, could afford to take his wife and child on a vacation across the ocean. Further, they were all well dressed, and they had a car at home.

"They do a good job with the unions in America," Edward Kelly observed to his son-in-law, "but here we do a better job with our Labor Party. Maybe you'll teach the Americans. Philip helped with the unions, you can help with the Labor Party."

A FOUR-MONTH search for the birthplace of Philip Murray, where the CIO plans to erect a permanent memorial, ended recently in the back row of a "patch" of run-down and partly demolished miners' cottages in an obscure Scottish village.

It was not in Blantyre, the town where Philip Murray grow up and where most Americans thought he was born, but not far away in Bothwell Park, near Bellshill, at 77 Baird's Rows.

The birthplace was determined by Lewis Carliner, of the CIO European office in Paris, with the help of James Jack of Blantyre, senior assistant secretary of the Scottish Trades Union Congress.

A Miners' Home

It is a dark, two-room gray stone house in a row of gray stone dwellings built nearly a century ago for the miners who worked in the Baird Mine.

Fittingly, it was occupied by Frank Travers, who works in the mine where Philip Murray first dug coal at the age of 12, and who was on strike the day Carliner and Jack informed him he was living in the home where the late CIO president was born.

Paradoxically, it will be torn down soon, to make way for a modern housing project planned by the Labor Party government of Lanark county, on the orders of Murray's boyhood chum, Edward Daly, the county housing convener.

Search Difficult

The search for Murray's birthplace was touched off when Carliner and Jack were unable to find any records attesting to it in Blantyre—or any old-timers who remembered.

They finally had to go to the General Registry Office for Scotland in Edinburgh, where all births are recorded, for an exact copy of his birth certificate.

This showed that Philip Murray was born at Baird's Rows in Bothwell Park on May 25, 1886, the son of William Murray, a coal miner, and his wife, Rose A Murray.

Jack was aware that some of the houses in Baird's Rows had already be torn down. He and Carliner were co cerned, as they headed for Bothwell P lest the Murray birthplace was among them.

When they arrived, they found some the dwellings without doors or window Others were partly razed, still others go completely—and a few occupied.

They did—and there they found it. No 76 and 77 were still standing and occupied Nos. 78 and 79 were demolished.

No. 77 will go too, as soon as the gov ernment puts the finishing touches on th new home it has earmarked for th Travers family.

But as it stands today, it is pretty muc the way it was when the Murrays live in it. Only a toilet, a water tap, a ga burner and a naked electric light hav been added. The first room has a firepla in one wall, an alcove in another.

Cooked In Fireplace

"When the Murray's lived here," Mr Travers explained, "they did their cookin in the fireplace over coal they got fro the mine. The father and mother slept i the alcove, and all the children slept i beds and in blankets on the floor. Ther was a toilet outside, and water at a well.

Did American workers have hot wate in their homes, she asked. She was to that most of them do, and that Phili Murray, as president of the CIO, had great deal to do with helping them get i

"If he got women hot water, he wa a great man," she answered.

"Aye," said her husband. "I know hi life well and that he was a great ma for workers. I am proud to be living i his house. And I will be prouder to mo from it."

"Hot water!" murmured Mrs. Travers

Clyde Valley Is A Union Birthplace

Miners, steelworkers and machinists from the Clyde Valley have helped organize unions throughout the English-speaking world.

The same economic forces that sent William Murray and his family to the United States were responsible for sending thousands of other families from Glasgow, Blantyre and the other communities nearby to Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. Wherever these workers went they did what they had done at home and what Philip Murray did in America—they built strong trade unions.

Friend Tells Of Murray's Youth

EDWARD DALY

EDWARD DALY is a short, sturdy man with bald head, bright eyes and shining pink face who as a boy was Philip Murray's closest friend.

Now, more than 50 years after he went down to the Blantyre railroad station to bid goodbye to his chum, he is about to give the signal to tear down the house where the friend of his youth was born.

Daly was a miner for many years. He was blacklisted after the 1921 coal strike, and is a veteran of the 1926 general strike. In 1929 his eyes gave out and he could no longer work in the dim light underground. He got a job in the Blantyre Miners Welfare Institute, and in his spare time became active in the Labor Party.

Bright New Homes

Came the day his party won control of the Lanark county government—and John Daly emerged as vice chairman of the County Council and as housing convener, in charge of the party's housing program in the county. In place of the old Murray home and the others like it in Baird's Rows, he will build a bright city of new homes for workers.

Daly and Murray went all the way through St. Joseph's School together. He remembers Philip Murray as quite a serious boy, the son of a serious, thoughtful father.

Together they went into the mines. They started at 5:30 a.m. and quit at 6 p.m. They worked from Monday morning to Saturday night every week, except during accidents, strikes or layoffs. Their starting wages were less than 45c a day. By the time 16-year-old Philip Murray went off to America, they were earning 75c a day—a man's wage.

An Impression Left At Home

Philip Murray's boyhood chum, Edward Daly, has made as definite an impression on their native Lanark County in Scotland as the friend of his youth left in the United States.

As head of the Labor government's housing housing program in the county, Daly since 1945 has directed the construction of 10,000 cheerful new homes to replace bleak, uncomfortable dwellings such as that the Murrays left behind when they departed for the United States. Another 3000 are under construction, with a total of 30,000 planned to give every family in the area a decent place to live.

CIO Board Hails Haywood

A HEART-WARMING oil portrait of the late Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, was unveiled at the meeting of the CIO executive board last week.

It is now hanging in the board room in National CIO headquarters in Washington, beside memorial portraits of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Beside it hangs an engrossed scroll, also dedicated last week, containing the resolution the executive board adopted at its Apr. 6 meeting paying tribute to his memory and praising him for his long and noteworthy services to the CIO. It is signed by all members of the executive board.

The portrait is the work of Charles J. Fox, noted artist who also did the board room paintings of Murray and Roosevelt.

Both portrait and scroll were unveiled by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe. Carey read the inscription on the scroll.

"The greatest monument we could ever build to this man," said Riffe, "would be to work together, calmly and peacefully, working, working to build the CIO stronger so the young people coming after us can come to know him too."

Carey classed Haywood as belonging in the great tradition of CIO leaders like Murray and Hillman, who came here from abroad and spent their lives in the labor movement.

Reuther stressed the difficulty of accurately measuring Haywood's contribution to the labor movement.

"In honoring Allan Haywood and others like him," he said, "we should do so for two basic reasons. First, because they earned it. Second, and more basically, we need to perpetuate their memory because the future of the labor movement depends on the young people coming up. We have to keep their memory alive in this new generation so they can draw from the past the understanding and inspiration that we got from these men."

Murray Memorial Board Meets In Washington

THIRTEEN distinguished Americans who had agreed to serve on the Public Advisory Board of the Philip Murray Foundation were formally named to their posts last week.

Approval of their nomination, a legal necessity, was voted by the Foundation trustees at a joint get-acquainted meeting of the two groups in Washington. The trustees consist of National CIO officers and the presidents of the CIO Steelworkers and CIO Clothing Workers.

Then both bodies settled down to several hours of exploring the basis on which a fund of $1 million, given by the National CIO, its international and local unions and many individuals, will be used to perpetuate the memory of the man who was president of both the CIO and the Steelworkers.

They had before them outlines of all projects suggested since establishment of the foundation was announced, but Emil Rieve, chairman of the Foundation, a CIO vice president and president of the CIO Textile Workers, made it clear that additional ideas from the Public Advisory Board would be welcome.

They reached no major decisions. However, they agreed among themselves that if possible the fund should be allocated within a reasonable time, and that in their thinking before the next meeting they would consider the desirability of both one or several memorial projects.

Not all of the nationally known men and women who accepted appointments to the advisory body were able to attend.

Present were former Sec. of Labor former president of the Univ. of North Carolina and former U. S. Senator; W. Averell Harriman, former head of the Mutual Security Administration; Eric Johnston, business executive and former administrator of the Economic Stabilization Agency, and Rabbi Jacob Weinstein of Chicago.

Other members are former Pres. Truman, who telephoned his regrets and said he expected to attend the next meeting; Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who is in the Far East; Most Rev. Francis J. Haas, Catholic Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich., who was in serious condition with a heart attack; Cyrus Ching, former director of the U. S. Conciliation and Mediation Service; Circuit Court Judge William H. Hastie; Industrialist Henry J. Kaiser; Rt. Rev. Austin Pardue, Episcopal Bishop of Pittsburgh, and Atomic Energy Commissioner Thomas E. Murray.

Food Plants Get Okeh To Chisel On Orders For Defense Dept.

ABOUT 400,000 low-paid food cannery workers will again subsidize the Defense Dept.'s canned goods procurement program as the result of a ruling by Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin.

At the department's request and with Veteran's Administration support and over protests of the CIO and AFL, Durkin granted fruit and vegetable canners working on government contracts exemptions from overtime and child labor provisions of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

The act requires that employers filling government contracts pay time and a half for overtime after 40 hours a week, and prohibits them from employing girls under 18 years of age.

Durkin's action permits them to pay only straight time for 14 weeks regardless of the number of hours worked in a week, and to pay overtime only after 56 hours a week for 14 additional weeks. The order covers the rest of the year, which includes the bulk of the canning season.

The order was based on evidence at a hearing in March at which Elliott Bredhoff, CIO assistant general counsel, vigorously fought the proposal.

Defense Dept. spokesmen claimed the canners would not contract to supply armed service needs so long as Walsh-Healey overtime and child labor requirements remained in force. Most of the industry is not covered by the Wage-Hour Act because of its agricultural aspect. Much of the remainder is classed as seasonal and is required by that law to pay overtime only after 56 hours a week.

The department held its sole alternative was to buy in the open market after the processing. This it cannot do, it maintained, because it requires a special large size can not ordinarily available.

Orders depriving cannery employes of the protection of the Walsh-Healey Act while working on government contracts have been in force most of the last few years, despite repeated protests of organized labor and welfare groups.

It was hoped the long fight had ended in victory when former Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin, in August 1952, refused to renew an exemption previously in force. Durkin's action, however, reversed Tobin's decision and restored the canner's right to exploit their workers while filling government orders.

GOP 'Trickle-Down' Plan Seen As High Road To Crash

"THE TRICKLE-DOWN theory" of big business-minded Republicans is the high road to depression, according to Don Montgomery, Washington office director of the CIO Auto Workers.

Speaking on "Washington, USA" over the Columbia Broadcasting System's radio network, Montgomery described this theory as "feed in plenty of prosperity at the top and pray that some of it will trickle down to the people at the bottom."

He called this the policy of Andrew Mellon as treasury secretary in the Harding and Coolidge Administrations.

"BUSINESS got its profits," he recalled, "but the people ran out of spending money. Andrew Mellon was the architect of the great depression of 1930."

Montgomery also condemned the "tight-money policy" of the Eisenhower Administration, "another legacy inherited from Andrew Mellon." He called it "a bankers' idea," saying bankers "like to raise the value of the dollar" for dollars "are their stock in trade."

The new high interest rates, the UAW spokesman said, "are putting a cold chill on home buyers, car buyers, TV buyers. Businessmen and farmers are paying off loans and contracting future commitments. That's the high road to trouble and unemployment."

Bankers, he said, "will raise the value of the dollar even though it lowers the value of a man. We should have learned that lesson in 1929. The money changers got their high interest rates but the rest of us got it in the neck."

"You must be a non-union man. When I slapped your baby, he just turned the other cheek."

Wage, Hour Violators Get 'Economizers' Nod

As a result of deep cuts in the Labor Dept. budget, voted by the House, the Wages and Hours Div. has been forced to:

- Close three (Boston, Nashville and Kansas City) of its 10 regional offices.
- Close 23 of its 64 field offices.
- Lay off other employees — a total of 318 field workers. For example, more than one-fourth of the employees in the New York region were dropped.

THE HOUSE-imposed cuts will seriously cripple the division's work of riding herd on employers, who chisel on wages, overtime and who employ child labor in violation of the law. Most of these employers are non-union.

Pres. Eisenhower's budget request for this agency was $7.3 million. The House cut it to about $6 million.

Typical of the quick reaction to this "economy" move at the expense of low-paid workers was that of New Jersey CIO Pres. Carl Holderman.

In letters to New Jersey senators, he charged that employers were being encouraged "to pay starvation wages to unorganized workers with the full sanction of government."

IN THAT State, he reported, the cut in appropriations and the layoff of workers would mean a slash of from 30 to 35% in the number of investigations of violations. "This will result," he warned, "in wholesale violations of the law going undetected, since 50% of all employers checked in New Jersey last year were found to be violating the 75c minimum wage or overtime provisions of the law."

THE HOUSE of Representatives has demonstrated "a wanton disregard of the health needs of the working people."

That was the charge leveled by the CIO at one of the many House-imposed cuts in Labor Dept. appropriations—a 25% slash in funds for industrial hygiene activities.

CIO called upon the Congress "not to blind itself to the occupational well-being of the working people of the United States." It urged the Senate Appropriations committee to restore "minimum decent funds" for the Division of Occupational Health and the Bureau of Labor Standrads.

Michael J. Quill, chairman of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health, who is also president of the CIO Transport Workers, and Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director, spelled out CIO's opposition to the cuts in letters to Sen. Bridges (R. N. H.) and Sen. Thye (R. Minn.). Bridges is chairman of the Appropriations committee and Thye chairman of the subcommittee considering appropriations for the Labor Dept.

ALONG with the 25% cut in funds for industrial hygiene activities, CIO pointed out the House had slashed 37% from the funds for the Bureau of Labor Standards, which means "reduction in the protection of the lives of workers."

"In practical terms," the CIO officials wrote, "we would like to ask if the Congress is interested in reducing the occupation tragedies that kill 15,000 workers on the job every year and maim an additional two million."

The slashes will force abandonment of projects "of vital need" to workers, the CIO said, including work on the "great hazard" of air pollution and the effect of radiation on uranium miners. CIO declared:

"It seems to us completely senseless for the Congress to be appropriating money for developing atomic energy for use in war and peace if in the process we are to slaughter or maim our own working citizens."

Help Cop On Beat On Wages, Chicago CIO Crime Study Says

THE CHICAGO CIO Council has declared open war on organized crime in the nation's second largest city—and at the same time has come to the defense of the patrolman on the beat.

The Council's stand was made known in a statement of policy on "Crime and Civic Reform" by its Committee on City Government, which has been studying the problem since last December.

The policy statement sharply hit at organized crime and at politicians, police, and other public officials who profit from it.

"HOWEVER," it continued, "blanket emotional denunciation of the police force because of the crimes of a few cannot solve this problem but can only serve to demoralize the department even further, and make men on the beat the scapegoat while persons responsible for the situation go unnoticed.

"The bravery of many individual policemen has been especially evident. Far better would it be if we would correct the indecent wages, long hours and poor working conditions under which the policemen must operate, and work for more responsible solutions to our problems."

Reg. Dir. Pat Greathouse of the CIO Auto Workers is chairman of the committee. Other members are Dist. Dir. Joseph Germano of the Steelworkers, who also is president of the Illinois CIO Council; Pres. George Canary, Local 4, Lithographers; State Dir. L. B. Adams, Communications Workers; and CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Cronin.

ALSO Reg. Dir. Henry B. Anderson, Wholesale, Reail & Department Store Union; Acting Manager Sam Smith, Chicago Clothing Workers Joint Board; Dist. Dir. D. R. Stewart, Oil Workers; and Area Dir. Donald Thoms, Paperworkers.

The committee noted that "serious social and political problems" in the city interfere with the peoples' security and the wholesomeness of their lives.

"The much publicized crime situation," its statement asserted, "grows from these roots and flourishes in the environment that is created.

"This is true whether it is . . . physical crime . . . or whether it is the alleged tieup between illegitimate business enterprise, organized crime and politics which attracts and stimulates our more unstable elements, interferes with proper police activity, and corrodes and corrupts every aspect of our public life.

"This corrosion lies deep within our community, and its causes lie even deeper. The seeds of solution lie in the increasing awareness of the public, but we must be wary lest this energy is not channeled into perfunctory solutions.

"Rightfully, we must all be on guard against any interests, groups or politicians who would take advantage of an aroused public for their own advancement, or who willfully or through inexperience would lull us and dissipate our energies with surface store-counter solutions which will divert us from the long-range job that must be done."

The statement condemned those responsible for "traffic in human misery and depredation" by their dealing in narcotics, organized gambling and "other crimes which tend to destroy the fibre of the people."

"More than most others," it continued, "our organization represents those who are exploited and harmed by the depravities of our civic life.

"We must act with responsibility to our 200,000 members and their families.

"In light of past experience, we cannot be expected to write blank checks to outside organizations. To do so might make the CIO temporarily look properly righteous, but would in the long run delay the removal of the basic roots of our problem."

UAW Names Administrator

THE CIO AUTO WORKERS' Executive Board has established an administratorship over the affairs of Local 306 at the Budd Manufacturing Co., plant in Detroit.

The board's action followed two brief, unauthorized work stoppages, which threatened to cause a layoff at the Chrysler plant, which uses Budd auto bodies.

No reflection on Local 306 officers was cast by establishing the administratorship, the board said, blaming the stoppages on a "small irresponsible minority." Michael F. Lacey, regional co-director on the Detroit east side, was named administrator and Local 306 officers will not be removed.

Guy Nunn Begins New Broadcasts

A new series of radio broadcasts, "Michigan Labor Speaks," was recently started in Battle Creek and Rogers City with Guy Nunn, CIO Auto Workers comentator, as the feature.

In Battle Creek the program is being aired at 7:15 P. M. Fridays over Station WBCK under sponsorship of the city CIO Council. The Executive Council of Unions, representing CIO and AFL unions in Northern Michigan, is sponsoring the Rogers City broadcast, over Station WHAK at 11:45 A.M. Sundays.

Factory Wages Triple, Thanks To Unions And New Deal Laws

WAGES for industrial workers have tripled in the period since 1939, thanks to increased labor union activity and New Deal-type legislation.

In the same period, white collar wages have doubled, the Census Bureau reported last week.

Wages and salaries are more evenly distributed among American workers now than they were in 1939, the report showed.

The highest paid are getting a smaller slice of total wages and salaries and most of the lower paid are getting a slightly larger share of the total.

Statistically, the Census Bureau said, the situation was this:

In 1939, the highest paid 20% of the working population received 49.3% of all wages and salaries. In 1951, they received 41.6%.

On the other hand, the lowest 20% received 3.4% in 1939 and was getting an even 3% in 1951.

The 60% in the middle were getting from 2 to 4% more in 1951 than in 1939.

The working population numbered 45.7 million in 1939 and divided $45.7 billion in wages, an average of $1000 apiece.

By 1951, there were 61 million workers splitting $170.7 billion, or an average of nearly $2800. Last year's income was higher than that and the rise was continued in early 1953.

UTSE Wins Gains On Illinois Central

The CIO Transport Service Employees have won four principal gains for Red Caps in a new agreement with the Illinois Central Railroad. The gains included payment by the railroad of half of the costs of the Red Caps' uniforms, a 4c an hour annual improvement factor wage increase, retroactive to last Dec. 1; better grievance procedure, and cutting the spread for intermittent service from 16 to 14 hours.

Guard Human Needs In Power Projects, CIO Resources Unit Says

CONSTRUCTION of huge dams to generate electric power, when undertaken at the expense of human values was strongly attacked by the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation in a restatement of principles on river engineering and electric power laid down by National CIO conventions.

The committee, carrying out convention mandates, repeated the CIO's demand that river development be undertaken "within the confines of a general plan looking toward the satisfaction of all sound human needs and purposes," and that it be undertaken by the federal government with participation by state and local groups.

The statement asserted that the value of low-cost electricity generated at big dams on large rivers is often lessened by destruction of homes, towns, farm lands, forests and the natural habitat of wild life.

CIO Backs Protest On Hell's Canyon

Representatives of 56 organizations, including the CIO, in five Northwest States have banded together to oppose Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay's gift of the Hell's Canyon dam site to the Idaho Power Co.

The group protested to Pres. Eisenhower and the Federal Power Commission that turning over the site to private industry for piecemeal development amounts to "junking the whole (federal) comprehensive development for the Columbia River and its tributaries." Chester C. Dusten, CIO regional organization director, is one of the group.

Multi-purpose dams "are often over-valued," it continued. By way of example, it cited navigation, which it held should "have no place in the river engineering operations of the Missour Basin Survey Commission;" pollution control, and irrigation which it held has become too costly to be practical in most instances.

"Power should be developed with a sense of moderation and deliberation and in accordance with a comprehensive plan," the committee said.

"Even if the full hydro-power potential of the United States could be developed without injuring other human interests, it would never amount to more than perhaps one-fifth of the total power production of the country.

"DEMAND for electric current has increased so greatly since the turn of the century that the dream of satisfying the demand by hydro-electric power has turned out to be a mirage. For the long-range development satisfaction of our power needs we may look eventually to the development of efficient wood chemistry fuels which will tap the sun by way of the forests, and to power production from the wind.

"Pending such an outcome, our petroleum and coal resources are still available. In the case of the Missouri Valley, where lignite turns out to be cheaper than hydro-power, we should substitute thermal plants instead."

The committee again voiced the CIO's insistence that public and cooperative agencies engaged in generation, distribution or transmission of electric power grant the same rights of organization and collective bargaining to their employees that the law grants or guarantees in the case of privately-owned utilities.

Yount Honored At Topeka CIO Dinner

SOME 250 CIO leaders and members and Kansas officials paid tribute to Sec.-Treas. J. H. Yount of the Kansas CIO Council at a Founders' Day dinner sponsored by the Topeka CIO Council.

Lester Parker, veteran State legislative representative of the CIO Communication Workers, presented Yount with a Bible on behalf of the Topeka Council.

Yount, who is also the State legislative representative of the Kansas Council, credited Kansas CIO members, local union officers and international representatives with "whatever success we have attained for the good of the people of this State."

"THE CIO has the program—a program for the people; improved state institutions, schools, adequate benefits for the unfortunates and old age group, workmen's and occupational disease compensation, Community Chest participation and various other programs geared to benefit humanity," Yount continued.

State Sen. McDowell, of Kansas City, Kans., said Yount "had advocated and supported legislation in Kansas for many of the unions' present rights long before the actual laws were passed."

Pres. Walter Bryant of the Topeka CIO Council was master of ceremonies.

CIO Opposes Give-Away To Stockmen

OPPOSITION of the CIO to the so-called Stockmen's Bill, another give-away that would turn federally-owned grazing lands over to big cattlemen, was expressed to members of the Senate last week by the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

"Proper management of the grazing lands . . . is imperative if our food supply is to be maintained and our watersheds are not to deteriorate beyond repair," the committee told the senators in a wire signed by its executive secretary, Anthony W. Smith.

"Such management requires retention of ample authority by the federal government to protect the interests of all the people. Present powers must not be weakened and the license system must not be converted into a grant of vested property rights."

Meantime, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) described the bill as a "grab" by stockmen that "ignores the public interest." He told the Senate Interior Committee that the measure would create a "tight monopoly" for holders of grazing licenses and vest the administration of the lands in advisory boards dominated by cattle interests.

Atomic Give-Away Drive Under Fire

CHARGES that certain "self-seeking" industrialists are seeking to convert the atomic energy program into a "profit-making" venture of their own were voiced last week on the House floor by Rep. Holifield (D. Cal.), a member of the congressional "watchdog" committee on atomic energy.

The California Democrat contended that Administration cutbacks in atomic energy funds are part of the effort to give favored private firms an inside track to profit from development of electric power from the atom.

WARNING that he would oppose any "give-away" effort in this field, Holifield assailed Pres. Eisenhower's ordered cutback in funds for development of atomic-powered aircraft carriers and planes as "a dangerous retreat."

The Administration's economy move, the congressman charged, was "timed to fit in with the demand for concessions to private industry in the atomic field."

He said it could set the program back three to five years at a time when it is vitally essential to maintain U. S. supremacy.

Holifield's speech represented the first outright congressional rebuff to new proposals submitted by the Atomic Energy Commission for encouraging private enterprise to participate in developing atomic power.

The AEC had proposed "interim" legislation to allow private industry to own and operate facilities for producing atomic power and to buy, own and sell fissionable materials.

Holifield opposed the proposed new legislation, saying there was "no need" for it. Some of the sponsors of this proposal, the congressman said, feel this is a good time to "move in" and "soften up" the existing law.

HITTING at the "bold-faced bid" of private interests to move into the A-bomb program, the Californian said they want to remove the "strait-jacket on industrial development of atomic power" in order to tap a richer field.

"Some companies," he said, "want to take over the job of manufacturing plutonium for atomic bombs, selling the plutonium in a high-priced government-guaranteed market, and developing atomic power for industrial use as a by-product."

World Of Labor—

Tough Employers Force Swedish, German Strikes

EUROPEAN workers were manning picket lines in two major labor disputes last week in an effort to win modest wage increases from recalcitrant employers.

In Sweden, some 27,000 employes in eight branches of the food industry were either on strike or locked out in that country's biggest labor-management fight since 1945.

In Bremen, Germany, 15,000 shipyard workers were striking in the first major walkout there since 1928.

The Swedish workers are demanding a wage increase of $2 a week. The slaughterhouse workers walked out when negotiations broke down, and the following day the employers declared lockouts in the other branches of the industry.

For the first few days after the closing of plants there was a rush of hoarding throughout the country. This quickly ended, however, and to date there has been no real threat of a food shortage. Food processing factories of the consumer cooperatives are not involved.

The Bremen shipyard strikers are fighting not only employers who refuse to boost wages 2c an hour, but also Communists seeking to take advantage of the situation.

The basic wage is about 37c an hour. The Metalworkers' Union also is demanding an increase in the incentive rate from 12% to 15%, and a 7% increase for 3000 salaried workers who are not yet on strike. The union is publishing a strike newspaper and is paying strike benefits to members.

Communists appeared on the picket line to distribute literature which the strikers refused to accept. A Communist appeal for "solidarity committees" in the shipyards was abruptly rejected by the union.

ILO

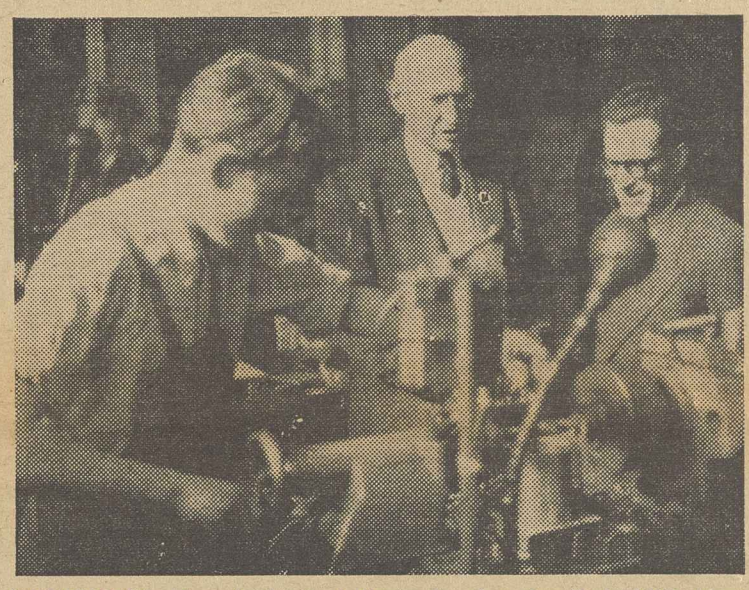
The 36th general conference of the Intl. Labor Organization opened last week in Geneva, Switzerland, with labor, employer and government delegates from most of the 66 member countries.

Acting on behalf of the CIO are Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paperworkers and Pres. Elwood Swisher of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, assisted by Michael Ross, secretary of the CIO International Committee. The United States is represented by Assistant Sec. of Labor Philip D. Kaiser and Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.).

Israel

Moshe Bitan, U. S. representative of Histadrut, the Israel labor federation, has advised CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther that his organization will affiliate with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The decision was made by Mapei, the Israel Labor Party, which controls a majority in Histadrut. It will be validated soon by the Histadrut Council.

In a telegram of congratulation, Reuther welcomed "our old friends" into the ICFTU and said the CIO "confidently anticipates long fraternal cooperation." Histadrut left the World Federation of Trade Unions when it became an obvious Communist front organization.



TRAINING of a student at Organization for Rehabilitation Training in Paris is observed by Frank Rosenblum (center), CIO vice president and secretary-treasurer of the Clothing Workers, and Charles Lang (right), ORT representative. About 50 CIO representatives in Paris and their wives gave a luncheon for Mr. and Mrs. Rosenblum.

Vet Hospital Cuts Hit By GI Groups

EISENHOWER Administration proposals to chop $279 million from appropriations for veterans last week ran head-on into the concerted opposition of veterans organizations and liberal congressmen.

American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and liberal members of the House denounced the proposals coming from the Administration's Bureau of the Budget, while some House "economizers" talked of further slashes.

Rep. Phillips, chairman of the House subcommittee handling Veterans Administration funds, said he has in mind further cuts of around $300 million.

The Legion charged the sick and disabled veteran was being made a "whipping boy" for an economy drive. National Comdr. Lewis Gough said the cut would mean nothing but lessened service to veterans.

From the VFW came the warning that "on the basis of past experience it seems inevitable more beds (for men sick and wounded as a result of war service) will have to be closed" if the cut is okehed by Congress. The VFW saw as the "only alternative" a VA manager who could get $1.35 worth of service for every $1.

Rep. Howell (D. N. J.) called the proposal "unfair" and "false economy". He warned it would work "great hardship on veterans who have made so many sacrifices."

IN A SPEECH on the House floor, Rep. Yorty (D. Cal.) quoted from platform commitments of both parties and from the Eisenhower campaign speeches, which pledged increased services and care for wounded veterans. Pres. Eisenhower, during the campaign, said "In these matters, moreover, I shall not take merely a passing interest; they will be of primary concern to me."

The Administration proposals, Yorty said, would "not only dishonor our pledge to the veteran" but would "jeopardize a program that is one of the keystones of our national health and well being."

Labor Advisers Condemn Civil Defense Budget Cut

FEDERAL CIVIL Defense labor advisers have criticized Congress for "putting a cheap price tag" on necessary expenditures for civil defense.

They are members of the Labor Advisory Committee of the Federal Civil Defense Administration and represent the CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods.

Val Peterson, FCDA Administrator, has asked Congress to appropriate $125 million for civil defense, $25 million less than former Pres. Truman asked in his budget.

The committee, which met recently at FDCA Staff College at Olney, Md., also attributed widespread lack of interest in civil defense to the indifference of state and municipal authorities.

PETERSON, who addressed the group, said such groups as organized labor can arouse the nation to the need of civil defense, and expressed the hope that he could set up a labor-management committee "at a later opportune time."

CIO members present were Pres. Elwood D. Swisher of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker of the Rubber Workers; Martin Hughes, Communications Workers; Irving Abramson, CIO national representative; and Charles Ferguson, Pennsylvania CIO Council.

Others who attended were AFL Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; A. E. Lyon, executive secretary, Railway Labor Executives Association; Sec.-Treas. George F. Richardson, AFL Fire Fighters, and W. G. Flynn, AFL Machinists.

Housing Curb Fails On Coast

A GOP-LED campaign to hamstring public housing in California was defeated in the State Legislature after fancy parliamentary maneuvering.

Passed by the State Assembly, the measures would have given city councils or county supervisors veto power over local housing authorities, including the right to negotiate with the federal government to abandon housing projects still under construction.

In the State Senate, Sen. Breed, a real estate operator, tried to rush the bills through a public health committee which is not ordinarily concerned with housing. The Senate, however, turned him down by an 18 to 15 vote and sent the anti-housing bills to a local government committee, which had rejected similar measures tearlier.

Blue Shield Improvement Asked By CIO

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council last week charged the New Jersey Medical-Surgical Plan "has consistently refused to meet the needs of the working people" of the Stat.

The council condemned three "reactionary and backward changes" in the plan proposed by the Medical Society of New Jersey and called for the adoption instead of four "minimum improvements."

Council Pres. Carl Holderman was authorized to set up a committee to propose another means of meeting the medical and surgical needs of CIO members, if the society proposals are put into effect. The council said the society would require "additional out-of-pocket expenditures" by subscribers.

THE RESOLUTION pointed out the council has "maintained good relations with" the Hospital Service Plan of New Jersey (Blue Cross) "through representation on its board and the receptivity of the plan to the hospitalization needs of CIO members."

"However," the resolution continued, "the Medical-Surgical Plan of N. J. (Blue Shield), which is controlled and operated exclusively by the Medical Society of N. J. has consistently refused to meet the needs of the working people in New Jersey and to adopt a realistic program of medical-surgical benefits."

CIO Supports Fine Arts Bill

THE CIO Legislative Dept., has asked Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) to call immediate hearings on the pending bills by Rep. Howell (D. N. J.), Kearns (R. Pa.) and Celler (D. N. Y.) calling for the establishment of a national fine arts commission.

A similar measure passed the House last year but died in the Senate.

Declaring that "the use of the arts as a weapon for understanding and good are incalculable," Celler pointed out that as far back as 1787 the Constitutional Convention adopted a welfare and commerce clause giving power to Congress to promote the progress of the arts.

He said that it's now time for Congress "to invest ourselves with this authority" through passage of the bill by Rep. Howell (D. N. J.). In addition to creating a fine arts commission, Howell's measure would build in the nation's capital a national theatre and opera house, and promote a national fine arts program.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

AS THIS department pointed out in the case of auto insurance, you can often make real savings by buying property insurance from co-ops and mutual companies.

It's even easier to make such savings on household insurance than on autos, since the mutual companies tend to be selective about selling auto insurance, preferring to insure only the better risks. But in household insurance there's no problem of a "fire-prone" homeowner as there is the problem of the accident-prone driver, and so the mutuals welcome all comers.

No Hokum In Yoakum

Tex Tan of Yoakum sells products labeled "Texas Ranger," which the FTC implies is strictly hokum. The agency ordered Tex Tan to curtail its range riding in the advertising columns.

The most reasonable source for fire insurance on household furnishings is the country's oldest consumer co-operative, the Workmen's Mutual Fire Insurance Co. This co-op was started the year after the Chicago Fire of 1871 by a handful of New York workingmen seeking low-cost household protection from similar disaster. Today many union workers are members of workmen's mutual.

To buy the society's insurance you join it by depositing $9 for each $1000 of insurance. This remains your money and is returned when you cancel your insurance and withdraw from the society.

Cost of the insurance itself is $1 a year, compared with a country-wide average of $2 per $1000 of protection ($5 per $1000 for three years). The society sells a maximum of $3000 insurance to each member, covering furniture, clothing and other ordinary personal belongings. You can write to society's headquarters at 227 East 84th St., New York, to get addresses of local agents.

PEOPLE who need fire insurance on a dwelling as well as personal belongings should compare net costs (standard rates less dividends) of other mutual companies.

One of the lowest net costs available for fire insurance on dwellings and their contents is offered by Merchants and Businessmen's Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Harrisburg, Pa. A leading insurance authority reports that this firm has paid dividends of 40% every year since 1895. It operates in most Eastern and mid-West states. Another company that can save you money is Hardware Mutual of Stevens Point, Wisc. Hardware Mutual generally rebates 30 per cent dividends on residential fire insurance, and is licensed in all states.

Low net costs are also available from several co-ops: Farmers Union Property & Casualty Insurance Co., Denver, Colo., Mutual Service Casualty Co., St. Paul, Minn. and Farm Bureau Casualty Insurance Co., Columbus, Ohio.

Other large mutuals who generally have fairly low net costs for fire, theft and other property insurance, etc., are Atlantic Mutual, Liberty Mutual, Lumbermen's Mutual and Quincy Mutual (Quincy, Mass.). Eastern residents can also consult Clusa Services, Inc., a co-op-owned general insurance brokerage firm, 116 John St., New York, N. Y.

SOMETIMES people are worried about buying insurance from mutual companies because they fear they may be called upon for further assessments if a mutual company is hard hit by a series of disasters. This has happened occasionally in the past in times of disaster. But today mutuals are better regulated and in very strong position, and in any case, most now write non-assessible policies to further protect you.

Two other ways to cut costs of property insurance are:

- Save by paying in advance. A five-year policy paid for in advance costs only four times as much as a one-year policy. If that's too much outlay, a three-year policy costs only two and a half times as much as a one-year.
- Extension privileges on fire or loss insurance costs less than buying separate policies for each risk. For example: all-risk insurance on a fur coat (fire, theft, accidental tearing) costs little more than the combined price for fire and theft insurance only. You can make similar savings on residential insurance by combining several forms of insurance in one policy, like fire and windstorm insurance.

Decision in FPC Case May Aid Gas Consumers

A RECENT court decision may prove a victory for the nation's consumers.

The U. S. Court of Appeals at Washington ruled that the Federal Power Commission may regulate wholesale prices charged by producers of natural gas who are engaged in interstate commerce.

The only firm involved is the Phillips Petroleum Co., but the decision affects 2300 other companies. If the U. S. Supreme Court upholds the decision, the nation's consumers may be saved millions of dollars on the cost of gas used for cooking and heating their homes.

The ruling against Phillips was two to one, with Judge Henry W. Edgerton speaking for the majority. Edgerton said FPC applied "an erroneous rule of law" in concluding that the firm was outside its jurisdiction.

He said the Natural Gas Act of 1938 and "the decisions of the Supreme Court permit only one answer . . . Phillips is a 'natural gas company' within the meaning of the Act and the Commission should fix the rate at which these sales are made."

'Torch Sweater' Ban Is Voted

A ban on "torch sweaters" and other clothing made of highly-inflammable goods has been voted by the House of Representatives and sent to the Senate. The bill prohibits shipment of such goods in interstate commerce.

IUE Blocks GE Strikebreaking As Syracuse Walkout Settled

THANKS to "the militant trade union spirit" of CIO Electrical Workers and labor unity in Syracuse, General Electric's strikebreaking efforts were defeated last week in the New York industrial city.

Some 7000 members of IUE-CIO Local 320 returned to work at GE's Syracuse plant after a membership meeting unanimously ratified an agreement which provides a 4.5c increase in the automatic progression schedule and other major improvements.

THE STRIKE lasted eight weeks during which GE spent more than $250,000 on newspaper advertising, daily radio programs, intimidating visiits by foremen to workers' homes and on phony "back-to-work" votes. GE's final effort at breaking the strike was to encourage unorganized office workers to break through the picket lines.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey, who participated in the final negotiations, said:

"The major significance of this settlement with GE in the eighth week of the strike is that it is the first time a union has won a major strike against GE since 1950. In 1950 IUE-CIO, through a shorter but chain-wide strike against GE, won a cost-of-living escalator clause that paid off 9c to every GE worker.

"In the meantime, GE has broken several strikes by other unions. In fact, in the first six weeks of the Syracuse strike, GE refused to engage in true collective bargaining.

"This settlement is a tribute to the militant trade union spirit of IUE-CIO members in Local 320 and their leaders. Their action also brought about city-wide labor unity among all the trade unions in Syracuse who supportd GE workers in their fight for fair treatment from their employer."

On the union's proposals for a general wage increase, General Electric guaranteed that such an increase would be negotiated locally, depending on the outcome of IUE's national chain bargaining with GE.

IN ADDITION to the progression schedule improvement, the contract also provides that upgrading shall be based on seniority where qualifications are equal, that an employe to be re-assigned and his foreman shall decide on a mutually agreeable transfer, and that re-assignments within classifications shall be based on seniority.

It also was agreed that a union representative shall aid the committee on the apprenticeship training program and that student trainees shall not displace regular workers.

Wetback Fund Slash Rapped By Humphrey

SEN. HUMPHREY (D. Minn.) has protested the "reckless economy" involved in the elimination of the air patrol to cut off the illegal entry of "wetbacks."

He pointed out the wetbacks are crossing the border at the rate of two a minute, day and night. The illegal immigrants are employed at "starvation" wages on big corporation farms.

In a statement to the Senate Appropriations subcommittee, he objected to the Administration's proposals that would deprive the border patrol of the 12 planes it has been operating since 1941 along the southern border.

Humphrey said that at the same time persons entering by the way of the East and West Coasts and Canada are being screened "furiously." He added:

"It is difficult to believe that this action (eliminating the air patrol) has the endorsement of Pres. Eisenhower, who has spoken out on the corrosive effects of the wetback situation."

'GOP Used Mirrors For Budget Cuts'—Douglas

THE REPUBLICAN-controlled Senate Appropriations Committee was charged last week with "amazing financial sleight-of-hand" in producing "a phony . . . spending . . . wasteful budget, not an economy budget."

That charge came from Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), a long-time foe of waste in governmental operations. His fire was directed against the $1.1 billion appropriation bill for the State, Justice and Commerce Depts.

This was "wastefulness masquerading in the guise of economy," said Douglas. He insisted the committee had actually upped the bill by $91 million for a net increase of $77 million.

Bridges and his committee had "been working with mirrors," Douglas charged.

"Houdini in his palmiest days could not equal their record," he said.

Douglas told the Senate that other long-range programs started in the bill would raise its ultimate spending in future years by another $5 million, for a total $82 million increase over the House bill.

Brandishing a big magnifying glass to read the fine print in the committee report, Douglas cited these examples of the "financial legerdemain which permeates the bill."

The committee claimed to cut $10 million from State Dept. salaries and expenses, but it authorized the department to use $15.6 million in funds from previous years for a net increase of $5.6 million.

A&P Profits Up 7.5%

Net profits of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. were more than $29 million in the fiscal year ended Feb. 28, were 7.5% greater than in 1952. Sales increased 10.7%.

TWA Sets 100% Goal On Subways

THE CIO Transport Workers have set their sights on completing organization of all employes on the city-owned transit system in New York City.

TWU already represents 36,000 of the city workers through the check-off or direct dues payments. TWU Pres. Michael Quill said 3000 others belong to splinter groups and the rest are unorganized.

DETERMINED to get collective bargaining rights for the entire 45,000 subway, bus and elevated workers, TWU's executive board held an emergency session appropriating $500,000 for the campaign. The money has been earmarked for Local 100, which represents the city workers.

"We feel that for the security and stability of the transit workers, now is the time to get sole collective bargaining rights," Quill said. "Splinter groups cause confusion and road blocks, and slow down the bargaining process. We are tired of them and we are going to drive them out."

The other TWU aims for the city workers are a wage increase of 25c an hour, effective July 1, and removal of a threat to lay off 10,000 workers.

Give A Buck To PAC

McCarthy Is Called Peril To Free World

THE VERY freedoms that made Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) possible are those he has set himself to destroy, says Brendan Sexton, education director of the CIO Auto Workers.

He addressed the Fair Employment Practices Conference of the Ontario Federation of Labor-CCL at Brantford, Ont.

He described McCarthy as a major threat to the unity of all countries outside the Iron Curtain, but warned the Canadians against jumping to the conclusion that the Wisconsin Senator represents the majority opinion in the United States.

THE CONFERENCE was held just two weeks after the House of Commons passed Canada's new Fair Employment Practices Act. Chairmen were William MacDonald, Canadian education director for the UAW-CIO, and Eamon Park, legislative representative of the CIO Steelworkers.

In his opening address, USA-CIO Reg. Dir. C. H. Millard called on union members to "get angry" about unfair practices and prejudice.

"We should do much more than we are doing through our own union education programs," he said, "and insist on teaching principles of human rights at all levels of education throughout the country."

CIO Rally Gets Results In West Va.

MORE THAN 100 delegates to the legislative institute of the West Virginia CIO Council at Charleston helped obtain the passage by the State legislature of several measures.

These included improvements in the workmen's compensation and the unemployment compensation laws.

The maximum weekly benefit for the unemployed was boosted from $25 to $30, and the maximum duration of payments was increased by one week to 24 weeks. The minimum payment under the workmen's compensation law was hiked from $12 to $18 weekly, and the maximum benefits from $25 to $30 weekly. Payments to widows were increased $50 to $60 monthly, and to fathers, mothers and other wholly dependent persons from $30 to $50 monthly.

The institute, which was typical of other such meetings arranged by State CIO councils, opened with an organizational meeting that was addressed by Pres. Albert D. Viller and Sec.-Treas. Freeman Pettus of the council. Then the delegates talked to the legislators.

EFFORTS PAY OFF. — Delegates to the West Virginia CIO Council's legislative institute leave capitol at Charleston where they succeeded in convincing legislators they should improve the unemployment and workmen's compensation laws.

Wage Freeze Bill Rapped By Carey As Buck-Passing

THE CIO has denounced as "a sorry spectacle . . . weak, inequitable and illusory" the wage-price "freeze" plan approved by the Senate for emergency use.

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers, in a statement presented to the House Banking Committee, said that if Congress isn't going to enact the "good, comprehensive" control law that is needed, it might as well forget the whole idea.

The Senate plan would only "lull the American people into a false sense of security," Carey said.

Congress, Carey warned, "must not pass the buck to the future and it must not dodge its basic responsibility of enacting here and now in this session a comprehensive stand-by control bill which will assure every American that when and if another war emergency strikes, equality of treatment will be his lot."

The "emasculation" which "finally staggered through the Senate," Carey charged, would:

- Forbid the President to impose the controls until Congress specifically approved.
- Only "freeze" for 90 days instead of controlling through a comprehensive plan.
- Exempt most foods with the freeze applying "for sure" only to wages and prices of some manufacturers and raw materials.

The House committee chairman, Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.), also opposed the Senate plan, but for another reason. He contended no legislation was necessary because Congress under an emergency could approve a freeze as fast as it could pass a resolution allowing the President to put the Senate plan into effect.

BUT CAREY insisted that "to wait until the bombs fall, when Congress will be overwhelmed with the problems of military appropriations, increasing the size of the armed forces and rewriting the Draft Act, reorganizing the Government and other such tasks—to wait until then is to invite economic disaster and undermine our will to produce for ultimate victory."

The IUE president recalled that "within the past decade," America has experienced two severe war-induced inflations.

"There simply should be no question but that we know now what kind of legislation this country must have to halt and indeed to prevent inflation in a war emergency."

He repeated CIO's testimony before the Senate when it urged enactment of a sound, comprehensive, well-thought-out controls legislation, to be placed on the shelf for use by the President if an emergency develops.

Such action, Carey said, would "furnish the nation with truly effective protection in a future emergency. To do less is to weaken our nation in the present international struggle for freedom."

Controls Rejected By House Group

All proposals to give the President standby power to freeze prices, wages, rents and credit for 90 days in case of an emergency were rejected by the House Banking Committee last week.

The Senate measure would have permitted the President to impose the 90-day freeze only after specific approval by Congress or in case of a formal declaration of war. The committee rejected this after defeating an amendment to remove the restrictions. Then it quickly voted to delete authority for consumer and real estate credit controls.

IUE Gains 18c In New RCA Plant

Though the plant will employ 700 by this fall, the IUE-CIO was recognized when it proved it had signed 56 out of 57 employes. The plant, which engages in radar work, is 14 miles from Camden, where the main RCA plant is located.

IUE-CIO won an immediate 18c an hour average wage increase. The company accepted Camden's negotiated job descriptions for the jobs at Moorestown and a number of inequities were settled.

Then, the RCA national agreement covering 11,000 workers, was applied to Moorestown. Thus with the 6c to 30c won in the national negotiations, Moorestown workers had, in a few short weeks, won wage increases of from 24c to 50c an hour.

On the job of cable lacer, where only women are employed, the starting rate was $1.08. It jumped to $1.31 and then to a $1.57-$1.69 maximum.

CIOer Heads School Board In St. Louis

He is Oscar A. Ehrhardt, executive secreatry of the St. Louis CIO Council and a member of Local 6, CIO Chemical Workers.

Ehrhardt had the support of the reform group of board members, sponsored by the Citizens' School Improvement Committee. Election of a president was postponed twice in April when the candidates of the reform group and "old guard" members tied for the post.

Ehrhardt had been proposed as president at that time by the reform group, but had withdrawn. Nominated again at the May meeting, he agreed to accept and was elected unopposed.

DP Bill Backed By Sec. Durkin

Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin told a Senate Judiciary subcommittee that enactment of the bill to admit 240,000 displaced persons over a two-year period would result in an "added trickle" of less than one-tenth of 1% into the country's labor force each year.

NLRB Nails Foundry For Firings

The men walked off the job at 11 A.M. on Oct. 16, 1951. Within a short time the union offered to have them back at work at 3:30 P.M. Vice Pres. Emory Fry of the company told the union that all returning strikers would have to report to foremen as new employes and would be hired or rejected as the foremen decided.

The NLRB ruled that Fry's action, no matter what he called it, "was in all respects tantamount to discharging them, except that the word 'discharge' was not used." This, it said, was discrimination for union activity.

The board ordered the firm to reinstate the whole 103 with back pay from 3:30 P. M.on Oct. 16, 1951, when the "illegal condition" for their return was imposed. In addition, the company was told to give them full vacation and Christmas bonus credit, and all other rights and privileges for the time they were unemployed.

And to top it off, the NLRB told the firm to stop interfering with the union.

Ike's Retreats Hit By TWUA Council

"NEVER HAS so much power been surrendered so willingly in so short a time," Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers said as the union's executive council criticized the Eisenhower Administration's domestic policies.

"Eisenhower has virtually abdicated his post" in yielding to pressure from "big business" and "false economy" blocs, Rieve continued.

The council adopted a resolution warning of the "widening gulf between the Eisenhower Administration and the concerns of the great mass of American people."

IT SPECIFICALLY condemned the coastal oil bill, which it called the first step in a program of "government giveaways" of public resources to private interests.

"If such outrageously selfish schemes should prevail, the United States will be severely hampered in its commitments to world freedom," the resolution said.

The council also announced the successful end to its fight against a secessionist group which advocated a switch to the rival AFL Textile Workers a year ago following the TWUA convention.

TWUA indicated its loss of members was "limited and temporary" and called on the American labor movement "to examine the methods and the motives of the UTW-AFL."

"The destructiveness of the UTW-AFL cannot be tolerated by any union which believes in labor unity and bases its program on democratic principle," the resolution said.

The council charged the AFL group with "outright lies, false promises, seizure of union funds, personal violence, terrorism, threats of physical injury and loss of jobs, base pandering to sectional, nationalistic and racial prejudices; all of this accompanied by a destruction of democratic processes in all situations where they had secured political control."

FEPC Defeated In California

A fair employment practice policy bill has been defeated by a tie vote in the lower house of the California legislature, with Republican members responsible for the decision.

The vote was 35 to 35, with 41 votes needed for passage.

Assemblyman Augustus Hawkins (D. Los Angeles) reminded Republican lawmakers that their state party platform endorsed FEPC and added: "It is not right to profess one thing and fail to practice what you profess."

David Can Thank His Lucky Stars

By BOB TREUER

TWO AND half year-old David Moeller can thank his lucky stars—and the sharp eyes of a CIO telephone lineman — for being alive today.

Little David was playing in the backyard of his Milwaukee home. Several drops of rain filled a two-foot deep round excavation, intended for a tree—and David fell in.

About 250 feet away Art Gill, a lineman for the Wisconsin Telephone Co. and member of the CIO Communications Workers Local 5500, was putting up a telephone cable on a building.

"I don't know what made me look in that direction," Gill said, "but I saw a hat floating and hands flopping in the water on either side of it."

Gill sprinted over, jumped into the hole and pulled the child out. He held little David up by the legs and pounded his back.

Gill thinks that Mrs. Moeller, when she looked out of the window and saw him pounding the little boy's back, probably thought he was beating her offspring—but everybody is happy now. Even little David.

"The saving of this little boy's life I am certain will be many times repaid in your memories and it certainly justifies the existence of the basic philosophy which our union tries to practice, that, namely, is the Golden Rule."

CIO-CSC Aids Tornado Victims

STORMS HIT FACTORY CITIES.—Storms, tornadoes and spring floods hit industrialized cities of the Midwest and New England last week, causing heavy losses in lives, injuries, homes and factories. Fury of the tornado which hit the auto center of Flint, Mich., is indicated by top photo of wreckage combed by rescue workers. Some 90% of casualties in Flint area were CIO Auto Workers or members of their families. Other cities hit by tornadoes were Cleveland and Worcester, Mass. And in Missouri Valley (lower photo), Floyd River went over its banks at junction with Missouri to flood Sioux City, Ia., packinghouse area. CIO Community Services workers were aiding stricken areas. Hillman Awards—

'McCarthy Is More Dangerous Than Klan'

KLANSMEN - without - bedsheets in the halls of Congress "are more dangerous than any country hoodlums on the highways or in the hills."

And Jacob Potofsky, foundation head and president of the CIO Clothing Workers, supported the indictment of congressional bigots with a warning that "fear and hysteria are a modern madness, that not only weakens us at home but reduces us in the eyes of our allies abroad."

HERBERT BLOCK

THE TWIN condemnation of McCarthyism was voiced as the Hillman Foundation—named for the late ACWA president and CIO vice president—presented awards to three North Carolina newspapermen for exposure of KKK activities, and also cited a Washington labor newspaperman and a distinguished cartoonist. (See adjoining story.)

Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News & Observer, said the awards were for the fight on the "Ku Klux spirit . . . whether it operates in the Klavern or the Senate."

Warning that the KKK is not only "a small town or Southern phenomenon," Daniels said:

"The fight close at hand for all of us today requires the old-fashioned, clear-headed, warm-hearted courage which has always resented sneak, cruel, mob-bold intolerance in this land.

"There is nothing small-town or Southern about the Ku Klux Klan. It does not always operate in masks. Often, indeed, it is loud and lit with television lights.

"INDEED, if I had to take a choice between spoiled fish, I think I would prefer the KKK in bed sheets to the self-righteousness for profit, patriotism for politics, and proscription for publicity which we see every day in the loud open in this land. Such forces are more dangerous than any country hoodlums on the highways or in the hills.

"We need to realize that the only definition of Ku Klux Klan spirit in America is the pretense to moral, patriotic and racial or religious superiority which gives the right to punish and proscribe other men. That and not the mask is the mark of the Ku Kluxer—and that whether he is a small punk or a big politician, whether he hides himself in a sheet or wraps himself in a flag."

An equally-vigorous condemnation of McCarthyism as "a threat to all of us" was voiced by Potofsky. And he said that the new Hillman Award selections uphold the American tradition of civil liberties "in the face of an atmosphere increasingly hostile to free inquiry and mutual faith."

The ACWA president said the result of McCarthyism "is fear that is corrupting our spirit of free inquiry into a blind search for the uniformity of mediocrity."

Potofsky called upon labor to expose and combat this "modern madness." He said in part:

"The McCarthys, the McCarrans, the Ku Klux Klan—whatever their names—are the front men, the spearheads for the more dangerous forces of reaction and selfish interests, who are willing to use any means to strangle liberal thought and subvert our national heritage for their own selfish profit. They are the enemies of democracy both at home and abroad.

"THESE attacks on our civil liberties and our civil rights are a threat to all of us. Because it was someone else who was refused a passport, or lost a job, or failed to receive clearance for a government post, or was subjected to congressional grilling —that does not mean that we are exempt.

"Everyone of us who believes in the spirit of free inquiry and in human dignity, and who strives to make political and economic democracy a reality, is marked by the forces of hysteria and fear. Who knows whose turn it will be next?

"Just as we in organized labor many years ago banded together to overcome the forces of industrial feudalism, so now we must organize ourselves to expose and combat the evil forces that threaten the very foundation of our democratic way of life."

High Court Ends Cafe Bias In Capital; School Cases Delayed

THE U. S. Supreme Court last week outlawed segregation in Washington, D. C., restaurants, but delayed acting on nationally important cases of segregation in public schools.

The issues arose in two separate cases. In the restaurant case, the court ruled still valid the capital's "lost law" of 1873 which made it a crime for operators of restaurants and similar establishments to refuse equal service to all "well-behaved" and "respectable" persons.

"The Supreme Court ruling represents a vindication of the position of the CIO and former Pres. Truman in seeking to establish decency in the District of Columbia," declared CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who is chairman of the CIO Civil Rights Committee.

CAREY also recalled that he wrote Pres. Eisenhower last March suggesting "practical methods" for the use of his presidential powers against segregation and discrimination in the District. At that time Carey pointed out that the President's "chief weapon" was his "ability to make your wishes known to your appointees with the concurrent power to remove them if necessary," which was particularly true of the District Commissioners.

The court delayed action in the school segregation case by listing five questions it wants the lawyers to discuss when the case is argued on Oct. 12. Involved are the schools in the District, Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas and Delaware.

The questions indicated that a majority of the justices had not been able to reach agreement. The court will soon adjourn for the summer, which means that it will not hand down a decision in the case until next January or February—and possibly not until next June.

THE CIO Legal Dept. last year filed a brief in the Kansas case urging the court to discard its "separate-but equal" ruling for school facilities for Negroes and to find that segregation in public schools is a violation of the 14th Amendment.

District authorities said enforcement of the "lost law"—in the files but ignored—against restaurant segregation would begin immediately.

The case has been in the courts since 1950, when the John R. Thompson Co., Inc., operator of a chain of restaurants in the District, was accused of refusing to serve a group of Negroes.

In an 8-0 decision the court upheld the 1873 ordinance, which was enacted by the D. C. Legislative Assembly. The Assembly later was abolished.

Justice Douglas, who wrote the court's opinion, said:

"We conclude that Congress had the authority under . . . the Constitution to delegate its lawmaking power to the Legislative Assembly of the municipal corporation which was created by the Organic Act of 1871 and that the 'rightful subjects of legislation' within the meaning of . . . that Act was as broad as the police power of a state so as to include a law prohibiting discrimination against Negroes by the owners and the managers of restaurants in the District of Columbia."

The court ruled that the laws of 1872 and 1873 survived "all subsequent changes" in the government of the District and "remain today a part of the governing body of laws applicable to the District."

Justice Douglas pointed out that neither Congress nor the District Commissioners have ever attempted to repeal the ordinances.

THE LAWS which require equal service to all who eat in restaurants, in the District are as local in character as laws regulating public health, schools, streets and parks," Justice Douglas said. "Regulation of public eating and drinking establishments in the District has been delegated by Congress to the municipal government from the beginning.

"The failure of the executive branch to enforce a law does not result in its modification or repeal."

McCarthy Has Clambake With Texas Oil Tycoons

By HENRY ZON

INTENSE speculation was created in Washington by the disclosure that Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) spent the better part of a week with Texas oil millionaire Clint Murchison at Murchison's lush Texas and Mexican ranches.

Washington speculation centered around possibilities of plans being laid for use of McCarthy, backed by Texas oil money, on an extensive basis in the 1954 congressional campaigns. Others guessed the Texas oil community want to "look over" McCarthy with an eye to his political ambitions and possible usefulness.

Informed observers in the capital state freely that reluctance on the part of Republican party leaders to curb McCarthy stems from their desire to use him in next year's campaign.

Assets of the 41 companies wholly owned, controlled, or with a substantial Murchison interest total over $281 million according to a survey in the January 1953 issue of Fortune Magazine. This sum does not include family trusts, private investment companies, joint ventures and partnerships or certain cattle, oil and real estate interests.

UAW Gives $100,000—

THE CIO COMMUNITY Services Committee and CIO Auto Workers swung into action last week in the wake of devastating tornadoes which hit two highly industrialized areas, bringing death and suffering to CIO families.

At least 220 persons were killed, thousands were injured and thousands more were left homeless by the battering storms which whipped the auto center of Flint, Mich., Cleveland, O., and Worcester, Mass. And floods hit the packinghouse center of Sioux City, Ia.

The twisters brought death, devastation and suffering to areas heavily populated by CIO families. No accurate estimates of casualties or financial loss to CIO families were immediately available, CIO-CSC Dir. Leo Perlis said, but it was feared they would be high.

CIO AUTO Workers reported that 90% of the Flint casualties were among UAW families.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther presented a $50,000 check to Reg. Dir. Robert Carter to be turned over to the Flint Red Feather Disaster Fund, saying the balance would come from Michigan UAW locals. Flint locals' contributions will push the total over the $100,000 pledge.

Urging locals to tap their blood banks and members to volunter blood donations, Reuther said, "no amount of money can bring back the loved ones so tragically lost, nor can anything we say or do restore parents to orphaned children. But our union's entire membership is determined to do whatever is humanly possible to alleviate suffering and cushion this terrible shock to the community."

PERLIS ordered CSC Rep. John C. Pierce, who was in Port Huron, Mich., scene of an earlier, less severe storm, to the battered worker areas of Flint, where he was joined by Charles Bowers and March Haas, CIO-CSC liaison men in Michigan.

Perlis also assigned Rep. J. Carlton Yeldell to the Worcester disaster area, where he was joined by John Sullivan, CSC state man.

The CSC men, Perlis said, would work with disaster agencies, especially the Red Cross, and would establish CIO committees or activize those already existing. Their first job would be to establish complete lists of CIO storm victims and provide shelter, cash, clothing and rehabilitation loans for those in need.

Meanwhile, local CIO help was being provided, with the CIO's FDR camp in Michigan being made available to disaster agencies to provide shelter for homeless families.

Perlis said that if supplementary assistance were needed—as was the case two years ago when tornadoes ripped across Arkansas, and the state CIO organizations recommended a fund-raising campaign—the CSC would conduct one.

Early reports from Worcester, Flint and other devastated cities declared major disaster areas by Pres. Eisenhower indicated that CIO families lived in the areas hardest hit by the death-dealing storms.

Hundreds of homes, in worker areas of Flint and the Worcester suburbs, were in the direct line of the twisters and were reduced to rubble.

HOURS after the storms, hospitals in the storm areas were being forced to care for injured workers and other storm victims in makeshift wards set up in corridors.

In temporary morgues, set up in National Guard armories, grief-stricken survivors were attempting to identify the bodies of those killed in the few but terrible minutes it took the twisters to rip through those cities.

The twin storms in Michigan and Massachusetts brought the heaviest toll of death in the disaster history of either state, authorities said.

Steel Officers Meet As Wage Talks Continue

TOP OFFICERS and negotiators of the CIO Steelworkers were called to meetings in Pittsburgh late last week, a fortnight before wage reopenings run out at U. S. Steel Corp. and other major producers.

Pres. David J. McDonald called the USA-CIO Executive Board and International Wage Policy Committee to meet in the steel city on June 12.

Negotiations with Big Steel over the union's proposals for a general wage increase have been under way for a month.

DURING the past week, eight man bargaining teams representing both the union and U. S. Steel management held a series of lengthy sessions. There were no official reports on the progress of the bargaining.

Along with a general wage increase—the only contract issue the union can raise at this time—the steel union also has asked the industry to agree to joint studies of the guaranteed annual wage and of improving present pension and social insurance plans.

Under the contract, the union is free to strike, if necessary, on July 1 to win its wage increase proposals.

Steel Labor in its latest issue declares the steel industry should agree to a wage increase because:

1. "Steelworkers need a raise. Over half of them are still earning less than the minimum amount called for in the (BLS) city worker's family budget for four.

2. "Steelworkers have not shared in the tremendous increase in productivity (and resulting increased profits) the steel industry is enjoying.

3. The steel industry never before enjoyed such demand or continued high output.

4. "The industry is reaping profits at an unprecedented rate. Its future outlook is even brighter. There is not the slightest question about the steel industry's ability to pay a wage increase."

Wage Talks Set By URW With Big 3

THE CIO Rubber Workers will kick off their 1953 wage bargaining late this month when they will start company-wide negotiations with three of the Big Four rubber companies.

URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said that talks will begin with Firestone on June 23 in Cleveland. Negotiations will open with Goodyear June 29 in Cleveland, and on the same date with Goodrich in Chicago. The talks will involve some 72,000 URW members.

The union's proposals are expected to follow the 1953 economic program drawn up by URW's international policy committee in March. The program called for "substantial" general wage increases, improved pensions and insurance benefits, and correction of plant and area wage inequities.

THE CIO Electrical Workers, after months of bitter negotiations, won a contract settlement from the General Electric Co. last week that netted pay boosts ranging from 5c to 16c an hour for 76,000 workers.

The agreement called for a 3.15% increase. It included a new one-year contract, dated June 1, whch replaces an agreement scheduled to expire next Sept. 15.

The settlement was reached after IUE-CIO negotiators, headed by Pres. James B. Carey, had indignantly rejected an offer of a 1.68 pay increase the company tendered several weeks ago.

"WHILE the IUE-CIO persisted in its negotiations," pointed out Carey, who also is CIO secretary-treasurer, "several other unions accepted that earlier settlement.

"Therefore, IUE-CIO persistence has benefited not only our own members, but all GE workers, for they will undoubtely be given the gains we have won. A contributing factor in the settlement was the struggle of IUE-CIO members at the Syracuse, N. Y., General Electric plant, who won a major victory after eight weeks on strike."

Non-economic terms of the agreement are effective June 1, the wage and similar sections on June 10. The pact is subject to approval by the union's General Electric Conference Board, which meets in Washington this week to act on a recommendation of acceptance by a majority of the negotiators.

The wage increase means that each IUE-CIO member covered—mostly production employes but including some white collar workers—will receive at least 5c an hour. In addition, skilled workers will get from 1c to 8c an hour more, making the average increase 7c. Individaul increases range from 5c to 16c an hour.

THE IUE-CIO negotiators also won comparable increases for salaried workers, including draftsmen.

Most of the incentive plan changes were technical, but one will mean thousands of dollars of additional wages during "down" time, as when a machine breaks or the flow of materials is interrupted. In the past GE workers thus idled were paid their base rates. Under the settlement, they will receive their average hourly rates.

The terminal pay plan for use when plants are closed permanently yields one day's pay for each year up to five years of service, and one week for each additional year.

The additional safeguard for laid-off workers provides for retention of service credits for three years after the furlough date, instead of the one year in the old contract.

THE IUE-CIO has now won a package totaling 50c an hour for GE workers since it signed its first contract with the firm in September 1950.

The negotiating committee, in addition to Carey, included John Callahan, Pittsfield, Mass., chairman of the union's GE Conference Board; Ed Houchens, Philadelphia; Earl Ripley, Lynn, Mass.; Tom Hayden, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Walter Usiatynski, Syracuse; Frank Fiorillo, Schenectady, N. Y.; William Davidowski, Trenton, N. J.; David Fitzmaurice, Cleveland; IUE-CIO General Counsel Ben Sigal and Research Dir. David Lasser.

Phone Gals Show Spunk; Now They Can Wear Shorts

SHORTS are being worn by 63 girl telephone operators here in Gulfport, Miss., but it took a 26-hour walkout in 92 degrees of heat to win that concession from Southern Bell Telephone Co.

Bare midriffs are barred, however, and the gals must don skirts before leaving the exchange.

Under the "heat relief" program gained by the CIO Communications Workers, the local and long-distance operators will be served "refreshing drinks when needed," and the company agreed to place tubs of ice in front of electric fans and to make proper adjustment of fans and windows. (LPA)

GOP Leaders Differ On T-H Plan

WHAT WILL the Republican majority in Congress and the Eisenhower Administration do about revision of Taft-Hartley during this session of Congress?

There was no clear-cut answer in Washington last week. Instead there were conflicting statements from high GOP leaders in Congress along with carefully arranged "leaks" from Administration sources.

Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, was the source of at least two contradictory reports.

On one day he told the Associated Press that he and Sen. Taft, Republican majority leader, were agreed on a program for introduction of a bill embodying Taft-Hartley changes. Their timetable, he said, was to let the bill circulate during the summer and take it up next year.

One day later, Administration sources "leaked" a story that the Labor and Commerce Depts. were working on an official bill to be submitted to Congress as the Administration's proposals. This, the sources said, was designed to redeem Pres. Eisenhower's campaign pledges to bring fairness and justice to the law.

Two days later, Sen. Smith made another statement, this one on the Senate floor. He said he saw no reason why Congress could not enact Taft-Hartley amendments this year.

At about the same time, the White House disclosed that Taft-Hartley amendments were no longer on the Administration's list of "must" legislation for this session.

House Labor Committee Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.), who told newsmen, "I am optimistic about the prospects for getting good legislation."

As the week ended, the Senate committee authorized Smith to prepare a tentative draft, eliminating some of the more controversial provisions of an earlier "working paper." Smith again said the bill would be introduced this year but that he expected no action before January. And Taft said the White House was ready to recommend Taft-Hartley changes but he wan't sure when, since the President was out of Washington.

Power Of The Purse

There's more than one way to skin a cat—or for anti-labor congressmen to kill off those agencies of the government concerned with the interests and welfare of labor and the people.

When it's too risky, politically, to wipe out directly those units of the government which enforce fair wages, prevent exploitation of child labor, seek to mediate labor-management relations, or to protect consumers from shoddy and harmful goods, there is always another course.

That is the indirect path of starvation by appropriation —the less risky, politically, path of hamstringing agencies by cutting off their operating funds.

Such is the course upon which the Republicans embarked in the 83rd Congress when the House a few weeks ago chopped—and chopped deeply—into appropriations for the Labor Dept., Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, National Labor Relations Board, Mediation & Conciliation Service and other agencies.

As CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther pointed out last week, "this is repeal by the indirect and irresponsible route of denying funds."

Pres. Eisenhower has promised repeatedly to "build up the Labor Dept." Let Sen. Bridges and your senator know you expect the present Congress to deliver on that promise.

Tinkering Won't Do

Hearings on Taft-Hartley Act amendments ended in the labor committees of the Senate and House many weeks ago.

Since then, there has been only the Great Silence—punctured now and again by the Great Rumor. The Great Rumor as to what the Administration's T-H amendments would be have taken many forms, most of them mutually contradictory.

Now a new and presumably more accurate Great Rumor is running its course in Washington. The Senate Labor Committee, one hears, will report out some little amendments. These little amendments will not bring that "fairness and justice" which Pres. Eisenhower mentioned in his campaign speeches about Taft-Hartley.

The proposed amendments represent a mere tinkering with the law. Tinkering is not enough—it will not satisfy the members of the CIO, and it will not bring about a labor-management law that will help America.

If the GOP Senators on the Labor Committee and the business-minded experts of the executive branch of government think otherwise, they are deluding themselves. They should realize it sooner rather than later.

Disaster

The Auto Workers and the National CIO Community Services Committee have shown their spunk in the promptness with which they came to the aid of residents of Flint, Mich., and other industrial cities hard-hit by last week's tornadoes.

In Flint, alone, an estimated 90% of the casualties were from UAW families. The union's prompt gift of $100,000 will go far toward meeting emergency needs, while CIO-CSC staff members will speed the relief job.

It's a good illustration of how CSC is on the job in an emergency, and a good reminder to CIOers everywhere to lend a hand to the community services program.

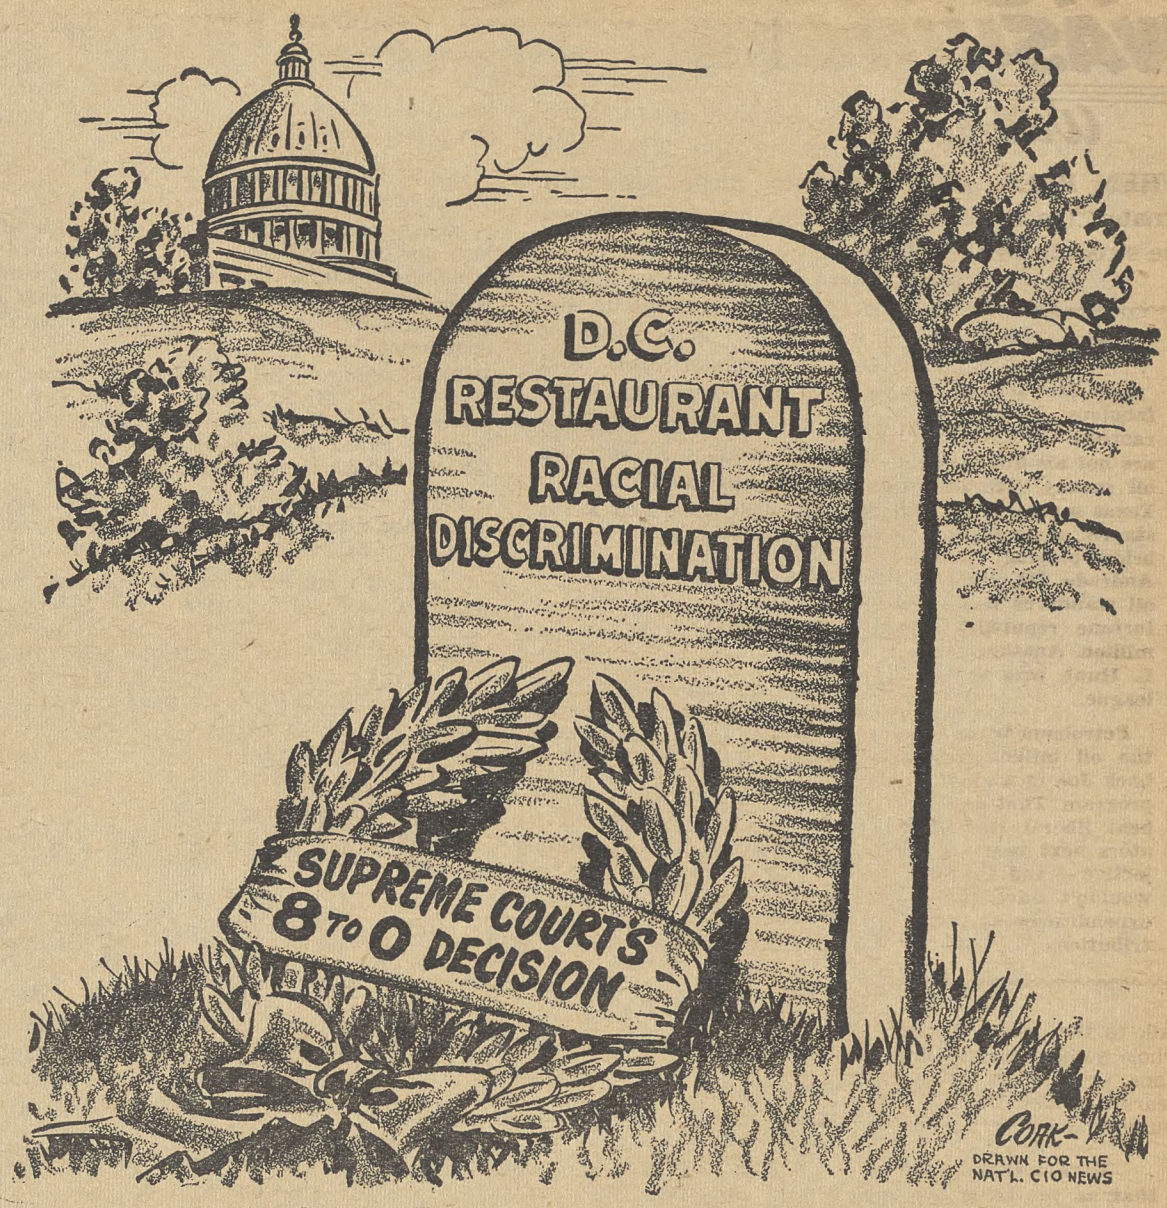
No Mourners



In Other Words—

A British Unionist Speaks

The following address was delivered by Tom O'Brien, chairman of the British Trades Union Congress and a member of Parliament, before the American Chamber of Commerce in London.

By TOM O'BRIEN

THERE ARE only two choices before the world at the present time: either the right to live, the right of liberty, the right to bring up one's children and one's children's children in the love and fear of God—or to deny that right.

The so-called Russian bloc is simply a system that has been galvanized to propagate an evil principle, the evil principle being the denial of human liberty, the denial of the right of men to choose their own life in their own free way. I prefer to call it Kremlin communism.

The Americans have decided that they cannot subscribe to the denial of the principle. I am entirely on the side of the Americans.

I have no time for people who believe in Anglo-American friendship but who are too frightened to be truthful to each other. That does not mean a mutual admiration society. It means a solid basis of understanding. It means that the Americans can hit us under the chin and we can hit them; but the basis is there—the fundamental principle of what we stand for.

ICFTU Shows The Way

We require something of the principle that we of the trade union movement in the free world have tried to introduce. We have what is called the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. I am happy to say that the two great American trade union movements, the AFL and the CIO, have been generous to a degree, not only in their financial contributions, but also with their moral, constructive contributions.

The ICFTU is not merely an anti-Communist organization; it is an organization that embraces all countries in the world, with the exception of the Iron Curtain countries. We preach not only the protection of our interests in Britain and America; we preach not only the protection of the interests of workers the world over; we go further; we preach that we must give rights and liberties to the underdeveloped countries of the world.

If the governments of the world could take a leaf out of the book of the ICFTU, I think we should have peace because peace would be assured on the basis of stability and prosperity.

War belongs to a diseased mind, to diseased bodies. The relationship of America and Britain and the free countries must depend somewhat on the spirit which we are trying to develop in our ICFTU.

There are two qualities that are fast fading from our present existence, and those are the qualities of prudence and patience. They are great moral qualities. America and Britain need them both. As a friend of the United States I say that the American government, a new government, requires all the prudence it can possibly acquire. On our part we should exercise patience, great patience.

Systems Differ

Our system of government is different from yours. Our parliamentary system brings the former government, after defeat, into opposition. But we have a permanent civil service whose duty it is to advise, truthfully and objectively, ministers on issues of policy.

If two friends or the members of a family differ, they must merge and pool their resources. We must merge and pool the resources of our experience, the resources of our tradition and the great dynamic force which is the United States.

The United States has assumed a great responsibility, not because it is arrogant—the Americans can never be arrogant; they kid themselves they are, but they are not; they are a damned nice crowd of people and that is not flattery. They have assumed, willy-nilly, the responsibility of world leadership—all the problems which two great wars have inflicted upon the world.

It is a grave responsibility . . . that no one nation can carry whatever its power, its commerce, its good will. It cannot carry it alone. It ought not to carry it alone. That is the basis of Anglo-American friendship—that we want to help the United States in carrying a responsibility that was once ours.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

WHEN PRES. EISENHOWER meets reporters in the ornate "Treaty Room" of the old State Dept., just across the street from the White House, he keeps his appointment with military promptitude.

Big Money

Sen. McCarthy's visit to the fabulous Texas and Mexico ranches of Clint Murchison are not his first contacts with oil money. He has been to Texas several times this year, stayed at least once with a bridge-playing friend, "Dick" Andrade III, who by Texas oil standards has a "modest" fortune reputedly below $50 million. Another contact is H. L. Hunt, who is really big league.

Petroleum trade sources say the oil millionaires want to back Joe in a giant television program. That might help Joe beat liberal Democratic senators next year—a prime objective — and the millionaires wouldn't have to report the expenditures as political contributions.

Never more than 15 seconds before or behind schedule, Ike strides into the crowded room, says "Good morning," urges the respectfully standing press, "Please be seated." Handsome and bronzed, he stands behind his desk answering questions with every appearance of conscientiousness and sincere endeavor to supply information.

The only point is that he doesn't meet reporters very often—just 10 times in the first 22 weeks in office. It must regretfully be reported that the only convincing reason is that Ike does not like press conferences.

FDR used to love them. Except in the war years he had conferences twice a week, and no free-wheeling or hostile question could throw him off balance. Truman had conferences once a week—and he grew to love them.

Ike obviously prefers to talk to the people through formal speeches, where he controls the whole subject matter and can skip lightly over possible contradictions, or through elaborably staged "folksy" television reports rehearsed under the professional direction of the Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne advertising agency.

Ike's aversion to press conferences may stem from the fact that as yet he is not well briefed on many parts of his job.

He made a terrible blunder at his last conference—May 28—by calling a question about Red China and the United Nations a hypothetical one. Reporters were genuinely shocked that, at 10:30 in the morning, he had not read or been told that the Senate Appropriations Committee the previous afternoon had officially voted to pull the United States out of the UN if Red China were admitted.

The president in making a formal speech dedicating Garrison Dam can pay generalized tribute to flood control and public power. At a news conference reporters would ask him how this is harmonized with Interior Sec. McKay's steady assault on public power.

In a formal speech he can defend the "interim" 120-wing Air Force without being asked again, as he was on May 28, "Did you make the final decision" to slash the Air Force budget. Ike refused to answer that one, although much earlier he had told the press that he personally would make the final defense budget decisions.

THE REPORTERS, of course, have no vested claim as individuals on the President's time. But the press conference has become a Washington institution for the simple reason that it fills a void in our governmental system.

We have no "question period," such as that familiar in the British House of Commons, where the party out of power demands further information about the justification for government policies.

The informal press conference, with reporters from many fields of interest asking questions, is the springboard from which news stories are written. They are the medium through which the people get facts about the government to which they are entitled.

Sen. Taft before his illness met Senate reporters two or three times a day, and used the conferences with great skill. Most other senators and members of the House are easily available for questions.

But not the President or even his Cabinet members. Sec. McKay has had just one conference and probably disliked the experience. It was pretty stormy, because McKay used the occasion to announce abandonment of the proposed Hells Canyon Dam. Other Cabinet officials are generally wary and unavailable.

● ● State Dept. morale is so badly shaken by Sec. Dulles' repeated appeasement of hostile congressional committees that staff members privately tell reporters they are signing or initialing policy papers with which they fundamentally disagree.

● ● Observe that when Sen. Taft was forced to give up, temporarily, the GOP Senate floor leadership, he did not yield to the official assistant leader, Sen. Saltonstall (M.).

Saltonstall was pro-Eisenhower before Chicago, is closer to Eisenhower foreign policies than the real Old Guard. So Taft personally "appointed" Sen. Knowland of California as "acting leader." Knowland, grim-visaged despite his relative youth, can be relied on to apply continued pressure to "strengthen" Far Eastern policy.

Texas 'Hate Sheet' Editor Has A Big Business, Anti Labor Trail

By MILTON PLUMB

WAY DOWN SOUTH in Fort Worth, Tex., a vitrolic old lady is pouring out each month some 32 columns of hate she calls "The Southern Conservative, a monthly publication of enditorial opinion with a national circulation."

Each eight-page issue is filled with bitter attacks on organized labor, the nation's churches and schools, UNESCO, the New and Fair Deals, and most of the social gains of the last 20 years. Like most such hate—sheets, it is super—"patriotic" and bigotedly against Negroes, Jews and other minority groups.

Now and then, a bawdy touch is added to the editor's column, "My Night." This is purportedly a parody on Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's syndicated column, "My Day."

This self-proclaimed spokesman for the region is practically unknown in the South. On a recent trip through several states in Dixie, this reporter made extensive inquiries and didn't find one Southerner who recalled having seen the publication. The only place it was found for sale was at one newsstand in New Orleans.

Outside the South, however, it's less hard to locate, provided you look in spots frequented by big business money, rightwing politicians, or the so-called "opinion-moulders." A huge pile, for example, is dumped each month in the lobby of the National Press Club, where Washington correspondents can get it for free.

A note under the masthead adds the information that it's being "sent without cost to members of Congress, members of State Legislatures, Governors and other public officials."

Not On A Shoestring

This kind of propaganda operation cannot be done on a shoestring. Yet the paper carries no advertising, and there is no indication of widespread readership that would support it on a subscription basis.

Who, then, is behind the undertaking, and what forces are supporting it?

One clue is given in the masthead, which lists "Ida M. Darden" as editor. This is no more accurate, however, than the name "The Southern Conservative," which is neither representative of the South nor "conservative."

(The three-year-old publication regularly attacks as "Fair Dealers," for example, such conservatives as Sec. of State John Foster Dulles, saying "the only difference between him and Acheson was a mustache.")

As far back as 1930 the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee pointed out that "Ida M. Darden" was really the "stage name for collecting money" of Mrs. W. F. Myrick, sister of the late Vance Muse. And Muse once was called the "No. One menace to organized labor."

Ida Darden's "collecting money" dates back a long time. Her lobbying activities first came to light about 1908, when she fought the eight-hour day and women's suffrage. She and her brother were the object of several congressional investigations; their activities were unanimously called "highly reprehensible" by one Senate committee.

Until 1929 the two worked closely with a man named J. A. Arnold in a series of big business lobbying projects. Among the groups they organized, ran and lobbied for were the American Taxpayers' League, Texas Business Men's Association, Southern Tariff Association, American Bankers' League and Texas Farmers' Union.

A 1929 congressional investigating committee said the three "collected something like, or over, $250,000" from the railroads to fight the Adamson eight-hour day bill. They were also accused of distributing anti-Woodrow Wilson literature identified as German propaganda by a 1918 congressional committee.

Just 20 years later, the Nazi overseas organ "World Service," praised Muse's activities at that time.

The committee charged that their lobbying was carried on "ostensibly for the purpose of influencing congressional legislation but in fact to make a living," and was "certainly" a "type of lobbying against which the public ought to be protected by appropriate legislation."

A 1930 Senate report showed that their lobbying outfits took in $860,000 in four years, chiefly from bankers and big businessmen. It said Muse got $20,434, Ida Darden, $24,898, and her husband $14,958.

Collected From DuPonts

Muse and S. Valentine Ulrey, an associate of Rabble-rousers Gerald L. K. Smith and Gerald Winrod, founded the Christian American Association of Houston.

This anti-labor, white supremacy propaganda mill was credited with launching the drive for state "right to work" laws. Both the late Philip Murray and the late William Green characterized it as a major force in the union-busting drive of the '40's.

In 1936, Muse was again hauled before a Senate investigating committee, this one headed by the present Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black. The probers found he had collected about $41,000 from some of the nation's biggest industrialists, including $5000 from the DuPonts and $1000 from Pres. Alfred P. Sloan of General Motors.

Louisiana quickly repudiated Muse when he tried to spread his anti-labor line there in 1942. The Legislature passed a resolution demanding an FBI investigation of his activities.

Oil Tycoons Linked To Hate Sheet

Ida Darden freely admits that "The Southern Conservative" is supported by subsidies but won't tell their source.

Texas CIO officials say it's "common knowledge" around the state that the paper exists on contributions from oil millionaire's and other big business interests now riding high in the Lone Star state.

Armstrong, who offered a $50 million endowment to Jefferson College on the condition that it teach "Christianity and the superiority of the Anglo-Saxon and Latin-American races," lives in Fort Worth.

Book Banners Busy In Old San Antone

Mayor Jack White of San Antonio, Tex., had what he thought was a good idea a few weeks ago. At a meeting of City Council, he suggested that body consider "branding" all "Communist-written" public library books. City Manager Wylie Johnson even thought the books ought to be burned.

The controversy has grown so that now the Mayor is wondering if it was such a good idea after all, and he's indicated that he wishes people would stop talking about it.

The brainstorm was touched off by Mrs. Myrtle G. Hance, organizer of the San Antonio Minute Women but no longer a member. She listed about 600 library books written by authors whose names have popped up in congressional probes of Communists.

The list includes such standard works as Dr. Albert Einstein's "Theory of Relativity," Louis Untermeyer's "Treasury of American and British Poetry," Thomas Mann's "The Magic Mountain," Dorothy Canfield Fisher's "Fables for Parents," and even "The Canterbury Tales" and Herman Melville's "Moby Dick," because they were illustrated by Rockwell Kent.

"That will do, Hooper; I'll think about it."

CIO Challenges Ike To Lead On Social Security Advance

A PLEA that the Eisenhower Administration exercise its leadership to improve federal social and welfare programs was voiced by the CIO Executive Board at its recent meeting in Washington.

In a sharply-worded statement, the board charged the Administration apparently "is seeking to satisfy or appease" business elements "determined to turn back the clock in social security."

"Week by week," the board asserted, "evidence accumulates indicating that instead of increasing the benefits of such programs, Congress and the Administration will cut them back through slashing federal funds and through other changes desired by enemies of social security."

THE BOARD listed social insurance, health, public assistance and maternal and child welfare programs as being under attack.

It accused Pres. Eisenhower of playing into the hands of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and its plan to undercut old age pensions and survivors insurance when he called for postponement of the pending increase in the old-age insurance tax.

The levy is scheduled to jump from 1.5% to 2% next Jan. 1; Eisenhower would postpone it for a year, and added that the tax and trust accounts should be handled more nearly on a pay-as-you-go basis, as the C. of C. wants.

"Nothing was said as to the potential source of funds to replace those lost through postponement of the tax increase," the CIO pointed out.

"Nothing was said, or at other times has been said, by the Administration about liberalizing benefit provisions for those now covered.

"The President's earlier recommendation of extension of coverage would not aid the great majority of Americans already under old-age and survivors insurance.

"We have long favored universal coverage, but now it has become part of the C. of C. plan for ending federal grants to the states for public assistance and dividing up present social security payroll tax funds among all the aged at inadequate benefit levels.

"By throwing the entire cost of caring for the aged on the payroll tax, on a pay-as-you-go basis, the Chamber hopes to relieve the wealthy of taxes, to hold down the national social security program, and thus to leave a free field for private insurance companies."

A ONE-YEAR postponement in the tax hike is not dangerous in itself, the board conceded. The danger, it explained, is that it will pave the way for enactment of the C. of C. proposals.

"While a rise in the tax from 1.5% to 2% in 1954 would mean higher payments by our members," it continued, "they have repeatedly indicated their willingness to bear their proper share of the cost of adequate social security. In the long run, lower payments now can only mean higher payments or lower benefits later.

"The American people are entitled to confidence that benefit provisions enacted into law will be met. Any move by the government to retreat from its commitments is most unfortunate."

'Get Off The Dime On Housing,' CIO Tells Ike

HOUSING actions of the Republican Administration "are not consistent with the practical steps necessary to achieve the nation's housing goals." That's the way the CIO Executive Board summed up the new Administration's record.

The housing program to provide adequate shelter for low-income families and to eliminate the blight of slums "is teetering between complete death and a virtual coma," the board said in a resolution. It said:

"The cost of rental housing is being increased by virtue of the scheduled end of rent controls on July 31. New housing costs have gone up due to sharp increase in interest rates on government-insured mortgages."

The board declared the Administration "is in fact increasing housing costs for both low-income and moderate-income families because the government housing policies are being directed by the real estate interests and the home-building industry." The CIO urged:

1. "Pres. Eisenhower to make an open and strong appeal to Congress to continue the Public Housing Program and substantially increase the amount of clearance and low-rent housing construction for low-income families.

3. "The President, the federal housing agencies, and the Congress to direct the government activities in the housing and home financing fields toward encouragement of moderate-priced homes at prices and rents within the means of the plain people of our nation instead of providing unlimited federal aid to those who need aid the least.

4. "The President and Congress to reverse the 'hard money' trend and bring the interest rates on mortgages back down to reasonable levels, especially since it is the government which takes all the risk and since the higher interest rates result in further inflation of housing costs."

Senate Unit Ups GI Interest Rate

GI's getting direct government loans to purchase homes will pay substantially more in interest rates if a Senate Banking Committee action is approved by Congress.

The Committee voted to up interest rates from 4 to 5% in line with other recent increases on FHA and socalled GI insured mortgages.

World Of Labor—

Czech Workers Protest Red Wage Slash Deal

CZECHOSLOVAKIA was in almost open revolt last week as the result of government currency decrees which robbed hundreds of thousands of workers of their life savings, and cut their wages by 80% and their purchasing power by 50%.

Vice Premier Zdenek Nejedly admitted that the Communist satellite's currency reforms had "met with open resistance from among the ranks of the workers."

Details were hidden from the free world by the strict censorship, but Nejedly's admission, made over the Prague radio, was taken as an indication that at least some workers had escaped, however temporarily, from under the heavy hand of state domination.

Reports in western Europe were that the first demonstration took place in Pilsen and was greeted by gunfire from the military. Refugees were reported as saying that the city was blocked off for three days, with no one allowed to leave or enter.

Other clashes, according to unconfirmed reports, took place in Kladno, where it was said three workers were killed.

The currency reform revalued the crown on a gold basis, "based on the Russian ruble." Old crowns were exchanged for the new at the rate of 50 for one, thus wiping out the workers' savings. Nejedly confirmed western Europe suspicions that the reform was ordered so as to get more production out of Czech workers. Many of them have been working only long enough to buy the rationed minimum.

Tunisia

The CIO, AFL and Mine Workers have sent a joint cablegram appealing to Pres. Vincent Auriol of France to lift the state of siege in Tunisia so a trade union delegation from that country can attend the Stockholm meeting of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions next month.

They said they expressed concern at French policy toward Tunisian unionism because of the assassination last December of Farhat Hached, Tunisian labor leader, and declared that repression of unions in Tunisia gives aid and comfort to Soviet Russia.

"No matter how vast the differences between the French government and the Tunisian people may be," they said, "France is still a democratic country with a proud and glorious democratic heritage.

"That is why we appeal to you, and through you to the French government, to insure that Tunisian workers will be represented through their chosen representatives at the ICFTU World Congress."

Germany

Only five Communists were among 3379 works councillors chosen by 135,266 employes of 681 West Berlin factories and offices in recent elections. Members of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB) won 2401 contests or 71% of the total.

Russ Unions Get Knuckles Rapped

Russian trade unions, after all these years of helping the Soviet government grind down the workers, are now getting bawled out for not defending the rights of labor against the managers of state economic enterprises.

Trud, the official union newspaper, took union leaders to task for letting the managers of Soviet factories, mines and other operations get away with stealing their workers' premium pay, foisting unhealthy working conditions on them, and generally depriving them of their rights.

Cases of schizophrenia, or split personality, were expected to show a sharp increase among union officials.

Soviet Slave Labor Camps Make Hitler Look Like A Sunday School Student

ANYBODY whose supply of indignation or anger is running low can have it well stoked by reading "A New Slavery," an account of forced labor and the Communist betrayal of human rights edited by Roger W. Baldwin.

Baldwin's record in defense of the rights of man is too well known to require comment.

He has called nearly a lifetime of service on behalf of others into play to gather under one cover the devastating facts about a brutality that makes such mass slayers as Attila the Hun, Tamerlane and Hitler seem in comparison like models for a Sunday school.

This book is not a dramatic account of slave labor behind the Iron Curtain. As a memo to the reader points out, it is "a powerful and documentary report of the evidence of an entirely new form of slavery—the forced, involuntary labor of hundreds of thousands of persons in Communist states who, without due process of law, are adjudged guilty of political 'crimes,' uprooted from their homes and imprisoned in dreary camps, there to toil for the state."

It follows closely the line of investigation of the United Nations Ad Hoc Committee on Forced Labor. It describes conditions in each of the Communist states, with personal accounts in most cases by the fortunate who escaped. It summarizes the legislation that gives forced labor the cloak of legality in each country, and it prints maps of each nation showing slave camps scattered about them like the pockmarks of an evil disease.

Its factual approach adds to the horror of its revelations, and it should be read by all who want to add their voices to the worldwide cry of horror which is the free world's most effective weapon against such bestiality. It may be read with profit in connection with Albert Konrad Herling's "The Soviet Slave Empire," published two years ago by Wilfred Funk, Inc. (New York), for a broad account of man's greatest inhumanity to man.

'It's Later Than You Think'—

Textile Pensioners Sing The Years Away

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE SOUND of hearty voices raised in song floated through the doorway of a small store-front building at 214 10th Street, Marcus Hook, Pa., headquarters of CIO Textile Workers Local 10.

Just across the street, long rows of dusty windows in the four-storied old red brick plant of the American Viscose Corp. stared dully, indifferently toward the dingy little building.

Ringing out loudly whenever the door opened, dimming as it closed, the words of the song ebbed and flowed on the sidewalk. It clearly wasn't a radio, and now and then someone passing by stopped and peered curiously through the show window.

Jam Session

But the 30 or so elderly men and women who were singing couldn't be seen from the street, for they were seated around the panelled walls at the rear of a long, narrow room. Behind the table stood Frank J. Murphy, president of Local 10's Pensioneers Club (they spell it with two "E's"), a broadshouldered, serious-faced man in a sweater coat.

Cups and plates of doughnuts stood nearby, and later the fragrant smell of coffee spread through the room. The Pensioneers Club, which meets the first and third Wednesdays of the month, was holding one of its regular sessions.

Pres. Murphy leaned forward on his strong capable-looking hands as he talked to the vice-president, Mrs. Merrena Fowler. She's a handsome widow, with dimples and a head of lovely white hair, who worked for nearly 30 years at the Viscose plant. Both are past 70. Murphy worked at Viscose 35 years, 17 of them as a foreman. He went on pension in 1945.

Everybody Sings

"How about you taking a verse solo?" she said to one of the men. After some urging from the others, a jolly white-haired man stood up and sounded off lustily. All joined in the chorus and at the end gave him and themselves a big hand.

Laughter rippled down the row of seats. An air of gaiety and good nature floated pleasantly through the room. Old friends hailed each other and moved about briskly, changing seats to talk at closer range. Between songs, cheerful conversation buzzed steadily.

It was definitely an important social affair to the club members and they were enjoying it. Their good cheer appeared genuine. It was a bright spot in a dull, uneventful week for most of them. Life can become pretty grim if you've been used to going to work for many years, and suddenly find yourself with nothing to do. It isn't pleasant to feel useless.

Describing the difficulties of getting adjusted to retirement, one of the club members, a widower, said that for some time after he retired, he would wake up every morning at the hour he'd been accustomed to get up to go to work, and look at the clock. Then, when he remembered he didn't have a job any more, he'd lie back glumly in bed, overcome with a feeling of emptiness.

"It took me an awful long while to get used to it," he said. "I'd still rather go to work," he added wistfully.

Helped Build Firm

Collectively the 51 retired workers who belong to the Pensioneers Club had put in more than 1000 years working at the big gloomy building across the street. The service records of a few run past 40 years, for some had worked at the plant from the time it was built in 1910 until their retirement in the last year or two.

"Why, we helped build the plant up to its present prosperity," said William B. Hesling, who spent a quarter of a century of his working life at Viscose. Born in Cornwall, England, Hesling came to this country when he was eight years old.

Others in the group were also born in England and came to the United States early in the century. Vice-Pres. Fowler, for instance, was born in Yorkshire. Mrs. Alice Tate, now 74, and Herbert Connison, who came to the U. S. in 1911, both are from Lancastershire.

In contrast to these members of British blood are others who were born and have lived all their lives in or near the Wilmington, Del., Chester and Marcus Hook, Pa., area, within a radius of about 20 miles.

James L. Hanna, who was retired in 1950 after 26 years' work, still lives in the house nearby where he was born in 1886. Edith Cloud and Nellie Townsend, both pensioned in '42, were born in Wilmington.

The youngest member of the club, Charles Hofferberth, worked at Viscose for 42 years. They call him the "baby" because he was just retired this year at the age of 65. Next youngest at the meeting was Frank Dannatella, who was pensioned in 1952 after nearly 30 years.

Nellie Townsend, 83, is one of the oldest members, though she had "only" 19 years at Viscose on her record. This makes her benefits lower than some younger members who had been there longer—and she could use some extra money, she said.

A spry, friendly little lady, Miss Townsend arrived late and a bit breathless because she had missed a bus, she explained apologetically. If her energy had diminished with the years, there was little evidence of it as she told of her desire to get a part-time job.

Certainly she was equal to it, she said firmly. She had worked part-time whenever she could find a job—which wasn't often enough. The only reason she gets along on her small pension is that she lives with a niece.

Live With Kin

Others in the group also manage only because they live with relatives. Joseph Williams, now 73, who was pensioned when he was 65, lives with his daughter and her husband.

Asbury Johnson, 84 years old, who has a mere quarter-century work record at the plant, serves as assistant pastor of a Negro church where he preaches on Sundays. He takes care of his invalid wife—the couple lives alone—and financial troubles add to their worries.

William I. McKinney, another Negro member, who worked 26 years at Viscose and has been on pension since 1949, also has found it increasingly difficult to get along on his small pension.

This is the common complaint, of course, of the majority of the club members—as it is of pensioners everywhere. They find it hard to live on their pensions, with the big increase in the cost of food, clothes, rent, and other essentials that has taken place since they were retired.

Pensions received by most of the club members (and other Viscose workers already retired) who worked 25 years or more for the company average about $100, including their Social Security benefits. Some receive more—the range goes to $130—while those with fewer years of employment credit get proportionately less.

The plan under which the club members, and other former Viscose workers now retired, receive pensions was first set up in December 1943. Seven years later, it was improved by amendments effective Jan. 1, 1951, and made a part of a five-year agreement between the company and the CIO textile union.

Contributory Plan

The plan is of the contributory type—that is, both company and employes pay into the fund. For every $1 the worker pays into it weekly, the company contributes $1.50. The amount of the pension is determined by four factors: the worker's age when he started contributing to the plan; his weekly earnings; the amount of his weekly contributions; and the amount of retirement income beginning at age 65 that each $1 of his contributions will purchase.

The section of the plan which applies to the majority of the Pensioneers' club specifies that employes with 25 or more years' of service who (1) were 65 or older and still working on Dec. 26, 1943; or (2) who became 65 between that date and Jan. 1, 1951, and contributed during that time to the plan, are eligible to receive a minimum monthly pension totaling $100 when added to their Social Security benefits. Past service records prior to 1943 qualified some to receive above the minimum.

Those with less than 25 years' employment but more than 10 years get proportionately less, and those with 25 or more years' who did not contribute to the plan when eligible receive pensions reduced by a formula that takes into account their failure to contribute.

Pension Too Small

Surveys of retired workers in various places all come up with the finding that they don't like to be retired arbitrarily when they reach the age of 65.

Besides the fact that pensions on the whole are too small to give them a decent standard of living and the sense of dignity that goes with it, most older workers in good health resent being pushed out of employment because they have reached a certain age.

Members of the Local 10 pension club bore out this conclusion. Most of them would have liked to continue working longer—or have part-time jobs.

Tough Pension Problem Solved By TWUA, Dyeing Firms; First Benefit Checks Paid

A FIVE-YEAR plan to ease the declining years of workers in the dyeing and finishing industry reached its climax last week when first pension checks were given 366 members of the CIO Textile Workers who had qualified for benefits.

The payments marked the success of diligent efforts by the union and 320 employers in New York and New Jersey to solve the problem of providing pensions in an industry where most firms are small and most employes move about from job to job.

The move began in 1948, and the approach was gradual. Under a two-year agreement signed that year, the employers paid into a fund $1 a month for each worker. The amount was doubled on Oct. 1, 1951, and doubled again a year later.

A board of trustees was set up headed by Harry Liese, New York attorney and one of five employers representatives. William Gordon, director of the TWUA-CIO Dyeing & Finishing Div. and one of five union representatives, is secretary-treasurer.

The board called in actuaries late in 1951. The plan they drew up was approved in 1952 and became effective Jan. 1, 1953.

Since then 501 applications have been filed for payments ranging up to $20 a month. Those of the 366 TUWA-CIO members who got their checks last week were approved, the rest are being processed.

"WE BELIEVE the history of this successful effort," said Gordon, "offers an example of what can be done to solve the most difficult sort of problem if there is good will and patience on both sides.

"Any reasonable plan had to be on an area basis, rather than plant by plant. Then, as in every pension plan, there was the problem of back service credits. Unlike such corporations as General Motors and U. S. Steel, the average dye shop does not have a huge reservoir of capital to create the necessary fund.

"That's why the approach was gradual."

The plan covers 20,000 workers. Most are in New York City and Northern New Jersey. The rest are scattered in upstate New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Virginia.

The workers covered were given service credit beginning with 1933. Present payments are lower than they will be beginning in 1958, when those retiring will have had 25 years of coverage and will be entitled to the maximum.

Some of the locals which had members who shared in the first payments marked the occasion with celebrations. Among them were Local 1733, Patterson, N. J.; Local 1932, Lodi, N. J.; Local 1983, Lodi; Local 1790, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Local 2052, Union City, N. J.

In The Legislatures—

GM Raid On Jobless Pay Fund Vetoed

AN EMPLOYER RAID on the Michigan unemployment compensation fund was beaten back last week when Gov. G. Mennen Williams (D.) vetoed a bill sponsored by General Motors to slash employer contributions to the "kitty."

The proposed law would have cut the employer contribution from 1% of payroll to one-tenth of 1%, a slice of 90%. It would have extended benefits for six weeks, but the Republican-controlled Legislature had declined to boost them from the present $27 a week to $30.

Williams said the six-week extension was desirable, but "too high a price" to pay to permit employers to raid the fund.

"This bill militates against benefit increases which must be made if the job insurance system is to serve its basic purpose of cushioning the economy against the shocks of unemployment," he said in his veto message.

The Legislature's refusal to increase the benefit level, he said, amounts to changing the compensation law into a "dole system" with a flat weekly benefit regardless of earnings.

"This represents an unfortunate and unwise departure from the original objective of this legislation," he said.

New Jersey

Organized labor has demanded a full and complete investigation of a bold attempt to steal $50 million in worker contributions from the temporary disability fund by rigging the voting device used in the lower house of the Legislature.

The vote was taken at 10 p.m. The recording device showed 33 members of the Assembly in favor of the transfer—but only 31 members were present.

"The question is not whether or not the elimination of those two votes would still leave the required 31 for the bill," State CIO Counsel Sol Kapelsohn wrote Gov. Driscoll in demanding an investigation.

"Rather, these facts show so sufficiently the commission of criminal acts in connection with the voting and cast so serious a doubt on the legality of the balloting as to require immediate executive action.

"Whatever interests produced two false votes in all likelihood produced many others. This shameful conduct has destroyed public confidence in every piece of legislation passed in the 1953 Legislature."

The bill would transfer $50 million from the $90 million temporary disability fund to the unemployment compensation fund in Washington. This would build up the latter fund enough to meet the requirement for cutting New Jersey employer taxes by $8 to $20 million yearly.

California

The State Assembly has sent back to committee a sugar-coated employer-sponsored bill to boost unemployment compensation benefits from $25 to $30 weekly, but restrict them so they would be denied to 150,000 currently eligible workers.

The restrictions were so harsh they would have barred or reduced benefits to an estimated 53% of the 415,000 workers expected to receive benefits this year.

California Republicans also rammed through a bill denying unemployment insurance to jobless workers during a period equal to that for which they receive severance pay.

The measure, drafted by lobbyists for publishers, was aimed at union contracts providing severance pay when employment is terminated. CIO Newspaper Guild contracts, which contain such clauses, have never considered severance pay as unemployment compensation, but the Republicans in the Legislature have now ruled it to be such.

Lobbyists In N. Y. Spend $4400 Daily

THE RECENT session of the New York State Legislature, which lasted 53 days, must have been profitable for someone.

Fifty lobbyists or groups spent money at the rate of more than $4400 a day, for a total of $230,000, to influence legislation. Eight others lobbied, but said they spent nothing in the statements they filed in accordance with the law.

The most lavish spender was the Civil Service Employees Association, which reported its operations cost $28,500. Others on the generous side included Consolidated Edison, $11,615; Fire Underwriters, $10,452; Fifth Ave. Coach Co., $6659; Niagara-Mohawk Power Corp., $5777, and the Erie Railroad, $5153.

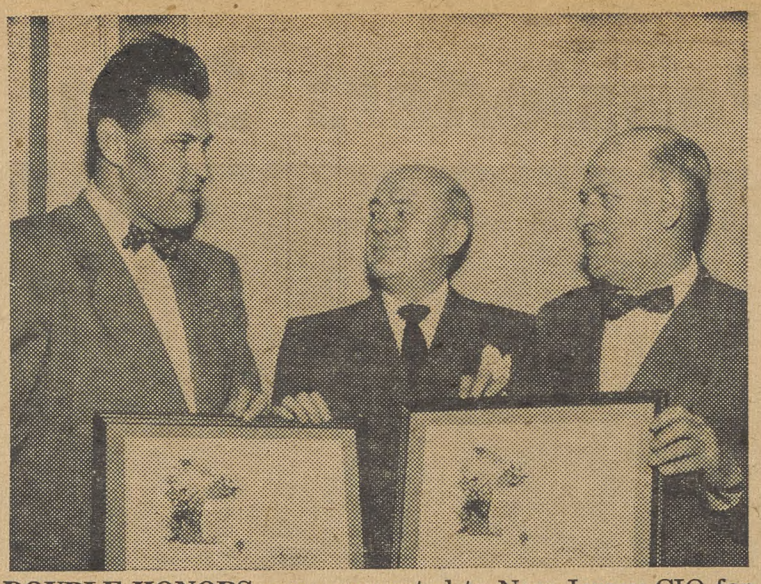
LOBBYISTS also were active in Michigan, where the Legislature, as in New York, is dominated by the Republicans.

Pres. August Scholle of the Michigan CIO Council called their activities in pushing through a business receipts tax "the most blatant example of government by big business lobbyists in history."

The Legislature called big business pressure artists into a closed session to explain the provisions of the tax law—which most lawmakers don't understand yet. Scholle called this unprecedented move a violation of not only the spirit but the letter of the law, which bars lobbyists from the floor of Senate and House while they are in session.

"THE REPUBLICANS sat back and listened," he declared, "while lobbyists for Ford and General Motors told them to pass this hasty patchwork of special interest legislation.

"No legislator can explain this bill because there just wasn't enough time allowed to study it. Even the lawyers can't agree on what it means. Serious constitutional questions have already been raised. The bill is full of gimmicks which favor big corporations at the expense of the small businessman."



DOUBLE HONORS were presented to New Jersey CIO for support of registration and get-out-the vote drive. Archer Carter (center) presented citations to State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman (right) and Harry Kranz, the council's legislative director, for his work for the state Non-Partisan Register and Vote Campaign.

New Jersey CIO Questions Candidates For Governor

Already the State Council and PAC are on their toes. PAC asked both the Democratic and Republican gubernatorial candidates to return the answers to a 54-point questionnaire.

Robert B. Meyner and Paul M. Troast are the Democratic and the GOP candidates respectively. Elmer H. Wene, Democratic primary candidate, who demanded a recount, also was asked to answer the questions and appear before the committee.

But the pre-election activities did not stop there. The State CIO Council sent 10 "minimum planks" to the Democratic and the Republican platform committee chairmen for inclusion in the two parties' platforms. The planks call for:

- A substantial increase in unemployment compensation, temporary disability and workmen's compensation benefits.
- Amendments to the unemployment compensation law to extend the coverage and make other improvements, and improvement of the total disability law.
- Passage of a state relations act, modeled on the Wagner Act.
- Strong state-administered rent control.
- No minimum retail price fixing.
- No sales or individual income taxes, but corporate net profits tax to aid municipalities—if needed.
- Increased appropriations and more effective enforcement of the state laws against discrimination.

Webber Resigns As Virginia CIO President

CHARLES C. WEBBER has resigned as president of the Virginia CIO Council in which he was serving his seventh consecutive year.

One of Webber's responsibilities will be serving as field representative of the National Religion and Labor Foundation. The foundation is an organization of the CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods and of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths.

The Virginia CIO executive board adopted a resolution thanking Webber for his efforts on behalf of the council, and presented him with a check for $500 "as a small token of our esteem."

Until the council elects a successor at its convention Oct. 1-3 at Roanoke, it will be operated by a three-man executive committee: Ernest B. Pugh, Virginia director of the CIO Organizing Committee; Stuart B. Childress, president of Local 88, CIO Clothing Workers, Richmond, and Robert W. Bailey, international representative of Dist. 2, CIO, Communications Workers. Pugh is committee chairman.

CIO Urges Strike Aid To Brewers

THE WISCONSIN CIO Council last week called for intensified support for the month-long strike of the CIO Brewery Workers at Milwaukee's six breweries.

The Council charged that Wisconsin business interests, spearheaded by the State Chamber of Commerce, is putting the heat on the breweries to prevent a strike settlement.

The business interests, the Council said, are particularly anxious that the breweries refuse to grant the union's demand that the work week be cut from 40 hours to 35 hours with no reduction in pay. BW-CIO Local 9 also is asking for a 25c hourly wage increase for its 7000 members.

"When dealing with human beings and problems, one cannot apply cost-accounting thinking—and the problems of the 35-hour week is in essence a human problem," the State CIO Council said.

"LOCAL 9 is fighting on the forefront of a battle which sooner or later faces all of us: as machines, and people become more efficient more goods are produced with less labor. What happens eventually when machines do substantially all the mass production work? What happens to the people then? Who will buy the goods machines make then?

"The State CIO strongly and urgently asks all local unions in Wisconsin to give financial and moral support to the strike of Local 9 Brewery Workers. This union, which has always given generously when others were in distress, merits the best we all have to offer."

Labor Wins City Posts

FOUR CIO and AFL union members were elected to city posts in a recent election in Berwyn, Ill., a suburb of Chicago.

Elected aldermen were Joseph Vrany, of CIO Auto Workers Local 471; Rudolph Rolanek, of the AFL printers; and Ruldolph Docauer, AFL milk drivers. Karel Marsicek, president of a printers local, was chosen city treasurer.

In Erie, Pa., Democratic primary victors included James Hanes, attorney for CIO locals, nominated for school director, and Stanley Nowak, of CIO Rubber Workers Local 74, nominated for jury commissioner.

UAW And IAM Agree On Joint Bargaining Program

CIO AUTO Workers and the AFL Machinists last week announced extension of their no raiding agreement to provide a united front at the bargaining table during negotiations covering multiple plant operations.

Announcement of the new agreement was made jointly by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the UAW and Pres. Al J. Hayes of the IAM.

They said the pact, which they described as "virtually unprecented in American labor history," was the result of several weeks of negotiations. It has been approved by the governing bodies of both unions, which together represent more than two million workers.

In dealing with employers who have several plants which are organized by both unions, the UAW-CIO and IAM-AFL agreed to:

1. "An exchange of information of plants, locations, contracts and wage rates, and information.

2. "Calling of joint conferences between representatives of organizations to be held in localities and on dates mutually agreed to.

3. "Joint negotiations conducted with such corporations whenever such a course promises to bring the best possible results for the membership of both unions."

A committee of three representatives from each union, it was agreed, will be established to coordinate bargaining procedures and relationships in the aircraft industry. In other industries where both unions have substantial organization, similar committees will be set up.

"This agreement lays the basis for broadening the area of cooperation between our organizations to the benefit of our membership," the two presidents said.

"It will enable workers in the same or similar industries to work effectively for the solution of their common problems. It will carry out the purposes contained in the preamble to the agreement, namely, 'contribute to the development of maximum labor solidarity, unionizing of the unorganized, and the ultimate achievement of a united labor movement to which all organized labor aspires.' "

The agreement also provides for joint consultation in case of a strike by one union against an employer with whom the other union also has bargaining relationships.

CONSULTATION will aim at joint economic action against the employer where possible; mutual respect of picket lines and all possible assistance, and no unilateral settlement which might undermine or weaken the striking union.

The two unions further agreed that where one has 50% or more of the total production and maintenance employes of a multiple-plant operation under contract and the second has none, the latter will make no effort to organize and will leave the union with representation solely responsible for completing organization.

In extending the no raiding section, the unions recounted their records and responsibilities and agreed:

"It will be considered a serious breach of good faith and ethical practices and a violation of this agreement for either party or its representatives to use, directly or indirectly, any propaganda alleging or inferring communism, racketeering, company unionism, back-door dealing, racial prejudice, unwarranted or unnecessary strikes, excessive initiation fees, dues or assessments in an effort to discredit the other party for the purpose of gaining organizational advantages."

The no raiding agreement has been in effect for four years. It does not prevent the two unions from competing in unorganized plants.

'Worker Story' Reprint Urged

A resolution calling for the printing of additional copies of the new Dept. of Labor publication, "The Workers' Story," as a Senate document has been introduced by Sen. Smith (R. N. J.) and Sen. Murray (D. Mont.).

Only 4500 copies of this history of the American labor movement could be printed by the department because of limited publishing appropriation. They are now exhausted.

Suppression Of Unions Hit By ICFTU Aide Before ILO

A BLUNT attack on member nations of the Intl. Labor Organization which suppress the rights of free labor was delivered by Herman Patteet, permanent representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, at the 36th ILO conference in Geneva, Switzerland.

He singled out Argentine, Venezuela and France.

"If there were any trade union freedom in the Argentine," he declared, "we should not see here as workers' delegates from that country representatives of government-controlled unions, but spokesmen for free trade union organizations."

He accused Venezuela of disregarding ILO recommendations and walking out on promises to the ICFTU, and of maintaining a policy of trade union suppression it had pledged itself to abandon. He sharply criticized France for keeping union leaders imprisoned in Tunisia, although noting that some had recently been released, and for persistently refusing workers in Morocco the right to form their own unions.

Patteet also defended workers of the world against charges "of being the cause of evils" which they have persistently fought and which remain unsuppressed in spite of their efforts.

"An attempt is being made to involve the ILO in this," he warned, "because it is too obviously a symbol of the fact that there remain in the world misery and hunger side by side with selfishness and misunderstanding."

UNANIMOUSLY elected president of the conference was Sen. Irving M. Ives (R. N.Y.), U. S. government delegate. Named vice presidents were Minister of Labor Ibrahim Alami of Iran, representing government; Alfred Roberts, of the British Trades Union Congress, for labor, and Charles Kuntschen, of Switzerland, for employers.

Most of the 66 ILO member nations are represented at the conference by government, employer and worker delegates. The CIO is represented by Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paperworkers; Pres. Elwood Swisher of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, and Sec. Michael Ross of the CIO International Committee.

CIO Wins Big Drug Plant

THE CIO Chemical Workers have defeated an independent union in a Labor Board election to win representation rights at the Rahway, N. Y., plant of Merck & Co.

The victory of UGCCW in the run-off election ended the 14-year reign of the independent union, Employees of Merck, Inc. The CIO union received 681 votes, the independent 606.

When it merged last month with Sharp & Dohme, Merck's became America's largest drug manufacturing corporation. The Sharp & Dohme firm is already organized by UGCCW Local 86. CIO now represents a majority of Merck's employes nationally.

Harvester Balks At UAW Proposals

The International Harvester Co. has recessed negotiations with the CIO Auto Workers, after rejecting UAW proposals for amending the contract along lines of the recent settlements with the Big Three auto firms.

Harvester has reported record sales of more than $674 million for the latest six month period, while net profits after taxes climbed almost $1 million. (LPA)

Joint Subversive Inquiry Plan Supported By CIO

A RESOLUTION to concentrate in one joint committee the galaxy of congressional investigations of subversive activities, sponsored by Rep Celler (D N.Y.), was endorsed last week by the CIO.

"Such a concentration," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey wrote Celler, "will greatly promote the efficient dispatch of business by the various congressional committees concerned, and would to some extent also aid in the protection of the civil rights of citizens by relieving them from the harassment of multiple investigations."

Carey described Celler's proposal as a "wholly desirable . . . minimum first step" in safeguarding the rights of citizens from invasion by congressional probers. The election to Congress of men "genuinely devoted to our democratic American freedoms," and the adoption of a code of fair procedures to protect witnesses also are required, he maintained.

MEANTIME, Chairman Leo E. Allen (R. Ill.) of the House Rules Committee named a three-man subcommittee to study proposed "fair play" rules in House investigations.

He acted on the recommendation of Rep. Keating (R. N.Y.) after a split in the full committee. Keating is sponsoring a resolution for a uniform rule of procedure for all House committees which would protect the rights of witnesses, but not hinder committee fact-digging.

FIGHTING FUND of Minnesota CIO unions was boosted by $333.50 presented by IUE-CIO Local 1160. Fund is to aid new CIO Strategy Committee in organizing work and defeating raids. You And Your Money—

FDA Whacked Again By GOP And You Will Pay The Freight

THE CHANCES that the food and drugs you buy may be contaminated has been increased by the latest "economy" action of the Republican Congress.

What happened was that the House slashed $648,000 from the funds for the Food and Drug Administration inspection service.

The agency estimated its needs for the fiscal year 1954 at $5,663,000. The Eisenhower Administration cut this to $5,648,000. And then the House Appropriations Committee chopped this down to $5 million.

Rep. Fogarty (D. R.I.) introduced an amendment to restore $586,000 of the cut, but the House defeated it 100 to 61, after the Committee Chairman Taber (R. N. Y.) made a bitter attack on the agency.

FDA has three functions: health, sanitation and halting the production of gyp articles. In carrying out the first of these objectives its 216 inspectors seize an average of 164 tons of decomposed and otherwise unfit food a week and halt the sale of dangerous drugs.

FOGARTY declared the seizure of decomposed food would be cut in half by the appropriation slash. He said that even now the agency is able to inspect only a small fraction of 1% of the food, drugs and cosmetics it is charged with supervising. The budget slash will reduce the inspection even further.

He also noted that the present operating cost of FDA is only 3.6c per person in the whole U. S. for an entire year. Fogarty said that its drive against gyps and cheats, which would now be sacrificed, saves consumers several times that much, while the "health protection is clear profit."

Charles W. Crawford, FDA commissioner, said "it was our field agents who caught and sent to jail the perpetrators of the Chicago horsemeat-for-hamburger scandal. It was our men who caught the slickers who sold a quarter million pounds of oleo at butter prices and in butter packages.

"Under the proposed cut, we will have to dismiss more than 100 of our 900 employes. Our inspection staff will be cut by 25%."

The cut will stand unless it is restored by the Senate and in joint conference committee.

Food Chain Doubles Profits; Consumers Deeper In Debt

EVERYBODY'S making dough except the consumer—and he's going deeper and deeper in hock.

For instance, the national income in April was at the rate of $283.1 billion a year, which is $300 million more than the March rate and $20.5 million above the April 1952 figure.

But consumers went $501 million deeper into debt during the month. We all owe a total of $26.2 billion between us now, more than we've ever owed at any time in the past and $5.2 billion more than we had on the cuff in 1952.

FOR INSTANCE, the General Foods Corp. and the Safeway Stores food chain system are making so much money even the oil people are envious.

Safeway doubled its net profits in the first 20 weeks of 1952 with sales running only 6% ahead of last year. The take, according to Sec.-Treas. Milton L. Selby, is $1.53 a share compared to 74c for the same period last year. This, he said hopefully, indicates about $3.75 net earnings for the year, as against $2.01 last year.

General Foods boosted its net profits by $2.1 million to $24.8 in the fiscal year ended Mar. 31, an increase of 21% from the year before, it reported.

THE BUREAU of Labor Statistics reported last week that in the 10 days ending May 25, retail food prices rose three-tenths of 1%, largely because of higher costs for fruits and vegetables. The retail food price index stood at 112.1, or 11.5% higher than at the start of the Korean war.

Earnings of 756 corporations averaged 10.4% more in the first quarter of 1953 than in 1952, according to a compilation by the Wall Street Journal. Twenty of 29 industry groups showed sharp gains, airlines leading the way with an increase of 464%.

Installment credit reached a new high in April of just under $19.7 billion, which is $4.9 billion more than the year before. Non-installment credit, mostly charge accounts, jumped $102 million in the month to $6.5 billion. That put us $302 billion further away from solvency than we were in April of last year.

Even the warehouse boys are making heavy dough. Inventories increased $600 million during April to hit $77 billion as prices remained so high many consumers were kept out of the market.

Hobby Supports School Aid Bills

Extension of two laws authorizing federal aid to schools in defense areas was urged before the House Education & Labor Committee last week by Sec. of Health, Welfare & Education Oveta Culp Hobby.

The laws provide funds for building and operating schools attended by children whose parents live or work, or both, on tax-exempt federal property utilized in connection with the defense effort. There will be 558,000 more such children in school next term than two years ago, she testified.

Rent Control Violations Increasing

WIDESPREAD violations of federal rent ceilings where they are still in effect are being reported from all parts of the country, Ben Fischer, National CIO housing director, said last week.

The reports are greatest from cities where Office of Rent Stabilization field offices have been closed, but the ceilings themselves remain in effect, he said.

"Chiseling landlords who raise rents in violation of the control law are subject to legal action," he advised victimized CIO members.

The rent control law expires July 31, and the ORS will go out of existence at that time. The act covers only dwelling units built since 1947 except in critical defense areas, where all premises are covered.

CONTROLS will continue after July 1 only in communities designated as critical defense areas under a new and stricter definition outlined by Congress, and then only on units built since 1947.

An advisory committee appointed by Defense Mobilizer Arthur Flemming went to work last week to determine how many of the 124 areas carrying the designation would continue to have controls.

At its first meeting it recommended that 23 communities be cut from the list. Flemming and Sec. of Defense Charles E. Wilson accepted its suggestions and ordered the places removed from the list. The following day 20 more were removed.

Reuther Named To City Of Hope Council

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany have been elected joint national honorary chairmen of the National Labor Council of the City of Hope, national medical center near Los Angeles.

Others named to the council included Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the CIO Steelworkers.

How to Buy

PENICILLIN COST: "Can you tell me why a shot of penicillin costs so much? How much does the penicillin itself cost?"—A. T. R., Atlanta, Ga.

Answer: According to the Manufacturing Chemists Association, the present wholesale cost of a dose of penicillin is 48c. Some individual doctors may pay more. The doctor's fee of course includes diagnosis and prescription. But since the penicillin itself does not cost much these days, the doctor's fee including a dose of penicillin should not be much more than without penicillin.

It Helps

Oregon is the first state to give working mothers a tax deduction for child care expenses.

The Pacific Northwest state's legislature voted to allow a maximum deduction from state income tax returns of $720 annually for child-care expenditures. The new provision, effective this year, applies only to couples earning a combined maximum of $3000 a year.

State income tax for a young widow with one child, for example, would be cut from $57 to $38 by the new law.

Hot Water Heaters: "I want a reliable hot water heater. I find the prices range from $92 to $192 for 30-gallon capacity, installed. I don't know why the deluxe models would be any more practical than the standard models. Please advise."—Mrs. M. G., East Pepperell, Mass.

Answer: Often a "deluxe" appliance means merely the addition of extra gadgets which don't add to basic usefulness. In the case of water heaters, however, the so-called "deluxe" heaters may have advantages. A good heater and tank save fuel. However, that doesn't mean the most expensive is necessarily the best buy. Compare values on the basis of specifications. First of all, the best heaters carry a ten-year warranty or guarantee on both the heating element and the tank.

IF YOU'RE BUYING a gas heater, make sure it carries American Gas Association approval; if electric, it should have the Underwriter Laboratories seal. These seals assure you the heater model has been approved for safety.

One of the most important factors in economical operation of a heater is how well it's insulated. The best heaters have 2.5-3 inches of insulation, some of the cheaper ones only one inch. You can put your hand on the outside of a well-insulated heater when in operation and feel little or no warmth. Compare the heating capacity of the heaters themselves. A top-quality gas heater of 30-gallon capacity will have a 35,000 BTU rating; a standard-quality one will have a rating of probably 25,000 BTU's.

The better electric heaters generally have two heating elements for the larger tanks. A good-quality 50-gallon heater will generally have a 1000-watt lower element, and a 1500-watt upper.

In tanks, galvanized steel is most widely used and comparatively inexpensive. A tank with a magnesium anode rod offers additional protection against rust. Glass-lined tanks are sometimes used too. These are not subject to corrosion, but only if they are flawless.

Perishable Nylons: "Why cannot something be done about nylon stockings? Before the war, nylons would last from six months to a year. I now have to buy my wife one to two pairs a week, costing from $50 to $100 a year or more."—J. D. B., Independence, Mo.

Answers: The main trouble is that women have been buying sheerer hose. The 51-gauge 15-denier nylons most women buy are not durable, hosiery experts point out. The 51-gauge construction really requires yarn of 30-denier thickness.

The fine 15-denier yarn lasts longer in the more closely-woven 60 or 66 gauge. A woman who doesn't consider the durable 51-30 hose sheer enough, should try the 45-30. These are a little sheerer than 51-30, but not as fragile as the 51-15.

GOP 'Economy' Will Up Load On Schools, Humphrey Warns

THE EISENHOWER Administration's proposed cut in funds to States for vocational education "would only mean imposing a greater burden upon local school districts, or cutting down these vitally important programs."

That's what Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) said as he urged a Senate Appropriations subcommittee to keep funds for these grant-in-aid programs at their present level.

"I have long been convinced," Humphrey declared," that one of the really great contributions to the American educational system has been the grant-in-aid funds to help the states to pay for vocational guidance teachers, to teach high school children trades that will be useful after graduation."

He said he "was keenly disappointed in the Administration's revised budget recommendations that these vocational guidance funds be slashed by 25% under the original budget."

"If such a course were followed," he continued, "it could only mean imposing a greater burden upon local school districts, or cutting down these vitally important programs. I'm afraid it would be the programs that would suffer, as local school districts are already being taxed to their full capacity."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

CIO REP. IRWIN DeSHETLER reports representation election victories for the CIO Auto Workers in Los Angeles, Calif. At the California Cornice (Calcor) Co., the tally was UAW-CIO 110, AFL 93. UAW Rep. Don Garriga was in charge. In 10 plants covered by one master agreement, the UAW-CIO won out over the AFL by a vote of 578 to 255, with the IAM-AFL getting 57. Plants involved were: C. W. Refrigeration, Coldew Manufacturing, Refrigeration Engineering, Weber Aircraft, Weber Showcase, Refrigeration Manufacturing, Lo-Temp Manufacturing, Lard Manufacturing, Super-Co. Manufacturing and Verring Manufacturing.

DeShetler also reports that the CIO Rubber Workers won a representation election at the National Foam Rubber Co., Montebello, Calif., by a vote of 17 to 4 for the AFL.

CIO Rep. David Sternback reports five recent CIO victories in the sugar industry in Puerto Rico. The elections, among workers on five different farms operated by the Land Authority of Puerto Rico, resulted in a total vote of 332 for CIO with 87 against.

CIO REG. DIR. MICHAEL MANN and Vice Pres. Joseph Joy of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers report a dramatic and important victory at the Rahway, N. J., plant of Merck & Co., where the UGCCWA-CIO defeated an independent union that had been entranched for 14 years by a vote of 686 to 606. Participating in the campaign were UGCCW-CIO Dist. Dir. John Dohaney; N. J. Council Pres. Carl Holderman; CIO Rep. Emery Hanscom and UGCCWA Rep. Covert Padsiadlik.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, IUE-CIO, reports winning two elections: GE Service Shop, Cambridge, Mass., IUE-CIO 15, no union 6; and Harmon & Kardon, New York City, IUE-CIO 11, UE 4, no union 4.

CIO Urges Senate To Restore Slashed Fund For Labor Dept.

THE SENATE Appropriations Committee was urged by the CIO last week to reject "unjustified . . . reductions" by the House in appropriations for the Labor Dept., Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, and National Labor Relations Board.

In a letter to Sen. Bridges (R. N.H.), chairman of the committee, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared Pres. Eisenhower's campaign pledges to "build up the Labor Dept." are not only ignored in the appropriation bill, but the legislation is "further weakening an already emaciated department."

"This is repeal by the indirect and irresponsible route of denying funds," Reuther charged, urging the committee and the Senate at least to restore the amounts asked by the President and Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin.

"The Labor Dept.'s appropriation for salaries and expenses amounts to $32 million," Reuther wrote. "This is four-hundreths of 1% of the national budget.

"This is all that the federal government is spending this year for administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, for the production of its vital and essential economic statistics, for research, promotion of industrial safety, the development of apprenticeships, assistance to states, and supervision of the federal-state system of unemployment insurance and public employment services.

"NO WORKER will miss the point that the heaviest House cuts were aimed at the most vital spots in the department—the secretary's office, the solicitor's office, the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Div., the Bureau of Employment Security, the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Bureau of Labor Standards.

"These are the bureaus in which are located policy-making, investigation, enforcement, the assembly of vital payroll and cost of living statistics, and the promotion of decent labor standards.

"Each is cut back by more than 20%. No surer way to emasculate federal labor policy and law enforcement to the point of repeal could be devised."

REUTHER gave a detailed analysis of the effect of budget slashes on each phase of the department's work. He described the cut of 25% in the proposed appropriation for the secretary's office as "a direct personal slap at Pres. Eisenhower's Secretary of Labor."

The House cut in the NLRB budget, lopped $800,000 to $9 million, means still further delays in the already long time required to process cases, Reuther pointed out to Smith.

The H-E-W Dept. reduction of 6.5% under the Eisenhower proposals, he said, means the agency will be required "to reduce disastrously the efficiency" of its operations unless the cuts are restored.

Trade Pacts Approved By House Unit

EXTENSION of reciprocal trade agreements legislation for one year was approved by the House Ways & Means Committee last week, but at the price of turning the non-partisan Federal Tariff Commission into a political machine.

The law was due to expire June 12. It will reach the House, where little discussion was foreseen, this week. Then it goes to the Senate, where the Finance Committee has said it will hold hearings.

THE DELAY in the effective date of extending it is not regarded as serious. Present agreements will remain in effect, but no new compacts can be signed until it is through Congress and signed by Pres. Eisenhower, who had asked the extension.

More serious is a proviso increasing the Tariff Commission membership from six to seven. In the past it has always been a non-partisan agency composed of three Democrats and three Republicans. The proposed legislation breaks sharply with tradition by making it possible for an incumbent administration to dominate it politically.

The extension legislation also authorized a special 17-man commission to make an over-all study of foreign economic policy.

The CIO testified in favor of extending the reciprocal trade treaty authority and for the study commission. It opposed the original bill introduced by Rep. Simpson (R. Pa.), which provided for the politicalization of the Tariff Commission and would have put major curbs on trade agreements.

U. S. Jury Indicts 6 For Florida Racial Violence

SIX MEN, five of them Klansmen, were indicted on perjury charges by a federal grand jury investigating bombings of Negro homes and other outrages in Orange County, Fla.

Two of the men indicted at Miami, William J. Bogar, 54, and Harvey S. Reisner, about 30, both of Apopka, Fla., were former Cyclops of the Apoka Klavern.

The indictments related to various incidents, including the beating of Albert Boykin, Negro CIO organizer, at a crate mill at Apopka in 1950.

Another incident involved the case of two attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Subsequently an attempt was made by Klansmen to waylay the two lawyers and the two newspaper reporters.

UPWA Opens Cudahy Talks

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers and the Cudahy Packing Co. had a preliminary discussion of union demands for substantial wage increases, under a reopening clause in the current two-year contract, at a meeting in Chicago last week.

The session lasted two and a half hours, and another meeting probably will be held shortly. In addition to pay boosts, the union is seeking additional benefits.

The UPWA-CIO represents more than 9000 workers in nine Cudahy plants and can strike under the contract if an agreement is not reached by July 15.

UAW, Economic Advisers Confer On Annual Pay Plan

BASIC ISSUES involved in developing a sound guaranteed annual wage plan were discussed in detail at a two-day meeting in Washington last week by a CIO Auto Workers committee and the 10 distinguished economists the union named to advise it.

The full membership of the committee, known formally as the UAW-CIO Advisory Committee on the Guaranteed Annual Wage, attended the sessions and laid a foundation for another meeting on Sept. 11 and 12 in Detroit.

"We of the UAW-CIO recognize that a guaranteed annual wage, which we have set as the next major collective bargaining goal in our industry, will have a significant impact upon the whole American economy," UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said.

"For that reason we are seeking the best advice so that we can develop the kind of program that will be both feasible and most beneficial to the economy in terms of increased overall purchasing power and stabilization of employment.

"A TRUCE in Korea will reemphasize the need for stability of the economy and for full employment and full production in America in peacetime, and we will need all the tools we can get to bring that about. The guaranteed annual wage is one of those tools.

"This is not only necessary and desirable from the standpoint of the members of our union but will contribute to the stability of the economy as a whole."

Delegates to the UAW-CIO convention in Atlantic City in March made the guaranteed annual wage the union's "next major collective bargaining goal" and authorized appointment of the advisory group.

Douglas Asks Approval Of Refugee Bill

SEN. DOUGLAS (D. Ill.) last week gave his support to Pres. Eisenhower's request for emergency legislation to admit an additional 240,000 immigrants.

In a radio broadcast, Douglas also urged appropriating the unused quotas of immigrants—about 7000 — among especially deserving cases. This he suggested as a substitute for repealing the McCarran Act, which he did not think is possible at this session of Congress.

"One quota, for instance could be used to reunite families," Douglas said, "another quota to bring over those with special skills; still another to rescue those who have been victims of persecution at the hands of the Communists, and the final quota could be used to relieve population pressure."

EXTENSION of the excess profits tax for so long as necessary to produce needed revenue was urged by the CIO in testimony by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the Department of Education and Research.

He appeared last week before the House Ways and Means Committee, which is considering legislation extending the levy to Jan. 1, 1954. It expires June 30.

"The need will continue beyond Jan. 1," Ruttenberg said. "The Administration has said, rather belatedly, but it has said that tax reductions, in the main, are contingent upon the level of defense expenditures.

"While these expenditures may decline slightly in 1954, there does not seem to be much possibility that they will decline sufficiently to bring the budget into balance. The excess profits tax must be extended throughout 1954 at least. The revenue which this tax produces is essential for fiscal strength."

If the tax is not on the statute books next year and the need for revenue persists, Ruttenberg continued, the Administration probably will recommend alternative taxes.

"It appears pretty clear that if alternative types of taxes are recommended," he continued, "they will be some form of sales, excise, manufacturers' tax, or some such tax upon consumption.

"THIS TYPE of tax is regressive. It is based upon the concept that everybody, whether he owns a Cadillac or a jalopy, regardless of income, should pay the same rate of tax. This is contrary to a fundamental tenet of taxation—taxation according to ability to pay.

Ruttenberg boiled down big business criticism of the excess profits levy to four charges: it causes wastefullness and inefficiency; it destroys initiative and incentive; it hits all corporations, not just large profit-makers, and it is administratively unworkable.

"These criticisms are not well-founded," Ruttenberg maintained. "They are trumped-up charges that becloud the main point of opposition.

"The main opposition grows out of the desire to defend the big corporations and reduce their taxes by having them share the tax with smaller corporations, which are not now paying the excess profits tax.

"The excess profits tax is designed to tax only a limited number of corporations—only those whose profits are over and above a certain pre-determined level. This is what the opponents of the excess profits tax do not like. They prefer to have all corporations pay a higher tax, even if their own profits are not increased as a result of the emergency."

Ruttenberg stressed earlier testimony of Treasury Sec. George Humphrey that the tax hits "a relatively small group of corporations" despite claims of its opponents that it is unjust and unfair to small business.

Only a handful of rare exceptions among small business actually pay the levy, Ruttenberg said.

No Lifeboats

"The Republican program reminds me of an iceberg. It is cold. It is slow moving. We are told that it is big and dynamic but yet so little of it shows. Like its Arctic counterpart, the Republican iceberg program is 10% visible, 90% submerged and 100% at sea."

GOOD NEWS! GROWTH NEWS!

TIDELANDS OIL CORPORATION

The United States Senate has voted to turn the Tidelands Oil back to the various States. This would seem to indicate that companies such as Tidelands Oil Corporation, which had previously leased such lands from the States, can soon resume drilling operations for their share of the estimated forty billion dollars in submerged oil.
Tidelands Oil has an undivided half interest in approximately 65,000 acres of these lands, together with Superior Oil Corporation of California.

The Company's stock is still low in price, not yet having reflected the Senate's action. Our special report discusses the growth potentialities of this stock. Write for it now—no obligation.

SOME OIL STOCK promoters hope to make a killing out of so-called "tidelands" oil properties, as evidenced by this ad which appeared in the Wall Street Journal recently after Pres. Eisenhower signed the coastal oil give-away bill.

'Larger Grab' Of Oil Reserves Is Building Up

THE OIL INDUSTRY is reaching out now for the riches it missed in its first grab of undersea off-shore natural resources.

Through its political spokesmen, it is trying to hamstring a bill before the Senate Interior Committee guaranteeing full federal ownership and rights to billions of dollars worth of oil, gas and other natural wealth in the area between the historic boundaries of the coastal states and the outward limits of the continental shelf.

The so-called Tidelands Oil Act, enacted over CIO opposition, set the stage for the industry's grab of the resources under the sea immediately adjoining the coastal states by vesting title to those areas in the states.

"The question now pending in Congress is whether they will get away with the total grab," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote to presidents of CIO international unions and to CIO regional directors, industrial union councils and local industrial unions.

HE SAID the Republicans "are plainly worried by the 'give away' label that was pinned on them by the gallant fight of the Senate liberals" against the first tidelands bill.

"Public pressure cut down the size of the first grab," he noted. "Renewed public pressure can defeat the second and larger grab.

"We urge you to write your senators demanding that they support a bill which will authorize development of the outer continental shelf by the federal government; cover in to the federal Treasury all revenues from such development, and include the Hill Amendment earmarking such revenues for aid to education in all the states."

REUTHER recalled that only one-sixth of the offshore oil reserves were given away in the first bill. The continental shelf, in which the remaining five-sixths lie, extends in the Gulf of Mexico as far as 150 miles seaward.

Lousiana and Texas took the lead in the fight to weaken the bill pending in the Senate.

At hearings before the Interior Committee, Gov. Robert Kennon of Louisiana asked for amendments which would extend the laws and police power of the coastal states to the outer limits of the continental shelf. He also asked that they be allowed to impose severance taxes on oil and minerals taken from the area.

Last week Sen. Long (D. La.), a member of the committee, said he would propose amendments during closed sessions which in effect would give the two states what they want.

He admitted, however, that the chances for their acceptance were "extremely dim."

Foreign Aid Bill Okehed

A $5,312,000 foreign aid bill, totaling $162 million less than the Eisenhower Administration asked, was approved last week by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The Senate Armed Services Committee will scan its military provisions before it gets to the floor, where it faces considerable debate.

The committee slashed the Eisenhower proposal by $166 million, then added $4 million to the $9 million requested for international welfare work for children, use of the full amount being dependent on foreign contributions. The fund for special weapons planning and supply for NATO work took the heaviest cut, from $250 million to $100 million. Various relief funds were cut a total of $6 million.

Better Deal For Uncle Sam Urged On Rubber Plants

A SQUARE DEAL for Uncle Sam and the taxpayers has been urged by the CIO Rubber Workers in testifying on proposed legislation to sell the government-owned synthetic rubber industry to private companies.

URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster expressed approval of the Administration proposal, but urged a House Armed Services subcommittee to tighten a bill by Rep. Shafer (R. Mich.).

He said to accept less than the true value of the plants would be "a scandalous squandering of public funds" and would keep new investors from entering the synthetic industry.

HE EMPHASIZED that if buyers of the plants got them at bargain rates, they would be able to make synthetic rubber at a lower price than new producers.

The URW president stressed the need to protect small companies which would probably be unable to buy any of the plants. He urged Congress to take special care not to increase "the already overwhelming dominance" of the rubber industry by the Big Four firms of Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone and U. S. Rubber.

"Similarly, no company in other industries like oil or chemicals should be permitted to purchase that amount of capacity in any segment of the synthetic industry which would enable it to dominate and possibly control supply and/or price of the output of that segment," Buckmaster said.

"Failure to follow this criterion would violate the spirit and intent" of the Shafer Bill, he declared, and "would place the small rubber fabricator at a severe competitive disadvantage and might even cause his removal from the industry."

In the interest of national security, Buckmaster urged that the buyers be required to maintain the plants in standby condition at all times so that the factories would be capable of producing the same amount of synthetic they produce at the time of the sale.

$65,000 Won In Long Grievance

After nearly four years of negotiations, CIO Steelworkers recently won a whopping settlement in a grievance over a new incentive plan at a National Tube Co. mill at Lorain, O. Retroactive pay totaled $65,000, with individual awards as high as $3700.

'Boom or Doom'—

Reuther Urges 'Crusade' To Block Crash

A PROGRAM for prosperity to "lift America to new standards of family living" with full employment after a Korean truce was unveiled last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

With a warning against a "boom or doom" economic whirlwind, Reuther called for "an economic crusade . . . to save America from a depression which would directly affect the welfare of every American."

He said the nation must create two million new jobs each year through 1956 to avoid a serious economic downturn.

And he said U. S. industry and government—on the basis of "population, productivity, planning"—must find ways of increasing the output of goods and services by $16 billion a year so that in peacetime "we can keep the army of unemployed demobilized."

Boost Buying Power

Reuther proposed a wide-range increase in personal buying power for the millions in low-income and middle-income families and "a full-scale attack on poverty" by government.

He suggested gearing the American economy to "abundance, not scarcity," with average per capita income increased by $265 over the next three years. And he set a goal of $1760 income in 1956 for every man, woman and child.

Specifically, the CIO president proposed a five-point program including wage increases in excess of recent gains in productivity, tax reductions for lower-income families, and a wide-range of governmental action including higher minimum wages, expanded social security and housing programs, and a prepaid medical care program. (See adjoining story.)

Unless such realistic programs are adopted, unless a policy of "drifting" is shelved, Reuther warned, there is in prospect "a new and unpopular draft—a draft into a standing, growing, dangerous army of the unemployed." Such a course, he said, would be "economically insane" and "morally untenable."

Reuther's post-Korean economic proposals were outlined at a Washington press conference, a few days before his scheduled departure with other U. S. labor delegates to the third world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Stockholm, Sweden.

Steps To Full Employment

- Close the gap between lagging wages and rising productivity, with wage increases in excess of current productivity increases.
- Reduce personal income taxes to increase the buying power of millions of lower and middle-income families.
- Give consumers a share through lower prices of benefits received by corporations through lower business taxes.
- Maintain a high output economy with narrowed profit-rate margins "and fair and substantial returns on capital investment."
- "A full scale attack on poverty by governmental programs to aid directly the lower and middle-income groups," including: Boosting the minimum wage from 75c to $1.25 an hour, expanded social security, a fair tax program, an effective housing program, and a government-sponsored adequate medical care program.
- Other programs "to gear America and American thinking to the concept of abundance rather than scarcity."

Reuther's statement was accompied by publication of a report on "Maintaining Prosperity," issued by the CIO Committee on Economic Policy. The committee is headed by CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve.

That report examines economic problems involved in the shift from the quasi-wartime economy of the past three years to one of long-range defense in a possible period of general peace.

Three Key Factors

The CIO study indicates that full employment can be maintained only if the national output of goods and services is raised from the 1952 level of $346 billion a year to a 1956 figure of about $410 billions annually.

Reuther's statement said in part:

"Population — productivity — planning are the three key factors to America's economic future.

"Population is going up—a net increase of 700,000 young men and women are graduating each year into the job market. By 1956 we must create two million jobs for these people.

"Productivity is going up—at a steady rate. New machinery can displace an estimated five million people from their jobs in the next three years, unless new markets and job opportunities are made available.

"Plans now call for a decline in defense spending which has figured so heavily in the economy during the past two and one half years. This will free additional large resources for civilian production.

"Planning—economic planning to assure full employment—is the only key to a solution of these problems of rising population and productivity and declining defense spending.

"We cannot muddle through. Our failure will be measured not merely in terms of depression at home; it will be measured in terms of the despair of the free world and gratification in every totalitarian capital.

"Moscow's most effective fifth column in America is the fear of abundance for all, and inability or unwillingness to face the facts of our economic life.

All Need Prosperity

"America needs prosperity and abundance not just for the fortunate top one-third of our population. We need greater prosperity for the middle-third, including a large number of wage earners who have achieved progress towards decent living standards through the activities of their trade unions in the last 15 years.

"And, equally important, we must move at once to lift the buying power of the submerged lowest third who have enjoyed little economic well-being during recent years."

After detailing specific proposals to expand consumer buying power, Reuther pointed out that "the only foundation for stabilized prosperity and full employment in peacetime is composed of decent wages and salaries, of decent incomes for farmers and small businessmen, and a fair return on invested capital."

Reuther called his program "an economic crusade in which every American, regardless of political party or economic status, must take part . . . There is a challenge to industry, to labor, to government, to professional people and farmers to cooperate in programs—private and public—that will lift America to new standards of family living."

"Timid souls will ask 'how can we do that?' They should be asking, 'can we afford not to do it?,'" Reuther continued.

"Depression, based on outmoded ideas of economic scarcity, is an un-American concept, for it challenges the ideals of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness on which America's democracy is so firmly based.

"The people of Europe and Asia have been haunted by twin fears—the fear of Soviet aggression and American depression. The build-up of our military defenses has lessened the danger of the former; a bold and intelligent build-up of our peacetime economic defenses will remove the danger of depression in America and panic in the free world.

'Bread and Freedom'

"Our friends in the free world know that America has never hesitated to spend billions for war when the moral values of democratic civilization have been attacked by the military power of the totalitarians.

"The faith developed in time of war must be translated into faith in time of peace. Continued prosperity and full employment in America are attainable for a far smaller investment in dollars and human sacrifice.

"Prosperity and full employment in America will help America—and it will strengthen faith in democracy by demonstrating that freedom, economic well-being and personal security are compatible.

"As we move to that goal, we need fear no longer the propaganda of the Communists—for theirs will prove more clearly to be an outworn, discredited and reactionary doctrine rejected by men and women who will increasingly realize that democracy provides not only abstract ideals of justice but bread and peace and freedom for all."

Dulles Repudiates T-H Report Hit By CIO As 'Anti-Labor'

SECY. OF STATE John Foster Dulles last week repudiated a publication of the State Dept. which CIO had protested as "shockingly anti-labor."

In a strong letter of protest, Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the CIO Clothing Workers, called the publication "shockingly anti-labor and replete with factual errors and mistakes."

HE ADDED, "it should be withdrawn from circulation immediately and you should disavow it."

Dulles, in his reply, said "the publication was issued in an unauthorized manner, without receiving the required approval of a responsible officer."

The State Dept. head added that "appropriate disciplinary measures will be instituted based on the issuance of a publication in violation of pertinent instructions."

Each person who had received the publication, Dulles added, "is being notified that the release was issued in error, and that it does not represent the views of the Dept. of State."

In his letter of protest, Potofsky listed six examples "of the anti-labor character of the publication" which he said was "manifest from the list of false accusations, loose adjectives and anonymous criticisms which the document uses against American unions and their leaders."

JACOB S. POTOFSKY
His protest carried

In addition, Potofsky listed nine factual errors about the Taft-Hartley Act contained in the document, allegedly issued as an objective discussion of the act for the guidance of foreign journalists in the United States.

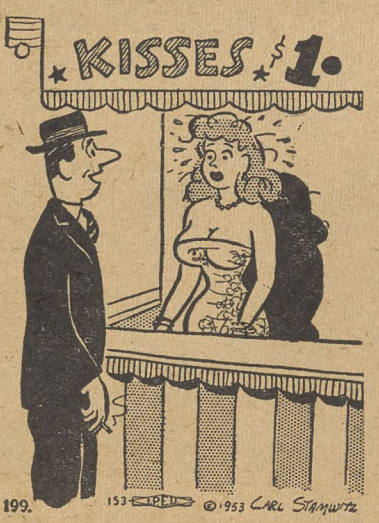
"Mr. Secretary, you well know that the existence of a functioning democratic union movement in this country is one of the most effective answers to the false claim of Communist totalitarians that America is the land of Wall Street imperialism," Potofsky wrote.

"YOU ALSO know the tremendous and constructive achievements of American labor in helping the cause of democracy at home and abroad. These achievements have been attested to by Pres. Eisenhower in public statements.

"Distortions and falsehoods issued in official releases of the State Dept. about the American trade union movement do great harm to all our efforts to promote democracy throughout the world."

On behalf of the CIO International Committee, "and I am sure, for all of the members of the CIO," Petofosky wrote, "I call upon you to disavow this document . . . order its immediate withdrawal from circulation with proper notification to those to whom it has been disseminated that it does not represent the views of the Dept. of State and the U. S. Government."

Dulles advised Potofsky that "this publication was distributed only to a small number of foreign journalists resident in this country, and was not disseminated through the regular overseas and domestic facilities of the Dept. of State or the International Information Administration."



"Is this the worthy cause where every Union member has been donating a day's wages?"

Dulles disavowed the document, reported that disciplinary action had been instituted against the person responsible for issuing it without authorization, and said all who received it were being notified "it does not represent the views of the Dept. of State."

HE POINTED out that "The Foreign Journalists Liaison Staff is a part of the International Information Administration which functions in a semi-autonomous manner and which, as contemplated by the pending Reorganization Bill, will within a few weeks become totally independent of the State Dept. except for foreign policy guidance."

Dulles said he was sending copies of the correspondence with Potofsky to Dr. Robert L. Johnson, Administrator of the International Information Administration, "so that he may determine how to deal with this type of problem."

CASH ON LINE: Shortly after the CIO Auto Workers pledged $100,000 for relief of Flint, Mich., tornado victims, a "down payment" of half that amount was handed Robert Carter, union regional director in the stricken area and a member of the Flint Disaster Relief Committee, by UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey. Vice Pres. John W. Livingston (left) looks on.

Steel Union Gives $25,000 To Aid Tornado Victims

CIO Steelworkers have voted a $25,000 contribution to aid victims of the tornado which whipped Worcester and the Central Massachusetts area.

Taking time out from the executive board meeting called to vote on the new contract with Big Steel, USA-CIO leaders approved the contribution to the Worcester Central Relief Agency.

Some 6000 USA members live in the Worcester area, where the violent storm wrecked thousands of workers homes, injured hundreds and killed nearly 100.

A few days after the Worcester disaster, relief was pledged by the New England Conference of CIO Councils meeting at Boston. Contributions should be sent to the Massachusetts State CIO Disaster Fund, 18 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

Meanwhile, the Michigan CIO Council, turned over the facilities at the FDR-CIO Labor Center near Port Huron. The Council said shelter and meals could be provided for 300 storm victims at the camp, site of CIO summer institutes.

CIO Auto Workers earlier had contributed $50,000 to Flint storm victims and its Michigan locals were pledged to raise at least another $50,000.

NMU Members Idle On East Coast Ships

A STRIKE vote among 45,000 members of the CIO Maritime Union was ordered last week when negotiations for a new contract floundered on the employers' refusal to discuss wage increases.

The referendum was ordered by the union's national council two days after NMU members stopped work under a "no contract, no work," policy. During that period, union members discharged from their ships on completion of voyages refused to sign on for new trips.

Approximately 750 passenger, passenger-cargo and freight vessels operating out of Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports were affected.

The union members' stand hit operation of passenger and passenger-cargo vessels at the height of the summer vacation season, during which it appeared records for travel abroad might fall. The full effect was not immediately felt, however.

Most of the larger U. S. flag passenger-carrying ships were in foreign waters, the operators having revised schedules so they would be outside the country when the NMU contract expired. They will not be tied up until they return to this country.

Kept in port at New York was one luxury liner, the 53,000-ton United States, which had been scheduled to go into drydock at Newport News, Va., for inspection and overhaul. The United States Lines, which owns it, kept the crew which had brought it into port on an overtime basis in the hope of a speedy conclusion of negotiations.

THE NMU said arrangements had been made with the federal government to move promptly cargo ships carrying full loads of freight classified as essential to the defense effort.

The negotiations were conducted by a union committee headed by Pres. Joseph N. Curran, who also is a CIO vice president, and the Committee for the Companies and Agents, Atlantic and Gulf Coasts.

But they refused to talk wages, or agree to arbitration, until after their united front was broken by the crews' refusal to sign articles for new trips. Then they decided to meet union demands.

Meantime, agreement was reached on a new contract between the NMU-CIO and the operators of 26 colliers sailing out of East Coast ports between Portland, Me., and Norfolk, Va. It provides liberalized vacation, overtime, hiring and medical care provisions, and requires owners to transport seamen to home ports after 90 days.

Steelworkers Gain 8.5c In Big Pacts

THE CIO STEELWORKERS and the major basic producers have settled their 1953 wage reopening negotiations with the largest general pay boost yielded by a basic industry this year.

The pattern was set at the climax of a series of bargaining sessions in Pittsburgh when U. S. Steel, industry bellwether, offered a general increase of 8.5c an hour for all employes, including ore miners.

The offer was accepted by the union's 170-man Wage Policy Committee.

Other major producers quickly fell into line. Bethlehem Steel, Republic Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Jones & Laughlin signed the same pact within a matter of hours. Inland Steel inked the agreement in Chicago after the intervening week-end.

The union immediately began offering the settlement to smaller basic producers.

Besides the wage increase, which gives the average worker in the industry a basic rate of about $2.145 an hour, the employers agreed to set up joint labor-management committees to study improved welfare and pension programs with a view to negotiations next year, when the whole contract will be open.

THE UNION'S effort to persuade the companies to establish a similar committee to study the guaranteed annual wage, long a major USA-CIO bargaining goal, was unsuccessful.

However, the USA-CIO scored a victory in wiping out two types of geographical wage differentials it had been attacking for several years.

U. S. Steel and Republic Steel, the only Big Six firms with major operations in the South, yielded at last to union pressure to end long-standing wage differentials with the industry in the rest of the country.

The differential, originally 20c to 30c an hour, had been cut over the years to 5c after the 1952 strike. Now that last nickel will go too—half on Jan. 1, 1954, and the remainder on July 1, 1954.

IN ADDITION, U. S. Steel agreed to end scattered rate differentials affecting some employes of subsidiaries in the southwestern oil fields and a few other areas.

The total value of the U. S. Steel and Republic packages was estimated at about 10c an hour by USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald, who had successfully guided union neogtiators through the first major bargaining sessions since he succeeded the late Philip Murray as head of the union.

The lowest starting rate, in the basic contracts, under the settlement, becomes $1.52 an hour. The common labor rate is now $1.57. That for the highest of the 32 job classifications went up to $3.225. The increase was applied equally to all job groups.

The settlement, reached with a minimum of rancor, tension and negotiating, offered a sharp contrast to 1952. Then negotiations, conducted in an atmosphere of wage and price controls, broke down. The government seized the mills, lost them in a series of court actions, and an eight-week strike followed before a new agreement was signed.

The USA-CIO Wage Policy Committee, in ratifying this year's settlement, called it a "great step forward" and praised McDonald for his "splendid leadership in bringing about the consummation of this highly satisfactory settlement."

McDonald said that higher wages for steelworkers make a contribution to the whole national economy.

"I am happy," he said, "that we were able to resolve our problems over the collective bargaining table. That is the American system — and I like the American system."

HE EXPRESSED the hope that day-to-day relations between the industry and the union would continue "on the same high plane" as the negotiations.

A few days after the settlement, U. S. Steel announced price increases averaging $4 a ton and raising the average mill cost of carbon steel to $120 a ton. Other producers followed suit.

The price boosts reflected not only the wage increase, which the producers could have absorbed easily, but also other increases in costs. Mill owners have been complaining for months that profits have been too low in relation to costs.

Gains In Summary

Main points in the wage reopening settlement between the CIO Steelworkers and the Big Six producers were:

- A general wage increase of 8.5c an hour, effective June 12.
- Establishment of joint-union and company committees to study insurance and pension programs in anticipation of negotiations for new contracts next year.
- Agreement to wipe out the 5c an hour southern differential, in two steps, by U. S. Steel and Republic Steel, only firms with major southern operations.
- Agreement by U. S. Steel to wipe out wage differentials affecting some employes of subsidiary companies in southwest oil fields.

Thompson Named As CIO Director

The last vacancy in the revamped roster of CIO regional directors was filled last week when Hugh Thompson, formerly regional director at Buffalo, N. Y., was appointed to head Region I, covering the New England states.

Thompson's headquarters will be at 73 Tremont St., Boston 8. His territory includes Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Tom Burke Named CIO Legislative Aide

TOM BURKE, former Ohio Congressman, last week was named Chief of Congressional Liaison in the CIO Legislative Dept.

In his new post, Burke will work under Robert Oliver, newly appointed head of the department, with special responsibility for coordinating all information and programs pertaining to Congress. He is resigning as legislative representative for the CIO Auto Workers to assume his new duties with the National CIO.

A former working man, experienced in union activities, Burke rose from the ranks to win prominence in a political career that extends from local to state and national offices.

FROM 1940 to 1942 he was a member of the Ohio Legislature and the following year was elected to the Toledo City Council. He remained a member of that body, becoming vice mayor of Toledo, until his election to Congress in 1948.

Assigned to the House Education and Labor Committee, Burke worked tirelessly throughout the 81st Congress to secure repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and the enactment of fair labor legislation. As chairman of a Labor - Management Relations subcommittee, he conducted extensive hearings on how Taft-Hartley was being used against unions.

THOMAS BURKE

Wage Boost In Steel

The new wage increase negotiated well before the bargaining period deadline by the CIO Steelworkers and various steel companies will bring great benefits to the union's members and the communities in which they live.

The negotiations were an example of collective bargaining at its best. They were conducted in reasonable fashion and they were productive of splendid results.

In steel, as in the electrical, auto, clothing and other industries, these negotiations have shown that when management approaches the collective bargaining table in a fair spirit, the union will strive for a speedy settlement that brings equity and justice to both parties.

Some newspaper editorial writers, of course, want to give the credit for these successes not to the collective bargaining process but to the GOP victory last November.

Any thoughtful reflection on the matter, however, would remind those writers that the increases would not have been forthcoming without strong and determined unions, without the memory that they have been willing to strike for what they believe is right and fair.

East Berlin

The hearts of American workers go out to the brave men and women in East Berlin who have dared to resist the Communist dictatorship.

They act in the great democratic tradition—and many of them are paying for it with their lives. Their objectives, like those of decent people everywhere, are for freedom—for free elections, for free unions, for elementary human rights, for decent standards of living.

The workers of East Berlin—who set off this new shot heard round the world—have lived for eight miserable years under the ever tighter straitjacket that the Soviet occupying force and its puppet government have imposed.

They have provided an heroic answer to the question that has plagued the free world during the post-war years: do the workers and farmers of the Soviet satellites preserve their will and spirit for democracy? That answer is a mighty "yes."

We may not know for months or years the final effect of these great demonstrations in East Berlin. But one fact is clear: they have dealt a death-blow to the claims of the Kremlin masters that they have the allegiance of the people of their conquered lands.

Action, Now

Debate will begin on the Cordon Bill, which specifically insures federal control and development of the continental shelf—the part Congress did not give away when it passed the offshore oil bill recently.

There's just enough time, now, for you to wire your senator to support the Cordon Bill. It's the measure, pledged by Sen. Taft and others, which would protect that five-sixths of the nation's off-shore oil that is left.

Congress should pass an honest bill, plus the Hill Amendment to earmark oil royalties for the schools. The oil lobby won't like it, but Congress can afford to offend the lobbyists for a day, particularly with the 1954 elections drawing near.

Bringing Home The Bacon

In Other Words—

'There Are Two Wars In Korea'

A truce may end the fighting in Korea, but the task of repair and reconstruction is still to begin. Some of the bitter human facts behind the war are discussed by Dr. Charles R. Joy, writer and until recently head of the CARE mission in Korea.

By DR. CHARLES R. JOY

MOST OF THE PEOPLE of South Korea will go to bed hungry tonight. Many will not go to bed at all—unless you can call a heap of rags on the sidewalk or a straw mat in some alley a bed.

Among these homeless will be thousands of young children. The orphanages cannot take them in; there is no other shelter for them.

They wander about until they die, frozen and starving—little children who lost their universe when they lost their parents.

Those are some of the grim facts of the human tragedy war has wrought in Korea. You want figures? An estimated five million people have been killed or injured since the Communists crossed into South Korea on June 25, 1950—more casualties than America has suffered in all the wars in which it has ever been engaged, and the end is not yet.

We Spend Too Little

Property destruction to date is figured at $3 billion, and the end is not yet. Half the population, some 10 million persons, are dependent on relief because they are refugees who have lost their homes and lands, or because the frightful inflation and economic collapse have destroyed their ability to support themselves.

There are no figures, though, to measure the unspeakable misery that exists everywhere. The free world is spending some $5 billion a year to fight aggression in Korea.

But too many of us forget that there are two wars there, not one. And for that second war—the war against human misery—we are spending far too little.

Total relief aid contributed through both governmental and private voluntary agencies is tragically inadequate for the enormous need in this stricken land, where 2,500,000 refugees wait in vain for a chance to return to their old homes; where 3,500,000 war sufferers who have lost their houses, or their limbs, or the husbands and sons who were their mainstay, wonder if the future holds any hope for them; where an additional four million people have been plunged into wretched poverty.

The superintendent of the Taegu City Children's Home is a woman who loves children, though she has none of her own. She has over 60 youngsters at the home. Yet every morning she goes to the orphanage gate and listens for a baby's cry, for often in the night some poor mother leaves her infant on the steps. She said to me: "I cannot close the gate on these little ones, and somehow I have always found a way to provide for them."

The Gate To Our Hearts

On every doorstep in America some Korean baby waits, abandoned and forgotten because of this cruel war. We cannot shut our eyes and our ears and expect that baby to disappear. It waits, to see whether the gate to our hearts will be opened.

We can answer the plea, if we will. Said my friend of the Taegu home: "I could not take the babies in if it were not for the CARE packages I have received so often."

The food, the blankets, the fabrics for warm clothes that the people of America send in CARE packages will open the doors of life and affection for the little Korean children who cry out there in the cold.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

IT MAY SEEM ASTONISHING that Pres. Eisenhower, after five months in office, is still the biggest enigma of the Administration "new team."

Yet that is what he is considered by most experienced Capital observers, to whom Sen. Taft's mind and purposes, in comparison, appear lucid and understandable.

One example arises from Ike's off-the-cuff comment at Dartmouth College in denunciation of "book burners," and his subsequent insistence in a news conference that he hadn't meant Sen. McCarthy, that he wasn't talking about State Dept. libraries abroad, and that he really hadn't meant much of anything except that Americans should not be afraid to read anything they considered decent.

The Dartmouth College appeal against "book burners" was clearly spontaneous. The text, as recorded, showed the President's now-familiar looseness of phrase when he talks informally from his enthusiasms.

Yet how could one assume that Ike did not know the public situation in which he was speaking? The newspapers had been full of stories about McCarthy's attacks on American libraries abroad and about State Dept. officials burning some books and banning books by anti-Communist liberals as well as by party-liners.

The newspapers had reported the State Dept. "directives" first instructing officials abroad to prohibit books by Communists, "etc., etc." and next instructing them to remove from American libraries anything not in the "best interests" of the United States.

Conservative editorialists, who despise McCarthyism, promptly hailed the Dartmouth speech as meaning what it seemed to say. They got no comfort when reporters finally had a chance to ask Ike about it.

He never discusses personalities, the President said rebukingly to a reporter who asked whether he had meant to criticize people of the "school of thought" of McCarthy. He did not care whether the State Dept. abroad "burned pro-Communist" books or not. He did not know exactly what State Dept. policy "directives" had been issued after Sen. McCarthy had frightened the daylights out of Sec. John Foster Dulles again.

The Dartmouth speech against "book burning," in short, was dead and repudiated—one can only marvel at the President's motive in uttering it originally.

Objections To TVA

A second example of the Eisenhower enigma came when a reporter asked for an example of what the President, in a public speech a little earlier, had criticized as the "creeping Socialism" of the past 20 years. The answer: The Tennessee Valley Authority.

The President assured one and all that he wasn't going to kill the TVA. But he complained that people still came demanding more federal funds for the valley, that taxpayers everywhere were taxed to subsidize one area, that the federal government had a monopoly of power in the area, that the valley tried to seduce industries from elsewhere to remove to the TVA country to get cheap electricity rates.

There is another viewpoint from which to approach this issue.

Taxpayers everywhere do not, in fact, put up money for TVA power installations. They advance money, but the money is repaid to the Treasury by earnings from the sale of power.

The TVA is in no sense a "bureaucratically" controlled creature of monstrous federal government. It is an independent regional agency. Every penny of advanced funds voted by Congress is obtained by the sweat and efforts of the people of the TVA country itself—the people's electrical cooperatives, members of Congress and state and municipal officials.

The Tennessee Valley has blossomed industrially and agriculturally since the rivers were dammed, floods checked, phosphate fertilizers produced, navigation improved, and cheap public power made available. The Valley's people are richer and healthier. But TVA has not prospered primarily by robbing other sections of industries. Entirely new industries have been created there because of cheap public power. Aluminum and the atomic bomb are examples.

The late Sen. George Norris of Nebraska, a true follower of the liberal Republican tradition of Theodore Roosevelt, 20 years ago was the "father" of the TVA. It is an enigma when a new Republican President, appearing to be excited by the memory of his GOP predecessors, repudiates the work of Norris and the public power of which Teddy Roosevelt was the first champion.

● ● There is friction between the Democratic National Committee and some senators about how to use Adlai Stevenson.

Senators who admire Stevenson, and think he is still the most likely Democratic secret weapon for 1956, think he should first make "non-partisan" reports to the people, then speak at partisan dinners, then revert to the role of "statesman" and "non-partisan" on various occasions.

The problem may be solved when everybody gets to talk to Stevenson—who demonstrated during the campaign last year that he has ideas of his own, including a conscience about the party's debt and a distaste for having anyone claim to do his thinking.

Book Review—

We're Starting To Pay The Price Of McCarran-Walter Act Curbs

MONTHS AGO, when the Italian election campaign between democratic center parties and Fascist and Communist extremes was just beginning, the United States received a warning that our domestic keep-out immigration policies might tip the election scales along the Mediterranean.

Typical, for example, was the report of Msgr. John O'Grady, executive secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Charities and a member of former Pres. Truman's Commission on Immigration.

"There is a great danger," the churchman said, "lest many Italians, on the basis of complete disillusionment in regard to our immigration legislation, may vote for the Communists in the next election . . ."

A few days ago the Italians voted, and some of that prediction came true. The totalitarian parties showed sharp gains, and the governing alliance of democratic parties failed to win a clear majority.

Second Guessers Are Vocal

In Congress, second-guessers were vocal. Sen. Hendrickson (R. N.J.) struck at the failure of the House and Senate to approve Pres. Eisenhower's request for approval of emergency legislation to admit 240,000 refugees in the next two years.

Whether the question was emergency admission of refugees or of overwhelming fundamental U. S. immigration policies, the Congress has had plenty of warnings from Truman and Eisenhower alike.

What's wrong with discriminatory bars against immigration—a U. S. policy that was only reinforced, not introduced, by the McCarran-Walter Immigration Law—is one problem examined by Edward Corsi in a new booklet. And beyond that he looks toward a fair, adequate immigration program for 20th Century America.

The former U. S. Commissioner of Immigration has written "Paths To The New World: American Immigration—Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow." It is one of the series of topical Freedom Pamphlets published by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

In this "nation of nations," Corsi points out, far more than half of present-day Americans are either immigrants or descended from immigrants in the 19th Century or later.

"The great expansion of American industry . . . would have been impossible without the muscles and the brains of new Americans," he emphasizes.

"When an adult immigrant arrives he adds to the economy the equivalent of a capital investment of perhaps $10,000 which the country of emigration has invested in raising and educating him from childhood. Many bring with them skills and experience which enable them to give employment to others."

Racist Myths Punctured

Corsi points out that restrictions on immigration—begun with the first quota system in 1921—reflect fundamentally a belief that the U. S. economy had reached a peak and would not expand in the future.

Actually, he emphasizes, the expanding U. S. economy needs replenishment with the brawn, skill and brains of new Americans.

Many myths of the racists are punctured by Corsi in his review. For example:

"If as many as 500,000 immigrants are admitted annually, will this lead to increased unemployment?

"In the entire history of our country, there is no evidence that unemployment was caused by immigration. . . . Careful studies have shown that in a growing nation immigration has little effect on the volume of unemployment, or per capita income and on wages. There was a striking correspondence between the states in which high per capita income existed and in which there were a high proportion of immigrants and new foreign stock."

A proper immigration policy is high on the list of unfinished business in the Republican Congress. Edward Corsi's "Paths To The New World" will help to get that job done. —W.M.

Railroads Come Back For More

(By Public Affairs Institute)

WHEN THE FIRST railroads were operated some 150 years ago, many persons were fearful of them. Some waited patiently for them to fall apart so we could return sensibly to the horse and carriage. And some were like a Charles Dickens character convinced that the whole thing was "unconstitoonial."

Today, when railroads are the backbone of a great and growing country, this sounds amusing. Railroads have become a great power which can play a major role in determining the economic well-being of large areas or large groups of people.

Freight rates, for example, help to set the price of products. If they are increased, it means higher prices for consumers and higher costs of materials for producers. Higher rates also mean lower income for farmers.

Your Stake In Bill

That is why everyone has a stake in a little publicized bill, already passed by a Senate committee, which would make it easier for the railroads to obtain rate increases from the Interstate Commerce Commission. This is the story:

Since June 30, 1946, the railroads have received ICC approval for 11 general freight rate increases. Every petition has resulted in some increase. Freight rates are now about 80% higher than at the close of World War II.

The railroads contend that these increases have not been high enough and they have not been granted promptly enough. They are supporting a bill, S. 1461, which requires the ICC to grant interim increases within 60 days after a request has been filed and the ICC finds any increase justified.

The purpose of the bill is set forth in the title: "Quick-Rate-Increase Amendment to Interstate Commerce Act." The carriers may request an increase to meet small advances in wage or material costs. However, under the bill the ICC must authorize rates high enough to meet the standards of "sound credit and attract equity capital."

No one knows how high freight and passenger rates must be to meet these standards. The requirements would be new to the ICC. They would conflict with a rule of rate making which required the commission to guard against rate increases that would prevent producers in the South and West from marketing their output in Eastern markets.

Averages compiled by the U. S. Agriculture Dept. show that 20 railroad stocks have risen 300% since 1942—from $28.01 per share to $112.21. On the other hand, 30 industrial stocks have risen only 161%. Investment analysts usually recommend railroad stocks as sound investments. A recent publication of the ICC declares that, percentagewise, the railroads had more income available in 1952 to meet fixed charges than any year back through 1890.

In some ways Henry David Thoreau posed this issue many years ago when he said: "We do not ride on railroads; they ride upon us." This bill does affect every one of us.

"The seven o'clock news was so discouraging that it prostrated me for two hours."

'Unionize The Organized'—

Indiana School Pushes CIO's Program

"We have a job not only to organize the unorganized, but we have a job of educating and unionizing the organized."

That's what Walter P. Reuther said in his acceptance speech after election as CIO president a few months ago.

And that's what the Indiana CIO Council did at its education conference last week at Purdue Univ., Lafayette, Ind. Some 300 unionists-students attended the conference, which was sponsored by the Indiana CIO Education and PAC Depts.

"CIO programs are failing for lack of education. If our people knew what the programs are, they would do something about them. We hope the conference will be the spark."

Should Be Spark

It should be the spark, for the three general assembly sessions and the meetings of the nine workshops were directed at explaining CIO programs. The workshops covered such subjects as political action, community service, farmer-labor relations, and civil rights and FEPC.

The Indiana CIO Council considers the education conference so important that it amended its constitution last year to provide "at least one state-wide CIO education and PAC conference shall be held each year." The convention also decided that "all action taken at these conferences shall be considered a mandate to the Indiana State CIO officers."

"Meetings like this are a long step toward getting you and your Washington CIO staff together on the legislative picture," said Tom Harris, CIO associate general counsel, at the assembly opening the conference.

Coat-tail Riders

"Men like Rep. McConnell (R. Pa.), chairman of the House Labor Committee, and Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) believe that it was Eisenhower who pulled them through. They want to be returned to office.

"They don't want to commit any anti-labor act that will cut down the margin Ike gave them."

"CLASS DISMISSED!"—Like any other pupils, these students at educational conference of the Indiana CIO Council wear happy smiles as they leave class. The conference was held at Purdue Univ., in Lafayette, Ind.

Harris warned that if the Democrats lose a congressional by-election, men like McConnell and Capehart will be led to believe that the Democrats will lose in the 1954 congressional contests and "will throw caution to the wind."

"I urge you at all costs not to let that happen," Harris concluded.

Harris also listed the shortcomings of the Eisenhower Administration. He emphasized the significance of the passage and the Presidential signing of the coastal oil "give-away" bill, and the failure of Eisenhower to make good his promise to improve the Taft-Hartley Act.

Failures of the Eisenhower Administration also were catalogued by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.).

"If you think the 80th Congress was a do-nothing Congress, wait until the 83rd Congress is over," Morse said. "It will be the greatest give-away Congress in 50 years."

The Independent Senator said the backers of the tidelands oil bill "don't even know what they gave away."

Morse declared that bill does not even mention the boundaries of the submerged land that was given to the states. He added that when Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.) was pressed to tell just what lands were given to the states, he answered that the matter would have to be decided by the Supreme Court.

He pointed out that the Supreme Court had decided three times that the submerged oil lands belong to U. S., and predicted more years of litigation are ahead.

Morse told of the efforts of the big utility companies, encouraged by some officials of the Eisenhower Administration, to weaken the federal hydroelectric and irrigation program.

"To turn power over to the private utilities at the bus bar of the dams is to turn the dams over to them," he declared.

Morse recalled the 22-hour speech he made in the Senate against the tidelands oil bill.

Just Introduction

"If they try to get away with this give-away program, that 22-hour speech will merely be an introductory one," he told an audience that frequently interrupted him with applause.

The need for intensified political action was brought home to the students time and again.

"All things we discussed today at the workshops had one basic foundation — legislation," declared H. J. Noel, Indiana PAC director, at the end of the first day session.

The delegates were told in a report on the 88th Indiana General Assembly, "we have only scratched the surface in enlisting the type of support necessary to enact the legislative program adopted by the delegates" to the 1952 State CIO convention.

"Progress for Indiana workers in the 88th General Assembly was limited to a faltering step in workmen's compensation and FEPC," said the report. "The door was opened for a slum clearance program by private enterprise. Anti-union legislation was introduced and died in committee."

The conference concluded with a banquet at which John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president, was the principal speaker, and at which diplomas were awarded to the students successfully completing their courses.

—F. R.

He Wore A Tie —And Pays Fine

"It cost me 25c to make this speech," Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.), told students at the Indiana CIO education conference.

He was referring to Roy Newer, president of the Fort Wayne CIO Council, who was named "sheriff" to keep order at the conference, or one of Newer's deputies. To establish his authority, Newer "fined" anyone wearing a tie two bits.

'Unions Must Give Meaning To Democracy Abroad'

IT'S UP to American trade union members to make democracy meaningful to the rest of the world, Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, told the Indiana CIO education conference.

As a labor adviser to the Economic Cooperation Agency and the Mutual Security Administration before taking his new post, Oliver crossed the Atlantic 22 times in less than two and a half years to visit countries in Europe and Asia.

"We have to make democracy mean to the people of the world a means to solving their problems—not a solution but a means to finding a solution," Oliver said.

He pointed out that in country after country in the Far East and Europe which he visited his "union credentials"—his CIO card—meant "much more to the people of those countries than any official government credential or any fancy diplomatic title."

Oliver also said that Victor G. Reuther, CIO representative in Europe, knows more about and understands better the problems of European people than anybody he could think of.

Oliver said the Communists are alert to the importance of the labor movement. He said that the day before he arrived in Indonesia, 75 Indonesian Communists, who were trained a year in Moscow and Peiping returned and took over the labor movement.

"It isn't the preachments of Karl Marx, or the love for or loyalty to the Soviet Union that attracts people to Communism; it is discontent, the poverty, the want and the turning anywhere to false promises and hopes," Oliver said.

He said that he was not surprised at the results of the recent Italian elections, in which the Communists and the left-wing Socialists polled more votes than in the previous nationwide election. They got eight million votes or 35% of the total.

"These people voted for a solution of their problems, problems that are going unsolved," Oliver said. "They did not vote for a Communist solution, but for any solution."

WORKSHOP SESSION—Ted Silvey, secretary of the CIO Community Services Committee, tells about a pamphlet at the community services workshop. Workshop coordinator was Mrs. Mary Salisbury, Indiana CIO vice president.

'Roll The Union On'—

Insurance Workers Set Their Sights High

By FRED ROSS

"We're gonna roll the union on!"

With these words ringing in their ears, some 160 delegates representing 15,000 insurance agents ended the first convention of CIO's newest union, the Insurance Workers of America, at Cleveland.

The refrain from the famous labor song was quoted by Richard T. Leonard, retiring chairman of the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee.

The new union was chartered by CIO as successor to the temporary organizing committee.

The insurance workers have rolled their union on. They have come a long way since the CIO, only three years ago, granted them the committee charter so they could rebuild their union from the wreckage of the Communist-dominated Office & Professional Workers, which had been expelled from the CIO. Even before the expulsion of UOPWA, they had fought the Communists tooth and nail.

Round-The-Clock

All committees received convention praise, but particularly hard working was the constitution committee headed by Joseph Baldwin of Boston.

Drafting the new constitution required more time than any other subject. Particularly thorny problems were the provisions on the duties of the first and second vice presidents, and on the name of the new union.

They also elected officers from the ranks of insurance agents. Leonard had announced weeks prior to the convention that, in accordance with CIO policy of not having CIO representatives as union officials, he was not a candidate for office.

Helfgott and Brisbane were vice chairman and secretary-treasurer respectively of the IAWOC, while Helfgott is a former president of the big New York City Local 1706, which played a leading role in the formation of the committee.

A CIO Veteran

O'Dell has been a CIO member since 1938, and has served on the executive board of IAWOC since it was set up.

O'Dell also was a representative of Mercer County (Trenton) in the New Jersey House for two terms beginning in 1945. He was one of the backers of the State Fair Employment Practices Committee bill, which was enacted during his first term.

A Prudential agent, O'Dell is married and is the father of six children.

Nicholson has been active in IAWOC in the Boston area, helping to prepare for victory in the forthcoming Labor Board election among the Metropolitan Life agents there.

He has been a John Hancock agent 10 years, is married and is the father of one son.

All the candidates were opposed, except Helfgott. Robert Rhodes, Philadelphia, won a standing ovation from the delegates when he withdrew before the votes were counted to make O'Dell's election unanimous.

How well the insurance agents had rolled their union on was related in the report to the convention by Leonard who was associated with IAWOC since December 1951, serving under the late Allan S. Haywood, who was the first chairman.

"Without exception we have raised the weekly earnings of every one of our members," he said. "In many cases, annual and semi-annual negotiations have brought two and three rounds of increases to the membership.

Wage Gains Told

"In John Hancock alone, the IAWOC-CIO has netted the agents an average increase of better than $20 a week. Prior to the signing of the contract in August 1951, Hancock agents averaged $84 a week; today, these same agents average over $105.

"Another important compensation gain has been reflected in both Hancock and Metropolitan Life contracts through the establishment of $60 weekly minimums. While the minimum may not directly affect the paychecks of many agents, it creates an important precedent.

"For the first time, these two companies have agreed that their agents have a right to be guaranteed a decent living and that they should not be used merely as producing machines — forced to sell to exist."

Big Job Ahead

The convention praised Leonard and Pieper in resolutions and made them honorary co-chairmen of the new union with the right to participate in all proceedings and deliberations. Other convention resolutions lauded Ash, Harris, and Abramson.

Discussion brought out the great unfinished task of completing the organization of some 1.5 million insurance agents and insurance office workers.

With three hard years and the difficult work of the convention behind them, the delegates left Cleveland ready to work on that unfinished business.

THE CIO Insurance Workers at their founding convention dedicated their union "today and forever" to the memory of Allan S. Haywood.

Haywood was the first chairman of the CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, which grew into a full-fledged union.

"We shall remain steadfast in our faith in his credo of universal brotherhood and a better world for all who live in it," the delegates declared in a resolution passed at memorial services for Haywood.

"To this purpose, with the knowledge that he would will it, and in the memory of Allan S. Haywood, we dedicate our union today and forever."

Adolph Germer, CIO national representative, who knew Haywood for 40 years, said:

"We played our part together when injunctions were the order of the day, when state police were sent out against workers trying to assert the simple right of organizing."

Germer said "it is hard for Americans today to believe" there were such times.

'A Heroic Role'

Haywood, he continued, "played a heroic role that every working man and woman should consider it his or her duty to follow. No greater homage can be shown him than that every worker dedicates himself to continue the work that he and our other valiant soldier, Philip Murray, laid out for us."

Pres. Mortimer Gellis of the Insurance Workers' big Local 1706 in New York City, said the agents had been helped by Haywood since 1937, when insurance workers started to organize.

"He walked with the mighty as an official of the CIO," said R. J. Thomas, who was assistant director of organization under Haywood and has a similar post under John V. Riffe, new CIO executive vice president.

"But when the task which required that association was done, he went back to the people he loved, the people who needed him to build the labor movement."

Other speakers included Richard T. Leonard, retiring chairman of IAWOC, and the Rev. George Higgins of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

'Buy Your Policies From Union Agent'

The CIO Insurance Workers want union members to buy policies only from union agents.

The Insurance Workers' convention authorized publicizing of the slogan: "Life and accident and health and hospitalization insurance should be purchased by union labor, from union insurance agents only."

To help other union members recognize them, the Insurance Workers authorized the creation of a button "or other type of insignia."

Reuther Recalls Father's Job In Backing Insurance Union

THE CIO pledged its full support to help build the Insurance Workers into "a strong organization like it has in other industries."

That won the delegates' attention, but what won their hearts was Reuther's revelation that he knew their problems because his father was a Metropolitan Life agent.

He recalled his father worked in the brewing industry in West Virginia, but was blacklisted for union activity. Then his father lost his eye, couldn't get a manual job and went to work as an insurance agent.

"Dad used to come home at the end of a long, hot day, his heart breaking because he had to collect 25c from needy families to keep their policies from lapsing," Reuther said.

"But when he was really hot was when the company sent somebody from New York to give the agents a pep talk. He said some day the agents would organize to win the security and the recognition due them instead of being treated as colonial agents of the companies."

Reuther also told of the aims of the CIO in the U. S. and abroad. He said the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which the CIO belongs, is "doing more in fighting Communists than any other agency."

ICFTU's work in trying to relieve poverty particularly in the Far East was described by John Brophy, coordinator of the CIO Free World Labor Fund, who urged the delegates to get their locals to contribute to the fund.

11th State Defeats 'Right To Work' Bill

LABOR is continuing its winning fight against "right to work" bills designed to hog-tie unions. Oklahoma has just become the eleventh state to turn down the proposition, with three "right to work" bills shelved in committee as the Legislature adjourned.

So far this year, the measures —outlawing all forms of union security and establishing the open shop as supreme — have been introduced by business groups in 34 states.

They haven't been enacted, yet, in one this year.

Labor Press Associated reported the strong case of Oklahoma CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods against the measures was assisted by House Speaker James C. Nance in blocking floor action on the bills.

Nance, in small town newspapers which he publishes, warned the real purpose of the bills was "to weaken and, if possible, outlaw unions."

New Jersey

With the Legislature in its closing weeks, CIO urged strengthening of a Senate-approved state rent control law.

State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman urged a 15% limit be put on possible rent increases, that "special" increases be curtailed, that criminal penalties be provided.

CIO also asked approval of Assembly-passed bills which would increase maximum unemployment and disability benefits to $36 weekly.

Approval of nine other CIO-endorsed bills was asked by Holderman "if the 1953 Legislature is to redeem its poor record on important social legislation."

Michigan

A Republican-sponsored reapportionment law has been signed reluctantly by Gov. Mennen Williams.

State CIO described the redistricting measure as a "phony." While it will increase slightly the representation for Detroit and other industrial cities, outstate agricultural areas will have a majority of legislative seats.

Illinois

A CIO-supported FEPC bill last week was passed by the Illinois House 81 to 25 and sent to the Senate. Gov. Stratton (R.) backed the measure, but it was the Democrats who passed it. For the bill were 56 Democrats and 25 Republicans; opposed were one Democrat and 24 Republicans.

CIO protests were urged against a Senate-committee approved bill writing employer restrictions on unemployment insurance into law. The bill would increase weekly benefits by $3 to a $30 maximum, but add several sections denying payment to unemployed workers.

The State CIO said "labor cannot be sold for $3 unemployment compensation amendments that will seriously cripple the act and harm every worker."

California

"Continuation of the long-term legislative stalemate" marked the 1953 legislative session at Sacramento, State CIO Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol commented as the Legislature adjourned.

Liberal bills generally were stymied by the Republican majority, he said. Only major gain was a $5 increase in disability insurance to $35 weekly and boosting of hospital benefits from $8 to $10 a day. On the other hand, workers receiving severance pay—such as CIO Newspaper Guild members—were disqualified for that period from receiving unemployment compensation.

Despol cited defensive victories against "a flood of anti-labor and anti-progressive measures," including "right to work" bills, sales tax increases, curbs on initiatives, and Sen. Jack Tenney's (R. Los Angeles) "America Plus" program to legalize discrimination.

AN ESTIMATED $1 million a year in improved unemployment compensation benfits was wrested from the Maryland Legislature by organized labor in a turbulent session that ended recently.

The new act, which went into effect June 1, raised maximum benefits from $25 to $30 a week; increased from $2 to $5 the amount a beneficiary can earn weekly in part time employment without losing a corresponding proportion of his benefit; and made $2 weekly allotments for dependent children payable from the general unemployment compensation fund instead of deducting them from the full amount the beneficiary is entitled to and thereby reducing the number of weekly benefits.

The improvements were among a number of triumphs listed by Charles A. Della, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland CIO Council and its legislative representative at Annapolis, in a preliminary report to the council. For all of the victories he gave credit to the United Labor Policy Committee, composed of CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods.

"IN CHECKING over the legislative reports from other state councils," Della reported to the State Council, "I find that while we in Maryland did not get everything we wanted, we fared much better than other states."

The united front of legitimate unions also supported a series of amendments to the workmen's compensation laws that resulted in substantial improvements.

Maximum weekly payments for total disability, which were $12 a week when the first law was passed in 1914, were increased from $32 to $35 weekly. The CIO had sought a $40 top. The ceiling for weekly payments for total disability was boosted from $10,000 to $12,500.

The ULPC beat back two attempts to push a "millionaires' amendment" through the Legislature, one of them a disguised effort that Della sniffed out and defeated almost single-handed. This is the resolution that has popped up in many states memorializing Congress to call a constitutional convention to limit the federal taxing power to 25%.

A "right to work" bill, another sleeper, was killed by a Senate committee when labor spokesmen presented an impressive array of facts to demonstrate that it was bad for the State and its people. A bill to scrap the present Child Labor Act and replace it with outmoded legislation repealed several years ago also was fought by the ULPC and died when a Senate committee reported it unfavorably.

Two harsh garnishee bills likewise were defeated. A labor-supported bill to authorize the appointment of an additional workmen's compensation commissioner, so as to reduce the backlog of unadjudicated claims, was approved. A limited rent control enabling bill was defeated despite strong labor support.

Plan To Close Loopholes On Campaign Spending Urged

SHARP new curbs on high-wide-and-handsome political campaign spending were proposed in a bi-partisan measure introduced in the Senate.

Sponsored by Sens. Hennings (D. Mo.), Hayden (D. Ariz.), and Hendrickson (R. N. J.), the bill would also require candidates to list all persons to whom jobs had been promised. All three sponsors were members of a Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections for the last two years.

THE BILL would greatly increase legal spending but would include in the new ceilings all funds spent by various groups in a candidate's behalf.

Earlier in the session, the CIO Political Action Committee had urged such action. Testifying for CIO, PAC Dir. Jack Kroll had called for an end to the legal fiction which enables candidates to spend young fortunes, while reporting their campaign expenditures as mere "peanuts."

The Senate bill would set the same ceilings for primary campaigns, which are exempt under present laws.

In a Senate speech, Hennings said present laws are "shockingly obsolete and are riddled with loop-holes."

He characterized the failure of present laws to deal with primaries as making the entire control effort "an empty gesture" because in many states a primary victory amounts to election. This is true in the South for Democrats and for Republicans in some New England areas.

The new proposal provides more generous limitations on election spending because of higher radio and television campaign costs. It also provides for stricter accounting and fines and jail sentences for violators.

New Court Ruling Tightens Curb On Racial Covenants

THE OWNERS of real estate restricted by racial covnants cannot be sued for damages based on its sale to non-whites, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled last week.

The six to one decision, spelled out in an opinion by Justice Sheman Minton, strengthens the high court's 1948 ruling that while voluntary racial covenants are not illegal, they cannot be enforced in the courts.

The new decision outlaws the possibility of neighbors collecting damages when a person in a community where the use of property is restricted by deed to one group sells it to someone outside the group. The restrictive clause has been widely used in the general pattern of segregation, particularly of Negroes, and less often to discriminate against other racial and religious minorities.

THE RULING is in line with many recent court decisions breaking the artificial barriers that discrimination has erected between whites and Negroes. It followed by one week a Supreme Court decision that in effect opened all eating places in the District of Columbia to Negroes.

That ruling was hailed by IUE-CIO Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, chairman of his union's National Civil Rights Committee, as a major step in the fight to abolish all discrimination in Washington.

"The Supreme Court's action," he said, "is convincing evidence that we are moving steadily forward toward the realization of full social and political justice, and it also proves that our talk about an expanding democracy and human rights has meaning and substance."

Lever Bros. Strike Ends

CIO CHEMICAL Workers last week reached agreement with the Lever Bros. following an 87-day strike at the company's soap and margarine plant in Hammond, Ind.

It was the first successful strike against the company in 19 years. The union won wage increases of from 4 to 8c an hour.

To expedite a more rapid resumption of production, the union voted to waive seniority rules for 30 days. Some 1000 workers were involved in the walkout.

DELAYED HONORS—Multiple awards for World War II service were received recently by Bernard J. Kalisz, a CIO Steelworker from Local 2258, Neville Island, Pa. In recent ceremony at Norfolk Naval Base, he received Distinguished Flying Cross, eight air medals, and gold stars in place of the second DFC. His son is at left. Kalisz has served as local treasurer.

ICFTU To Speed Work In Asia

ACTIVITIES of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions are being stepped up in all parts of the world, the ICFTU Regional Activities Fund Committee announced at a meeting in Brussels, Belgium.

The committee received reports of outstanding success of its Asian College, at Calcutta, and educational work at Accra, for East Africa.

Provision was made for three more sessions of the Calcutta school, the first scheduled for August, and for the development of short term training courses in individual countries, the first to start soon in Pakistan. Authorization also was given for two additional courses at Accra, and for courses at Tunis during September for Tunisians and Libyans.

A trade union monthly publication for East African workers, published by the ICFTU's Accra information office, now has a circulation of 15,000, the committe was told. In addition, the office in Tokyo is now publishing a weekly for Japanese workers.

IT WAS announced the ICFTU office at Singapore was reopened on June 1 under the direction of Goverdhan Mapara, an Indian unionist. Its task will be to coordinate union activities in Southeast Asia, particularly among plantation workers.

Reports of misions were received from Pres. Floreal Bentencour of the Uruguyan National Association of Public Employes, who visited Chile, and Pres. Luis A. Colotuzzo of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), who went to Paraguay. Both were assigned to counter Peronist and Communist activities among unions.

Contributions to the regional fund to date total $435,000, of which the CIO gave $100,000, the committee reported. Victor G. Reuther, CIO representative in Europe, is a committee member.

Pakistan Aid Measure Gets Senate Okeh

THE CIO-supported measure to send a million tons of surplus U. S. wheat to famine-threatened Pakistan last week passed the Senate and was approved by the House Agriculture Committee.

The measure, asked by Pres. Eisenhower, was expected to win early House approval, probably this week.

Under the bill passed by the Senate, 700,000 tons would be made available for immediate starvation relief. Another 300,000 tons would be used as a reserve supply.

THE PAKISTAN government would be required to give the grain free to persons unable to pay for it. The government could sell to those able to pay, using the revenue to help finance programs in Pakistan to increase food production.

Two other requirements made it mandatory that the Pakistan government distribute the wheat without discrimination and give full publicity to the U. S. assistance to its people.

In urging passage of the measure, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said the CIO believes that "wheat and other foods which the U. S. has and continues to produce in abundance are unmatchable munitions in the positive peace offensive that we and other free nations must wage cooperatively in order to establish true and lasting peace."

"WITH HALF the world going to bed hungry every night," Reuther said, "and with the U. S. having a carry-over of 575 bushels of wheat and a new harvest of more than one billion bushels starting in a few weeks, let us aim our abundance at the relief of hunger."

The measure won unanimous support in both the Senate and the House Agriculture Committee.

Preparation For ICFTU—

U. S. Labor Warns Soviet Armed Bite Is Worse Than Peace Bark

THE AMERICAN labor movement is unconvinced that the Soviet "peace" offensive offers any basic change in the pattern of Communist aggression, spokesmen for the CIO, AFL and Mine Workers declared last week.

Top officers of the three bodies made the declaration in a joint statement after meeting to discuss problems that will be aired at the world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which they will attend as delegates. The congress opens July 4 in Stockholm, Sweden.

The main issue to confront the ICFTU meeting, they said, is the achieving of a just and durable peace, and "the obvious dangers which confront the free world during this period of seeming change in Soviet foreign policy."

"THE CHANGE from military authority to civilian authority in the Soviet Zones of Germany and Austria," they said, "a step which the Allies took wholeheartedly several years ago, is not too meaningful while a Soviet secret police still functions, and basic democratic rights are still denied the German people in the Eastern Zone.

"To our friends and allies behind the Iron Curtain, our fellow-workers in Eastern Europe enslaved by Moscow, we send our warmest fraternal greetings. We honor those who have courageously resisted the Communist dictatorship and those who have, as in Czechoslovakia and Eastern Germany, battled Communist exploitation in recent demonstrations."

THE STATEMENT was issued by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, Vice Pres. Michael Quill, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee, and General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg of the CIO; Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William Schnitzler of the AFL; and Vice Pres. Thomas Kennedy and Sec.-Treas. John Owens of the Mine Workers.

Condemning Russia's terror campaign against eastern Europe workers seeking only their own liberation, the statement said the workers of the free world would welcome "any genuine sign of sincerity by the Kremlin in the direction of peace and freedom."

"Years of bitter experience, however, have taught us that Soviet foreign policy seeks to capture and subvert free trade unionism to totalitarian ends," it warned.

"WE URGE the free world to remain vigilant, militarily strong and united in the face of the Soviet Union's propaganda peace campaign. A change in Soviet tactics does not assure a change in Soviet objectives."

The statement also condemned the Franco dictatorship in Spain, that of Peron in Argentine, the Malan government in South Africa and French tactics in Tunisia.

"We favor constructive economic and political programs," it continued, "sponsored by the United Nations or individual governments, that will bring higher living standards and expanded civil rights to the peoples of the underdeveloped areas of the world.

"A combination of these programs—united defense against Soviet moves of military aggression or infiltration, strengthening of democracy and economic development in the free world, continuing sympathetic encouragement to the people behind the Iron Curtains of Europe and Asia in their quest for freedom—all these will build a better world for this generation and those to come."

No worker can benefit from a state of everlasting cold war, the statement pointed out. It concluded:

"THAT IS why labor awaits a concrete contribution by the Soviet Union—not meaningless ceremonials—that it will not only speak for peace but act for peace.

"Until we see clear-cut action, the American labor movement will support, as it has in the past, collective security measures through regional agreements, the UN and through the ICFTU, against totalitarianism whenever and wherever it seeks to dominate free peoples."

CIO Warns Japan Labor On Danger Of Neutralism

NEUTRALISM as a policy of organized labor in international affairs has been soundly repudiated by the CIO in expressing disagreement with a series of foreign policy statements made by the Japanese General Council of Trade Unions (Sohyo).

The CIO's stand was made known through the release of correspondence between Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Pres. Minoru Takano of the Japanese Labor federation.

"Peace in the world today will not be secured by neutralism," Reuther wrote, "but by peace-loving nations banding themselves together in support of the principles of the United Nations' collective security."

Takano in a letter to Reuther had asked CIO concurrence in a worldwide trade union "peace movement" calling for an immediate cease-fire in Korea and what Takano described as Pres. Eisenhower's "dangerous attempt to make 'Asians fight against Asians'" by deneutralizing Formosa. The letter was written before armistice negotiations came to a head.

Reuther expressed the CIO's belief that the Korean war continues because Soviet Russia and its partners had turned down UN settlement proposals. He rejected "with particular emphasis . . . the distorted meaning you give to the phrase, 'Asians fight against Asians'."

"I WOULD be glad," he continued, "if you would inform me of any occasion on which the United States has instigated such a development."

The Japanese, he said, need have no fear of aggression from the U. S. or other free nations. On the other hand, he said, it is "common knowledge" that the Communists would like to control Japan's industry and skilled labor force.

"As trade unionists we are proud to join with others in fighting against all reactionary policy, both foreign and domestic," Reuther wrote.

"We will continue to fight against all forces which restrict the developments of free trade unions, curb their right to collective bargaining and interfere with their legitimate use of the strike weapon.

"WE HASTEN to add that this fight against reaction must be conducted not only against the right but also against the type that has arisen during the last decade or so and which claims to be on the extreme left.

"We would like to remind you that the enemies of free labor often mouth the phrases of peace while carrying on aggression. These enemies of free trade unions attempt to convert all legitimate trade union grievances into political demonstrations and . . . convert the trade union movement into a state-controlled apparatus."

CIO Tells Its Union Story In Booklets For Labor Abroad

THE FIRST 15 volumes of a library of pamphlets in many languages, describing CIO unions for workers in foreign countries, have been published by the CIO European Office.

The volumes tell the stories of the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Rubber Workers, Oil Workers and Transport Workers in French, German and Italian, Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, explained in announcing completion of the first section of the library.

They have been distributed through free trade unions to the men and women in factories, mills and other industrial operations in most countries outside the Iron Curtain.

The picture of the American worker they give is one largely unknown in other countries. That the workers who have read the pamphlets like the picture and understand it is seen in the laudatory letters—in 17 languages—received by the CIO office in Paris.

The pamphlets were prepared by the CIO European Office. Each carries an introduction by the president of the particular union—the late Philip Murray for the volume on the Steelworkers; Pres. Walter P. Reuther, UAW; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, URW; Pres. O. A. Knight, OWIU, and Pres. Michael Quill, Transport.

Unfair, Inadequate Housing Bill Needs Overhauling, CIO Says

CIO TOLD Congress last week that pending housing legislation "misses the real point—the nation's need of a program to help bring good, economical housing to the millions who cannot now obtain it."

Housing legislation now pending is "grossly discriminatory" and "runs counter to the public interest," Dir. Ben Fischer of the National CIO Housing Committee told the Senate Banking Committee.

Fischer testified on behalf of James G. Thimmes, Housing Committee chairman and CIO Steelworkers vice president.

The CIO housing aide criticized particularly a section in the pending housing bill which would continue special aids to new housing in defense-crowded communities. He also warned that "the housing problem is too urgent to be set aside while studies are being made."

Fischer pointed out that the government still recognizes the need to provide expanded industrial capacity for defense production "by its special most liberal aids to private industry through accelerated amortization allowances."

HE DECRIED "a policy which recognizes industry's needs but halts aids to the defense worker who needs housing within reasonable distance of such government-aided plants."

"The aids being given to industry for expansion are far more liberal and far more costly to the taxpayer than the modest means now provided to aid housing in defense industry areas," Fischer said. "We sincerely hope that Congress will not while pursuing a policy of aid for big industry, withdraw aid for the employes of such industries."

Fischer criticized the proposed bill also for discontinuing aid to communities which wish to build recreational, educational or cultural facilities, while continuing and strengthening aid to builders and investors.

"This callous disregard for health and morale of defense workers' families cannot be explained away on grounds of a governmental desire to get out of housing activities, because the phases of the program desired by the builders and investors are kept intact," Fischer said.

REFERRING to the attacks on the government's housing program, Fischer said that what opponents really want is "a policy of government aids for business and investment groups but not for plain people." He pointed out that the proposed bill expressly claims to be of aid to "builders and mortgagees" but that it "makes not one single move to aid or protect the housing consumer."

"We are not advocating government controls," Fischer continued. "We are advocating that since the government does provide direct, significant aids to builders and lenders it must be certain that such an aid program is in the public interest and not a windfall for speculators and their kind."

HE SAID CIO believes that the FHA program is being used too often "by those who are serving the high price market which is able to function without aid." FHA should operate only in the moderate and low-priced markets where aid and helpful advice from government experts is needed, Fischer declared.

"The government is profoundly obliged to enact legislation to provide aids for the people who need aid and not merely to eliminate the risk for the builders and investors who want all the advantages of private enterprise and none of the risks and hazards which are at the heart of our economic system."

U. S. Seaway Bill Gets Senate Unit Approval

LEGISLATION authorizing the U. S. to join Canada in constructing the St. Lawrence Seaway was approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week as the House Foreign Affairs Committee completed hearings on an identical measure.

The bills would authorize the U. S. to build that section of the seaway in the International Rapids, with Canada building the others necessary to permit ocean-going ships access to Lake Erie. Cost to the U. S. is estimated at $96 million, while Canada's share would run to more than $170 million.

CIO supports the project but objected to pending legislation as an inadequate "piecemeal approach." John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, told the House Committee that CIO believes that construction of the full seaway and power project is essential to National defense.

Edelman pointed out that the proposed bills omit provision for the deepening of connecting channels to the upper Great Lakes and have "the major defect of omitting vital safeguards in respect to power." He said that there is "no good reason" why navigation facilities from the International Rapids to Chicago should not be built now on a self-liquidating basis.

Edelman urged Congress to stipulate that if New York is permitted to build the power project, it must allocate a fair share to the New England states, that transmission must be handled by public agencies, and that customary "first availability" be given to cooperatives and public bodies.

ON ANOTHER power front, Gov. Frank C. Clement of Tennessee last week appealed to Congress to vote funds "necessary to provide adequate power for the TVA."

The House Appropriations Committee drastically slashed the amount for the Tennessee Valley Authority next year. It was granted only $188,371,000, as against $254,355,000 recommended by former Pres. Truman and $190,822,000 requested by Pres. Eisenhower.

IWA Takes Second Strike Vote In Wage Deadlock

A SECOND strike vote is being taken by some 35,000 members of the CIO Woodworkers in five northwestern states whose negotiations for a new contract with 350 employers have been deadlocked.

The first sign of a break in what had been a solid employer front, an offer of a pay boost of 5c an hour from the huge Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., came in the midst of the first strike vote. Delegates from eight IWA-CIO districts joining in the negotiations declared the vote void before it was counted, so members could consider the offer in deciding how to vote. The firm has 8000 employes.

The other employers, represented in bargaining by an association of associations, are sitting tight. They have offered to renew the old contract — and nothing more—in spite of unprecedented prosperity during a period in which the cost of living in the Northwest has climbed to an all-time high.

THE UNION negotiating committee, headed by IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung, has recommended that members vote for a strike and prepare for a rough fight. The tally of the second strike balloting will be completed about the middle of July.

In another union district, in British Columbia, about 30,000 members also have run up against bitter employer resistance in negotiating demands for a general wage increase of 13c an hour and improvements in collateral benefits. They, too, may be forced to walk out some time in July.

CWA Wins At Illinois Bell

BY A DECISIVE margin of more than 2-to-1, the CIO Communications Workers have defeated the AFL Electrical Workers in an important representation election in the telephone industry.

With some 8500 eligible workers voting, results were: CWA 5728, IBEW 2561, and some 200 votes scattered among no union, challenged or void.

FDA Inspection Bill Gets Okeh

The House Commerce Committee tentatively agreed last week to give back to the Food & Drug Administration its authority to make inspections at food, drug and cosmetics factories.

The Supreme Court had ruled that under the present law, the FDA cannot make inspections unless the operator consents.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

JULY is a good time to look for bargains because of many sales and clearances this month. Among the most important are the semi-annual shoe sales offering reductions of 10-20% on staple styles. The hosiery sales this month also give women a chance to stock up at cut prices for coming Fall needs.

Best Buys

Meats are going up again, especially pork. Pork is now at its highest price in several years, with bacon prices the highest in over four years.

That's something for wage-earning families to consider, since in moderate-income homes, according to marketing experts, spending for bacon generally takes the biggest part of the family's meat money. But in food value bacon is a poor buy; nutritionists consider it a fat, not a meat.

Lamb is more expensive now too. Even beef is getting costlier. But it's still best buy in meats, especially chuck, short ribs and chopped beef. As substitutes for meat, both cheese and fish are in abundant supply and popular for summer meals.

Men can take advantage of July shirt sales; a number of manufacturers have announced forthcoming price boosts on shirts for Fall.

You'll also find clearance sales of household appliances this month.

It will pay you to take advantage of these off-season values because otherwise your cost of living is beginning to firm up again. Food bills in particular are starting to rise, largely because meat is now getting more expensive.

AMONG the new developments in appliances is a combination washing machine and electric dryer which several readers have asked advice on. The advantage of the combination machine is that you can put soiled laundry in it, walk away and it will go through a complete washing and drying cycle in one continuous operation. The cost is a little less than buying a separate automatic washer and dryer (but not decisively so) and the single unit takes up a little less space than two separate machines.

However, appliance experts consider that the machine has disadvantages too. The combination machine can do only one load at a time. With separate units it's possible to put a new load in the washer while the first load is drying, as is often necessary in large families. Also, if the machine breaks down or needs servicing, both your washer and dryer are immobilized.

BUYING the combination unit limits your choice of the washer. The washing-machine unit is the tumble washer which is easy on fabrics but does not clean heavily-soiled articles as well as automatic washers with agitators.

The combination unit has an electric dryer. Where gas is available, gas dryers generally are cheaper to operate although they cost more initially. In a typical home in many areas a gas dryer costs about $40 less a year to operate than an electric.

Trade Bill With Gimmick Faces Battle In Senate

LEGISLATION extending the reciprocal trade agreements program another year is expected to come to a vote in the Senate this week with a hot fight in prospect over GOP efforts to end the nonpartisan character of the Tariff Commission.

The House passed continuing legislation June 15—three days after the old trade agreements law expired—but Republican members first voted to expand the commission from six to seven members. This would insure a Republican majority for the duration of the present Administration.

The Tariff Commission has been nonpartisan in make-up since its inception in 1916.

Dividing on almost straight party lines, Democrats were defeated by House votes of 152 to 115 and 185 to 125 in two efforts to knock out the change in the commission set-up. They accused their opponents of "packing" the commission in order to boost tariffs by administrative order.

Rep. Cooper (D. Tenn.), ranking minority member of the House Ways and Means Committee, called the move "an attempt by economic isolationists to do indirectly what Congress has prevented them from doing directly." Rep. Rayburn (D. Tex.) declared that he had "never witnessed a more deliberate effort to subvert the purpose of any agency."

Despite Democratic opposition on this Republican proposal, the vote for final passage was 363 to 35, with more minority members voting for it than members of the GOP.

Rep. Bramblett Faces 18 Counts

A federal grand jury in Washington indicted Rep. Bramblett (R. Cal.) last week on 18 counts of making false statements to cover up kickbacks of $4036 from two of his office employes.

Six counts charged him with filing false statements with the House disbursing office about the payroll status of Mrs. Olga Hardaway, Santa Barbara, Cal.; five counts charged false statements concerning $736 in checks made out to her, and the remaining seven counts claimed similar statements about checks made out to Mrs. Margaret M. Swanson, Arlington, Va.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

THE WRITER attended a very important meeting in Charlotte, N. C., where a committee was established for the CIO Textile Workers Union to organize the textile workers in the now unorganized plants in the South.

The meeting was attended by Pres Emil Rieve and Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock of TWUA-CIO, as well as many CIO staff representatives. Brother Boyd Payton was chosen to head the organizing committee, which is looking forward to great progress in the textile plants in the South.

I had the pleasure of journeying to Duluth, Minn., and attended a meeting of officers of CIO Steelworkers Dist. 33. While in Duluth news came of the signing of the new agreement between the CIO Steelworkers and the steel corporations. The many thousand Steelworkers across the nation are happy about the terms of the agreement which means increased wages and improved working conditions. Also, the narrowing of the wage differential between North and South plants was effected.

At the Armory in Duluth, the AFL and CIO held a joint testimonial dinner for U. S. Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey and Rep. John H. Blatnik, which the writer had the pleasure to attend. The affair was held to "kick off" the political campaign for next year. A very enthusiastic crowd attended, confident that both Sen. Humphrey and Rep. Blatnik will be sent back to Washington next year.

Federalists Get Backing

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week said he was "aghast at the blatant partisanship of those who openly advocate the U. S. assume an ostrich-like attitude toward world problems."

In a message of greeting to the seventh annual assembly of the United World Federalists, Reuther said, "Courage, vision and determination can make the United Nations the truly effective instrument of peace, brotherhood and social justice we all dreamed possible when it was established."

In his letter to Federalists Pres. Norman Cousins, Reuther urged the Assembly to "take concrete, constructive steps to help overcome the hunger, disease, illiteracy and despair which have so often been among the causes of war."

Wage Boost At GE Gets IUE Okeh

APPROVAL of the new contract giving 76,000 employes of the General Electric Co. wage increases ranging from 5c to 16c an hour was voted last week by the CIO Electrical Workers' GE Conference Board at a meeting in Washington.

Present at the sessions were delegates from more than 40 GE plants where workers are represented by the CIO union. Ratification was given after reports from IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey and John H. Callahan, Pittsfield, Mass., conference board chairman.

The board sharply rejected—for the second successive year—a plea from the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers for "unity" in dealing with GE. The group declared that the UE's "helpless" entrapment in "the meshes of communism" has made it "utterly incapable of winning any genuine economic gains for the members it still represents."

THE NEW CONTRACT replaces one which would not have expired until September, and runs for one year from June 1. It provides for a general wage increase of 3.15%, yielding a minimum pay boost of 5c an hour. The average is raised to 7c by additional increases of 1c to 8c for skilled tradesmen and changes in the incentive system. Some individual workers receive as much as 16c.

Farm Labor Bill Backed By Reuther

FAVORABLE action on a bill setting up a Federal Committee on Migratory Labor was urged on the Senate Labor & Welfare Committee last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a letter to Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), the committee chairman.

Speaking on behalf of CIO members "who are affected directly or indirectly by the continued debasement of wages and other labor standards for hired farm labor," Reuther described the measures as "very cautious and non-controversial approach to a dangerous and tragic problem."

THE CIO president reminded Smith that a similar bill was approved unanimously by the committee last year and that "conditions have not changed since except for the worse."

"Inaction will contribute to continued degradation in wages, working and living standards for all hired farm labor . . . and to unfair competition with owner-operators of family type farms," he warned.

The committee particularly would be charged with studying the chaotic situation growing out of the influx of illegal immigrants into the southwestern states from Mexico.

A recent New York Times survey disclosed that the Immigration and Naturalization Service caught almost twice as many illegal entrants in May as it did in May 1952, and that the total in the first five months was more than 50% greater.

Dixiegops Challenge Ike On Foreign Aid Funds

By MILTON PLUMB

REJECTING THE leadership of Pres. Eisenhower in international affairs, Dixiegop isolationists in Congress have scored two important setbacks over Administration foreign policy proposals.

In separate moves, the "go-it-alone" clique which controls strategic points in the 83rd Congress slashed deeply into the President's already greatly trimmed mutual security program and moved to tie his hands by severely limiting his constitutional powers to conduct foreign affairs.

The latter action came in a 9 to 5 vote of the Senate Judiciary Committee favorably reporting the constitutional amendment sponsored by Sen. Bricker (R. O.). This proposal would curb the President's power to make treaties and executive agreements with foreign countries. Some forms of treaties would be prohibited entirely.

Eisenhower earlier had opposed the Bricker Amendment because it would restrict authority the President must have to conduct foreign affairs effectively. Sec. of State John Foster Dulles, Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell and other Administration spokesmen testified against it.

In a minority report, Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, and three Democratic members, blasted the judiciary group's action as fundamentally altering the division of powers between the Chief Executive and Congress which has "worked so well for 164 years."

Pointing out that if the amendment were now a part of the Constitution "the conclusion of an armistice agreement in Korea would be virtually impossible," the group said that the proposal would turn over to Congress the President's control of foreign affairs and tie his hands in the "cold war."

If enacted into law, they added, it would—for example—probably prevent the U. S. from entering into an agreement for the control of atomic energy and invalidate existing international agreements for the control of narcotics.

A more immediate issue came in the isolationists' attack on foreign aid requests, already the smallest in recent years.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee clipped $476 million from the "bare minimum" requested by Eisenhower and added a "put up or shut up" directive to our allies. The latter would withhold half of the $2,079,689,870 approved for military aid for Europe until European nations ratify the treaty to create a unified European army.

MEANWHILE, the corresponding committee of the Senate voted to cut the Eisenhower request by $166 million but made no effort to match the "dollar diplomacy" stand taken by the House group. The bill was then referred by the Senate to its Armed Services Committee for further consideration—and possible extra cuts.

The House and Senate committee slashes come on top of a $2.2 billion cut Eisenhower made in the original request of Pres. Truman for $7.6 billion. Since the action was taken on the so-called "authorizing" legislation, which merely sets the top limits of appropriations that must be voted later, still further reductions are possible in the money bill that will follow.

DEMOCRATIC Sens. Gillette (Ia.), George (Ga.) and Sparkman (Ala.) blasted the House's action in writing a condition to half of the funds for European defense as "unwise." Gillette said it was "like cutting off our nose to spite our face."

To use the mutual defense program "as a club to beat our allies into compliance with our ideas of what they ought to do," Gillette added, "is unwarranted perversion of our purpose and distortion of our whole perspective."

While most Democrats have lined up in support of the full Eisenhower requests, Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) said he would vote for still further reductions.

Taft Driving For Deeper Slash

Senate Majority Leader Taft (R. O.) has thrown his weight behind a move by isolationists in the Senate Appropriations Committee to slash Pres. Eisenhower's "bare minimum" foreign aid requests even more than has already been recommended.

He has called for cuts of more than $1 billion, despite pleas by Eisenhower, Sec. of State John Foster Dulles and Mutual Security Director Harold E. Stassen that Congress approve the full $5.4 billion program.

"Hey—How Much Are You Gonna Deliver?"

Ike's Profits Tax Plea Gets The Cold Shoulder

GOP Congressional leaders last week set July 31 as the target date for adjournment with signs pointing to disappointments for Administration attempts to continue the excess profits tax.

Two top Republican leaders—Rep. Reed (N.Y.) and Sen. Knowland (Cal.)—gave the cold shoulder to the President's plea for a six-month extension. Significantly, Reed and Knowland are in the quarterback spots, calling signals on congressional action.

Reed is chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. After two weeks of hearings, he served notice that the Administration "has failed to make a case" for extension of the law, due to expire June 30.

REED did not allow his committee to vote and indicated he had no immediate plans for allowing the measure to come to the floor. Reed's one-man roadblock could defeat Eisenhower's plea, backed by top Administration spokesman, for an additional six months' continuance.

CIO has urged the tax be continued as long as it may be needed. Big Business has opposed the tax.

Knowland, taking over as acting majority leader from the ailing Sen. Taft, when the Ohioan fell victim to a hip ailment, was also cold to the President's plea.

In response to queries, Knowland classified it as "definitely doubtful."

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) called the present session "the most unproductive session in 20 years."

The only "legislative achievement" so far, said Douglas, "has been divesting the people of a large share of their offshore oil treasure and giving it to a handful of large operators."

CIO Charges Hearns With Slander; Asks Strike Aid

THE NEW YORK City CIO Council last week called on labor in that city for strike assistance and relief for 800 strikers at the Hearn Department Stores.

Pres. Michael J. Quill and Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz labeled the Hearn stores "a vicious company" and charged it was "trying to hide its cruel anti-labor objectives behind a smoke-screen of slander and denunciation."

The 800 workers are members of District 65, of the Distributive, Processing & Office Workers Union, CIO. That union, formerly unaffiliated, recently concluded merger agreements with the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Workers, subject to convention ratification. The CIO Executive Board approved the move.

THE COMPANY has been waging propaganda warfare against the DPO in newspaper ads charging the union is Communist dominated.

"The CIO investigated it (District 65) thoroughly," they said, "before it accepted it as an affiliate. Certainly in the Hearn strike the conduct of District 65 was extremely reasonable and cooperative toward management. If anything they bent over backward too much, rather than not enough."

District 65 offered to step out of the picture, allowing the establishment of a separate CIO local union; offered to agree to arbitration by individual arbitrators, state or court-appointed arbitrators or with a representative of New York's mayor.

The company refused all arbitration offers. It also, in contradiction of its advertised position, refused to deal with National CIO unless it agreed in advance to wage cuts, firing of workers with 15 to 20 years' seniority and "other onerous terms."

The company has also demanded elimination of minimum wage standards, dropping of a health and welfare plan, and abrogation of all grievance machinery.

The Case Of The Maid's Red Shoes

THE BOSS carried the "red" ban too far, so a hotel maid in McCloud, Calif., is back on the job wearing red shoes and fingernail polish—also red.

But her union had to go to bat for her to win the ruling that maids can wear what they please so long as they're neat and law-abiding.

And if you think it strange that the union should be the CIO Woodworkers, you haven't been in this—quite literally—neck of the woods. The whole town is organized by IWA Local 6-64 and the hotel belongs to a lumber company.

The maid's supervisor had ordered her not to come to work in the newly-purchased red shoes, and to remove the nail polish. The local, in the interest of good labor relations with the company, decided "the union should look into the reasons for controversial orders given to members at work."

So local officials took the red shoes—with the maid not in them—and set them on the desk of the hotel's assistant manager. "We asked him if he saw anything wrong with the shoes. He said he couldn't," said the local's spokesman. "The member is again wearing red shoes and even some red fingernail polish.

"And when the red shoes wear out, she might even get a pair of green ones or maybe some other color, or maybe even another pair of red shoes. Who knows? Thanks to her union, that's her business." (LPA)

RFC Killed By New Bill

SENATE-HOUSE conferees last week sealed the doom of the Reconstruction Finance Corp. by reporting out an economic controls bill that eliminates all standby controls and creates a new agency to make small business loans. Passage by the House followed shortly thereafter.

Stripped of all controls except power to establish priorities and allocate scarce materials, the measure continues these and certain other features of the Defense Production Act two more years. It also requires RFC to turn over to a new "small business administration" all requests for small business loans.

'The Spark Of Freedom'—

CIO Praises East Germans Fighting Reds

SOLIDARITY of CIO members with "the heroic workers of East Berlin who have risen in a daring challenge to the brutal dictatorship of the Communist totalitarians" was voiced by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a statement for the Voice of America keyed to the strikes and riots on the Red side of the Iron Curtain.

"Their demonstrations have confirmed what we already knew in our hearts—that the spark of liberty and freedom burns bright among the people of the Soviet-dominated areas," he declared.

The dramatic rebellion of workers in scores of spots under the heel of the Russians, and the Soviet's use of armed troops and armored tanks to shoot down the striking workers, produced widespread interest in CIO circles.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey made a Radio Free Europe broadcast, paying tribute to the strikers and condemning Russian brutality.

"We in the CIO endorse the demands of the East Berlin workers for basic human rights—for free unions, for free elections, for decent wages and an end to oppression," Reuther said in his statement broadcast to Iron Curtain countries.

"At the same time, we condemn the brutal counter measures taken by the East German Communist government and the Soviet-occupying forces against these brave men and women who seek a measure of freedom and liberty.

"The drastic martial law and the brutal executions imposed by the Russian-occupying forces give the lie to the claims of the Kremlin that they stand for peace and freedom."

The free American labor movement is part of the Berlin struggle, Carey said in his speech, "part of the struggle that pulled down Communist flags and burned Communist posters and sent Communist leaders into hiding."

"We are part of that fight, intimately a part of it," he said, "and nothing in our lifetimes can separate us from it. No one today is remote from the uprisings of East Berlin or the revolt in Czechoslovakia.

"FOR EVERY drop of democratic blood spilled on an East Berlin street, we are the poorer. For every life lost in East Berlin we have lost a defender of our streets in Washington, London, Paris and a thousand other cities of the free world.

"As strongly, as profoundly, as devotedly, as heartfelt as we can, we of the American labor movement are today clasping hands with the German workers, the men and women who fought East Berlin's battle for democracy."

Carey expressed the belief that many similar demonstrations have taken place behind the Iron Curtain which the Communists sometimes succeeded in keeping from the free world. The Russian panic at the outbreak in Berlin, and the shooting down of workers striking against excessive workloads, he said, was another example "of the eternal stupidity of tyranny and dictatorship."

THE INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions declared that what happened in East Berlin "demonstrates clearly that Communist regimes have no support among the working class."

The East German puppet government, "pretending to voice their desires, has in fact been stifling their voice," ICFTU Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek said in a message to E. Scharnowski, president of the Berlin section of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB).

"The ICFTU denounces before the whole free world the brutal and criminal methods employed by the German Communists and the Soviet authorities to suppress popular manifestation," he said. "ICFTU salutes the dead, pays its tributes to the wounded, and calls for the liberation of those now in jail.

"It proclaims its solidarity with those who have dared to oppose the most cruel of all dictatorships, and its faith in the victory of liberty, democracy and social justice."

Riffe Denies 'Sensationalized' Reports Of Union Merger Talks

"SENSATIONALIZED" reports that three CIO international unions were planning early mergers with counterpart AFL organizations were flatly denied by CIO last week.

John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, said "there is no truth" in the rumors which, he said, would "cause great confusion in the ranks of organized labor."

ACTUALLY, Riffe said, the only conversations under way were toward the negotiation of no-raid agreements.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther took note of the stories appearing in the press, during the course of a shipboard interview, as he left New York for the coming Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions congress in Stockholm.

"These stories about the CIO disintegrating have been appearing in the press since 1947," Reuther said.

"I am confident, based on conversations with leaders of various CIO unions, that no mergers are contemplated except as part of a general move toward organic unity between the CIO and the AFL.

"NONE of these unions are going to pull out of the CIO."

Asked specifically about the CIO Steelworkers because of a story in the June 26 New York Times, Reuther said: "The Steelworkers are in the CIO family."

Reuther recalled that Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers had voiced strong support of the CIO and the Steelworkers' position in the organization at the CIO Auto Workers' convention in Atlantic City last March.

Declaring that he had talked with McDonald, Reuther commented that the press seems to be making "mountains out of extremely small molehills."

Reuther pointed out that the CIO would not be going ahead with plans for extensive organization campaigns and public relations plans if it were, as some newspaper stories seem to indicate, on the verge of dissolution.

"The CIO is here to stay, at least until we can work out organic unity with the AFL at some future date," Reuther concluded.

William Pachler, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Utility Workers, who was in attendance at the press meeting on the SS United States, added that the recent New York Daily News story about an imminent merger between the UWUA and the AFL Electrical Workers "didn't have a semblance of truth."

UNIONS linked in daily press merger stories were the CIO Brewery Workers and the AFL Teamsters, the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the AFL Butchers, and the CIO Utility Workers and the AFL Electrical Workers.

The most sweeping of the press reports was carried by the tabloid New York Daily News, while more cautious versions were published by the New York Times and other papers.

Riffe quoted officers of the three CIO unions as saying they "have been exploring the possibility of reaching no-raid agreements with unions in the same field."

"THERE is no truth," he emphasized, "in the inference which some newspaper stories have carried that the unions participating in these no-raid agreements are contemplating leaving the CIO."

Riffe's statement follows in full:

"A number of newspapers have carried sensationalized stories within the past two or three days of the alleged imminent merger of three CIO unions with three unions of the American Federation of Labor.

"The unions mentioned in these stories are: the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink & Distillery Workers, CIO, and the AFL Brotherhood of Teamsters; the United Packinghouse Workers, CIO, and the Amalgamated Meat Cutters, AFL; the Utility Workers Union, CIO, and the AFL Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

"The viewpoint of the officers of these CIO unions has been expressed to me and to other officers of the CIO. These unions have been exploring the possibility of reaching no-raid agreements with AFL unions in the same field.

"A number of other unions have carried on such discussions, among them, the United Auto Workers, CIO, and the Intl. Association of Machinists, AFL, which have had a no-raid agreement for some time. In addition, an overall no-raid agreement will be submitted to the executive bodies and conventions of the CIO and the AFL later this year.

"THE PURPOSE of all these discussions has been to create organizational stability and to free a maximum of organizational personnel to the No. One need of the American labor movement, the organization of the unorganized.

"There is no truth in the inference which some newspaper stories have carried that the unions participating in these no-raid agreements are contemplating leaving the CIO. To suggest, on the basis of these no-raid conversations, that a series of union mergers is imminent, is to sensationalize the facts, draw false conclusions and cause great confusion in the ranks of organized labor.

Leonard Aids Brewery Strike

Assignment of National CIO Rep. Richard T. Leonard to aid striking CIO Brewery Workers in Milwaukee was announced last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

A Step For Peace—

First Murray Fund Gift Aids UN Group

THE PHILIP MURRAY Memorial Foundation last week announced the contribution of $15,000 to the American Association for the United Nations.

The gift is the first to be made by the foundation, established to honor the late president of CIO and the Steelworkers.

Foundation Chairman Emil Rieve, who is president of the CIO Textile Workers, said notification of the contribution had been sent to Clark M. Eichelberger, executive director of the American Association for the United Nations.

THANKING the Foundation "for its generous contribution," Eichelberger said:

"I learned to appreciate Philip Murray's deep belief in the United Nations in the most comprehensive sense. He supported its political action to prevent aggression and to settle disputes peaceably. He also saw the United Nations as a hope for the achievement of human rights and better living conditions for all people."

Rieve said the $15,000 would be used to equip a room at the entrance to the new AAUN Headquarters to "meet the ever-increasing volume of requests for information on the United Nations and its member agencies and will serve as the association's central display room and information center."

Rieve said the association proposed "to name the room the Philip Murray Room."

Rieve said the foundation trustees and the members of its Public Advisory Board were gratified "at having this opportunity to provide a memorial which will serve effectively to advance the ideals of peace and brotherhood for which Philip Murray worked so valiantly."

"I'm sick of looking at that despondent slump! Either join the Union, or wear some shoulder braces!"

USA Asks Annual Pay At Alcoa

CIO STEELWORKERS last week began contract negotiations with the Aluminum Co. of America, with the guaranteed annual wage high on its list of bargaining proposals.

Along with the annual wage program, the union also was reported to have asked a general wage increase, improved welfare and pension programs, and narrowing of wage differentials.

Negotiations with Alcoa opened as the steel union was ironing out pacts with smaller basic steel producers. The wage reopening agreement with U. S. Steel Corp. and other big firms was settled on the basis of an 8.5c wage increase across the board and elimination of the southern wage differential where it existed.

CIO Economic Report—

'Higher Wages Are Key To Prosperity'

RAISE WAGES, boost consumer buying power, and cut profit margins—that's the way to keep prosperity when and if a truce is signed in Korea.

It's spelled out in a report of the same name, issued last week by the CIO Committee on Economic Policy. The committee is headed by Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers.

"Maintaining Prosperity" is a comprehensive examination of the economic problems involved in a future shift from the defense economy.

Boiled down, the formula for keeping prosperity and full employment amounts to this:

Raise wages, boost buying power and cut profit margins.

Job For Every Worker

The answer is buttressed by a convincing array of facts, figures and arguments. They lead inevitably to but one conclusion—that the country can have full employment and full production if it works for them.

By proper planning, buying power can be boosted. Only if it is increased will there be a job for every worker and a market for every producer.

The pamphlet sets forth the CIO belief that the planned reduction of defense expenditures to a maintenance level presents the American economy with "challenging alternatives."

"Important productive resources now involved in the defense effort will be released within the coming months for civilian production," it explains.

"The economy can sustain continued growth—holding forth the promise of abundance, while providing a stronger economic base against the danger of further aggression.

The Basic Idea

"Or it can succumb to stagnation, spelling unemployment at home and despair throughout the free world."

The basic idea in raising wages and salaries is to put more purchasing power in the hands of the consumer. Lowering prices to the consumer further enables him to buy more of the goods and services that are turned out by our ever-increasing productive capacity. By both raising wages and cutting prices, profit margins will be reduced.

Here are some of the factors taken into consideration in reaching the conclusion spelled out in the report:

1. Defense expenditures, now at an annual rate of $53 billion, will probably taper off to about $45 billion in 1956. This drop must be offset by higher expenditures in non-defense sectors of the economy.

2. With newer and better factories, machines and techniques, production is increasing sharply, putting more goods on the market with less expenditure of manpower. Consumer expenditures, which have declined because of the huge volume of defense production, must now increase if these goods are to be sold.

3. Business expenditures, for new plant and equipment, probably will decline.

4. Consumer savings in the hands of that part of the population with the most unsatisfied needs, the middle-wage and low-wage groups, are too small—where they exist at all—to keep the industrial machine going for very long.

5. The gap between wages and productivity has been widening since shortly after the end of World War II.

6. The manpower is available and its productive potential must be put to work if we are not to go backward. Jobs must be found for about 700,000 new workers entering the labor market every year, and for from one million to 1.75 million additional men and women who become technologically unemployed each year through the introduction of new machines and new processes.

Boost Personal Income

"The great increases in productive capacity which have been laid down within the past few years," the report says, "help bring within range a potential national production of $410 billion by 1956. That would represent a gain over 1952 ($346.3 billion) of about 18.5% in the volume of goods and services produced.

"Translated into human wealth and welfare, this means a boost in personal income from $234.3 billion in 1952 to $290 billion in 1956 (assuming no change in the price level). This is an increase of nearly $56 billion or 24%.

"Translated into individual terms, this would mean a gain in real income of $265 per year, or nearly 18% over 1952, for every man, woman and child in the United States; this gain can be realized despite an estimated population increase of about eight million during these years."

But, the CIO points out, these gains will not take place automatically. They will be won only if we make adjustments and changes in our economy.

Consumption Must Go Up

Such adjustments, it goes on, must be made in the three great "spending streams." These are government expenditures, private investment—and consumption.

We know that government spending is going down. We expect private investment to go down.

"We are thus left," the pamphlet continues, "with the great economic sector of personal consumption to which the country must look for new support and spending to maintain full employment and full production. That economic expansion and growth are primarily dependent upon increased consumption is obvious . . .

Copies Available

Copies of "Maintaining Prosperity" may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Price, $1 per copy; quantity rates on request.

"Unless such growth in consumption takes place, the country will be compelled to depend upon continued high level expenditures by government to sustain full employment."

"A major responsibility in shaping this economic policy for full employment must be borne by labor and management in collective bargaining. The wage agreements reached in countless bargaining sessions across the country more than ever must reflect the goal of an expanding economy supported by rising consumption. This same goal must also shape decisions on prices, taxes and indeed all phases of economic life."

The pamphlet recalls that people who work for wages and salaries constitute the largest group of consumers. But their buying power—what they have left after paying taxes—hasn't been increasing at as fast a rate as their productivity, nor at as fast a rate as the increase in the cost of living, it adds.

The position of the CIO is spelled out clearly:

"This trend must be sharply reversed—with substantial increases in the buying power of wage and salary earners—to sustain the expanding markets necessary for maintaining full employment and economic growth."

And it continues:

"If the economy is not to be distorted by imbalanced incomes, the buying power of wages and salaries must not merely catch up with past productivity gains. It must forge ahead. In this period, when government spending is expected to taper off, the buying power of wages and salaries generally must rise faster than current productivity increases to provide the rapidly increasing consumer buying power needed to offset declining government spending.

"The buying power of the majority of consumers can expand on a continuing basis, in that way, and provide a large part of the mass consumption strength for a growing economy."

High Profit Margins

So far as profit margins are concerned, they have been increasing, with a few exceptions, since the depression. This failure to share the benefits of increased production with the workers through wage and salary hikes and with the consumer through price cuts has cost the economy's "consumption base" some of the strength it should have, the pamphlet declares.

The report points up a change in government economic policy that is generally obscured. During the New Deal, it explains, the aim was to halt a depression and build into the economy stabilizers to ease the shock of future recessions.

Since the end of World War II, it adds, the search for weapons against a depression has moved from the defensive to the aggressive—to prevent downturns. Now new weapons must be forged if the economy is to continue its expansion—and the U. S. economy either goes forward or goes backward; it never remains static.

Hard Money Issue

On "hard money," the pamphlet says:

"Behind the mumbo-jumbo of 'higher interest rates'—'switching the government debt from banks to long term investors'—'fighting inflation by higher interest rates'—behind these slogans stand a small group of the population that refuses to believe full employment and economic expansion can be indefinitely sustained.

"This group consists principally of financial institutions, including many banks, many insurance companies and some leading industrialists. The key proponents of the new hard money policy are convinced that our economy must be 'shaken down.' Many of them candidly state their views that unemployment is too low. . . .

"Pursued to a logical conclusion, the new money policy can help to bring on a deflation and depression in the style of 1920-21, 1929 and 1937-38."

Slave Labor Exposed

The slave labor system of the Soviet Union and its satellites has not been a secret for many years—despite the "who, me?" attitude of the Communists every time the question is raised.

Now the Intl. Labor Organization, an agency of the United Nations, has issued a special report which throws a multitude of new facts on the slave labor question.

The report shows, for instance, that in the Soviet Union and the Soviet-dominated nations, slave labor is an officially approved state function, used for purposes of political or economic punishment.

In Spain, in South Africa, in certain Portuguese colonies, the ILO found other evidence of slave labor.

Yes, the fact of slavery is real, and, as the ILO points out, "it seriously threatens fundamental human rights and jeopardizes the freedom and status of workers." These systems of slave labor, the ILO adds, should be abolished.

The East Berlin demonstrations, and the unrest sweeping the Soviet world, indicate how the people feel about slavery. They clearly regard it as an instrument of the devil, which flourishes where democracy is wiped out.

For spelling out the facts, the Intl. Labor Organization is to be praised for its contribution to human rights.

Mess In Washington

The "mess in Washington" has been finally discovered. He is Mr. Thomas Lyons, a retired pensioner of the Anaconda Copper Co., who for a brief time was scheduled to head the U. S. Bureau of Mines.

He was, that is, until he started to talk. In a matter of minutes, he had voiced opposition to the federal mine safety law; blamed miners for mine accidents; commented callously that "life is cheap around the globe"; and revealed that Anaconda could at any time stop his $100-a-week pension.

All this was too much for the Republicans in Congress and in the Interior Dept.—and his appointment was hauled back. Not a moment too soon.

As for us, on these early summer days, we like to read and re-read those campaign speeches about the fine new public servants the Republicans were going to bring to Washington.

A Prosperous Future

A truce in Korea may come this week, or it may not come for months. But whenever it does, we at home are going to have some major problems with which to wrestle.

Not the least of them is the job of keeping America prosperous and fully employed. The Soviet policy makers and their propaganda agents have been hoping for a U. S. depression. So far, we've fooled them; for our own well-being, we'd better keep on fooling them.

CIO Pres. Reuther has pointed out that with rising productive efficiency and a growing population, we'll have to provide two million new jobs a year to keep everybody at work. CIO economists have figured out that we must aim to produce goods and services at the rate of $410 billion a year—a jump of over $50 billion in three years.

That's a big order, of course. But America can do it—if the men of little confidence are kept from leading America to depression.

The Workers' State?

In Other Words—

The Twin Cancers Of Fear

Here are excerpts from a speech by Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the CIO Clothing Workers, a vice president of the CIO, at a testimonial dinner in his honor by the New York City Laundry Workers Joint Board.

By FRANK ROSENBLUM

SUSPICION, whispering campaigns, intimidation, threats and violations of our constitutional liberties are becoming more widespread every day.

Fearful at home, we have virtually closed our doors to displaced persons from abroad, denying the traditional American right of asylum to the persecuted and downtrodden.

If the twin evils of McCarthyism and McCarranism continue to do their ugly work, we will soon become a nation of neurotics instead of that bold, pioneering, enterprising, serene and confident people we have been since colonial times.

McCarthyism and McCarranism are twin cancers which must be rooted out if we wish to become whole again and regain our self respect as a great and independent people, and if we wish to regain the respect and admiration of our friends abroad.

Dual System Of Government

Every day McCarthyism seeks to destroy and does destroy the rights of individuals and our free institutions. Reputations are blasted, men and women are deprived of their employment and the right of free inquiry is denied by investigating committees which have set up, in effect, a dual system of government.

McCarthyism is rapidly destroying due process of law, confrontation of witnesses by their accusers, the rights of counsel and trial by jury. Invading the political and even the religious convictions of Americans, congressional committees have usurped the rights of individual American citizens never given up under our Constitution.

We have seen the Senate and the House terrorized by McCarthy and his allies. We have seen the Eisenhower Administration intimidated by these inquisitors, and we have seen Sen. McCarthy virtually take over the functions of the executive branch of our government, notably the State Dept.

We have seen invasions of the college campus, university professors told how and what to teach at the peril of their jobs, government employes hounded to death. And already we are beginning to see that even bona fide trade union members are not exempt from these inquisitions.

I don't have to tell a trade union audience that I am against communism. I regard communism as a straitjacket on the human spirit, and that even in the material realm, it cannot offer workers and others as good a standard of living as our American system provides under proper safeguards and with the functioning of a free democratic labor movement.

Help Breed Communism

But, I contend that McCarthyism and McCarranism breed communism. The little Hitlers who seek to usurp our rights and deny our liberties at home are helping the Communists abroad, who, in time, can only become a greater threat to our democratic way of life than they are now.

Sen. McCarthy is, wittingly or unwittingly, the best unpaid Communist agent in the world.

How can we hope to win over large masses of people who are on the front lines in the fight against Soviet expansion if we continue to offer, as our substitute for communism, the reign of intellectual and spiritual terror unleashed here by the McCarthys, the McCarrans, the Jenners and the Veldes? If that is all we have to offer for export to the struggling peoples abroad, our efforts must result in failure.

If the McCarthys demoralize and degrade us at home, they and the McCarrans do us grave injury abroad.

They feed the Soviet propaganda agencies and divide us from our allies. McCarthy attacks Churchill and Attlee in England, other dark elements seek to destroy the United Nations, our one single great hope for peace in the world; still others would burn books in our information libraries abroad, and finally, McCarran has closed the doors in the faces of those displaced Europeans who have dreamt of America as a haven and a refuge.

We have a choice to make. Shall it be the America of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln and Franklin Delano Roosevelt, or the America of McCarthy and McCarran. We must make a choice. We cannot have both.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

HARRY S. TRUMAN's week in Washington was a warm, affectionate occasion, free of crass politics and marked with the genuine respect Truman has for the American democracy.

The one false note may have been spoken by Vice Pres. Nixon (a "brash young man," Adlai Stevenson called him), who welcomed Truman's return for a visit to the Senate floor by saying the former President might not like some of the "changes" around him.

Truman ignored the young man's remark and spoke to the Senate, in which he served 10 years, about its responsibility for world peace.

Dean Acheson, onetime Secretary of State, kidded himself and the former President at a relaxed and cheerful dinner for old Cabinet members and White House staffers. ("Nobody wanted to bite anyone, not even Ike; everybody looked healthy and happy.")

Bonfires

One wisecrack in Washington is that, in view of Sec. of State John Foster Dulles' directives to censor American libraries abroad, the name of that topflight politicians' country club has been changed from Burning Tree to Burning Book.

One of the "horrors" of being out of office, said Acheson, was that you no longer had government limousines. Another fellow and he got on the same trolley car, he said, "and neither of us knew the fare."

A Few Candid Remarks

Another "horror" was that when you went to Independence, Mo., to visit your old boss, "you had to ride in an auto driven by HST himself."

Truman made a few candid little speeches. He said—and this is a summary—that he was now more sure than ever that his administration had been a "success." He could appropriately say that to his former advisors because their counsel and sustenance had helped make it a "success."

His foreign policy was sound and was being proved sound. So was his domestic policy.

"We are not interested in just making this country the richest and most powerful on earth. We want to make our people the happiest people—everyone knowing that he has the dignity, decency and opportunity he deserves."

Harry Truman would not be Harry Truman without some private politicking. In a breakfast with Sam Rayburn, John McCormack and Lyndon Johnson—top Democrats in Congress—he remarked that he was "glad the (Eisenhower) Administration had taken over his foreign policy but wished they had someone who knew how to run it."

He told a former aide, impressed by the manifest friendliness of the people toward Truman, "this is the most gratifying experience of my life, ever since 7000 people come down to the railroad station in Washington to say goodby to an old has-been. I didn't know so many people liked me. I couldn't have known it by reading the newspapers."

The affection shown him since he was out of office "made all the hell worth while."

He was urged by one associate to start "hitting hard" in the political field. Quoth Harry S. Truman: "I shall follow the admonition of the commanding officer at Bunker Hill, 'Don't shoot till you see the whites of their eyes.'"

The $64 Question

This reporter happened to be in Interior Sec. McKay's office, by prior appointment, the day McKay had to ask the White House to withdraw the nomination of Tom Lyon as director of the department's Bureau of Mines.

McKay wasn't bothered about the fact that Lyon frankly testified he disbelived in the mine safety act he would have been supposed to administer. "Why, when you take an oath of office, you execute the laws even if you don't believe in them."

If McKay honestly thinks that the safety law can be enforced by officials who call the law a "phony," he is politically more naive than this observer thinks. If he does honestly think that, why doesn't he appoint some political enemy as Undersecretary of Interior and trust the man's "oath of office" to dispose of all problems?

The $64 question is whether McKay himself "disbelieves" in the safety law and tried to slip Lyon through the White House and the Senate only to be blocked when even Republicans were scandalized at learning that Lyon remained on the Anaconda Copper Co. payroll to the tune of $5000 a year.

• • George V. Allen, once called Truman's "court jester," is still a frequent White House visitor as unofficial wit, story-teller, and comic relief for Dwight David Eisenhower. He is there as often as three times a week, once put off a vacation at the urgent request of White House assistants who clamored that the President needed him for relaxation.

• • Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee, told a St. Louis audience that the people next year ought to give Ike a "clear-cut Republican majority in Congress." Considering the way Republican like Reps. Taber and Reed (N. Y.) and Sen. Knowland (Calif.) are maneuvering, if the GOP really gets a "clear-cut majority" Ike will never get any of his programs through Congress. He gets them now, usually, only when Democrats "save" him.

An Oil Worker's Son Says—

'If It Had Not Been For The Union Dad Would Still Be A Slave . . .'

The following essay on What The Union Means To My Family, by the 13-year-old son of a Uler, W. Va., oil worker, won first prize in a contest conducted by The International Oil Worker, official organ of the CIO Oil Workers, for the children of members. Judges were Hollace Ransdall, assistant editor of The CIO News, and Donald MacMillan, executive secretary of the Denver Newspaper Guild-CIO

DEAR LABORING MEN: Let me tell you what the union has done for my Daddy. In 1940, the year I was born, Dad worked on WPA. He got only three days work a week, $2.50 a day, $7.50 a week.

He had to walk better than six miles to his work and back home which made better than twelve miles walking a day. He lived on rented ground. He couldn't even afford a milk cow or a hog.

In 1941 Dad joined the AFL union and he went to work on a job at $60 a week. While working, Dad was able to buy a farm and four milk cows.

When the job was finished, Dad was out of work. His debts began to go up; he lost some of his cows. Because Dad wasn't a union man he was unable to stay on any job very long at a time.

In 1947, Dad went to work for the United Fuel Gas Co. He didn't join the union. He only got around $60.00 every two weeks because he wasn't a union man.

He was called a pick-up man and only got to work about nine months out of a year.

On November 15, 1949, Dad joined the CIO Union Local 628 at Clendenin and went to work a steady man for the United Fuel Gas Co. and since Dad has joined, the union is heaven sent. His pay check is over $160 for two weeks work and since he has joined the union he has gained around 25 head of live stock and has bought three trucks and one car and mother a new washing machine and a new stove, and me a bike.

I only have 18 Uncles and a dear old Granddad who will soon be 65 years old, and they all are union men, and you see what the Union has done for my Daddy; and I know it will do that for me and you so when I get old enough, you can bet I'll be a union man. I am only a 13 year old boy and my letter is true from the start to the finish and if it had not been for the union, Dad would still have been a slave.

No man wants to slave all his life way. We don't mind the work but we do want decent pay and a decent job for our labor. Why, join the Union, get bigger pay checks, easier work, a better job out of it.

Don't sit back and whine like a pup. Get a slip from the Union, fill it out and send it in. I am sure the Union will greet you and will be glad to have your name on their list.

Yours truly,
Homer Lee Conley

'The Stockmen's Bill' Protested

By Public Affairs Institute

PRESENT EFFORTS of livestock men to revise the public land laws have aroused stormy protests to Congress.

Joining in the protests were farm, labor, and conservation groups, the Emergency Committee on Natural Resources (in which CIO participates), wildlife groups, hunters and fishermen.

Legislation is being advanced by stockmen—owners of cattle and sheep which graze on public lands. They seek greater rights to the lands. Opponents call it a "land grab."

Rep. D'Ewart (R. Mont.), sponsor of "the stockmen's bill in the House, says it would provide "an incentive to these stockmen to put more money and labor into the ranges to make them more productive."

Give Vested Interest

These are the proposals:

• Grant permanent rights on the grazing land to stockmen presently holding permits, by requiring 10-year permits to be automatically renewed by the supervising agencies.

• Allow these stockmen to transfer or sell their permits, alone deciding their successors.

• Prevent the government from making changes in present permits as to areas for grazing, number and type of stock, except to prevent damage to the lands.

• Make it possible for a permit holder to go to court to dispute administrative decisions of the government. An exception would be action to protect the land from damage or change its use.

• Remove all restrictions on the number of cattle or sheep any one owner may hold permits to graze.

What concerns the protesting groups is that they feel they have a stake in these lands, too. They charge one group should not be given vested rights to public domain lands in which several groups have an interest.

Other Interests Involved

Cities are dependent on the water supply coming off these lands. Farmers and industries need the water for power and irrigation and they fear livestock men will overgraze it and ruin the water producing value of the land. Sportsmen and recreation enthusiasts also use the land and fear the livestock men will ruin it for game and as outdoor recreation areas.

One of the top Forest Service resources economists, Mont Saunderson, in his book, "Western Land and Water Use," estimates the following values are produced annually by national forests in the West:

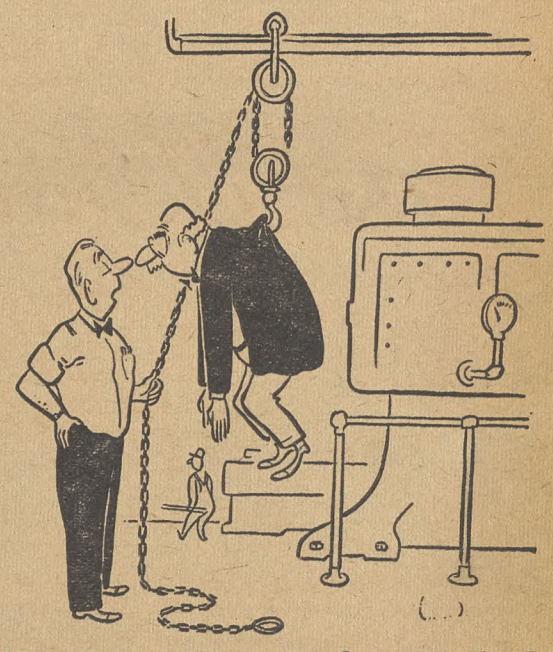
Irrigation Water	$258 million
Timber	18 million
Recreation	20 million
Grazing	3 million

Stockmen are granted permits by the Agriculture and Interior Depts. Fees range from 2.5c to 54c per head of stock per month. Since the lands are publicly owned, no taxes are charged stockmen.

In 1934 stockmen helped pass the Taylor Grazing Act to provide supervision and stop abuse and deterioration of certain grazing lands. These lands became known as the Taylor Grazing Lands. They are administered by the Interior Dept.

Meanwhile another large block of lands was set aside for National Forests, dedicated primarily to their timber and watershed values. These are administered by the Agriculture Dept.

The ranges are not in too good shape now. At least 50% to 60% of present grazing lands need to be built up. The Forest Service (Agriculture) and the Bureau of Land Management (Interior) have never had sufficient appropriations to do an adequate job. One BLM employe, for example, must supervise a million acres of Taylor Grazing Lands.



"I can't seem to get you alone, Mr. Trask; now, in regard to my raise . . ."

Dollars Go Farther—

Akron Labor Helps Super-Co-op Succeed

Many CIO members own stock in and trade at this Akron, O., Co-op Shopping Center.

Co-op sells TV sets and clothes along with groceries.

By BILL ABBOTT
(URW Education Dept. Assistant)

RUTH FISHER, housewife, has become a stockholder . . . and she's done it the hard way. She has invested $50 saved from buying, of all things, groceries.

In this high-priced era, Mrs. Fisher, wife of a CIO Rubber Worker at the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. plant in Akron, has joined the march of savings-conscious consumers to the year-old Cooperative Enterprises store on Akron's south side.

She is one of more than 10,000 Akronites, workers mostly, who patronize the huge shopping center regularly. Like most co-op customers, she has turned back her food savings into the enterprise, which is the largest labor-backed urban cooperative in the nation.

Prices Are Lower

"My husband and I have been shopping at the co-op since it opened last May," Mrs. Fisher said.

"Besides lower prices there, you can do almost all your buying in one stop—everything from refrigerators and stoves to clothing, gasoline, drugs, gifts, and, of course, groceries.

"Also," she added with a smile, "the service is simply marvelous."

Mrs. Fisher is just one of thousands who share these sentiments. As a result of this devotion from Akronites, the co-op recently completed its first year of operation in the black, with

Sales are now running at approximately $55,000 per week. During the special anniversary week, which featured a giant 2000-pound birthday cake, sales reached an astounding $71,000.

Four years of hard work went into building the co-op. In 1948 the Akron CIO Council made a consumers' cooperative an official union project. Individualistic mountaineers, who comprise a big percentage of Akron's industrial population, went to work in their local unions and in the shops, selling shares of stock.

They explained that in a co-op, like a union, the individual counts. Each member has one vote no matter how many shares of stock he owns. One $25 share of common stock entitles a member to as much a voice in the business as one who has 50 shares.

Union Backing

More than 5000 unionists in 32 CIO and AFL local unions have purchased $325,000 worth of stocks in the co-op. Three giant URW-CIO unions—Locals 2, 5, and 7, which represent workers in the Goodyear, Goodrich, and Firestone plants — bought more than $100,000 worth of preferred, non-voting stock.

This has maintained control of policy for the shopping center in the hands of grass roots consumers and enabled it to remain an enterprise run by the people and for the people.

One co-op enthusiast, Sonny Hibbler, a member of URW Local 5, sold more than $45,000 in stock, collecting the money from workers in the shop a dollar or two at a time. Hibbler now works part-time as the co-op's "star salesman."

To insure success, Akron co-operators were determined to start big. They purposely held back building plans until they had enough money to compete against chain super-markets. A committee traveled from city to city searching for a top-notch man to head up the store.

They're Organized

In Racine, Wis., they found their man—A. J. Choat, who had 13 years of successful experience in cooperative wholesaling and retailing. Choat is a happy mixture of hardheaded business sense and practical idealism. He picked department heads from the best in their respective merchandising fields.

The co-op employs 80 persons who are either members of the AFL Meat Cutters' Union or the CIO Local Industrial Union 1801 covering grocery clerks. There is no discrimination in hiring, which puts the co-op virtually in a class by itself in the rubber center.

The store itself retails meats, groceries, electrical appliances, and clothing, and has a lunch counter and service station.

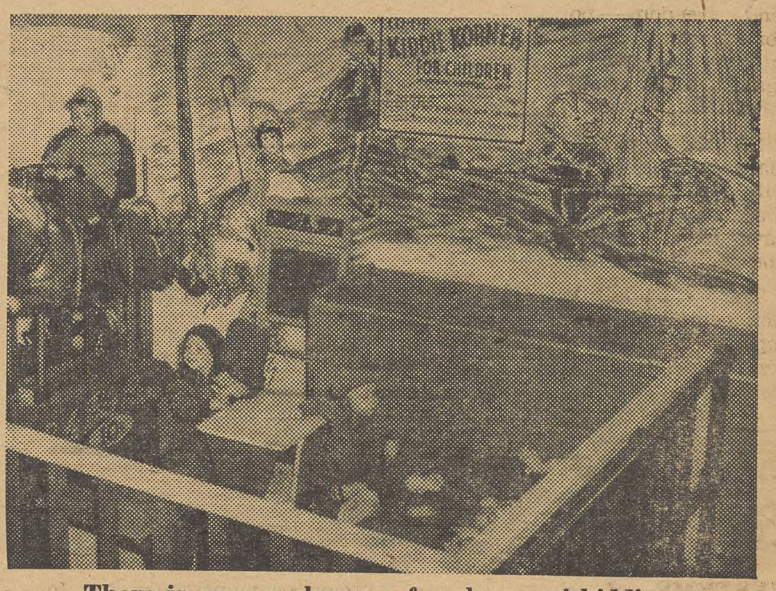
Members of the policy-making board of directors, elected at annual membership meetings, come from a variety of unions. The majority are URW members, who form the greatest part of organized labor in Akron. Other unions represented are the Communications Workers, Auto Workers, and Transport Workers, all in CIO.

Co-op customers are highly enthusiastic about the services and low prices. One cooperator, Paul Westerfield, walks five miles to the store nearly every day. URW Vice-Pres. Joseph Childs, who is a co-op member, visits the center almost every week along with thousands of other Rubber Workers.

The co-op has brought lower prices throughout the community. "We believe in a big volume of business which forces prices down," Choat declared.

In one year Akron's cooperative has made an exciting impact on its community of 300,000. To its 10,000 weekly shoppers "co-op" means low prices, friendly service, and a guarantee of excellent food quality.

To organized labor it means that labor-backed co-ops can be successful in making the dollars of unionists go farther. And for the community it means a better break to the harassed consumer in forcing down many retail prices.



There is even a play pen for shoppers' kiddies.

The CIO-supported bill to grant one million tons of wheat to famine-stricken Pakistan received final House and Senate approval and was sent to the White House last week.

Stockholm Meeting—

ICFTU To Set Free Labor's World Goals

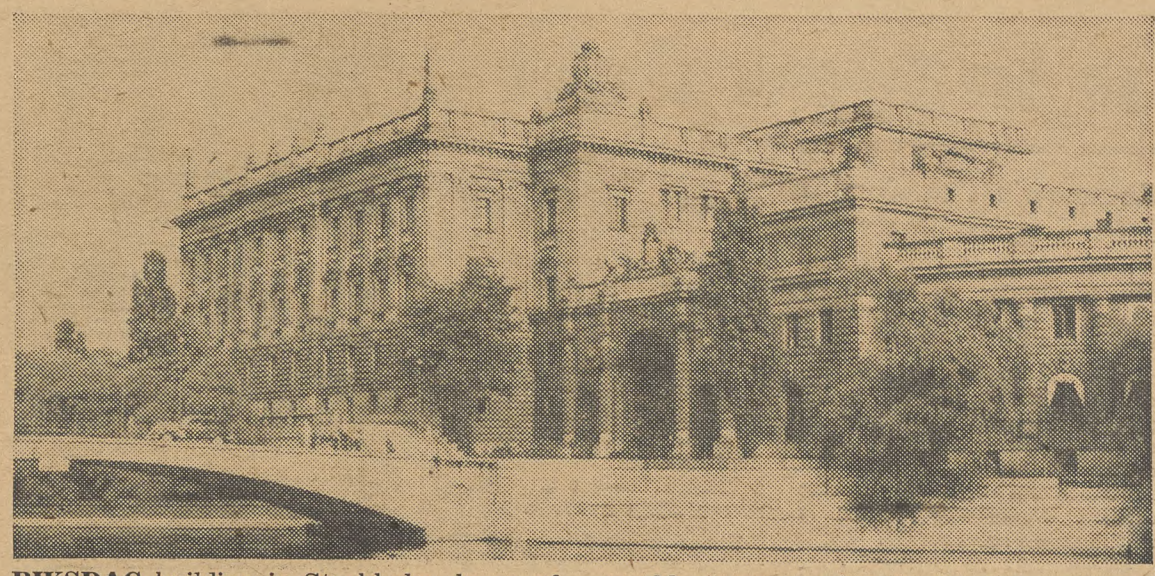
ON JULY 4, the day the United States celebrates its independence, the representatives of 54 million workers in all parts of the world will meet in Stockholm to chart the next steps of organized labor in the universal fight for peace, bread and freedom.

Men and women of all colors and races, from the five continents and from tiny islands, from large countries and small, they will spend a week at the third world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions seeking the answers to the basic problems of working men and women everywhere.

In Sweden's Parliament House, meeting place of one of democracy's sturdiest legislative bodies, they will discuss how best to extend freedom — political, economic, social—and how to carry on the struggle of free men against totalitarianism in every form.

THE DEVELOPMENT of their plans for the fight for freedom will center around world peace, the only atmosphere, as workers have found, in which freedom and justice flourish.

They will talk about the situation behind the Iron Curtain, a topic made more timely by recent popular uprisings against Communist dictatorships in East Germany, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria.



RIKSDAG building in Stockholm, home of Swedish Parliament, will be scene of third world congress of Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

They will weigh the plight of dependent countries and the fights for self-determination their people are waging, often under the leadership of democratically organized, anti-Communist free trade unions.

They will talk about human rights, too, and the rights of labor.

And they will talk about the primary task of union people everywhere—the job of organizing the unorganized, especially among the workers of underdeveloped countries emerging into the industrial age.

THE ICFTU was established in December 1949 at the first world congress in London by representatives of 53 anti-Communist trade union centers. The second world congress was held in 1951 at Milan, Italy.

As the third congress opens, the ICFTU has 97 affiliates in 73 countries or territories in every part of the world, with a total membership of 54 million workers.

Permanent headquarters are Brussels, Belgium. Sir Vincent Tewson, of the British Trades Union Congress, is president, and J. H. Oldenbroek, a veteran of the international labor movement, is general secretary.

The CIO, one of the founding members of the ICFTU, will be represented by a delegation headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Included will be Vice Presidents L. S. Buckmaster, O. A. Knight, James G. Thimmes and Michael Quill; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, chairman of the CIO International Committee; Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paperworkers; Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, and Michael Ross, director of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept.

Guy T. Nunn, CIO Auto Workers' radio and television broadcaster, will accompany the delegation as adviser and interpreter.

THE AFL and the Mine Workers also will be represented, as will the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which CIO locals in Canada are affiliated.

Delegates from the U. S. labor bodies, after a recent meeting in Washington, issued a joint statement expressing their common belief that "the question of achieving a just and durable peace and the obvious dangers which confront the free world during this period of seeming change in Soviet foreign policy" will loom large in the Stockholm discussions.

"We remain unconvinced," they added, "that present Soviet policy harbinges any basic alteration in the pattern of Soviet aggression."

Slave Labor In Russia And Satellites Told In UN Report

SYSTEMS of slave labor exist in Soviet Russia and most of her satellites, the Ad Hoc Committee on Forced Labor established by the United Nations and the Intl. Labor Organizations formally declared last week.

The committee's sordid findings were contained in a 621-page report, the result of five years of work, filed with the UN and the ILO.

The score card on the strongholds of brute force behind the Iron Curtain add up to this:

In Russia, Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia, there are slave labor systems for purposes of political coercion or punishment and for economic purposes.

In Hungary and Poland there are slave labor systems for economic purposes.

In Rumania, there is a slave labor system for political purposes.

IN HUNGARY and Poland—and Spain—there are "definite possibilties" of political coercion or punishment through slave labor systems.

The report was hailed as an "overwhelming indictment of modern mass slavery prevailing in the USSR and its satellites" by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Organized labor started the fight for the expose in 1947, and the ICFTU became its voice when it was organized in 1949.

Slave labor for economic purposes "appears" to exist, it found, in South Africa, and "existed" in the Portuguese colony of San Tome, the report said. In addition, it discerned "possibilties" that might lead to it in a number of other colonies.

THE FACTS, the committee said, are "of so grave a nature that they seriously threaten fundamental human rights and jeopardize the freedom and status of workers in contravention of the obligations and charter of the UN."

"The committee feels, therefore," it continued, "that these systems of forced labor, in any of their forms, should be abolished to insure universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms."

The United States was exonerated of the charges made against it by Communist UN delegates. However, the committee found that in some states the term "vagrancy" is so broadly defined that it could lead to forced labor for economic aims.

Histadrut Votes To Join ICFTU

Histadrut, the Israel federation of labor, voted overwhelmingly last week to join the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. It expects to be represented at the ICFTU world congress opening July 4 in Stockholm, Sweden.

Labor Delegate Punctures Employer Drive On ILO

FEARS of U. S. employers that the Intl. Labor Organization intends to set up a "super state," spring from faulty interpretation of the ILO constitution, an American Labor delegate told the ILO Conference at Geneva, Switzerland.

American employers have been attacking the ILO for years on the ground that it "infringes" on U. S. sovereignty. Their views were given to the conference by Charles E. Shaw, U. S. employer delegate, and effectively torn apart by George P. Delaney of the AFL.

What scares the bosses, he said, is an increase in the number of ILO conventions, or treaties, "which in effect would regulate the internal affairs of citizens of the member countries."

Delaney pointed out that if all the enforcement machinery in the pertinent articles of the ILO constitution were brought to bear," the sovereignty of a member state could in no way be infringed." He added:

"But even aside from the legal explanation, there is another more practical answer to the arguments presented. Neither our employers, our workers, nor our government can become party at this time to withdrawal from such a constructive form of international cooperation."

4-Day Tieup Ends—

NMU, ARA Gain On Pay, Conditions In New Pact

TWO CIO seafaring unions have won pay increases up to 6% and other benefits in settlement of disputes with shipping companies.

The Maritime Union won a contract with the Atlantic and Gulf Coast ship owners following a four-day tieup. The settlement of the American Radio Association with the East Coast companies gives the union control of radio telephones, the subject of a bitter dispute for months.

A THIRD CIO ship union, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, resumed negotiations with 40 East and Gulf Coast ship operators.

MEBA contract proposals, it was reported, include a 10% wage increase and improved vacation, welfare and other benefits. The union has extended its contract a month to mid-July, pending bargaining sessions.

The end of the NMU tieup was in sight when major oil concerns split from the employers' front to sign with the union.

Several hours later with the help of the U. S. Mediation Service, the union and the Committee for Companies and Agents, Atlantic and Gulf Coast, reached agreements. The committee represents 39 dry-cargo operators. The union also was reaching agreements with some 40 operators not represented by the committee.

The new wage terms in the dry-cargo agreement provide that all seamen earning $340.73 a month and more will get a 6% wage increase and an increase in the overtime rate to $1.98 an hour for Saturday and Sunday work at sea.

Those earning $298.49 to $340.72 a month will get a 4% increase and a new hourly overtime rate of $1.94. Seamen earning less than $298.49 will receive a 2% raise and a new overtime rate of $1.51 an hour.

The new contract with companies represented by the employers' committee runs for one year, with a wage reopener Dec. 15. The tanker contract is for two years with wage reopeners at six month intervals, and also provides sliding scale increases ranging from 2% to 6%.

The new contract also provides that a U. S. Public Health Service decision on a seaman's health will be final, a check-off of union dues to be taken from vacation funds four times a year, and no lay-off of crews if a vessel is laid up 10 days or less.

OTHER contract gains include improved transportation pay for seamen who have to leave a ship for medical treatment, a system of seniority based on previous employment, several new ratings that must be sought through the hiring hall and adjustment of ship steward work hours.

The tanker contract contained similar improvements.

Union leaders said that there was no doubt that the locals would ratify the agreement with the dry-cargo companies. The New York local approved the settlement by a vote of 2000 to 4.

ARA was fearful that the increasing use of radio telephone facilities outside of radio rooms by ship masters and deck officers might reduce the ranks of the radio operators.

The new contract granted these demands. ARA also won 6% wage, overtime and penalty rate increases. The new rates provide that on a freighter or collier a radio operator will receive $501.70 a month, and on tanker $509.50.

The new contract will run for two years on tankers, and for one year on dry-cargo, passenger ships and colliers.

Seamen's Pension Plan Begins Soon

About $4.1 million will be accumulated by Jan. 1 under the pension plan. The plan was set up in January 1951 under a contract between NMU and the Atlantic and Gulf Coast ship owners. Some 45,000 members of the union are covered.

NMU members who have been regularly employed 20 years on merchant marine vessels will be eligible for pensions of $55 a month at the age of 65. With social security benefits, this will mean a total of $182.50 in retirement benefits for a seaman with wife or $140 for a single man.

AN ACTIVE member of Swift Local 28 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers in Chicago a few years ago, Rev. Edward Cassidy was ordained a Catholic priest for the diocese of Reno, Nev. Many former co-workers attended his first solemn mass in Holy Name Cathedral, Chicago.

CIO Urges Watershed Control Plan

WATERSHED stabilization and management, rather than huge dams, was endorsed as the correct solution to the problem of flood prevention by the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation at a recent meeting in Denver, Colo.

Large dams, the committee maintained, merely move the flood area from downstream cities up upstream farm lands.

Field and forest resources, including irreplaceable farm land, and economic and social values of farm and small town areas "are sacrificed in order to protect the built-up and congested river bottom lands upon which big cities have encroached," it explained.

THE PROGRAM endorsed by the committee, in line with past National CIO convention statements, calls for terraces, grassed waterways, contour plowing, tree planting, strip cropping, change-over to grass, dairy and beef production, long rotation in grass, and similar soil conservation and erosion control moves.

In addition to these measures for rehabilitating the land, the program calls for a large number of small flood prevention structures throughout each watershed, to be built with federal aid. These include farm ponds, detention basins and check dams, with larger-type dams only where special conditions require them.

"The protection of our watersheds is a matter of national concern," the committee said.

"THE FOOD supply of the entire nation, as well as the timber supply, depends upon it. Moreover, the cities are entitled to the protection against floods which watershed management can provide. Local protection works are desirable, but in most cases are inadequate.

"If watershed rehabilitation and flood detension work are not pressed with vigor, the demand for the construction of large dams, with consequent flooding of farm and forest, will become irresistible.

"We urge, therefore, that methods be developed whereby city people as well as rural groups can take some degree of initiative in planning and carrying out sound flood prevention programs."

Demos Save Ike's Bill On Foreign Aid

DEMOCRATIC members of the House last week saved Pres. Eisenhower's foreign aid program from being cut more than the $476 million already lopped off by the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

As finally passed, the bill authorizes $4.9 billion but stipulates that more than $1 billion in European military aid is to be withheld until our West Europe allies approve a European army. Pres. Eisenhower had requested $5,474,000,000 with no strings attached.

Republicans split down the middle on nearly every effort to slash the bill further, but 90% of the House Democrats lined up solidly behind the President's request to prevent further cuts.

The Senate Committee, however, adopted an amendment which, in effect, cut the Mutual Security Administrator's spending authority by over $98 million by specifying that counterpart funds hereafter can be spent only through congressional appropriations.

CIO Maritime Unit Protests Military Grab

THE CIO charged before a Senate subcommittee that the military is "pushing hard to take over the merchant marine."

This warning was voiced by Ben J. Man, research consultant of the CIO Maritime Committee. He urged a Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce subcommittee to amend S. 1439 to give priority to private ships for transporting troops and their support supplies.

Man declared the Military Sea Transportation Service is "following a practice of expanding when shipping needs are high during a national emergency and not contracting when shipping requirements sharply decrease."

"WE ARE convinced that their (the MSTS) long-range plan is to operate every American merchant ship afloat," Man said. "This is contrary to congressional mandate which states that the merchant marine shall be privately-owned and civilian-manned."

As a basis for this statement, he referred the subcommittee to the Declaration of Policy of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

He accused Admiral Denebrink of the Navy of "incorrect interpretation of law" when he testified before the House Merchant Marine & Fisheries Committee last May.

Man said the Admiral "very frankly stated that he believes that MSTS 'nucleus fleet' exists basically to provide the assurance of sea transportation of vital supplies and personnel in meeting sudden and variable military requirements."

The CIO consultant said MSTS arguments that private ships could not be relied upon to serve in certain critical areas for security reasons were belied by its own action in operating 38 vessels between Japan and Korea manned entirely by Japanese crews.

"WE STRONGLY resent," he said, "a statement that an American privately operated merchant marine cannot be deepnded on in national emergencies, but foreigners can. It is clear that the military have more than a foot in the door.

"They are pushing hard to take over the merchant marine. This is appalling when we consider that American flag ships are sailing light because of the lack of cargo."

GOP Builds A Bigger Log-jam As Congress Stalls On U. S. Funds

By MILTON PLUMB

TOMORROW, June 30, most of the agencies of the federal government will run out of funds to conduct their operations.

Temporary legislation will allow them to continue in business. But hanging over the heads of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees is responsibility for one of the worst government money bill log-jams in history.

By this time last year, all but two of the regular appropriations bills had passed both houses—and that was in the Dixiegop 82nd Congress when Democratic leadership was sabotaged through Dixiecrat collusion with the Republican self-named "wrecking crew."

Today, with the Republicans alone in the driver's seat, there are still three major appropriations measures that haven't even had House action. Only one of the 13 regular money bills that must be acted on this session has gone to the White House.

The latter is the bill appropriating funds to run the Treasury and Post Office next year, which Pres. Eisenhower signed into Public Law 73 on June 18. The Senate has acted on only three other money measures—the Agriculture Dept., State, Justice and Commerce Depts., and the first Independent Office bills.

NONE of the latter, however, has even been submitted to conference for the ironing out of differences.

In contrast, although the 82nd was one of the least efficient Congresses, six of the 11 regular money bills passed last year had cleared the House before the end of March. Three others went through in April and the last two were sent to the Senate on May 1 and May 15.

This year, the House Appropriations group under the chairmanship of Rep. Taber (R., N. Y.) has been so slow in acting that only one had cleared the House by the end of April. Six of the 10 so far passed by the House went through after last year's final House appropriations date.

This log-jam in the House committee, ironically, comes despite a big increase in its staff ordered by Taber when he took charge. Taber hired 75 "foremost business and management experts" to help him do his hatchet job on government agencies.

EIGHTEEN of these "experts" were assigned to work on defense appropriations alone. The latter bill is one of three still not even reported out by Taber's group. In 1952, when there were only 37 full and part-time employes on the entire staff of the committee, the defense appropriations passed the House on Apr. 9.

One big reason for the delay has been that, although it is contrary to House rules to include legislative provisions in appropriations bills, nearly every such measure sent to the floor this year contained highly controversial legislative propositions.

As Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) recently pointed out, the advantage of this strategy as a means of wrecking old and well-established programs stems from the fact that all hearings of the House Appropriations Committee are closed to the public. Hatchet work is thus done in secret until the bill is reported for House action and there is no opportunity for public opposition to express itself.

Old Guard politicians are reluctant to make an all-out battle to repeal New and Fair Deal programs, such as the school lunch program, educational activities, housing, etc. Instead, they have chosen the equally effective method of wrecking them by withholding funds for their administration.

Speaking Of Economy

THE MEMBERS of the House last week voted themselves an added tax deduction and three new cars for the Speaker and the Majority and Minority Leaders. Then they suddenly set an "economy" example by denying a car to the Capitol Architect.

Approved by a voice vote, the tax amendment would allow Congressmen to deduct all of their Washington living expenses for income tax purposes. They already are allowed a $3000 a year deduction.

The government has provided a car—or carriages—for the architect since 1874. But the House voted 47 to 20 not only to keep him from buying a new car but also to deny him funds to operate the one he already has.

Tennessee CIO Raps Drive To Curb TVA

By W. A. COPELAND

THE PROBLEMS of America and all Americans are the problems of the CIO.

That's what Lorne Nellis, national director of the CIO Southern Organizing Committee, told the annual convention of the Tennessee CIO Council at Nashville.

And the theme was continued throughout the three-day session.

Nellis warned the more than 300 delegates that CIO members must get busy for future elections; must keep informed on everything happening in Washington.

Al Barkan, CIO Textile Workers PAC director, elaborated on the "trickle down" policy in the Republican Administration. He said it is going "over-board" to favor big business and "tightening up" when it comes to doing anything for the little fellow.

BARKAN told the convention that "big business, the gamblers and racketeers and the reactionary elements" in the nation would do everything possible to defeat Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) next year, and warned the delegates that "we cannot afford to lose a man of the calibre of Senator Kefauver."

Kefauver himself was one of the key convention speakers, and expressed great concern over what the Eisenhower Administration, through fund cuts, was doing to the TVA, "the life blood of the industrial Tennessee Valley."

KEFAUVER told the delegates that one of the things he always had greatly admired in the CIO was the fact that CIO members were concerned not only in labor legislation, but in any legislation beneficial to the American citizens. "I hope that always will be your policy," he added.

Gov. Frank Clement, elected with CIO support, similarly congratulated the CIO for its "unselfish interest in those things and those laws who are helpful to American humanity."

Clement pledged a continued fight for modification of the state's open shop law, despite the defeat of an attempt in the recent Legislature to amend it.

Dan Powell, southern PAC director and representing the National CIO-PAC, cautioned the delegates that "we should be making our plans now for the 1954 elections."

Leonard Evans, Steelworker, was re-elected without opposition as Council president, and James P. Harden, Auto Workers, was the unopposed nominee to succeed B. Ray Allen as first vice president. Allen did not seek re-election. Matt Lynch, the Council's executive secretary, is serving the second year of a three-year term.

Reuther Hits Ike's Blast Against TVA

Pres. Eisenhower "chose a very poor example" of "creeping socialism" when he pinned that label on the Tennessee Valley Authority, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told a press conference in Washington.

TVA, he said, is "one of the real, democratic monuments to achievement." A poll of the TVA area, he predicted, would show over 90% support for the undertaking.

Senate Defeats GOP Small Plants Deal

REPUBLICAN leadership in the Senate was handed its first defeat of the present session by Democrats plus three GOP members and an independent last week.

The test came on government aid to small business, a part of the bill to extend the Defense Production Act with virtually no anti-inflation provisions.

The united Democratic opposition labeled "phony" the GOP proposal to kill off the Reconstruction Finance Corp. and the Small Defense Plants Administration and set up a substitute small business loan agency.

BY A 47 TO 42 vote, the Senate turned down this proposal, which earlier had passed the House. GOP Sens. Langer (N.D.), Williams (Del.) and Young (N.D.) and Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) joined the solid Democratic front opposing the measure.

The vote means that the bill will again be returned to a conference committee for a further attempt to adjust differences.

This time, the Senate's conferees will be under specific instructions to insist on knocking out the provisions setting up a new small business agency.

The Senate also instructed its members of the new conference committee to demand that the SDPA, which was originally created by the Defense Production Act, be continued.

Since the RFC is not scheduled to die before June 30, 1954, the effect would be to continue present small business aid programs for at least another year without change.

There was no fight over other provisions of the continuing legislation, which would extend for two more years the government's power to allocate scarce materials. Both House and Senate earlier voted not to continue the anti-inflation provisions of the original act.

LED BY Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), ranking minority member of the conference committee, Democratic Senators attacked both the small business agency proposed by the conferees and the Republican maneuver which tied it into the controls bill.

Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) called it "a bad bill, ill considered." He said it was proposing "phony patent medicine supposed to be good for small business because it says so on the label."

Monroney pointed out that the bill would have set up a three-man board composed of the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury and the new agency's administrator. He observed that Treasury Sec. George M. Humphrey is the key man in the Administration's "hard money" policy which makes government lending aids to small businessmen even more necessary.

Morse warned that "little businessmen are being taken in this bill." He said that the proposed setup would make small businessmen "stooges and tools" of big business.

'Let The Buyer Beware'—

Consumer Protection Tested As Battery 'Dope' Case Argued

DOES BATTERY additive AD-X2 really pep up aging batteries or is a modern-day snake oil, guaranteed to cure all ills and capable of curing none?

In a nutshell, that's the problem before the Senate Small Business Committee, now holding hearings on a key question: Shall the new public policy of the government be "Let the Buyer Beware?"

The National Bureau of Standards, the top U. S. testing laboratory, says it is of "no value." It made the determination following a long series of tests.

The manufacturer, who stands to make a big profit if this verdict is overturned, claims his "secret formula," developed by "accident," is really valuable.

But that claim was punctured by Dr. Allen V. Astin, Bureau of Standards director. Astin first was fired by Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks, later reinstated after the uproar began.

WHEN Astin testified, he said flatly that the various chemicals contained in $36 worth of AD-X2 are worth just 5c at wholesale. And he added that the 5c worth—at $36 prices—has "no beneficial effects" whatsoever on prolonging the use of batteries.

Such Senators as Thye (Minn.), Ferguson (Mich.) and Smathers (Fla.) protested that the Bureau of Standards should have accepted the testimony of businessmen's report orders for AD-X2.

"A shrewd, hard-fisted businessman that has a fleet of motors," said Thye, "can't all be fools."

"Senator," Astin replied, "Lincoln said you can fool all of the people some of the time. I think the man is being fooled . . ."

As the first witness, Ritchie put on what Washington newspapers called "a modern version of an old-style medicine show." "I'm basically a bulldozer operator," he told the senators while he disputed the nation's top chemists.

SEN. HUMPHREY (D. Minn.), once a druggist, took a look at the chemical contents of AD-X2 and snorted: "That's just epsom salts and Glauber's salts. You give one to people, and one to horses. Everybody knows that."

But Ritchie insisted that if you give them both to a dying battery it will come to life again. How, he said, he didn't know. It was all an accident.

Food, Medical Boosts Send Price Index To '53 Peak

UNDER pressure of rising food prices and higher costs of medical care, the cost-of-living has reached a 1953 peak.

The latest report of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics said the Consumer Price Index climbed .3% during the month ending May 15.

The "new" price index—to which major contracts of the CIO Auto Workers now are linked—reached 114.0. This was just .3% below the all-time price index record set last November.

Despite the announced anti-inflationary purposes of the Eisenhower Administration's "hard money" policy, the price index has climbed every month since February. The index now is 12% above the pre-Korean war period.

In the latest monthly period, BLS said, food prices climbed .5% due to higher meat prices. Medical care rose .4% reflecting higher costs for group hospitalization and hospital rate boosts. Rents climbed .7%.

Butterlegger Nailed On Fraud Charge

THE LABELS proclaimed "Fancy Creamery Butter" but the only thing fancy about the product was the heavy mixture of colored oleomargarine with butter—sold at butter prices, natch.

That, in substance, is a typical case of the 34 convictions for pure food and drug violations reported by the U. S. Food and Drug Administration for May.

On the "butterlegger" case, involving Morris Abramson of Newark, N. J., the agency reported:

"FDA's investigation of the margarine case began when an inspector noted one brand of 'butter' at a food market selling for 4c or 5c below the other brands in the store.

"He bought a pound and FDA laboratory tests showed the true contents of the spurious product.

"FDA's inspectors traced the wrappers to a printing firm that had sold the defendent about 19,000 wrappers originally printed for a butter distributor who had subsequently gone bankrupt."

Abramson was fined $500, given a one-year suspended jail sentence and placed on probation for a year.

U. S. Check Asked On Gas Price Hike

A Justice Dept. investigation of recent gas price increases, to see whether anti-trust laws have been violated, was asked last week by a representative of the National Oil Marketers Association.

The various Standard Oil and other gas companies have boosted prices from .5c to 1.5c a gallon. In the Washington area, prices have been upped twice within a 10-day period.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THERE IS KEEN interest among sewers in the new zig-zag or attachment-less sewing machines which have come on the market in recent years. This department has received many letters asking advice on whether such machines are worth buying, and seeking evaluations of individual models.

Among the leading makes are two imported machines, Necchi and Elna. These two makes include both straight-stitch and zig-zag machines. The zig-zag machines can sew a complete garment with various types of stitching, make button-holes, sew on monograms, and do other tasks, all without attachments.

The Pernt

In a final compliance order, FTC told the R. R. Siebert Co. of Rochester, N. Y., to stop all advertising claims that "Pernet," a liquid silver polish, contains nothing injurious or harmful and will not harm the skin.

"Pernet" manufactuers were ordered to label their product as producing harmful fumes and as a possible cause of skin injuries.

Two makes, Elna and Portman, also feature a free arm which is convenient for darning socks and other garments. The Pfaff is another imported zig-zag machine which also produces a good straight-stitch, which some zig-zag machines don't.

THERE ARE a number of other machines which are either true zig-zag machines (with a dial or lever to adjust the needle, with little complication, for the desired width of stitch) or which use other devices to eliminate the use of some attachments. Some of these are imported, so you should make sure you can get local service and parts.

Singer too now has a swing-needle or zig-zag machine which can make button-holes, sew on buttons, darn, do shell hemming, monogramming, etc., without the use of attachments. This machine has a needle that slants toward the sewer making it easier to feed fabric and see as you sew. Singer has sold this machine for many years in foreign countries where zig-zag models have long been popular, but has only recently introduced it here.

The White Sewmaster also can do a number of sewing tasks without attachments. For attachment-less embroidering, it uses three spools of thread at once to secure three-thread thickness. It has a built-in darner, and a speed regulator which enables slow speeds for button-holes, applique and embroidery without reducing the power of the machine.

THE ZIG-ZAG and free arm are useful features. However, they are found only on the costlier machines. If your chief need is for straight stitching, a less costly straight-stitch machine often does a more efficient stitching job. Experts advise that, if you also do some fancy sewing, but already have a straight-stitch machine, before you trade it in for a zig-zag make sure you can't do the same tasks with your own machine's attachments.

Many Japanese-made machines are now sold in the U. S. too. Some are exact copies of Necchi and Singer models at half the price, like the Japanese-made State machine modeled after Necchi. However, inspect any such machines carefully. Some of the Japanese machines are very poorly made.

Scrutinize the guarantee. In some cases in recent years, sewing machine manufacturers have offered what seemed like unconditional guarantees, but later buyers found out they had to pay for parts or labor charges within the period of guarantee.

Doctors' Lobby Sticks Oar In Schools Via Essay Contest

A BIG group of doctors has moved into high school essay contests. It is the Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, which has just announced the winners of the contest on the loaded subject, "Why the Private Practice of Medicine Furnishes This Country with the Finest Medical Care."

The Committee for the Nation's Health says the group's policies on economic and social problems "are considered even more reactionary than those of the American Medical Association."

The committee, however, points out that to AAPS "socialism" means "almost any effort by the American people to obtain the kind of comprehensive health insurance plans they need —including health centers established by unions and cooperatives as well as national legislation."

The AAPS News Letter admits the national educational organization refused to approve the contest because it did not allow students to write on both sides of the controversial question. That didn't stop AAPS, which found it could enlist the support of many local school authorities in promoting the contest.

The contest's purpose was to get high school students to parrot the doctors' lobby line. The winning contestants used as references mainly the publications of organized medicine and big business. Ignored were the five volumes of the report of former President Truman's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation, on which CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther served.

By John V. Riffe

THE REORGANIZATION program in the CIO Organizational Dept. under my direction is going extremely well. We have worked out organizing campaigns and assigned staff to the following unions to carry on important drives: Textile Workers, Woodworkers, Furniture Workers, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, Communications Workers, Intl. Union of Electrical Workers, and Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

The Organizational Dept. will continue working on organizing projects of our other CIO unions just as fast as our staff can be relieved of the important jobs they are assigned to.

There has been much talk in some of the newspapers about mergers coming about between CIO and AFL unions. This office has been in touch with the situation and it is our understanding that the meetings being held to attempt to establish no-raiding agreements. I think that wherever no-raiding agreements can be reached between CIO and AFL unions in the same industry that a helpful and healthy situation will develop.

Reuther Denounces Hearns, Urges Aid For DPO Strikers

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week called upon CIO members in the greater New York area to support "the valiant strikers" at the Hearn Department Stores.

Reuther charged the strikers were "the victims of a selfish management, determined to crush a union that has successfully represented them over the years and which has improved their wages, hours and working conditions."

The strikers are members of District 65, Distributive, Processing and Office Workers, recently admitted to affiliation with the CIO pending a proposed merger with the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers.

Reuther took sharp issue with the "misleading propaganda campaign" of the Hearn management, designed to "undermine the confidence of these union members in their union."

This propaganda campaign, which Reuther predicted "shall not succeed," has charged District 65 with being Communist-dominated.

The CIO president said flatly "there is no truth to the Hearn Co. charges."

Recalling CIO's "long and respected record for fighting Communists," Reuther said the DPO was admitted to affiliation with the CIO "only after the most searching examination."

"OUR action," he continued "was based on the investigation and recommendation of some of the most respected anti-Communist trade union officials in the New York area. They reported—and the National CIO similarily found, after looking at the facts—that District 65 is free of Communist domination."

The strike, he said, is not over Communist issues but is "a legitimate strike over important economic issues," which will "arouse every worker, every union in America."

Reuther charged that "any company unwilling to trust to the decision of a fair and impartial arbitrator must be holding to an untenable position."

"Hearn's refusal to arbitrate, plus its continued use of deceitful propaganda, should prove to all fair-minded citizens that it is not fighting for decent principles, but only to destroy the union and undermine the security of its employes," Reuther concluded.

NLRB Tosses Out DuPont Claims On A-Plant Ballot

THE MIGHTY E. I. Dupont de Nemours & Co. has batted zero in its effort to stymie a CIO election victory at the Savannah River, S. C., H-bomb plant.

DuPont filed four lengthy objections with the National Labor Relations Board after the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers won a representation election at the big atomic project near Aiken, S. C.

They ranged from claims that Gas, Coke election leaflets "went beyond the free speech provisions" of Taft-Hartley to a charge that arrest of four CIO organizers by Dupont company police was deliberately invited.

The NLRB, in a final decision last week, tossed out all of Dupont's objections and certified the Chemical Workers as bargaining representative for some 75 plant protection firemen.

The UGCCW won the election, held last March, by a vote of 157 to 4 for the AFL.

During the election campaign, some 27 CIO members were fired, resulting in an unfair labor practices case instituted by the union against DuPont.

New CIO Radio Commentary Begins July 4

Times for the new series of CIO public service broadcasts over the American Broadcasting Co. network were announced last week.

The broadcasts will be heard in the East on Saturdays from 6 to 6:15 p.m. EDT and in the Midwest from 5 to 5:15 p.m. CDT. By delayed broadcast, the show will be heard in the Mountain and Pacific time belts from 9:30 to 9:45 p.m., Standard time.

The once-a-week broadcast will be on the air for 13 weeks.

Crowley fills a broadcasting spot for the CIO which has been filled for the past three years by Robert R. Nathan, economist and lecturer.

Strike Voted As Shipyard Talks Stalled

THE CIO Shipbuilders were poised for a strike last week as negotiations for pay boosts under contracts with two major East Coast employers remained deadlocked.

The union is demanding a 6% increase, or 12c an hour for standard mechanics, on behalf of 19,000 members working in eight Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. yards in the New York area, the Boston area and Baltimore.

In addition, it is seeking the same pay hike and pension and welfare improvements for 7000 members in two Todd Shipyards Corp. yards in Hoboken, N. J., and Brooklyn.

Bethlehem negotiations are being conducted in New York and Todd sessions in Brooklyn, both under reopening clauses in contracts that expire next year.

John J. Grogan, IUMSWA-CIO president and mayor-elect of Hoboken, said union negotiators were "disappointed" with the employers' failures to come up with wage offers.

CIO Joins In Group Protest To Mrs. Hobby On Pensions

PROTESTS against growing efforts to undermine the social security system were filed last week with Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby of the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. by a delegation from the Citizens' Conference of Social Security.

The delegation left with her a report outlining the conference views on proposals by such groups as the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, offered under "attractive labels," which would turn the system into a parody on social security.

THE REPORT also gave conference recommendations for improving and extending social security, and summarized the system's successful operations in the last 18 years.

The delegation included Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, secretary of the CIO Social Security Committee.

The conference's opposition to "ill-considered suggestions that could destroy the system" was spelled out in the report.

The proposed changes against which the delegation protested include plans to extend coverage to five million aged not now covered, with benefits for them limited to a meagre $25 a month; financing on a pay-as-you-go basis by a payroll tax; abandonment of federal grants-in-aid for public assistance, and weakening of federal standards under the Social Security and Unemployment Compensation Acts.

The report gave five additional reasons for apprehension. These were C. of C. domination of Mrs. Hobby's Advisory Committee; investigation of OASI and public assistance for the House Ways & Means Committee by an avowed enemy of the present programs; the Taft-Halleck joint congressional investigation to determine if any federal aid is justified, and the pending appointment of what amounts to an American Medical Association spokesman as Mrs. Hobby's special health assistant.

Correction

It was incorrectly stated in the June 15 issue The CIO News that Ernest B. Pugh, Virginia director of the CIO Organizing Committee, is chairman of a three-man executive committee that will operate the Virginia CIO Council until the council convention names a president at Roanoke Oct. 1-3. Stuart B. Childress, president of Local 88, CIO Clothing Workers, Richmond, is the chairman, and Pugh is a committee member.

Trade Pact Bill Okehed

EXTENSION of the reciprocal trade agreements program moved another step toward congressional approval as the Senate Finance Committee okehed a one-year extension bill.

The committee rejected a House-adopted rider increasing the size of the Federal Tariff Commission. The FTC now has six members, equally divided between Democrats and Republicans.

Protests Pay Off—

Funds-For-Schools Win As Senate Acts On Oil Bill

THE WAVE of public protest over the recent "tidelands" give-away paid off last week as the Senate debated a bill by Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.) that would save five-sixths of the offshore oil, gas and mineral deposits for the American people.

Not only were new moves by the oil lobby to grab still more of the nation's under-water wealth soundly beaten back, but the Senate voted 45 to 37 to adopt the oil-for-education amendment of Sen. Hill (D. Ala.).

A final Senate vote was expected shortly, with every indication that the Cordon-Hill measure would pass.

Earlier, the CIO had rallied support behind the Cordon Bill, which asserts absolute federal control over the ocean bottom and subsoil of the continental shelf beyond the so-called tidelands. The tidelands, extending from three to 10.5 miles offshore, last month were voted outright to the coastal states in conformity with Pres. Eisenhower's campaign promises to Texas oilmen.

The continental shelf extends as much as 150 miles beyond state boundaries. Experts say that five-sixths of the offshore riches worth between $50 billion and $300 billion lie in this outer area.

UNDER Cordon's bill the Interior Dept. would have authority to grant separate leases for petroleum, gas and sulphur development of the shelf. Royalty accruing to the federal government would be 12.5% for oil and gas and 10% for sulphur.

Louisiana and Texas recently asked that police, taxing and conservation laws of the adjoining coastal states be made to apply to the federal submerged lands. They also demanded a share of the revenue from oil and gas production on the shelf.

Eisenhower, however, has endorsed federal control of the outer area and the Senate turned down amendments that would have given the states a cut in revenue and the right to tax.

IN A LETTER to councils, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and C. A. McPeak, CIO assistant director of councils, urged that the Cordon Bill "be protected against sleepers, jokers and outright ripper amendments." They added, however, that it was "vital" that the Hill amendment be added.

The amendment, now a part of the measure, earmarks revenue from $40 billion to $240 billion in oil and gas production to replace crowded dilapidated schools, provide more and better teachers, and assist young people to get the higher education they now can't afford.

Parliamentary rigamarole prevented a direct vote on the merits of Hill's proposal earlier. Although it had the backing of more than 30 Senators, its fate was uncertain when Sen. Daniel (D. Tex.) offered a substitute that would have applied the oil income to the national debt.

THE TURNING point came when Sen. George (D. Ga.) tipped the scales with his support. Congratulating Hill for "putting first things first," he declared:

"There is no way to pay the national debt or to maintain the vast and specific character of government which we have developed in this country except through a constantly expanding economy. There is no way to keep it constantly expanding except through the education of the people, from the ground up."

While it will be some time before the nation's schools could benefit from the measure, Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) estimated that they may eventually get as much as $40 billion as a result of its enactment. During the current emergency, but for not more than three years, revenues may also be used for defense.

Hill's amendment had bi-partisan backing, but it was put over largely by Democratic votes. A total of 34 Democrats and 11 Republicans voted for it, while 30 Republicans and 7 Democrats were opposed.

Snatch Act

Former Pres. Truman once called the "tidelands" oil give-away "highway robbery" but Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) last week suggested that maybe it's kidnapping instead.

When Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.) pointed out that his bill asserting federal control over the outer continental shelf saved five-sixths of the oil for the people, Douglas asked:

"Without wishing to ruffle the dovecotes, nevertheless, is it not true that if a man kidnaps six children and returns five of them, but keeps one in his custody, he is still a kidnapper?"

GROUND BREAKING—First shovel of earth is turned by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of CIO Clothing Workers (center) at ground breaking ceremonies for million-dollar health center for 18,000 New York laundry workers. Also in group are officials of ACWA Laundry Workers Joint Board, ACWA Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum (right), and Mayor Vincent Impellitteri.

Million-Dollar Health Center Begun For Laundry Unions

GROUND has been broken for a new million-dollar health center to serve 18,000 New York laundry workers, members of the CIO Clothing Workers.

The center, to be known as the Amalgamated Laundry Workers Health Center, constructed under joint union-employer auspices, is expected to begin operations early in 1954.

FUNDS for construction and operation will be provided by a jointly administered welfare fund to which 1500 employers contribute 2% of their payrolls. The same fund provides cash sick benefits to union members of half pay up to $50 weekly, hospital, surgical and maternity benefits and life insurance, Louis Simon, manager of the Laundry Workers Joint Board of the ACWA, said.

Present plans call for a medical staff of 35 physicians in addition to dentists who will provide examination and evaluation only, physical and X-ray therapists and pharmacisists. Dr. Benjamin S. Fishman will serve as medical director.

The health center will occupy a 100x100 foot granite, brick and glass fireproof building. It will have two clinical floors and a basement with parking space for staff cars. It has been planned to allow construction of a third floor when needed.

Beirne Ailing, Re-elected As CWA's Chief

PRES. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers was unaimously re-elected at the union's seventh annual convention in San Francisco last week as he was confined to his bed by an attack of jaundice.

Missing his first convention in his 15 years in the union, Beirne nevertheless was able to listen in by telephone to the ovation that followed his re-election.

THE FOUR other top executive officers also were renamed without opposition.

About 2500 delegates, representing more than 300,000 members of 712 locals in 46 states and Canadian provinces, attended the convention.

They heard messages from Pres. Eisenhower and former Pres. Truman—the former's language formal, the latter's warm and friendly. Eisenhower expressed confidence in the delegates' awareness "of your duties as well as your rights." Truman recalled "with a great deal pleasure the visit I had w you in Spokane during the 'Wh tle Stop' campaign in 1948."

The CWA Executive Board reported average wage gains o 7.5c an hour so far this year, compared to 11.5c in 1952.

(A full report on the CWA convention will be published in next week's CIO News.)

UAW Warns 12,000 Jobs Hit As Kaiser Contract Killed

THE CIO Auto Workers last week protested bitterly to Air Force Sec. Harold E. Talbott on the sudden cancellation of the Kaiser Corp. contract to build C-119 cargo planes.

Emil Mazey UAW-CIO secretary-treasurer, wired to Talbott charging the latter "yielded to fear and political pressure," and demanding a chance to be heard "in the name of the more than 12,000 Kaiser workers who are members of our union."

"We have reason to believe that the Air Force is fearful of a full airing of its entire procurement program, and that you are yielding to fear and political pressure in victimizing the Kaiser Corp. and its workers," Mazey's wire said.

The union called the cancellation "unreasonable and uncalled-for" and demanded Talbott make his reasons public. "In this democracy," the wire said, "you cannot put 12,000 workers in the streets without publicly justifying your reason."

The cancellation was announced while the Kaisers were testifying before a congressional committee looking into the C-119 production problem. (LPA)

IUE Rejects Pay Offer

AN INADEQUATE wage offer by Westinghouse Electric Corp. was turned down last week by the CIO Electrical Workers.

IUE said the Westinghouse proposal, of a 3c hourly general increase and other boosts to 11c, was "not acceptable" because of larger increases negotiated at General Electric and in other contracts.

The rejection was announced by Robert Nellis, IUE Westinghouse Conference Board chairman. IUE represents some 47,000 Westinghouse workers.

Negotiations were to continue this week at Pittsburgh.

CIO Hails Social Security Bill As 'New Hope To All'

By MILTON PLUMB

TWENTY Democrats and one Independent in the House and Senate last week joined in sponsoring an omnibus social security bill to extend coverage, increase benefits and liberalize the present program to bring it in line with current realities.

The measure was introduced in the Senate by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and 10 co-sponsors, and in the House in separate measures by 10 representatives.

The bills were promptly hailed by Joseph Curran, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee, as bringing "new hope to all Americans." Curran also is a CIO vice president and Maritime Union president.

"To the great majority of workers already covered by the program, the bills would bring substantially higher benefits, both for aged persons and for survivors, with a monthly maximum of $200 for a family, and with a minimum of $35," Curran pointed out in a statement analyzing the proposals.

'Most Substantial'

Regarded by some CIO legislative representatives as "the most substantial positive proposal on domestic issues that will be made in the present Congress," the bills were filed in the face of a roadblock thrown up against social security measures by Chairman Curtis (R. Nebr.) of the House Social Security subcommittee.

Although promises were made in the last campaign by both major parties to enlarge the scope and coverage of social security, Curtis has stalled action by launching an "investigation" of the present system. His approach was indicated last week when he told the Townsend Clubs convention that he wants to find out if social security is being used as a "racket."

"Work Together For Pension Gains'

"All of us must work to extend and constantly improve pension systems," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired the 13th national convention of the Tounsend Clubs.

"This is a moral obligation to our citizens, and it is a matter of practical economic necessity if we are ever to achieve continued peacetime full employment and abundance for all," he added.

Promises Recalled

In his State of the Union message, Pres. Eisenhower talked about the need for extending the coverage of social security but Administration proposals for legislation still have not been submitted to Congress. He has given no indication that he favors the following improvements, in addition to broader participation, which are part of the Lehman Bill:

1. Substantially higher benefit payments to make them —in Lehman's words — "more realistic in terms of present-day price and wage levels."

2. Raising from $75 to $100 the amount beneficiaries may earn without losing social security benefits.

3. New benefits for rehabilitation insurance and permanent and total disability insurance, providing for the first time against the economic hazards of disease and injury.

4. Cash sickness benefits for temporarily incapacitated insured workers.

"The object of this bill," Lehman said, "is to grant social security protection to more of our citizens and to assure all participants in the social security system that, as far as is possible and practicable, they are to be protected against the hazards which constitute the basic ingredients of insecurity — injury, chronic illness, premature death, and old age."

Curran's analysis pointed out that altogether 53 million persons now at work or on the benefit rolls would gain directly from the bills' provisions. In addition, coverage of old-age, survivors and disability insurance would be extended to over eight million additional persons, including farm operators and workers, household workers, members of the armed forces and certain government employes.

"Here is no contentment with a breathing spell, no acceptance of substandard benefit levels, no willingness to postpone much-needed improvements," Curran said.

"Instead, these distinguished public servants have put into concrete and practical terms the convictions our members have often expressed that secure human lives represent a constructive investment, not a deferable or unnecessary cost."

Asks Full Support

Curran called on CIO members to give "full support" to the promotion of this "forward-looking program."

He called the bills a resounding answer to the spokesmen of the Chamber of Commerce who deplore benefit improvements that have been made in recent years, and who are seeking to stop federal grants to states for public assistance to the aged and to substitute wholly inadequate payments out of old-age and survivors insurance funds."

McCoy Named As Mediation Chief

Whitley P. McCoy has been nominated by Pres. Eisenhower to head the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service. He succeeds David Cole.

McCoy, of Montgomery, Ala., is a U. S. arbitrator, a vice president of the American Arbitration Association, a university legal professor, and an author.

Senate Defeats 3 Moves To Cut Foreign Aid Bill

A BILL authorizing $5.3 billion for the mutual security program next year was passed by the Senate last week by voice vote. Three moves to trim the authorizing measure were defeated by narrow margins.

Before voting approval, however, the Senate adopted an amendment setting the date of June 30, 1955, for the end of the foreign aid program, allowing only two more years at the most to liquidate commitments outstanding at that time.

THE SENATE bill is $2.3 billion under the amount requested by former Pres. Truman and $155 million under the revised Eisenhower budget. But it was $320 million above the amount voted by the House.

This increase, however, was offset when the isolationists and farm bloc ganged up to push through an amendment requiring the President to use money in the fund for arms aid to send surplus cotton, wheat and meat products instead.

One positive action was approval of an amendment by Sen. Thye (R. Minn.) which restates the anti-cartel principles of the so-called Moody-Benton Amendment enacted in the 82nd Congress. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee had eliminated them from the current bill after they had been bitterly attacked by Sen. Taft (R. O.).

The CIO earlier had protested the committee's action. Robert Oliver, CIO coordinator of legislative activities, wrote each Senator asking that the provisions, which give support to free trade unions and encourage policies leading to higher productivity and consumption, be restored.

Oliver said the sections the committee knocked out were among the most important in the act because they "succeeded in identifying the economic forces necessary to an expanding economy and which are obviously lacking in the restrictive and cartelized economies of certain countries of Western Europe."

He expressed CIO's "deep concern over the imminent danger of serious and continuing deterioration in our relations with and our leadership of the free world in its struggle against the forces of Soviet communist aggression."

If Your Lawmaker Isn't In This Group, Ask Him Why

Sens. Lehman (D. N. Y.), Murray (D. Mont.), Jackson (D. Wash.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Kennedy (D. Mass.), Douglas (D. Ill.), Green (D. R. I.), Morse (Ind. Ore.), Pastore (D. R. I.), Neely (D. W. Va.) and Magnuson (D. Wash.).

Reps. Eberharter (D. Pa.), Celler (D.-Lib. N. Y.), Roosevelt (D.-Lib. N. Y.), Dodd (D. Conn.), Rhodes (D. Pa.), Shelley (D. Calif.), Bolling (D. Mo.), Howell (D. N. J.), Elliott (D. Ala.) and Dingell (D. Mich.).

If your Senator or Representative isn't among them, we suggest you ask him why. Backers hope that over 100 members of the House will introduce the proposal over the next few weeks.

UPWA And Butchers In Wage Pact

AN AGREEMENT on joint action in collective bargaining and organizing was announced last week by the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the AFL Butchers.

The compact also carries a no-raiding provision and requires both unions to halt all current raiding activities immediately. It was announced jointly by UPWA-CIO Pres. Ralph Helstein and Pres. Earl W. Jimerson of the AFL affiliate after ratification by both international executive boards.

The 11-point understanding establishes machinery through which the two unions can work together in wage reopenings, beginning this month, covering about 250,000 employes of the Big Four packers—Swift Armour, Cudahy and Wilson. Joint meetings between both unions and the employers will be sought as reopeners fall due.

Helstein and Jimerson said "pressure of present needs" of the industry's workers requires immediate cooperation while "we continue our efforts to achieve organic unity of all workers within the jurisdiction of our two organizations and the labor movement as a whole."

E. Berlin Vs. The Red Army

Hundreds of thousands of once-free workers, goaded to desperation by the conscienceless brutality of the puppet East German Communist government, took part. They proved too much for the so-called People's Police to handle, so the government did what autocratic employers everywhere try do to — it called out the troops.

Three divisions of the Russian army, with armored weapons and tanks, answered the call for help. Martial law was declared.

Workers elsewhere behind the Iron Curtain had passed the desperation point, too. Soviet troops moved into Czechoslovakia, unrest was reported in Rumania and Bulgaria.

The ICFTU Meets

The eyes of world labor will be turned on Stockholm, Sweden, during the next week or two, as the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions opens its third world congress.

Speaking for upwards of 54 million workers in 73 countries, the ICFTU is indeed the voice of labor. Representatives of the most prosperous, most industrialized nations of the world meet there as brothers with union men from the poorest, least developed areas.

They meet in common brotherhood, and with common aspirations for a better world for all mankind. The barriers that split up peoples and nations are absent in the ICFTU, because of this bond of fraternity. In the ICFTU there is recognition that labor will be strengthened as democracy is strengthened, that labor's moral duty is to strengthen the democratic system.

And, we suspect, the workers of the Soviet world will hear the voice of liberty and human rights that is the language of free labor, of the ICFTU—despite the rigid Soviet censorship.

American labor will be active as cooperative partners at the ICFTU congress. CIO, AFL, and coal miners have sent delegations. We know they will play a leading role in this important convention, coming as it does when the people's passion for freedom is shaking the whole top-heavy Soviet empire.

Welcome, Histadrut

Talking of the ICFTU, we're pleased to note that Histadrut, the forward-looking labor movement of the state of Israel, has recently applied for affiliation.

Histadrut has been one of the major forces for independence for the Jewish State. Through its cooperatives, health units and other services, it plays an unusually significant role in Israeli life.

So, after a three-year period without international affiliations, it is good to see Histadrut applying for its rightful place in the ICFTU. Both will benefit.

States' Rights

All winter and spring, many of the Texans talked about states' rights as they pushed for the give-away offshore bill.

Now, with drouth over the land, these same congressmen are calling for federal emergency aid for Texas farmers. We're glad they're getting it.

We just hope that some of those obstinate Texas oil millionnaires and ranchers don't smear drouth relief as "creeping socialism"—just out of sheer force of habit.

Too Little, Too Late

The government's fiscal year ended June 30. On that date, Congress hadn't finished handling the appropriations for most of our government agencies. It's been so busy cutting out essential government services it hasn't had time to allot the necessary money.

A clear case of "too little, too late."

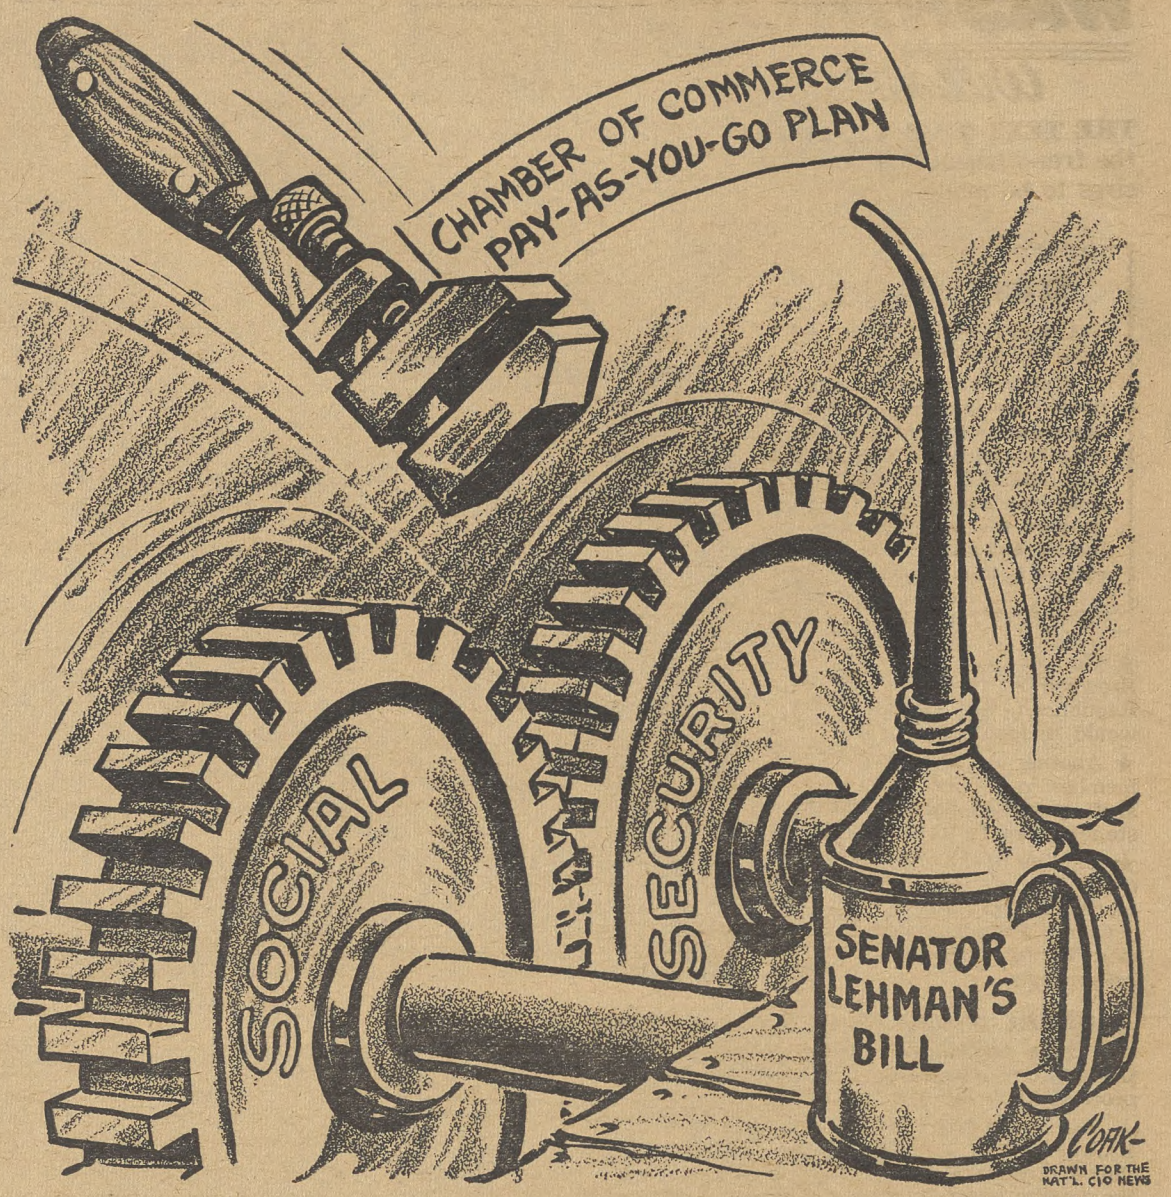
Oil, Not A Monkey-Wrench!



In Other Words—

Upholding The Freedom To Read

"Don't join the book burners," said Pres. Eisenhower in a recent off-the-cuff remark. Here is a digest of a statement on the freedom to read and to publish, adopted recently by the American Library Association and the American Book Publishers Council. The statement was drafted by a group headed by Luther H. Evans, Librarian of Congress and UNESCO's new director-general.

THE FREEDOM TO READ is essential to our democracy. It is under attack. Private groups and public authorities in various parts of the country are working to remove books from sale, to censor textbooks, to label "controversial" books, to distribute lists of "objectionable" books or authors, and to purge libraries.

These actions apparently rise from a view that our national tradition of free expression is no longer valid, that censorship and suppression are needed. We wish to assert the public interest in the preservation of the freedom to read.

We are deeply concerned about these attempts at suppression. Most such attempts rest on a denial of the fundamental premise of democracy: that the ordinary citizen, by exercising his critical judgment, will accept the good and reject the bad.

Free Enterprise Of Ideas

We trust Americans to recognize propaganda, and to reject obscenity. We do not believe that they are prepared to sacrifice their heritage of a free press in order to be "protected" against what others think may be bad for them. We believe they still favor free enterprise in ideas and expression.

We are aware of course that books are not alone in being subjected to efforts at suppression. We are aware (of) a larger pattern of pressures being brought against education, the press, films, radio and television.

Such pressure toward conformity is perhaps natural to a time of uneasy change and pervading fear. And yet suppression is never more dangerous than in such a time of social tension.

Freedom has given the U. S. the elasticity to endure strain. Freedom keeps open the path of novel and creative solutions, and enables change to come by choice.

Now as always in our history, books are among our greatest instruments of freedom. The freedom to read is guaranteed by the Constitution. Those with faith in free men will stand on these constitutional guarantees of essential rights and will exercise the responsibilities that accompany these rights.

Propositions For Freedom

We therefore affirm these propositions:

1. It is in the public interest for publishers and librarians to make available the widest diversity of views and expressions, including those which are unorthodox or unpopular with the majority.

2. Publishers and librarians do not need to indorse every idea or presentation contained in the books they make available.

3. It is contrary to the public interest for publishers or librarians to determine the acceptability of a book solely on the basis of the personal history or political affiliations of the author.

4. The present laws dealing with obscenity should be vigorously enforced. Beyond that, there is no place in our society for extralegal efforts to coerce the taste of others.

5. It is not in the public interest to force a reader to accept with any book the prejudgment of a label characterizing the book or author as subversive or dangerous.

6. It is the responsibility of publishers and librarians, as guardians of the people's freedom to read, to contest encroachments upon that freedom by individuals or groups seeking to impose their own standards or tastes upon the community at large.

7. It is the responsibility of publishers and librarians to give full meaning to the freedom to read by providing books that enrich the quality of thought and expression. By exercise of this affirmative responsibility, bookmen can demonstrate that the answer to a bad book is a good one, the answer to a bad idea is a good one.

We do not state these propositions in the comfortable belief that what people read is unimportant. We believe rather that what people read is deeply important; that ideas can be dangerous; but that the suppression of ideas is fatal to a democratic society. Freedom itself is a dangerous way of life, but it is ours.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE TEXT THIS WEEK is the habits and procedures of the free-wheeling congressman who has been made, or desires to be made, a "national figure" via newspaper headlines.

Rush Order

Authors whose books have been "burned" from shelves of State Dept. libraries abroad don't necessarily suffer financially. Bert Andrews' "Washington Witch Hunt" was out of print, but news that it had been banned aroused so many requests for copies that a new pocket-sized edition is under consideration.

There is a Senator named Joe McCarthy who has reason to suspect, or says he has reason to suspect, that in 1945 a now dead-and-gone Canadian Prime Minister gave Pres. Harry S. Truman a list of "roughly 150 American citizens" alleged to be Soviet spies. He wants to know whether Truman ever "turned over" that "information" to the Justice Dept.

There are several ways for him to operate in these circumstances:

★ He can pick up the telephone and call Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell at the Justice Dept. (Republic 7-8200). Brownell is a Republican, with no reason to "cover up" for Mr. Truman, so he would undoubtedly respond quickly with the facts.

★ Another device would be for McCarthy to instruct some staff member to telephone Brownell's office. The call would get equally swift attention because the secretaries of Cabinet members have standing orders to give priority to inquiries from ranking senators.

★ Another technique would be to hold a closed (secret) meeting of McCarthy's Senate investigating subcommittee to take sworn testimony from Justice Dept. officials. If testimony indicated that a former President, with malice and deliberation, withheld information the Justice Dept. should have had, public hearings could then be arranged.

A Slight Pause For Facts

These techniques, however, have one major disadvantage for the senator: they don't get his name in the newspapers. So he proceeds in a different way.

He announces on Monday morning that he "plans" to ask Brownell about Truman and the alleged list of "roughly 150" spies. This makes the Monday afternoon and Tuesday morning newspapers, the "story" has the name of a former President in it, and it gets a good play also from the radio commentators.

On Tuesday the senator releases the letter which he had announced, the previous day, he intended to send Brownell. Brownell should receive the letter, he elaborates, very promptly. The text of the letter makes the Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning newspapers, also the radio commentators.

Here there occurs a slight pause, for Brownell to receive the letter and investigate the facts, but reporters in New York have already asked Harry S. Truman for comment. Mr. Truman replies, "What I have to say you wouldn't print, so the answer is no comment." And this makes the newspapers and radio news programs.

As of the moment, the Senator has merely produced a question to Brownell, based on what he says he thinks was given an American President by a deceased Canadian, but the headlines have been black and prominently displayed.

Obviously it would have been silly for McCarthy to resolve his doubts about this matter simply by telephoning Brownell, three-quarters of a mile from the Capitol, at Republic 7-8200. Such a procedure would not give him headlines in the Monday afternoon, Tuesday morning and afternoon, and Wednesday morning newspapers, and all those mentions on the radio—and maybe not any headlines when Mr. Brownell eventually replies. If he just tried to learn the facts, McCarthy might not even be a "national figure."

Another Nomination

Another of this reporter's nominations for least-responsible congressman of the week is Rep. Wheeler (D. Ga.), who from the immunity of the House floor demanded that Supreme Court Justice Douglas be impeached for, among other things, "moral turpitude." Specified Wheeler: Douglas was "reportedly named a co-respondent" in a divorce case, and he named the lady—also under congressional immunity.

Next day, before a Judiciary subcommittee, Wheeler was forced to admit he had been wrong, that he had taken his "facts" from the "intimations" of a newspaper politically hostile to Justice Douglas. Rep. Walter (D. Pa.), a highly conservative congressman, sharply rebuked Wheeler for resorting to "hearsay" evidence for asking the committee to "stretch" and "liberalize" the constitutional definition of treason, and for damaging American prestige by the impeachment move.

★ Edwin A. Lahey, crack reporter for the Chicago Daily News who recently toured the smouldering continent of Africa, says he got one comment from a South Rhodesian labor leader that summed up the whole problem. Said the union leader—an African and an "illegal" simply because he belonged to a labor organization of Africans: "Europeans tell us it took them 2000 years to build their civilization. Does that mean we have to lay bricks for them for 2000 more years before we get equal pay?"

★ At a party, Interior Sec. McKay told his predecessor, Oscar Chapman, "I'm really not going to 'give away' public grazing lands." Said Chapman to other friends at the party, "I know he's not, because the big stockmen would have to pay taxes on the lands. He'll just let them use the land, under the bills now pending, and they can get the use without paying taxes."

Economic Outlook Says—

'Depression's Ahead Unless GOP Hard Money Squeeze Is Halted'

THE TIGHT MONEY policies of the Eisenhower Administration "can end in deflation and depression, unless the hard money squeeze is halted."

That's what the CIO Economic Outlook warns in its current issue, reviewing the complicated fiscal policies of the government and how they directly affect workers, farmers, consumers, businessmen—and the whole prospect for prosperity or depression.

"Unless halt is called to the reactionary and outmoded financial theories and operations which have time and again in the past helped plunge the nation into economic misery," the Outlook predicted "it will mean the end of the current period of continual economic expansion and progress."

'A Small Dose of Plague'

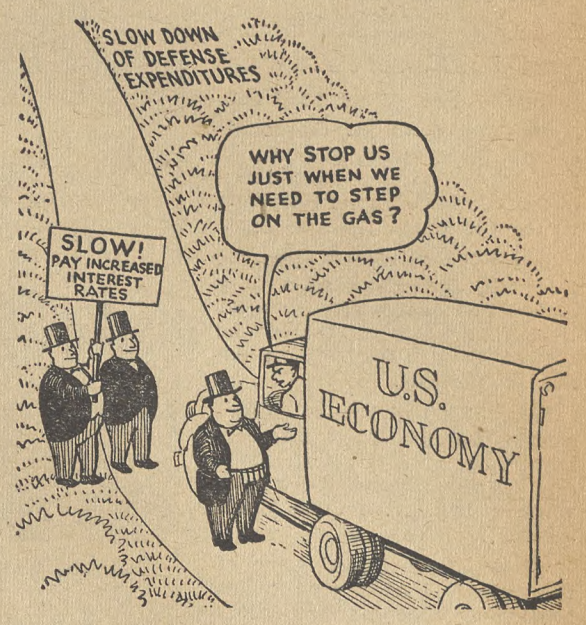
The Outlook, publication of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, said that actions of the Eisenhower Administration since Inauguration Day to boost interest rates on the federal debt are part and parcel of big business economic thinking looking toward an economic downturn.

The CIO review noted comments of business spokesmen predicting a "necessary readjustment," "return to more normal market conditions," a "little less employment" and "a line at the gate means less turnover, higher productivity and less trouble from the union."

"Behind these phrases and slogans," the Outlook said, "lies the philosophy of those economic groups that simply refuse to believe we can avoid depressions and recessions." And on predictions of 4.5 to 5 million unemployed, it commented:

"It's almost like a man with a craving to touch off just a little atomic explosion—or one who wants to experiment with a small dose of bubonic plague."

In detail, the Outlook reviewed the pressure of big banks and insurance companies to shift the government's financial policy from the Treasury Dept. "agreement" with the Federal Reserve Board more than two years ago, which undercut FRB support of government bonds at par, to the successive actions of Treasury Sec. George Humphrey in boosting interest rates, beginning with a .75% increase in long-term bonds to a new rate of 3.25%.



Such fiscal policies are "knotty matters," the CIO review said, but they "are of concern to all the people."

"The entire direction and growth of the economy, which means jobs, wages, prices, taxes and indeed almost every aspect of economic life, somehow gets tied in with the new 'hard money' policies," it observed.

How It Affects You

Farmers: They have to pay higher interest rates on consumer credit loans.

Consumers: Cost on financing that new auto or TV set is up .5% or 1%, as direct result of the government action. Cost of financing a new car is up by 9% overall.

Businessmen: Several firms have delayed new building programs, because of higher financing costs.

Cities, States: Construction of new schools, hospitals, roads and other public works is running into difficulty because of higher financing costs, which means "eventually local taxes must rise to meet higher building costs."

And for taxpayers as a whole, the cost of refinancing the government debt at higher interest rates eventually will cost more than a half billion dollars extra each year.

"The greatest beneficiaries from this policy are the large commercial banks" and insurance companies, which hold most of the government bonds, the Economic Outlook pointed out.

From direct and indirect consequences of higher interest rates, "their total gains would be more than $1 billion a year."

Turnabout

After six months of steadily tightening its money policy, the Eisenhower Administration has executed a slight turn in the opposite direction—just in time to help finance an anticipated $6 billion in government deficit borrowing.

The Federal Reserve Board authorized banks to lower the amount of reserve funds they must keep on hand. Net effect is to increase by $5.75 billion the amount of bank credit available for loans—at new and higher interest rates.

Financial papers called the action "a temporary dose of easy money." And Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) recalled that when the Democrats followed such a course, Republicans hollered "funny money" until the air was acrid.

'Hello, Joe'—

Big CWA Convention Sets New Goals

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A LONG DISTANCE call from 3000 miles away brought the news to Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers of America that he had just been re-elected top officer of the CIO's big telephone workers union.

The call was placed from the floor of San Francisco's City Auditorium immediately after Beirne's election on the second day of the CWA's seventh annual convention.

Some 2500 delegates representing 300,000 CWA members throughout the United States and Canada attended the convention, held from June 22 to June 27.

"Hello, Joe," roared some of the delegates as a tremendous ovation for Beirne swept across the convention floor.

Cross-Country Cheers

The phone receiver was held high so that Beirne, on the other end of the line in his sickroom near Washington, D. C., could hear the shouts, whistles and loud applause of the delegates who had just re-elected him unanimously.

The CWA president, suffering from jaundice, had been ordered by his doctor not to attend the convention.

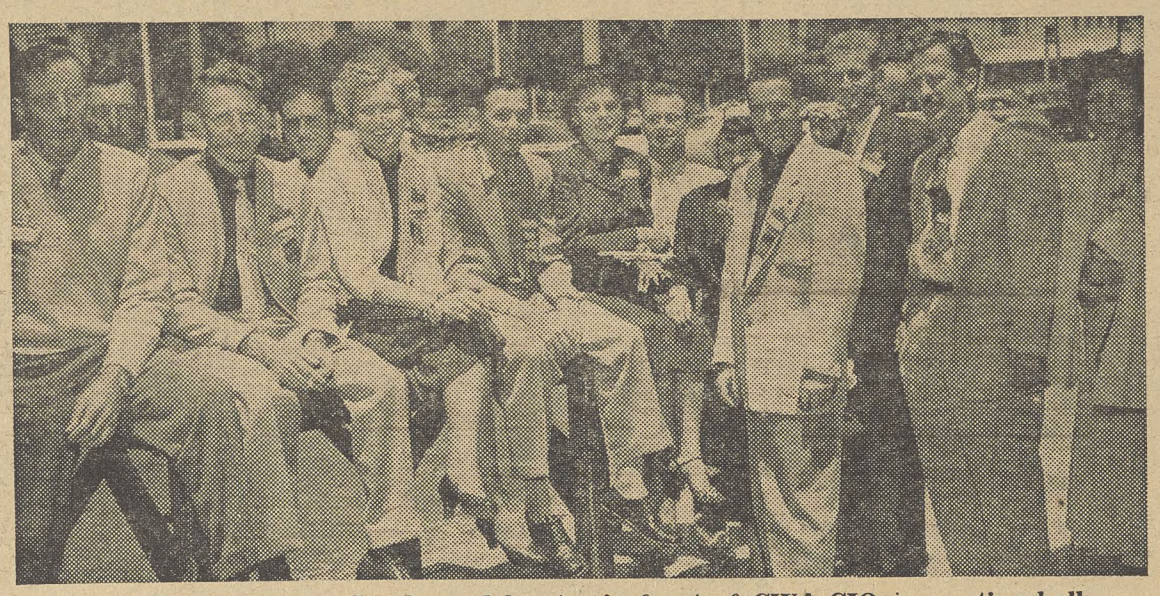
As the sessions neared conclusion, however, Beirne showed such marked improvement that the doctor permitted him to fly to San Francisco and appear before the convention for a very short speech on the final day.

Officials Re-elected

Delegates also unanimously re-elected the union's four other top officers. They were Vice Presidents John L. Crull, A. T. Jones and John T. Moran; and Sec.-Treas. C. W. Werkau, who chaired the convention at Beirne's request and with the approval of the Executive Board.

Eleven district presidents, who together with the five top officers make up the 16-member executive board, were all re-elected at separate district meetings held during the convention. They are Mary Hanscom, Glenn Watts, William Smallwood, Walter Schaar, Ray Dryer, D. L. McCowen, Ren Hill, LeRoy Purdy, Joe Deardorff, Ernest Weaver and Louis H. Junker.

Pres. Joseph Beirne, unable to appear earlier because of illness, spoke briefly at the final session.



Some California and Southern delegates in front of CWA-CIO convention hall.

Two national unit directors were also re-elected — Curtis Fletcher, for the independent telephone companies, and Carl Peters, for Long Lines.

As Werkau told the delegates, it was a "working convention," with much of the delegates' time taken up with floor discussion under rules set up to safeguard their democratic right to speak their minds before final adoption of programs and policies for the coming year.

Room To Disagree

"There is room in CWA for every point of view," Werkau said in his opening speech. "Through debate and through the free vote that we are privileged to have here, differences of opinion can and will be reconciled as in the past.

"Majority rule does not forego the right to disagree or to seek change. It implies, nevertheless, that all will live with the mandate of the majority, the only road to democratic unity. It is the road to real and permanent strength."

Werkau told the delegates that they "are the top policy making body of the union," the symbol that week before the entire nation of America's telephone workers. "If there are any 'labor bosses' in the CWA," he said, "they are you."

Vice Pres. John Livingston of the CIO Auto Workers, main outside speaker at the convention, also commented on union democratic procedure.

Anchor For Democracy

"You not only believe in democracy—you practice it," he said. "Our union, just like yours, is built on the very fundamental belief that working men and women have the intelligence and the desire to formulate those programs which best serve their mutual requirements."

"It is well that the free world has such unions upon which to anchor itself against the forces of totalitarianism which today threaten the future of democracy throughout the world," he added.

Leadership in the real battle for a free world, Livingston said later in his speech, "rests with this nation, but what is of more importance to us is that it must come, in a great measure, from organized labor — from strong, aggressive, responsible and intelligent unions."

The convention's first prolonged discussion came on the collective bargaining resolution. Delegates voiced so many opinions and aired so many proposals that Crull and Jones pleaded with them not to load down the national program with sectional items which rightly belong in local bargaining. The plan as presented was eventually approved with a few minor changes.

As adopted the bargaining program called for demands for a general wage increase; improvements in pension plans; medical benefits paid for by the company; elimination of area differentials; six-hour tours (shifts) after six p.m.; job descriptions for all departments and other improvements.

Addition of a further point, elimination of the merit increase system in Western Electric and Bell Laboratories, was adopted after some floor discussion.

Another controversial issue that came before the convention concerned the proposed formation of a new district to be known as No. 12, set up for Long Lines, AT&T's long distance division. The CWA now has nine regional districts and two additional districts comprising Western Electric workers both set up on a nation-wide basis.

District 10 covers W. E. installations and District 11, W. E. sales and distribution. Some Long Lines delegates wanted a new District 12 set up on a similar nation-wide basis, rather than remaining in the various regional districts.

Delegates opposed to the proposal called it a step backwards from the "two-level" structure adopted several years ago, which simplified the union's set-up along the lines followed by most CIO international unions. Delegates favoring the proposal argued that their special problems were not getting proper attention.

Reject Proposal

After a long debate on both sides, the convention finally voted to reject the proposal to set up a District 12 for Long Lines workers. Later, the convention adopted a resolution calling for the elimination of Districts 10 and 11 within the period of one year.

With some debate but little serious disagreement, the delegates voted to approve rules formulated by an appointed committee to control and strengthen the Defense Fund set up last year.

The fund received its initial test during the recent strike of a New Jersey independent union. CWA workers gave a fine example of labor solidarity by religiously observing the picket lines of the unaffiliated union, and in fact gave the strike its only real effectiveness, reported Vice Pres. Crull.

A financial report approved by the convention recommended annual salary increases for the union's top officers in the following amounts: President-$17,000, a boost of $3800 over his present salary; the three Vice-Presidents—$12,500 each, a $2300 boost; Secretary-Treasurer—$13,500, a $3300 increase.

Finances Good

Sec.-Treas. Werkau reported that the union was in sound financial condition, and had an excess over expenses of $186,778.

The convention also adopted resolutions favoring labor unity; urging stronger political action and endorsing PAC; and endorsed programs covering organizing, legislation, domestic and foreign policy and other important issues.

Everywhere You Go, You Find CIO Phone Workers

Here are highlight facts about the CIO Communications Workers and the industry in which they work:

- CWA represents more than 300,000 communication workers in 46 states, the District of Columbia, several Canadian provinces and in Hawaii. It is the CIO's fifth largest union.
- The greatest number of the workers represented by CWA are employed by the Bell System — American Telephone & Telegraph and its subsidiary operating companies. The remainder are in the independent branch of the telephone industry where CWA has contracts covering about 10,000 workers; and in the non-voice wireless field.
- Every non-supervisory job in the telephone industry is represented in CWA. These jobs include switchboard operators, linemen, cable splicers, installers, repairmen, engineers, janitors, lab technicians, clerical, factory production workers, wireless employes.
- About 65% of workers in telephone industry are women, mostly switchboard operators.
- CWA holds contracts with 16 of the 21 Bell System operating companies. (An operating company is an AT&T subsidiary which provides local service, and short-haul and long distance service in one particular area of the country. Some are statewide or less; others cover several states.
- Almost 200,000 Bell System employes are still outside CWA, being represented mostly by independent unions.
- CWA represents employes of the other major companies in the Bell System. These are Western Electric, a manufacturing subsidiary, and Bell Laboratories, the company's research arm, where CWA represents all non-supervisory employes.
- In AT&T, the parent company itself, CWA represents all non-supervisory employes. Besides being a holding company, AT&T handles much of the long distance service of the country and service to and from foreign countries.
- AT&T is the largest business corporation in the world. It is a $12 billion enterprise doing 90% of the nation's telephone business and has substantial holdings in the Canadian and Cuban branches of the industry. It owns most of the basic telephone patents.

CIO PRES. Walter Reuther, expressing "deep personal regret" that he was unable to accept an invitation to speak at the CIO Communications Workers convention, sent a message to the delegates praising the union's gains.

"Major problems—in international affairs, in national policy, in trade union programs—face all of us as your convention meets," Reuther wrote.

"I'm am confident that you will act, not only by resolutions adopted in convention, but by hard trade union work when you return home, not only for the protection of your fellow members, your fellow CIO unionists, and their families, but for the good of the entire nation.

"THAT HAS been the tradition of the CWA and of the CIO. That is the way the trade union movement has always reacted to threats to the well-being of workers.

"On behalf of the CIO, I want to congratulate the men and women of the CWA for the excellent work done during the past year in the important task of organizing the unorganized. There is no more important task facing us than that of bringing the benefits of unionism to unorganized workers.

"The CWA, representing as it does, workers in every village and hamlet in the United States, occupies an important and unique position in the family of CIO. It is within the power of the people you represent to bring to the grass roots of America a true picture of CIO, its accomplishments, it hopes and its inspirations.

Judy Boustead, a 13-year-old veteran trade unionist, has attended all seven of CWA's conventions. Her nine-year-old brother, Jimmy, at his first convention, is looking at her badge. The children's father, John Boustead, is a CWA staff representative in Kansas City.

"As the CIO renews and revitalizes its drive to organize unorganized workers, it will have an excellent bedrock upon which to build—the solid, wholesome community good will which the CWA-CIO has built throughout this nation.

"Yours has been a great record, achieved through hard, constant, determined effort. That same effort, that same devotion to the fundamental principles which guide all CIO unions, is certain to mean a brighter future."

McCarthyism Can Spell Death Of Democracy, Says Iowa CIO

By AL ZACK

CIO MEMBERS in Iowa last week spoke out flatly against McCarthyism and "condemnation of liberals by inuendo and investigation."

Delivering the keynote speech at the Iowa State CIO Council's 15th annual convention, held at Ottumwa, Pres. Vernon Dale warned that McCarthyism could spell "the death of democracy as we know it in our nation and within our great union."

Dale noted "super-conservatives" have been attacking liberals for associations dating back 20 years. He recalled that "this was a time when Iowa farmers, who perhaps voted conservative last year, were trying to lynch district court judges who were foreclosing their farms and turning them over to the insurance and banking interests."

He called for a strengthened, aroused labor movement to combat this threat and urged an expanded program of CIO public relations so that the public can understand CIO's value to the community.

Reviewing the officers' report for the past 10 months, the convention having been advanced from its traditional August date, the delegates agreed they had made no progress in Iowa's "one-party Legislature."

BLAMING the huge employer group lobbies, "the hidden government in the State Legislature," the delegates demanded a strict lobbyist registration law, plus full disclosure of all income and spending.

As a means of improving workmen's compensation, stymied by the employers' lobby, the convention urged CIO unions to incorporate workmen's compensation improvements in collective bargaining demands.

Among convention speakers were R. J. Thomas, assistant to the executive vice-president of CIO, who described the Washington legislative scene, and John Brophy, coordinator of the CIO Free World Labor Fund. He called that campaign "the labor movement's own substitute for communism which is being offered nations which are under the shadow of totalitarianism."

Dale, whose home is in Muscatine, was elected to his sixth term as president. Executive Sec. Kenneth Everhart also was reelected.

Embalmers Put Ahead Of Students

The question of how high the needs of school youngsters rank in the minds of state lawmakers was answered by the recent session of the Iowa General Assembly.

The legislature, according to the Iowa CIO Council News Letter, turned down a bill setting up a long-range program of higher certificate standards. A few days later, it passed a bill to double the college training required of embalmers.

"Apparently," commented Editor Henry Galbreth of Midland Schools, "it is more important to have good care for a few hours after we pass away than it is to have good care for the minds of our youngsters, care that will influence them in how they think and act during their lifetime."

Steel Union Assets Now $10 Million

THE NET assets of the CIO Steelworkers increased to an all-time high of $10,855,697 during the six months ending Dec. 31, 1952, the semi-annual audit revealed last week.

The net worth was increased during the period by $416,098, compared to $290,140 in the first half of last year. This represents the excess of income over expenditures.

From all sources, the USA-CIO had income of $14,624,098 in the period covered by the audit. Slightly less than half, or $7,284,683, was refunded to local unions. Expenditures—including those in one month of the 1952 nationwide steel strike—totalled $6,878,317.

THE UNION received $438,481 of its income from initiation fees, a sharp increase from the $254,405 received during the Jan. 1-June 30, 1952 period. Part at least of the raise was attributed to an increase in the initiation fee from $3 to $5 last August.

The audit showed a total of about 1.1 million members on Dec. 31, unchanged from the June 30, 1952, figure. However, substantial membership gains have been reported during the first six months of this year.

CWA Delegates Used Phones To Keep Parley Rolling

AN INGENIOUS telephone system all their own was devised by the CIO Communications Workers to faciliate convention debate during discussions from the floor.

Specific microphones for definite purposes were set up throughout the hall, with telephonic equipment used to the utmost. The system was given a severe test during prolonged discussions, and it worked well.

Mike No. 1 in front of the hall, marked "Privilege" was limited to questions delegates desired to ask officers or committee members. No. 2 mike, on the opposite side, was limited to "motions."

Six other mikes were available throughout the enormous hall for those who desired to speak "for" or "against" a motion.

Along with the special purpose mikes, telephone connections with the speakers' platform were provided at each mike, so that delegates could give their names and local numbers before speaking, or make calls to the officers on the platform without interrupting the proceedings.

It was during a discussion of a resolution on collective bargaining that the plan was given its first stiff test.

News Guild Wins Pay Boosts To $45 In Toronto Contract

PAY BOOSTS ranging up to $45 a week were won by the CIO Toronto (Ont.) Newspaper Guild in a first contract covering about 140 editorial department employes of the Toronto Telegram which sets many precedents for ANG-CIO agreements in Canada.

The average wage increase was just under $9.50 a week.

The contract sets a top minimum of $90 a week for the basic category, including reporters, copy editors and photographers, and carries premium rates as high as $120 for a group of editors and assistant editors. It provides for retroactivity of wages, expenses, vacations, and overtime upon its expiration on July 1, 1954.

Among the "firsts" in any Canadian ANG-CIO contract are a permanent pension of $22.50 weekly upon permanent disability; checkoff of union dues; payment of salary for any employe on leave to attend a Guild, CIO or Canadian Congress of Labor convention; three weeks' vacation after 10 years' service; guaranteed annual mileage for certain employes who use their own cars in the paper's work, and payment to the employe of all proceeds from the sale of his work.

MAINTENANCE of membership and eight paid holidays also are included.

"Both parties close this contract feeling that in the short time they have been doing business together they have already given meaning and life to that elusive goal—good labor-management relations," a joint statement said.

The agreement was negotiated by committees headed by Bassett and Charles A. Perlik, Jr., ANG-CIO international representative.

A Mighty Symbol—

Union Label Helps Clothing Workers Grow

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther shows his ACWA union label.

So does Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.)

Convention delegates register for an ACWA suit raffle.

By HOWARD D. SAMUEL
(ACWA union label director)

THE UNION LABEL, once regarded as just an inch-square piece of cloth sewed in a suit pocket, has been given new stature by the CIO Clothing Workers and now is one of the strongest weapons in its armory.

Three and a half years after it inaugurated a nationwide, million-dollar union label campaign, the Amalgamated can point to half a dozen major companies who signed union contracts for the first time as the result of the demand of consumers for union label clothes.

By now, the union label campaign has become a regular department of the Clothing Workers, with a score of full time staff members throughout the nation.

Of even greater significance, however, has been the gradually awakening interest of other CIO unions, many of whom have played an active part in the union label campaign and have learned of its potentialities for maintaining and extending union standards.

On the West Coast, on the Northern Plains, in the Deep South, and in the industrialized East, CIO officers and members in a score of industries have supported the Clothing Workers campaign. They are beginning to realize what a union label can mean to union members regardless of their industry.

A Third Weapon

In three and a half years, the ACWA has proved that the union label can be a mighty tool for labor unions. Not only has it been able to crack several of the most impregnable non-union companies, but it also has stopped cold any efforts on the part of the organized industry to run away to non-union havens.

In fact, during the recent recession suffered by the clothing industry in 1950-51, for the first time in history not one company attempted to flee the union.

As the Clothing Workers put it, the union label, coupled with a union's power at the bargaining table and at the ballot box, adds a third link to the chain of labor strength.

By organizing the tremendous purchasing power of 16 million union members and their families, by insuring that labor's dollar goes for union-made products only, the Clothing Workers are developing a new source of strength to protect hard-won gains, and to achieve new benefits as well.

The Amalgamated union label campaign uses every modern means of promotion and publicity to bring its message to the consuming public, and particularly to fellow union members.

Hear The Story

Any delegate to a state or international convention has encountered the Amalgamated suit raffle—and a couple of hundred delegates around the country have gone home richer by a suit of clothes.

Thousands of union members have heard Amalgamated representatives tell the union label story at their local meetings. Leaflets have been handed out at factory gates and posters tacked up on bulletin boards.

Union members have seen union label cartoons, feature articles and advertisements in their local labor newspapers, and other ads have appeared in national magazines, in the daily press and in the trade press.

Many Unionists Help

Most important, hundreds of union members—auto and steel workers, rubber and telephone workers, textile workers and teamsters, and many more—are giving time and effort to their duties as members of local union label committees.

These joint union label committees, with representatives of various unions in the community, are particularly effective in bringing the union label message to retailers as well as to the membership of their own local unions, CIO and AFL, and of liberal groups.

In the past six months, a feature of the Amalgamated's campaign has been the union label week, an observance which brings together various elements of the community, including city officials, civic groups, the schools, the clergy, retailers and labor, in support of the union label.

During the week, talks at union meetings, leaflet distribution, radio programs and even parades and contests have been used to bring the union label message to the entire community.

Union Label Weeks

In the past few months, one of the most successful of Amalgamated union label weeks was held at Gadsden, Ala. Other observances have been held in such widely scattered cities as Detroit, Toledo, Boston, Milwaukee, Kansas City, Lansing, Mich., Scranton and Allentown, Pa., and a dozen other cities in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

The result has been a steadily increasing awareness on the part of union members, consumers, retailers and manufacturers of the power of the union label—a sign of good working conditions and high living standards — on every union-made product.

"There wasn't an Amalgamated Union Label in his suit. Should I marry him and reform him, or drop him cold?"

$50 Million In Vacation Pay For ACWA

SOME $50 MILLION in vacation pay will be received by nearly 400,000 CIO Clothing Workers under improved vacation benefits now taking effect, it was reported last week as the annual fortnight shutdown began in the men's clothing industry.

Clothing plants employing some 150,000 ACWA members shut down simultaneously beginning July 4, while other men's apparel plants have successive vacation periods later in the summer.

Frank Rosenblum, Amalgamated secretary-treasurer, said vacation pay provisions were strengthened in recent contract negotiations. He called the provisions "a result of enlightened employer-employe relations."

MULTILINGUAL EARPHONES were standard equipment for this group of women trade union leaders participating in first international labor school for women. Sponsored by Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, school was held at UNESCO facilities at La Breviere, France.

Filipino Workers Get Basic Union Rights In New Law

A MAJOR step toward establishing a strong, democratic labor movement in the Far East was taken recently when Pres. Elpidio Quirino signed into law a bill called the Magna Charta of Philippine workers.

It guarantees the workers the fundamental right to organize into unions of their own choosing and establishes the principle of free collective bargaining as a basis for industrial peace.

It severely restricts power of the Court of Industrial Relations to issue restraining orders or temporary or permanent injunctions in labor disputes, except where the "national interest" is involved.

"IF WITH this law the Filipino laborers fail to organize themselves into free and independent unions," said Sec. of Labor Jose Figueras, "it will no longer be the fault of the government; it will be theirs."

The new law, passed by both houses of the Philippine Congress, was one of the social reforms recommended in the report of the Bell Mission, headed by former Undersec. of the Treasury Daniel Bell, in 1950.

It is not an ideal law from the American point of view, but represents a vast improvement over the past in the Philippines. Political leaders, with an eye on the coming elections, proclaim themselves in favor of it no matter where they have stood in the past.

The new act compels all unions to register with the island republic's Dept. of Labor, the registration requirement including a sworn statement that officers are not members of the Communist Party or any other subversive organization.

Annual financial statements are required. All union decisions and expenditures must be approved by a majority vote, and a 30-day "cooling off" period is required before any strike or lockout.

Strikes against the government are restricted, and the Conciliation Service is enlarged to provide aid for unions and employers in settling their differences.

Herzog Steps Down As Chairman Of NLRB

Paul M. Herzog stepped down June 30 after eight years as chairman of the National Labor Relations Board and prepared to join the Harvard faculty in September.

He will be associate dean of Harvard's Littauer Graduate School of Public Administration. His chief legal aide, Paul S. Kuelthau, who had been with the NLRB since 1937, resigned effective July 3 to enter private practice in St. Louis.

UPWA Gets CIO Aid In Sugar Pact

WITH NATIONAL CIO assisting in the final negotiations, Local 1101 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers has reached a wage-boost settlement ending a 13-week strike at the American Sugar Refinery plant near New Orleans.

The agreement, highlighted by an 11c hourly wage boost retroactive to last Oct. 16, was approved almost unanimously by some 750 members of the UPWA local.

The Local 1101 Executive Board voiced thanks to National CIO and Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, for assistance by CIO National Rep. Fred C. Pieper in the final contract talks.

Thanks for "prompt and generous support" during the strike also was voiced to Dr. Ernest Schwartz, secretary of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, and to Jose Luis Martinez Alvarez, secretary general of the Cuban Federation of Sugar Workers.

Settlement at the Chalmette, La., plant of American Sugar Refinery also included an improved vacation clause, a nondiscrimination section, correction of wage inequities, reinstatement of employes on a seniority basis, and dropping of strike-instituted legal proceedings.

The "Cadillac Crusade"—

CIO Challenges Ike, Asks Adequate Funds For TVA

CONTRARY to Pres. Eisenhower's charge of "creeping socialism," the Tennessee Valley Authority has actually helped private enterprise.

That's what Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, told the Senate Appropriations Committee in urging that TVA be given the full grant requested for operations next year.

Smith called the President's accusation "a rather sorry proposition" and "a bit flimsy, to say the least." He pointed out that it has been TVA's policy from the very beginning to foster private business activities as far as it could in all fields which its own activities affected.

"The tremendous multiplication of new enterprises throughout the Tennessee Valley during the TVA period should be convincing on that score," he said.

"A large proportion of those enterprises have been concerns of very substantial size. The expansion of private enterprise which they represent could not have been possible, or would have been long delayed, except for TVA."

SMITH said that the full funds requested for new steam plants and all other generating, transmitting or distributing facilities, as well as for watershed management work, soil conservation, reforestation, wildlife management, recreation and related purposes "should be given to TVA ungrudgingly."

He warned that unless there is proper maintenance and upkeep, "the great investment in the big dams and reservoirs will deteriorate seriously and far too rapidly."

"Sound principles of business management," he declared, "forbid irresponsibility in these matters on the part of the federal government."

Pres. Truman's budget of $254 million for TVA was cut by the Eisenhower Administration to $190 million, and the House made further reductions of more than $2 million. Power facilities alone were slashed $61 million despite a growing shortage in the face of heavy defense development in the TVA region.

POINTING out that the House cut included $31 million for power projects already under construction, Smith said that it would be "absurd" to suspend or discontinue the program at this stage. He added that it was of "the utmost importance" that another $30 million for two steam plant units be restored.

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) promised a fight to restore the funds for new steam power plants when the bill reaches the floor. He said it takes three years to build a steam plant "and unless we start now we shall have a power shortage in the valley by 1956."

Meanwhile, a warning that the Eisenhower Administration "Cadillac crusade" may seek to transfer TVA to private ownership by "an innocent looking bill" was sounded by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.).

Hitting at Administration power and natural resources policies and particularly Eisenhower's "creeping socialism" attack on TVA, Morse said requests to slash funds were only the first legislative moves in the "power give-away."

"This latest give away will be engineered behind the false banner of economy," Morse said.

Home Rule Bill Supported

THE NATIONAL CIO last week endorsed the Case-Kefauver Bill giving residents of the District of Columbia a measure of self-government—but said it ought to be broad enough to give Washingtonians a voice in Congress and the right to elect their own mayor.

"In a nation like the U. S., dedicated from its inception to government by the people," commented Robert Oliver, CIO coordinator of legislative activities, in a letter to Chairman Barrett (R., Wyo.) of a Senate Judiciary subcommittee, "it is rather anomalous that the inhabitants of its capital city have for 75 years been singled out for denial of political rights granted to all others.

"Surely the time has come to end this discrimination: a discrimination not supported by any reason and wholly contrary to the intention of the founding fathers."

Niagara Power Grab—

FDR Jr. Asks Probe Of Utility Lobbying

THE JUSTICE Dept. and the Bureau of Internal Revenue have been asked to investigate five New York utility companies to determine if their lobbying to gain control of Niagara River power led them astray of federal laws.

Rep. Roosevelt (D. N. Y.) wrote Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell and Internal Revenue Commissioner T. Coleman Andrews asking for a "complete investigation" of the companies' campaign.

His action came after the House Public Works Committee approved a "give-away" bill providing for private development of Niagara hydro-electric power.

The firms involved are Niagara-Mohawk Power Corp., Rochester Gas and Electric Corp., N. Y. State Electric and Gas Corp., Consolidated Edison Co. of N. Y., and the Central Hudson Gas and Electric Corp.

"It is my information that they have retained one Dwayer Shugrue, a New York attorney, for the purpose of influencing members of Congress to their views," Roosevelt said.

He added that preliminary investigation showed that none of the companies or their representatives are registered under the Federal Lobbying Act.

"I also wonder about their use of corporate funds in relation to the Federal Corrupt Practices Act," Roosevelt wrote.

The bill approved by the committee was sponsored by Chairman Dondero (R. Mich.) and Rep. Miller (R. N. Y.).

SEN. LEHMAN (D. N.Y.) and Roosevelt have fought the "give-away" on grounds that development by private enterprise would give big profits to the companies and force consumers of electric power to pay much higher rates than under their own federal development bill.

The committee tabled the Roosevelt-Lehman bill and another bill by Rep. Becker (R. N. Y.). The latter would have provided for development of the project by New York State.

You And Your Money

Who Has The Savings? Many Workers Haven't A Thin Dime

NEARLY ONE skilled or semi-skilled worker and his family in every three hasn't a thin dime tucked away for use in an emergency, the Federal Reserve Board reported last week in the first of a series of articles on its 1953 survey of consumer finances.

More than one in every two unskilled or service workers, or 55% of the total, was in the same unhappy financial state early this year—with NO liquid assets, the survey showed.

Only 13% of the spending units headed by skilled and semi-skilled workers, or about one in every eight, had as much as $2000 in cash, bank accounts or other assets that could be turned easily into cash. And only 7% of the unskilled groups, or one in about every 15, had holdings of that much.

On top of all that, one of every four of the country's spending units was in hock for 20% or more of its income.

The report bears out the claim of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy—just advanced in its recently-published pamphlet, "Maintaining Prosperity"—that wages must be raised sharply if enough purchasing power is to be created to continue economic expansion when the priming supplied by defense expenditures tapers off in the next couple of years.

It also bears out the contention of unions generally that most of their members haven't enough money set aside to tide them over a serious illness or a period of unemployment.

ON THE OTHER side of the economic fence, the FRB found that only 8%, or one in every 12, of professional and semi-professional workers had no liquid assets. Thirty-three percent, or one in three, had $2000 or more set aside for a rainy day.

The survey showed that 38% of all consumers felt they were better off than last year, and 26% felt they were worse off. However, the optimism came from families with incomes of $5000 a year or more.

The "median," or middle, spending unit had an income of $3420 in 1952, up 7% from $3200 in 1951. Ten percent of the spending units had incomes of $7090 or more—and they bulked about 30% of all consumer income. Incomes of $5000 or more were chalked up by 26% of the families, compared to 21% in 1952, while 41% earned less than $3000, compared to 46% the previous year.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

ONE OF THE WORST gouges perpetrated on unsuspecting buyers is the loaded prices of watches and jewelry, especially when sold on the installment plan. Watches and jewelry are sucker bait.

Hear The Ping

"Nu-Power" doesn't block the knock or take the ping out of umpty-ump horsepower new autos or ancient clunkers.

That's the feeling of the Federal Trade Commission, which has ordered the Charlotte, N. C., manufacturer of "Nu-Power Upper Cylinder Lubricant" to cease and desist from a lot of high power ad claims that "Nu-Power" would increase gas mileage, speed pickup, keep spark plugs cleaner, reduce gas knocks and pings and so on and so forth.

Even the most reputable manufacturers of watches and jewelry put retail price tags on their products that are two and three times the actual wholesale cost. But some of the lesser-known brands and items are actually marked up five or six times their real cost.

It is true that many retail stores give discounts from these exaggerated list prices, but the discount you get had better be a big one for in many cases these items are worth but a fraction of the marked prices they bear. You, the buyer, should put no reliance at all on the price tags on jewelry as an index of their real value.

It's the credit jewelers who really collect the full fantastic profit on watches, jewelry, compacts and similar accessories. As I write this I have before me the catalog and confidential dealer's price list of three well-known New York wholesalers of watches and jewelry. The confidential price list of one carries this notation: "For the benefit of installment dealers, the retail prices of many items in our catalog show a higher-than-normal dealer's markup. By so doing, we have allowed for the higher markup required by those selling on the time-payment plan."

FOR EXAMPLE, a gift set of a gold-plated compact and watch that many credit jewelers sell for $25 costs wholesale as little as $9. Diamond engagement and wedding rings that carry price tags of as much as $15 cost $3.25 wholesale. Costume pearl necklaces that some stores sell for $3.75 cost them $1, those that sell for $6 and $7.50 can be bought from wholesale jobbers for $2.25 and $2.75. (Observe that an item which costs the retailer only 50 cents more at wholesale, often costs you $1.50 more).

Take some of the compacts, which are as essential to a woman as a handkerchief to a man. Those which some credit jewelers get $7.50 for, cost them only $2 wholesale. Another which is tagged $8.50 cost them only $2 wholesale. Another which is tagged $8.50 costs $2.50.

On watches there is a tremendous difference between wholesale and retail prices. For example, there's the Cort cocktail watch for women, a fancy bracelet watch covered with rhinestones. Some dealers sell it for as much as $100. It costs them $17.50.

The much-advertised Bulova Academy Award 21-jewel watch, which has a list of price of $95, costs the retailers $36.

You find the same inflated price tags on the highly-advertised Gruen watches. Such famous watches as the Gruen Sheffield or Barton which have list prices of $71.50 cost only $21-$32 at wholesale.

By contrast, the Ingersoll pocket watch. It has no jewels in the movement, no gold plate on the case, no fancy box—and no inflated price tag. It costs the retailers $2.65 and they sell it for $3.95. That's a markup of 50%, which may seem plenty, but it's not 150 to 600%.

CIO Supports 'Mothers' Tax Relief

IT'S TIME to give the little woman a great big hand—in the form of an income tax deduction for child care while she's working in an office, shop or factory.

That seems to be the opinion of the 83rd Congress, where 30 tax relief bills for working mothers have been introduced. The latest was presented by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

While they differ in detail, all would allow the estimated 5.3 million working mothers to deduct the cost of care for children while on the job.

And CIO endorsement of the proposed "mothers' tax relief" has been voiced before the House Ways & Means Committee.

Such action, CIO said, "would be a long-overdue acknowledgement of women's double contribution to society in their role of mothers and breadwinners." And it would help "promote the welfare of the nation's children."

Working Women Now 19 Million

The number of working women in the U. S. labor force now is 19.1 million, about the same proportion as a year ago.

According to the Women's Bureau of the Labor Dept., there are some 12 million working wives and 2.9 million working widows and divorcees.

More than one-fourth of the working women hold clerical and related jobs, while some 20% are factory workers.

The CIO statement, by Stanley Ruttenberg, Education and Research Dept. director, did not endorse any specific bill of the 30 pending measures. It suggested that any final measure should include these provisions:

1. "Apply to a working wife, widow or widower, or parent by legal adoption.
2. "Permit deduction of expenses of child care within the home or outside.
3. "Be directed especially to the needs of middle and low income families, perhaps with a ceiling on the amount of expense deductible per child or on total family income."

On the latter point, Ruttenberg said that the "mothers' tax relief" would particularly aid women from low income families.

"WHEN the income of the husband was $6000 or more in 1950," he said, "only one out of nine wives was found in the labor force in 1951. But when the husband's income was under $3000, one out of three wives sought work."

Ruttenberg estimated that two million working mothers have children under six and 3.2 million have children between the ages of six and 17.

"When a mother decides it is desirable for her to go to work," the CIO aide said, "the nation should provide a framework of tax policy which recognizes the importance of adequate care for her children while she is employed.

"The money she must pay for a day nursery, a homemaker or other supervision for her children should be deductible as a legitimate expense of her going to work just as businesses are permitted to deduct many types of expenses, including some far less constructive or essential."

More Tornado Aid Requested

THE MICHIGAN CIO Council has called upon CIO locals not affiliated with the Auto Workers to contribute funds to help rehabilitate victims of the recent Flint tornado.

Most of the Flint residents whose homes were destroyed or damaged were UAW-CIO members. Some UAW-CIO members were killed in the storm, or had deaths in their immediate families.

The UAW has contributed some $100,000 altogether.

"To help bring order out of chaos, and help rebuild the lives and homes of our members and all citizens of Flint, the Council calls upon its affiliated unions to contribute generously to this great humanitarian cause," the Council said in a letter to affiliates signed by Pres. August Scholle and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins.

"So you thought a few well placed anti-union remarks would get us in good with the Jamisons?"

'Old' Price Index Joins Climb

Industry's Back-to-Farm Movement Hit By IUE-CIO

A CONCERTED drive by an increasing number of employers to move their plants to rural and non-industrialized areas was protested last week by a delegation from the IUE-CIO Radio, TV & Parts Conference Board at a meeting with Dir. Arthur S. Flemming of the Office of Defense Mobilization.

"This concerted movement of plants from one area to another is of a magnitude such as has not been seen in the electrical industry since the 1930's," the delegation said, adding that the movement is not restricted to the electrical industry.

"IN THE main, the reasons for these shifts are exactly the same as for the movements in the 1930's: the effort to secure additional profits on the basis of paying depressed and substandard wages and fewer fringe benefits, and to escape effective unionization of employes.

"What takes place, in effect, is a loss of purchasing power to one community which loses the facilities, and, although the community which gains the facilities has its income increased, the whole nation loses because of the net loss in income. Only the employers gain."

The group was headed by Daniel Arnold, board chairman, from the Radio Corp. of America plant in Camden, N. J. It told Flemming that rapid tax amortization certificates covering construction cost were a major factor in the shifts.

The delegation made it clear that neither the IUE-CIO nor the conference board opposes expansion of industry into new areas.

"However," it continued, "there is a vast difference between expansion of productive facilities, a part of which is built in underdeveloped areas, and a shifting of present existing facilities."

Full support of the IUE-CIO and the conference board for the defense effort and its objectives was stressed by the group.

"But it can only succeed if the production is carried out in an atmosphere that will promote decent living standards and prevent industrial strife, and in general advance our democratic way of life," it added.

Services Held For Paul Shearer

Services were held for Paul P. Shearer, for eight years field representative of the Ohio CIO Political Action Committee. He died in Columbus, O., June 20.

Shearer was 44 and had been a long time member of the CIO Auto Workers. One of the original organizers of aircraft workers in the Midwest, he was also secretary of the Ohio CIO Civil Rights Committee. He is survived by his widow, two sons and a daughter.

UAW, Studebaker Set Escalator Pact As Harvester Is Warned

REVISIONS of five-year contracts, based on settlements with the major auto producers, have been won by the CIO Auto Workers in negotiations with the Studebaker Corp. and the Warner Gear Div. of the Borg-Warner Corp.

The Borg-Warner deal was part of a settlement that ended a 69-day strike which had caused some layoffs in the industry.

Studebaker agreed to factor into the base wage 19c of the 24c cost of living payment; revised the payment on the basis of changes in the new Bureau of Labor Statistics cost of living index; boosted the annual improvement factor from 4c to 5c an hour effective Sept. 15; gave skilled workers a basic wage increase of 10c an hour with an additional 10c, or a total of 20c, for patternmakers, and raised pensions from $125 to $137.50 a month, including social security.

THE AGREEMENT, which was negotiated by a UAW-CIO Local 5 committee headed by Pres. Louis Horvath, extended the pension improvement to 700 retired workers.

The Borg-Warner settlement served to reopen plants at Muncie, Ind., closed since Apr. 20, with the application of job incentive rates to new jobs the main point of difference.

Besides settling that dispute, the company agreed to factor 19c of the cost of living bonus into the base pay, and to revise the payments in accordance with the new cost of living index.

MEANTIME, 5600 hourly paid workers were laid off at the Kaiser Motor Co. Willow Run plant, near Detroit, with 2000 salaried workers due to lose their jobs next week.

The furloughs were caused by the Air Force's cancellation of a $400 million contract for cargo and assault planes, an action protested by UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey in a telegram to Air Force Sec. Harold E. Talbott.

A STERN warning that the farm equipment industry can only do itself "irreparable harm" if it wants to risk "the ill will engendered by the old jungle warfare approach" in its labor relations was sounded recently by a substantial group of its employes.

The warning was given by the CIO Auto Workers Agricultural Implement Workers Wage & Hour Council at a meeting in Springfield, O. It was based on the flat refusal of the employers to follow the lead of the auto industry and modernize their five-year contracts.

THE POSITION of John L. McCaffrey, president of the Intl. Harvester Co. and spokesmen for the industry, that the contracts are "fixed and legal" documents rather than agreements governing "a continuing human relationship," was denounced as "unusual, unrealistic and inconsistent."

"A collective bargaining agreement concerns people, not materials," the conference said. "The parties are bound to each other even beyond the expiration of the contract by the continuance of the worker-employer relationship.

"It is the rights and equities, the spirit and intent (that rule), not the literal language in which the parties clothe their intentions under a set of circumstances that live and that change may make obsolete."

The union is asking the same contract revision won by UAW-CIO members in negotiations with the major auto producers.

The conference congratulated CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meaney for the "great strides" made toward working out mutual problems, and expressed the view that the no-raiding agreement recently concluded is "a milestone toward eventual organic unity." It urged the two "to strive toward that goal."

7c Wage Pact In Shipyards

A LAST-MINUTE wage offer of 7c an hour, made after a strike deadline passed, settled negotiations under a wage reopening clause in contracts with two major employers covering 32,000 East Coast members of the CIO Shipbuilding Union.

The IUMSWA-CIO initialled the agreement first with the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. at a meeting in New York, then an hour later with the Todd Shipyards Corp. at a session in Brookyln.

The wage increase, retroactive to June 23, raises the rate for first-class mechanics to $2.07 an hour. It applies to 25,000 members employed by four Bethlehem shipyards in the New York area, two in Baltimore and others at Boston and Quincy, Mass., and to 7000 Todd workers in two yards in Brooklyn and Hoboken, N. J.

Negotiations were continuing last week with the Maryland Dry Dock & Shipbuilding Co., which has about 3000 employes in Baltimore.

Taber's Aide Boosted To Budget Post

THE BIG BUSINESS hatchet of Rep. Taber (R. N. Y.), head of the House Appropriations Committee, will get in some earlier licks next year.

Donald R. Belcher, former treasurer of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., whom Taber named to head the staff of big business "experts" helping the committee trim appropriations, has a new job. He's been made assistant director of the budget, with Pres. Eisenhower's approval.

Since the Budget Bureau pares down the requests of all government agencies even before they go to Congress for another trimming, Taber's chief big business aide now moves to a spot with virtual veto powers over requests for appropriations to carry on any activities which he—and big business—disapproves.

Gary CIO Begins Daily Newscast

The Lake County (Ind.) CIO Council is launching a labor-sponsored news comment program this week, to be broadcast at 5:15 p.m. five nights a week from Station WWCA at Gary.

The broadcaster is Floyd Russell, of the WWCA staff. The program will include up-to-the-minute national and Calumet area labor news, and will be beamed to both the union member and the general public.

MEBA Wins 6% Hike For 12,000

WAGE INCREASES of 6% have been won by the CIO Marine Engineers in a new contract covering 12,000 members employed on East and Gulf Coast dry cargo and passenger vessels.

The agreement was substantially the same as that which ended a dispute between the CIO Maritime Union and the same employers.

Retroactive to June 15, it carries new wage rates ranging from $421.87 a month for fourth assistant engineers on Liberty-type ships to $848.02 for chief engineers. Chief engineers on some of the larger passenger vessels now get basic pay of $1031.55 a month.

THE SETTLEMENT was reached in negotiations with the Committee for the Companies and Agents, Atlantic and Gulf Coasts, which represents about 40 shipping lines.

In another sector of the maritime industry, about 600 tanker and freighter crewmen on the Great Lakes went on strike when negotiations for a new contract failed to produce a settlement.

The walkout was authorized by the NUM-CIO and formalized a tie-up that followed members' refusal to sign on for new trips after the contract expired June 15. The union is seeking equalization of wages with those paid on deep water ships. NMU-CIO Vice Pres. Adrain Duffy said the differential runs to about $100 a month.

UTSE Asks Contract Gain

DEMANDS for major improvements in working conditions and collateral benefits have been served on the nation's major railroads by the CIO Transport Service Employees.

The union is seeking a new vacation schedule ranging from five days for employes with two or less years' service to 20 days for those with 15 years' seniority; seven paid holidays, with double time if worked; a health and welfare plan; time and a half for Sunday work as such, with double time if worked on a day off, and liberalized rights to free transportation.

Funds Whacked For Labor Dept.

THE LABOR DEPT., which Pres. Eisenhower promised to "strengthen and improve," got the same "lean and hungry look" treatment it was given by the Republican 80th Congress at the hands of the Senate Appropriations Committee last week.

The committee overrode recommendations of its own subcommittee, which wanted to restore about half the funds cut by the House, and slashed the department's budget so deeply that it would have exactly the same number of employes left as after the earlier GOP onslaught in 1947.

COVERING also other independent labor agencies and the Health, Education and Welfare Dept., the bill appropriates more than $2 billion for all agencies. The committee boosted funds voted by the House by over $27.7 million, but still left the total some $90 million under the amount asked by former Pres. Truman.

Most of the increases went for health activities, the committee voting more than $20 million additional for the National Institutes of Health and federal grants to states for hospital construction.

The Labor Dept., however, was cut back to $246 million below its appropriations last year. It was given $33.9 million less than Truman asked, and $22 million under the amount requested by Eisenhower. The cut in administrative and operating funds was 18% below 1953 appropriations and 10% of the President's budget.

The cutback, if it goes through, will mean a loss of about 800 of the 5474 jobs now in the department. This would throw it back to exactly the level the Taft-Hartley Congress reduced it to six years earlier.

Heaviest hit percentagewise were the secretary's and solicitor's offices, the Bureau of Labor Standards and the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divs. The committee held the first two at exactly the level recommended by the House, representing cuts of more than 20% and the loss of 80 employes.

IT BOOSTED House funds for the Bureau of Labor Standards by $76,000, but that was still $228,000 under Eisenhower's budget. Paradoxically, at the same time it directed the agency to maintain its safety program at the present level. The cut here means the loss of 35 jobs.

Likewise, it upped the amount voted by the House for the Wage-Hour and Public Contracts Div. by $250,000, but still left it $1.3 million below last year. Over 250 jobs will be lost for this activity, which is chiefly concerned with protecting workers from chiseling employers.

THE COMMITTEE sliced $170,000 off funds voted by the House for the Bureau of Apprenticeship and then lopped a whopping $2.5 million off Housing Appropriations for unemployment compensation to veterans. This left the latter some $8.5 million under the amount asked by Truman.

Even the Women's Bureau, which operates on a total budget of only $360,000, took a reduction of $10,000 in the amount voted by the House.

The committee also boosted House appropriations for the Bureau of Employment Security by $125,000, leaving it $610,000 under Truman's request. It directed, however, that the department must maintain labor market information and its farm placement service at present levels, making the cut bear heaviest on public employment services.

White Collar Drive Pushed By IUE Unit

LONG-RANGE plans for an organizing program among 250,000 non-production workers in the electrical manufacturing industry were indorsed by the IUE-CIO White Collar and Salaried Workers Council at a meeting in Washington.

About 35 delegates from IUE-CIO locals throughout the country testified to the need for strong unionism among salaried and white collar employes if they are to enjoy the same wage advantages and job security as organized production workers.

The council emphasized that most workers in this category in the electrical industry have fared better than other salaried workers, because the employers have been forced to pass on to them some of the gains won by production workers.

Only through union organization and a binding contract, the delegates said, can the white collar and salaried worker "achieve a sense of dignity and self-respect impossible when he is unprotected against discrimination and favoritism."

Jo Stafford's The Name—

'There Once Was A Union Maid'— And Now She Sings A Pretty Tune

"THERE ONCE Was a Union Maid." That isn't Singer Jo Stafford's theme song, but it could well be.

Born in a tent on an oil lease near Coalinga, Cal., Jo is the daughter of one of the pioneer organizers of the CIO Oil Workers.

Today she carries her own union card in the American Federation of Musicians. Even her dog, Beau, who plays the piano, belongs to the AFM.

The tent where Jo was born, the best living quarters an average oil worker could find in those days, was home to the family of G. C. (Crook) Stafford for 13 years.

Seven Long Days A Week

It was the birthplace of Jo's two older sisters and Crook fixed it up as best he could, "borrowing" lumber from the company to construct a floor and partial walls, four boards high.

Two years after Jo was born, the Staffords left their tent home, but not their problems. In those days, before the union came to the oil fields, working hours were so long Crook sometimes didn't see his children for six months at a time.

He worked a noon-to-midnight shift, seven days a week, once going six full years without missing a single 12-hour shift.

That meant the children were asleep when he got home, in school when he awoke on weekdays, studying music on Saturday mornings and at Sunday School on Sunday mornings.

Get To Know The Kids

Mrs. Stafford and the union changed all that. One day she stumped Crook, saying, "Mister, don't you think it about time you got acquainted with your children? You haven't seen them in months, you know."

That same day, Crook attended a union meeting and heard Walter Yarrow, one of the OWIU's great early organizers. Yarrow insisted the men could win an eight-hour day in the oil fields in a year, through the union. "Then," he said, "you can go home and get acquainted with your children."

SONGSTRESS Jo Stafford of CBS is a "union maid" from a union family. Her dad, Crook Stafford, was a pioneer of CIO Oil Workers.

Crook joined the union that night. It was 1917 and nine months later the eight-hour day became a reality in the California oil fields.

While Crook was active in union affairs, battling Pinkerton spies hired by the company, Jo and her two older sisters were getting started in the entertainment world. At 12, Jo made her first public appearance, singing "Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms."

Later the sisters won their first radio broadcast, and a $5 bill, singing over KHJ in Los Angeles. The trio was broken up later and Jo went on to fame alone.

Today she is one of the nation's best known popular singers, heard over the Columbia System's radio and TV networks and her Columbia records are top sellers.

House GOP Backs Down On Taxes

HOUSE Republican leaders backed down last week on their move to force a vote on the excess profits tax extension over the objections of Chairmen Reed (R. N. Y.) of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Meanwhile, conservative columnist Frank R. Kent took leaders of the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers to task for failing to support Pres. Eisenhower on this issue.

Contrasting their opposition with CIO's support of the President's request for an extension, Kent called the position of the two big business organizations "thoroughly untenable." He added:

"In the fight—in which the fate of the whole Eisenhower fiscal program is involved and of which the EPT is a key feature —the hostile CIO labor organization is with him and the supposedly friendly NAM and C. of C. are against him."

Thomas H. Burke, CIO chief of congressional liaison, threw CIO's support behind the scheduled move to force a vote. Commending Rules Committee action which would have by-passed Reed's group, Burke wired House leaders that "although we feel that this tax should be extended even further than called for by the current bill we are in full support of extension."

The decision to postpone the vote was announced by House Majority Leader Halleck after members of Reed's committee agreed to try to force a vote at the next meeting.

Failure to enact a new law means that the excess profits tax on corporations expired at midnight last Tuesday. GOP leaders said, however, that any extension voted could be made retroactive.

NMU Raises Dues, Initiation Fee

Members of the CIO Maritime Union by a referendum vote approved an increase in dues from $14 to $15 per three-month period, and set an initiation fee of $50 for all new members.

The voting was conducted by the Honest Ballot Association. The tally on the dues increase was 11,877 to 5562. On the initiation fee, it was 14,890 to 2509.

At Home And Abroad...

. . . the tasks and problems of free labor in the world were on the minds of CIO membership and leadership.

Senate Stops Drive To Slash Labor Dept.

ALMOST SOLID Democratic votes, aided by some Republicans, last week set back efforts of the GOP Senate leadership to slash funds for the nation's labor, health, education and welfare programs back to levels set by the 80th Congress.

Over "economy" protests by Acting Majority Leader Knowland (R. Calif.) and Sens. Dirksen (R. Ill.) and Case (R. S. D.), 13 amendments boosting appropriations $20.5 million were pushed through.

The final bill of $2,028,940,761 was some $7.1 million above Pres. Eisenhower's revised budget, but still nearly $70 million below the amount sought by former Pres. Truman.

The Senate's action represented a boost of $47.9 million over the amount previously voted by the House. The increases, however, are still subject to reduction by the conference committee which will be set up to adjust differences.

The badly-trimmed Labor Dept. did not fare nearly so well as the new H-E-W Dept., receiving less than 5% of the total increase. Even after the restorations nearly all bureaus were left far under the Eisenhower budget. Some 400 employes will have to be discharged even in the unlikely prospect that House conferees accept the full Senate increases.

That will leave the department weaker than at any time since 1947, but still with about 300 jobs more than it had after the attack upon it by the Republican 80th Congress.

DESPITE Eisenhower's promise to "build up" the Labor Dept., he made a personal appeal to Congress for the restoration of only two items cut by the Appropriations Committee. Both of these were for the H-E-W Dept. and were restored by the Senate.

They involved $151,000 more for the office of Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby and $426,000 additional for the Office of Education.

A personal appeal by Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin, backed by Chairman Smith (R. N. J.) of the Senate Labor Committee, brought back $198,000 in the appropriation for his office which had been cut by the Appropriations Committee.

Other restorations included $250,000 for the Solicitor's Office, $100,000 for the Bureau of Labor Standards, $170,000 for the Mexican contract labor program, and $210,000 for the Bureau of Employment Security, bringing total increases for the Labor Dept. to $928,000. Two efforts to restore the heavy cut in funds for the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divs. were defeated.

This means that the latter unit, charged with protecting workers against employers who violate the Fair Labor Standards Law, will be cut at least $1.3 million below the current year. Some 250 employes of the unit will be discharged, making adequate enforcement virtually impossible.

THE FINAL Senate tally showed that only the Women's Bureau and the Bureau of Employment Security were voted the full amounts asked in the Eisenhower budget. Total cuts in the present operating budget for all other bureaus amount to more than $2 million.

Biggest hike voted was the addition of $15 million to the $60 million recommended by the committee for hospital construction grants to the states. There were other increases for the Food and Drug Administration, Vocational Rehabilitation, Children's Bureau, National Labor Relations Board and various medical programs.

'States' Rights,' Big Business Raid On Jobless Aid Is Voted

A "STATES' RIGHTS" bill which the CIO charged "goes far towards destroying the few federal standards for unemployment insurance now provided in the Social Security and Unemployment Insurance Acts" cleared the House last week by voice vote.

Introduced by Rep. Reed (R. N. Y.), the measure is identical to the big employer Mills Bill that was beaten back in previous congresses.

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers has shown that Rep. Mills (D. Ark.) worked closely with Unemployment Benefit Advisors, a big business front, in drafting the measure.

BEFORE PASSING the bill, the House voted 292 to 93 against a motion by Rep. Forand (D. R. I.) to send the measure back to committee. Earlier, Forand had unsuccessfully sought two amendments which would have wiped out some of the bill's more objectionable provisions.

One would have forbidden the use of social security funds distributed to the states under the bill for any administrative purposes and made them available for benefits only.

"Such a prohibition and earmarking are essential to avoid a duplication and, in effect, a setting aside of the federal appropriation process, wastage of funds, and undermining of the federal standards," Thomas H. Burke, CIO congressional liaison chief, said in a memorandum to Congress backing Forand's motions.

FORAND'S other amendment would have made less harsh the provision for repayment of loans. Under the Reed Bill states must pay back loans in two years upon penalty of automatic and mounting tax increases on all employers within the state.

"The CIO has repeatedly indicated our preference for grants rather than loans, but if loans are the method preferred by Congress, they should be on a reasonable, not a punitive basis," Burke declared.

He said the bill would impose great hardship on states like Rhode Island, which have high rates of unemployment due to dislocations in their economy brought on by the government's defense program. By boosting payroll tax rates in these areas substantially above those in other states, the Reed Bill will "accentuate" unemployment, Burke charged.

Vigorously opposing the measure, Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.) told the House:

"The unholy alliance of Frank Bane, of the Council of State Governments, Stanley Rector, the highly paid lobbyist of Unemployment Benefit Advisors, Inc., along with some unduly influenced state directors of employment security programs, are the moving factors behind this bill."

He branded it an attempt to "turn over the unemployment compensation programs to employer-dominated groups in the states, where they will be eating out of the employers' hands." If the bill becomes law, he said, "it will be the beginning of the end of an effective unemployment compensation program in the states."

"THE FACT that Mr. Rector supports this bill is, in and of itself, reason why any friend of the working man should oppose it," Dingell said.

Dingell read a list of contributors of $500 or more to the UBA during the last two quarters Rector had filed reports under the Lobbying Act. It was made up of 59 of the biggest business enterprises in America.

General Motors gave $3500, Allis-Chalmers and Transcontinental Pipe $2500 each, and General Electric and Union Carbide and Carbon $2000 each. Twenty-one other firms gave $1000 or more.

CIO Aids Brewers As Teamsters Begin Raid

FULL NATIONAL CIO support was being mobilized last week to help the CIO Brewery Workers union beat down still another attack by the AFL Teamsters—a raid begun in the midst of the BW-CIO's long strike in Milwaukee.

Developments in the brewery situation in highlight were:

1. National and local Brewery Workers officials met in special conference early last week at Cincinnati, approved Pres. Karl Feller's recommendation to break off negotiations recently begun with the Teamsters looking toward a possible "no raiding" agreement.

2. Next day, Teamsters Pres. Dave Beck openly announced a raiding attack on BW-CIO locals, particularly in the eastern states. The AFL union claimed affiliation of seven brewery locals in New York City.

3. John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organization, said the CIO Organizational Dept. and representatives throughout the nation would give all possible assistance to the BW-CIO in the face of the latest Teamster attack.

4. Riffe also said the Teamster attack on the Brewery Workers violates the spirit of the no raiding agreement reached in principle between national CIO and AFL officials.

5. Negotiations were resumed in the two-month-long strike of 7500 CIO Brewery Workers at six Milwaukee plants, as the Wisconsin Council planned a giant motorcade parade in support of the strikers.

Riffe, his assistant, R. J. Thomas, Richard T. Leonard, Fred Pieper and several other CIO representatives have been assisting the Brewery Workers.

Riffe said the Teamster move to take in BW-CIO locals amounts to a raid and that he hopes Beck "will decide he is creating a bad situation and will change his mind."

In the Milwaukee strike, contract talks have been resumed but—at late report—the big firms haven't receded from their opposition to the 35-hour week, which is in effect in other brewing centers.

MAJOR strike issues are the demands of BW-CIO Local 9 for a 35-hour week with no loss in present pay, a further wage increase, and pension and welfare programs. Recently the striking brewers voted down an employer offer of a $6 weekly increase because there was no approval for shorter hours.

"The chips are down," the State CIO Council said in planning the CIO auto parade through downtown Milwaukee and the public rally in support of the strike.

"Milwaukee's brewery strike is a test of CIO strength and solidarity in the state of Wisconsin," the Council said.

"The Chamber of Commerce has determined that the breweries shall not give in to the union's requests. All over the state, managements are resisting the unions at the instigation of the Chamber of Commerce."

What Pickets?

Ever since 7500 CIO Brewery Workers went on strike in Milwaukee two months ago, AFL Teamsters have been driving trucks through the picket lines outside the six struck plants, it was reported last week from Milwaukee.

Ike Names 4 Labor Aides

FOUR appointments to labor posts were announced last week by Pres. Eisenhower. The nominations:

Spencer Miller, Jr., educator, lawyer and New Jersey state office holder, of South Orange, N. J., as assistant secretary of labor.

Harrison C. Hobart, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers vice president, of Houston, Tex., as assistant secretary of labor.

Head is in charge of drive by some 58 stewards, who have raised almost $600 and have $1000 to go to reach 100% PAC goal.

Wage Cut Rejected In Woolen Mills

THE DRIVE of the woolen and worsted industry to slash wages was stopped again last week by an arbitrators' decision that was an important victory for the CIO Textile Workers.

The ruling denied the request of Botany Mills, Passaic, N. J., to cut by 33c an hour the wages of 4000 production employes.

This and an earlier arbitrator's decision halted the industry's campaign. Several weeks ago Raymond O'Connell turned down the request of the biggest firm in industry, American Woolen Co., for a 31c an hour pay cut.

"TWUA is gratified by the decision," said John Chupka, the union's secretary-treasurer and director of its woolen and worsted division. "This finally ends any effort by the woolen and worsted industry to cut wages. The only two efforts to slash pay were made by American Woolen and Botany."

THE DECISION against Botany was handed down by a three-member panel of the American Arbitration Association, consisting of Isador Lubin, former U. S. Commissioner of Labor Statistics; David A. McCabe, retired chairman of the economics dept. of Princeton Univ.; and Robert Brecht of the Univ. of Pennsylvania.

The arbitrators' letter of denial, which was sent to the union and the company, gave no reason for the decision but said an explanatory opinion would be issued later. However, the letter said the decision was unanimous.

Like American Woolen, Botany had pleaded that is lost millions last year. The Passaic firm placed its loss last year at $5.5 million. TWUA opposed the cut and said Botany wages were in line with those paid throughout the industry.

GAINS AFTER ATTACK: Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union last week was resting well in a Poughkeepsie, N. Y., hospital after a slight heart attack.

School Aid Grant Voted By House

A BILL continuing federal grants to the states for school construction in areas swollen by government defense activities cleared the House with almost no opposition last week.

The appropriation of $227 million authorized over the next two years was a setback for plans of the Eisenhower Administration to trim the budget for this purpose. The President had asked that school construction grants be cut down to $94 million.

The House postponed action until this week on a companion measure, also approved by the House Education and Labor Committee, which would authorize $60 million for school operating expenses in defense-impacted areas.

'They Opened Their Hearts—' CIO-CSC Aids Tornado Area

COOPERATION of the people highlighted relief efforts of the National CIO Community Services Committee and the Massachusetts CIO in the recent Worcester, Mass., tornado disaster.

"The people in the area worked most cooperatively," said John Yeldell, CSC representative assigned by Leo Perlis, CSC national director, to work with the State CIO Council.

"THEY OPENED their doors and their hearts to the victims. Temporary housing needs were met almost immediately. Nearby colleges and universities opened their doors to many; private homes absorbed many. Clothing drives sprung up simultaneously.

"When the hospitals put out a call for blood on the evening of the disaster the people rushed in and within an hour or so enough blood was given to take care of the need.

Yeldell worked with a special committee chosen at a meeting of the Council's executive board. Yeldell praised the cooperation of Ray Stevens, a CIO Steelworkers representative, who was committee chairman, and John Sullivan, Massachusetts CIO-CSC, committee coordinator.

He said Council Pres. J. William Belanger "has remained very close to the committee and the State CIO is fully supporting our efforts."

"Our participation has helped CIO considerably public relations-wise. All our contracts with the public and private agencies were healthy in all respects. Our relationships with the Red Cross were excellent and I feel certain that it will pave the way for excellent relations in the future," Yeldell reported.

"The CSC program in Worcester as well as in the entire state of Massachusetts has been greatly enhanced as a result of our full participation in this program."

CIO Aide's Son Swats Down MIG

After 76 strafing missions in Korea, Capt. Dewey Durnford switched to combat flights and immediately shot down a Communist MIG jet fighter. He's the son of Mrs. Dorothy Dunford, a secretary at the Ohio CIO Council headquarters in Columbus.

5 Million Families Face Rent Gouging

RENT GOUGING of more than five million families appears ready to begin in earnest July 31 when federal rent controls die in nearly 1500 communities throughout the nation.

That prospect was insured when Congress refused to continue rent ceilings except in a handful of newly defined "critical areas." Under the new law, only housing built or rebuilt before February 1947 at atomic energy or Defense Dept. installations is eligible for continued rent lids.

The new standard is so tight that virtually the only housing covered will be that at less than 50 military bases, navy yards and similar government establishments. Emergency housing built for workers in new defense plants is excluded from coverage.

MOST OF the 120 cities and towns currently listed as critical defense areas will no longer be eligible. The Office of Defense Mobilization has already knocked 71 off the list.

In addition, controls will die in some 1400 cities and towns not in the "critical" category but which have held on to federal rent ceilings voluntarily since World War II.

Included in the latter group are such big industrial cities, housing many defense workers, as Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Newark, San Francisco, Cleveland, Baltimore, Louisville and St. Louis. Washington, D. C., which has been protected under a separate law, also will lose controls July 31.

MEANWHILE, Defense Mobilizer Arthur S. Flemming and Rent Director Glenwood Sherrard told a House Appropriations subcommittee that they may recommend to the President that all remaining rent controls be abolished

Notices of rent hikes ranging all the way up to 200% have already been handed out to many tenants by landlords throughout the nation. The real estate lobby has frowned on the bigger boosts, warning that owners' greed can force even the present Congress to restore curbs.

This "go slow" policy doesn't mean, however, that the landlord lobby doesn't intend to see that rents are hiked for all the traffic will bear. Their policy, Ben Fischer, director of the CIO Housing Committee, said last week, is to boost rents "gradually," arriving finally at the same over-all increase through a series of separate hikes.

"IN ST. LOUIS," Rep. Sullivan (D. Mo.) told the House, "we have 17,125 families and couples who are without homes of their own. This backlog of demand exists in the face of a total for rent vacancy rate of only one-half of 1%."

Mrs. Sullivan warned that "large rent increases are going to mean malnourished and hungry children."

She explained that low-income families will have to pay the greatest proportionate rise in rents, out of already tight budgets.

"There is only one place," she said, "where such families are going to get the money to pay increased rents, and that money is going to come right out of the food budget."

"... And you'll have a beautiful view—overlooking the rent."

Atomic Board Jolted On 28% Rent Hike Plan

PLANS OF the Atomic Energy Commission to hike rents 28% at its installations throughout the country last week ran into a severe jolt, perhaps even a permanent setback.

The battle isn't yet wholly won and only Oak Ridge, Tenn., is at least temporarily safe from rent decontrol at the moment. But there is a good chance that victory against the rent hike at that installation will stop the increases slated for other atomic energy centers.

Officers of the CIO Chemical Workers are leading the fight on behalf of Oak Ridge workers and their families. Locally, Emerson Pownall, president of Oak Ridge Local 288, has sparked the drive, while at the national level it's being carried forward by GCCW Vice Pres. Joseph Joy and Leo Goodman, assisting the Chemical Workers with their legislative problems.

IN CONGRESS, the Oak Ridgers have had the active support of their congressman, Rep. Baker (R. Tenn.), who last April authored an amendment to the new rent control law which specifically kept atomic energy installations among the "critical areas" as redefined by the act.

Since that time, however, the Critical Areas Advisory Committee, headed by Glenwood Sherrard, a hotel operator, has ignored terms of the law and decontrolled atomic energy centers along with other areas.

AMONG the places taken off the critical list and marked for rent hikes are the atomic energy installations at Hanford, Wash., Idaho Falls, Ida., and the Savannah River area in South Carolina and Georgia, site of the hydrogen bomb project.

"I do not intend to stand idly by while the folks living in these decontrolled communities are ignored in direct violation of the will expressed by this House," he said.

Declaring that "we have here a question of conformance by the downtown agencies with the will of Congress," Baker outlined the legislative history of the rent control law showing that it has always been the clear intent to include atomic energy housing.

"INSTEAD of complying with the intentions of the act," he said, "I find Sherrard, who is familiar with hotel problems in large cities, as an official of the Parker House chain in Boston, proceeding to decontrol not only virtually all critical areas in the country, but particularly communities covered by my amendment, the atomic installations throughout the U. S."

Baker as of last week had assurances from the Office of Defense Mobilization that there would be no "decontrol" at Oak Ridge at least until a report on the situation there is submitted.

CIO Asks Stronger Jersey Rent Law

The New Jersey CIO last week urged Gov. Driscoll to sign promptly the Clapp state rent control bill in time to apply it when federal controls expire July 31.

The Council is not entirely satisfied with the measure, but Pres. Carl Holderman said it "was far better than the alternative proposed in the Legislature."

Holderman suggested to the Governor that he appoint a "capable, sympathetic state control director to administer the law on the state level" and "call a special session of the State Legislature in the near future to rectify defects in the Clapp Bill admitted by its sponsors."

One Up, One Down

Contrasting actions in the House and Senate last week gave still another illustration of how legislative and political action directly affect the wages and welfare of American working men and women.

The Senate—over the vigorous objections of such GOP stalwarts as Sens. Knowland (Calif.) and Dirksen (Ill.)—demonstrated good sense in restoring at least part of the free-swinging, false economy cuts previously inflicted on the Labor Dept.

All told the Senate added some $20 millions to Labor and Health-Education-Welfare Depts. Funds. That's still nearly $70 million below the amount recommended by former Pres. Truman—and it's a far cry from Pres. Eisenhower's own campaign promises to "build up" the Labor Dept.

The Wage-Hour and Public Contracts units of the Labor Dept. have been cut by $1.3 million. Some 250 employes will be discharged from an already inadequate force. That means more opportunity for chiseling employers to get away with murder in violating the minimum wage, 40-hour week and child labor laws.

The Senate's refusal to restore wage-hour enforcement funds was paralled in the House vote to adopt the Reed Bill on unemployment insurance. This is the big business-fathered bill to destroy the few present federal standards and floors affecting the separate state-operated unemployment benefit systems.

General Motors, General Electric and other giant corporations are among contributors to the dough-heavy lobby which pushed the Reed Bill through the House. They expect a payoff in whopping savings on employer contributions to unemployment insurance—which means whopping headaches for unemployed workers.

Quote Of The Week

"I feel I have no right of censorship over any one."—Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), quoted in the Washington Star of July 8.

The Condon Case

A clue as to how the government security system is operating was given when Rep. Condon (D. Calif.) revealed that he had been shadowed and investigated by the FBI and barred by the Atomic Energy Commission from a congressional party witnessing an atomic bomb test.

Bob Condon is a new member of Congress, but he already left his mark on House Labor Committee hearings on revising the Taft-Hartley Act. His record in California—as a lawyer for the CIO Oil Workers, the AFL and other unions, and as a distinguished member of the State Legislature—was sufficient to win his election in a new congressional district.

Condon has fought a lot of cases for labor; among the toughest were the blacklist firings of OWIU-CIO members after a bitter strike a few years ago. For that, he made enemies. And their charges were spread and failed in the state election campaign.

Now the claims on campaign dodgers apparently have been taken at face value by the various government agencies.

It's an example of the so-called "security" program nailing anti-Communists—while Malenkov's boys make hay.

Watch Out For The Blow

In Other Words—

The Morning After In Hungary

This article on one phase of life behind the Iron Curtain is adapted from "Close-Up of a Workers' Paradise—What's Happening to Labor in Red Hungary," in the July issue of Harper's Magazine. The writer is a Hungarian-born U. S. newspaperman.

By GEORGE MAY

IN MY 40 MONTHS in Red Hungary, I found few sights more fascinating than the Budapest Opera House on festive nights.

Then the Diamond Horsehoe is filled with workers' wives in their Sunday best. At the spacious buffet, the medium-size party bosses, factory managers, writers and officers engage in a display of hearty cameraderie. As for the top leadership, it has its own lounge, with better foods and choicer wines, to which it repairs after strenuous oratory.

This is the new Red aristocracy. It is the cream of the 100,000 workers and peasants who have been given responsible posts in the party, state, army and secret police, and of the 70,000 others who have become "Stakhanovites," or production pace-setters. Its composition is fluid, for those who fail the party are promptly cast out.

The Price Of Chocolates

The backbone of the new Red aristocracy is workers. As almost any Communist theoretician will tell you, the worker is the pride, watchman and vanguard of "the toiling masses." Without him, power can neither be seized nor retained. It is by him—and for him—that the new, strange Communist world is being built.

If you are a visiting Western "good-willer" you may be impressed by the workers' new exalted status. Dr. Hewlett Johnson, Britain's Red Dean, after a quick glance at life in Hungary, pronounced it wholly blissful.

A week is enough to inspect the new workers' apartments for the Red aristocracy, to visit the country clubs turned into rest homes for Stakhanovites, to see the new workers' clubs, to talk to factory managers who only yesterday were humble ditch-diggers, and even to go through a chocolate factory, where sturdy and untidy girl Stakhanovites are swinging around heavy trays of candy.

But a week is not enough to discover that the box of chocolates given each visitor on departure costs a week's salary for most workers; or that the new aristocracy forms but a tiny portion of the working class; or that the majority are ill-fed, badly-clothed, over-worked, sullen, and preponderantly anti-Communist.

The Communists did not break their early promises out of choice. But, having won power, they have discovered that the laws of cost, quality and supply apply as much to Communist countries as to the capitalist world, and that a choice has to be made between high production and workers' welfare.

And so 19th century speedup methods, long abandoned in the West, are revived under a variety of new names. Piecework is restored as a triumph of socialism; all labor is frozen; absenteeism is punishable by internment; and managers are given the power to fine the worker.

Use Whip And Carrot

To keep the graph of production rising, the Communists use both the whip and the carrot. There is, in fact, a department of the Communist party that does nothing but consider the most efficient use of the whip.

Communist punishments are infinitely varied. They may be as mild as the pillorying of "shirkers" over the factory loud speakers or on "disgrace boards;" or they may be as fearful as internment and forced labor.

Under a state decree issued last year, workers guilty of "lax discipline" may be denied payment for their lunchtime. Workers guilty of producing rejects may be fined up to 15% of their monthly wage.

But perhaps the most fearsome exhibition of the whip is at the kangaroo courts. The victims are hand-picked, for easier denunciation, and are charged with all the crimes the Party is seeking to dramatize at the moment.

But if the whip is used freely, so is the carrot. There is no day when the Communist press does not list the blessings showered on the worthy.

The bulk of the workers, however, never get a taste of the carrot. For them it is a dispiriting battle for survival on a steadily declining real wage.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

BERNARD M. SHANLEY, White House special counsel, didn't like news stories that his round-table conferences on Taft-Hartley revision had "bogged down." He said they hadn't "bogged down" but were merely recessed until some new "language" was available for discussion.

More important than this dispute, perhaps, is the light shed by the conferences on how the "new team" in the White House works.

Forgiven

Harry S. Truman got his biggest laugh on his Eastern trip when he was told that the day Treas. Sec. George Humphrey's "hard money" policy drove government bonds below 90, a sign went up on the New York Stock Exchange bulletin board:

"Come back, Harry, all is forgiven."

Shanley presided over a group including Labor Sec. Durkin and assistants, Commerce Sec. Weeks and aides, plus Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) of the House Labor Committee and Chairman Smith (R. N.J.) of Senate Labor, and a legislative liaison man, Gerald D. Morgan, who helped draft the Hartley version of the Taft-Hartley law in 1947.

For several weeks they met three times a week. Mr. Eisenhower sat in once, so did Sen. Taft. Then the conferences collapsed—only temporarily according to the official version—because Durkin wanted changes in the "secondary boycott" provisions of T-H and Weeks would not agree.

Old Army Game

This technique—the creation of an interdepartmental, extra-curricular committee to work out an "administration program" on a vital issue—is disturbing confirmation of the widespread suspicion that Mr. Eisenhower in the White House handles policy problems on the "chain of command" and "staff" basis with which he was familiar in the Army.

Special Counsel Shanley quite naturally declines to answer questions on this general subject, although he is perfectly willing to insist that eventually his conference group will work out an "administration program" on Taft-Hartley—presumably for the next session of Congress.

From other sources, however, it becomes clear that on most controversial issues the Administration operates in the same way. The President sets up an interdepartmental committee, including legislative leaders, to obtain his "administration programs."

If the committee of staff, cabinet and congressional leaders reaches agreement, a short recommendation goes to the President and almost invariably he accepts the advice.

A reporter asked one White House aide whether this did not mean that the "advisers," rather than Mr. Eisenhower, were really "making policy decision."

Th aide rejected this suggestion and said that people tried to brief the President adequately. He mentioned two—but only two—occasions on which Mr. Eisnhower had personally studied the background papers. Mention of one occasion was put off the record. The other involved the request of a convicted former enemy war criminal for a pardon (Ike turned it down).

Adams Is In Charge

One unchallengeable fact is that Mr. Eisenhower does not meet each day with his whole top-ranking White House staff, as Pres. Truman did, with every aide free to advance ideas and Mr. Truman acutely aware of his overriding responsibility as Chief Executive for making policy.

The "new team" of assistants meets each day but the meetings are presided over by Sherman Adams, Chief of Staff. Suggestions to the President thus automatically must clear through Adams or Shanley, who also sees him every day. Ike himself meets the whole staff only once a week.

According to a report which this correspondent believes reliable, the President told a recent visitor that he finds his job almost overpowering, that he has to make too many decisions on issues he knows little about. He expressed a profound hope that he was getting good advice. The President indicated that he is earnestly looking forward to retirement to peaceful private life at the end of only one term.

★ At a White House news conference, a Texas reporter asked Ike whether there were any plans for preventing recurrence of disastrous drought. Responded Ike: even the federal government couldn't do much about widespread meteorological conditions. In short, he couldn't make it rain.

★ The Republican National Committee issued a small pamphlet on Mr. Eisenhower's "second 75 days," claiming major achievements, the same day the Democratic National Committee published its new $3 a year monthly magazine, the Democratic Digest, charging the GOP with breaking its campaign promises. The Democratic Digest showed a deft editorial touch by avoiding roundhouse swings at Ike, still considered immensely popular, and wittily needling the Republican party and touching only carefully on Ike's "lack of leadership."

Life And Death Of Jose, 9, A Boy Less Important Than Birds

By Public Affairs Institute

LAST WEEK Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) told the Senate the story of Jose, a boy who had died in 1950 at the age of 9.

Jose, his parents, two older sisters and a brother emigrated legally four years earlier from Mexico to the United States in search of work. Jose was five at the time.

In San Antonio a labor contractor signed up the entire family to go to work in the Colorado bean fields. Transportation was arranged in a stake truck with a ragged tarpaulin cover. Another family of five went along. The truck stopped only for gas, oil and water and to allow the driver to snatch meals.

When Jose and his family arrived in Colorado at the bean field, they were assigned free housing. There were 25 tarpaper shacks for 31 families. One water faucet provided all the water. Garbage was piled in rotting heaps at the edge of the camps. Flat wooden bunks were the beds.

Always More Beans To Pick

The next day Jose and his family went to work. Hour by hour his mother and father coaxed him to pick as many beans as possible. The family was paid by the pound of beans. They needed more pounds to buy food and to travel on for more work.

For the next four years Jose and his family traveled west to California to pick cotton, north to Oregon to pick apples and east to Michigan to pick beets. They went back and forth.

Jose never went to school. He had to work. Even if he had gone, he would have learned little because he knew no English. And the children would have laughed at him because he was queer and his clothes were ragged.

Besides, Jose was often ill. He was underweight and his bones were bent. He caught colds easily and coughed continuously. When he was nine years old Jose died from an attack of dysentery. No one called a doctor because diarrhea was a common thing. Besides, doctors rarely came to migratory camps.

There are tens of thousands of children of an estimated one million migratory farm workers like Jose. Sen. Douglas says they are "without exception and without question the most educationally neglected group in the United States."

Some never go to school. A research project established by General Eisenhower at Columbia Univ. in 1950 shows that one-half of the Spanish-speaking population among migratory workers had no school at all, 80% less than five years.

A study of 372 children of migratory workers in Colorado three years ago by the National Child Labor Commission showed a similar picture. It was found that none of the children, 7 through 16 years, had gone beyond the fifth grade. Only eight had completed the fifth grade and 24 children, over eight, had never gone to school.

Last year the U. S. Office of Education asked Congress for $181,000 for a research and action program which would stimulate state, local and private agencies to help. Both the Senate and House Appropriations committees turned it down.

This year, when the Senate was discussing appropriations which would have meant almost $7 million for migratory birds, Sen. Douglas introduced an amendment to provide $500,000 for migratory children as requested last year. It was ruled out of order.

No federal money has yet been appropriated for the migratory children problem. Several state and private agencies have been working in the field. The U. S. Office of Education has done some work despite its lack of funds.

A bill to set up a permanent Federal Committee on Migratory Labor was approved unanimously by the Senate Labor Committee last year. It did not reach a vote.

This session Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.) has reintroduced it. It would be the first important step toward meeting the problem of migratory children, as important as migratory birds in Senator Douglas' view.

Program Continues

The Senate last week gave routine approval to a bill extending the program for importation of Mexican farm workers for another year from Dec. 31. The House earlier voted a three-year extension, so the two measures have to be resolved.

How's Business?—

Profits Are Up, Job Outlook Isn't

BUSINESS has been having a wonderful time chalking up lush profits—but it hasn't been creating any new jobs for unemployed workers.

The Census Bureau, for instance, found about 22,000 fewer non-farm workers were employed in June than in May. The June figure was 55,246,000, "almost unchanged from its midwinter low, whereas in other years gains of around one million have been common."

Approximately 1.5 million people were looking for jobs, the Bureau said.

The Securities & Exchange Commission reported that the net working capital of U. S. corporations at the end of the first 1953 quarter was at an all-time high of $86.9 billion. This was an increase of $1.3 billion in three months, $3.7 billion more than in the first quarter of 1952, and $18.3 billion, or nearly 27% over 1948.

These are the same corporations that have been claiming they were being ruined by high taxes.

Banks Get Their Share

The bankers, as might be expected, are getting their share of stratosphere-bound profits. Their net take for the first half of this year was nearly 9% higher than in the first half of 1952, while gross earnings were the best since World War II.

The country's largest, the Bank of America, reported earnings of $1.45 a share compared to $1.29 in the same period of 1952. Manufacturers Trust of New York, the fourth largest, jumped from $1.30 last year to $1.44 this year, and the National City Bank from $1.90 to $2.07.

In industry, the Vanadium Corp. boosted profits by nearly 50% in the first five months of the year to $1,378,200, while increasing sales only about 25% above the same period of last year.

Armour & Co., one of the Big Four meat packers, pulled an even neater trick. It boosted profits while selling less. Earnings for the first six months were $5.6 million, or $1.02 a share, compared to $3.1 million, or 40c a share, a year ago.

American Enka Corp., rayon yarn maker which just went into the nylon field, moved in the same general pattern as Vanadium. It boosted profits 27% while increasing sales only 24% in the 24 weeks ending June 14. Its net was $3.1 million, or $2.84 a share as against $2.23 a share in the same period of 1952.

The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. did the same—boosting net profits for the six months ended Apr. 30 by nearly 11% while boosting sales not quite 5%. Earnings jumped $2.1 million to $21.1 million, or from $4.81 a share a year ago to $5.32. Sales climbed $22.6 million to $487 million.

Bread And Butter Drive On Comm

Economic Aid Fund Proposed

A SIX-POINT program for a world-wide anti-Communist offensive on the "bread-and-butter" level was spelled out for the third world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at Stockholm by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Essentially, the plan provides for an international fund for economic and social construction in the underdeveloped countries, and an international stockpiling pool to permit all nations to live in economic security.

The CIO chieftain asked the delegates, representing the free trade union movements of 73 nations, to present his program to their respective governments and ask them to work for its implementation through the United Nations.

In a major speech, Reuther outlined his main points as follows:

1. "A Free World Labor Fund for economic and social construction: We urge the creation of a commission within the United Nations to work out a practical and continuing means for achieving equity of access among all nations, rich or poor, to the world's basic economic resources.

CIO Sends $1100 For Dutch Relief

The CIO last week sent another contribution, of $1160, to the Netherlands Federation of Labor (NVV) for victims of last winter's disastrous floods. Earlier the CIO had given $1000 through CARE.

"Our trade union groups should urge upon their governments and the United Nations the establishment of such a fund for the purpose of expanding present efforts to assist underdeveloped nations to develop their resources and to create the economic basis for raising living standards. Each nation should contribute into this based upon its means.

2. "We urge the United Nations to give leadership to the creation of an international resources partnership in which all areas, large and small, would have an equal vote.

"Such a partnership, by pooling and stabilizing the demand for the world's basic commodities, would create the necessary protection for underdeveloped countries against the economic insecurity which has been their lot when even small business recessions have occurred in industrialized nations.

"In some instances, a decline in demand of no more than 6% in an industrial nation has produced a calamitous reduction of nearly 50% in the level of activity in single-commodity supplying nations. The resources partnership should cover some 20 to 25 basic commodities and foodstuffs, such as tin, copper and sugar, which have been subject to drastic price and demand fluctuations.

3. "We call upon the various trade secretariats of the ICFTU to intensify their efforts to establish fair and equalized labor standards so that free trade may be expanded on a basis which will protect high wage standards, while at the same time helping to raise low wage standards. Trade must be based upon expanded purchasing power among the workers of all nations, not upon the exploitation of unequal wage standards.

4. "We urge our unions to increase their pressure to raise wages and purchasing power as the only means of achieving a balance between productive power and purchasing power. Ours is a problem not only of increasing the worker's share of the economic pie, but of providing a constantly larger pie in which to share.

5. "We hold it a matter of right that workers should receive a constant and guaranteed share in the fruits of increasing productivity.

6. "The guaranteed annual wage, while a question of concrete trade union demands, is one which must of necessity be worked out in each country and by each union in relation to specific needs and situations.

Annual Wage Urged

"It is urged that where practicable, trade unions explore the workability of establishing guaranteed annual wage contracts. Since the worker and his family must eat and live by the year, the worker should as a matter of both right and necessity be paid by the year.

"The guaranteed annual wage would be an important contribution to the creation of the stable purchasing power upon which full employment and full production must rest."

Free Labor Meets In Stockholm

ORGANIZED labor throughout the free world, acting through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, took its unending struggle for social and economic justice through the Iron Curtain last week.

The ICFTU world congress, meeting in Stockholm, sent an official delegation to Berlin in response to an American-sponsored resolution to make an on-the-spot investigation of the Soviet army's brutal repression of embattled Red zone workers goaded into bloody demonstrations against Communist tyranny.

Tom O'Brien, president of the British Trades Union Congress and a member of Parliament, headed the delegation. It was due to urge the American, British and French high commands to demand that Russian authorities imediately cease their tank and armored car assaults on workers driven to desperation by impossible work quotas and empty shelves in food stores.

A Better Share

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, making his own investigation, was already on the scene (see adjoining story).

More than 200 delegates attended the world congress, third since the ICFTU was organized in London in 1949. They tackled an eight-day program in which East Germany and the so-called change in the attitude of Russia vied for attention with bread and butter problems like organizing, fighting for workers' rights, and winning a better share of the world's wealth for those who produce it.

CIO, AFL, and Mine Worker delegations appeared victors in a fight to continue strong opposition to Russian aggression as against the softer attitude taken by the powerful British labor movement.

One of its results was a decision by Sir Vincent Tewson, TUC secretary, not to run for reelection as ICFTU president. News reports named Omer Becu, head of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation, as his probable successor.

Colonial Issues

In other matters, the delegates, representing nearly 54 million workers in 73 countries, heard bitter denunciations of Great Britain and France for their treatment of colonial labor movements. The two nations were attacked by delegates from Cyprus and Tunisia, respectively.

N. Boudlai, the Tunisian delegate, charged that France is preventing the normal development of a democratic trade union movement, and frequently had prevented the Tunisian General Federation of Labor from sending representatives to ICFTU meetings by refusing passport visas. The murder last December of Farhat Hached, ICFTU executive board member and secretary of the Tunisian labor group, has never been solved, he recalled. Many Tunisian labor leaders have been jailed, he added.

The ICFTU executive board's characterization of the Yugoslav labor movement as Communist-dominated and "just as objectionable as that of Russia" was challenged by Knut Larsson, of the Swedish delegation.

ICFTU Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek retorted that Yugoslav unions do not function as free and independent organizations, and that considerable change in their status will be necessary before the ICFTU can accept them as members.

The CIO was represented, in addition to Reuther, by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Vice Presidents Michael Quill, L. S. Buckmaster, James G. Thimmes and O. A. Knight; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers; Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paperworkers; General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg; Michael Ross, secretary of the Intl. Affairs Committee; Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, and Guy Nunn, adviser and interpreter.

Concert featuring Workers-

ICFTU Gains Organizing D

MEMBERSHIP in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has jumped by four million since the 1951 meeting in Milan, Italy, Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek reported to the third world congress at Stockholm last week.

The worldwide voice of free labor now speaks for 54 million working men and women in 97 organizations in 73 countries ranging from the most highly industrialized to the least developed, he said.

The membership increased by more than 500,000 workers during the convention, when the delegates approved the admission of Histadrut, the Israel federation of labor, with 472,000 members, and two Chilean unions, the Confederation of Copper Workers and the Confederation of Maritime Workers, with 30,000 members.

Histadrut is the largest and most powerful union in the Middle East and includes an overwhelming percentage of Israeli workers. The Chilean unions are affiliates of a national center with constitutional barriers to international affiliations.

Oldenbroek also reported that organizational campaigns, on a decentralized basis, are well under way in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

In Latin America, he said, the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) has not only made notable progress in Chile, Uruguay and the Caribbean area, but has become a major bulwark against the spread of Russian communism on the one hand and Peronist fascism on the other.

Schools Established

The organizing drives are paid for out of a special Regional Activities Fund to which the CIO gave $100,000. The major contributors were the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which CIO unions in that country are affiliated; the British Trades Union Congress and the German Federation of Labor (DGB).

The campaigns in Asia and Africa have proceeded so far that permanent labor training schools have been established at Calcutta, India, and Accra, on the African Gold Coast, he said.

Oldenbroek's report also detailed ICFTU championship of human rights in many countries since the last world congress.

The ICFTU voiced bitter condemnation the mass deportations of Hungarian rkers and asked the UN to act; con-mned the Prague trials, actively opposed scism in Spain, and has been engaged in running fight with France over its mis-atment of labor and the nationalist vement in Tunisia.

It also championed the rights of man in nezuela, South Africa, Argentina, the ar, Morocco, Cyprus, Rhodesia, Uruguay d Japan.

CIO Offers Aid To E. Berlin Workers

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther flew from the ICFTU world congress at Stockholm to see for himself what conditions are like in Soviet-controlled East Berlin.

The CIO leader also conferred with Mayor Ernst Reuter, of West Berlin, who had invited him to visit that city when he spoke at the CIO Auto Workers convention at Atlantic City, N. J., in March.

Reuther left Stockholm after making four concrete moves to help East Berlin workers, and as the workers themselves were staging a series of sitdown and slowdown strikes that was spreading rapidly to the rest of Communist-dominated East Germany.

Red army tanks were again moving into the city as he arrived. A few hours later, the Soviet-sponsored government capitulated to the workers' demands by reopening the border between East and West Berlin and by freeing an estimated 100,000 workers arrested as an aftermath of the bloody anti-Communist demonstration on June 17.

Joint Cable To Ike

Before leaving Stockholm, Reuther had joined with Pres. George Meany of the AFL in sending a cable to Pres. Eisenhower asking him to take the initiative in helping East German workers in their struggle against Soviet totalitarianism and for free elections on uniting Germany.

In Washington, Eisenhower told a press conference it was "significant" that the leaders of the two great U. S. labor organizations should ask him to intervene, but gave no indication he would.

At the ICFTU congress, Reuther also introduced a resolution calling on free labor throughout the world to help the East Germans financially as well as morally. With Meany's vigorous support, it was pushed through in the face of British reluctance.

Inquiry Proposed

The following day he announced that the CIO will make a "substantial" contribution to a fund for the East Germans. Meany likewise pledged a sizable gift as the other delegates cheered the Americans' action.

Reuther also supported and helped secure passage of a proposal by Irving Brown, AFL delegate, that the congress appoint an international commission to inquire into the arrests and executions of East German union leaders.

He was accompanied to Berlin by Mrs. Reuther; his brother Victor, who is CIO European representative; Guy Nunn, his adviser, and Daniel Benedict, CARE European representative.

CIO, AFL Wire To Ike Urges Aid To East German Labor

The following cablegram was sent to Pres. Eisenhower in Washington by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany from the Stockholm world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions:

ON BEHALF of 16 million American workers whose representatives are in Stockholm, Sweden, today attending the third world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, we call upon the government of the United States immediately to take the initiative in aiding the workers of Soviet-occupied Germany in their struggle against Soviet totalitarianism.

The assembled delegates of the ICFTU world congress, who speak for more than 53 million workers throughout the world, have unanimously and with American labor's uncompromising support voted to aid their fellow-workers in East Germany in every manner possible.

We ask that our government press for immediate negotiations for free elections in a united Germany and for establishment of free political parties and free trade unions, and for the immediate liberation of German workers imprisoned by the Soviet occupation authorities for their resistance June 17.

We further call for the submission of a formal complaint to the United Nations against the Soviet Union's violation of human rights and freedom of association in Soviet-occupied Germany.

In the history of mankind's struggle for liberty, June 17 will go down as a memorable moment during which heroic German workers fought not only for themselves, but also a battle for all the free peoples of the world. Their struggle must have the unyielding support of all who cherish freedom. We ask your immediate consideration of our plea.

'Intensive Speedup' Provoked Labor Rising In Soviet Berlin

AN EYEWITNESS account of the Soviet tank attack on demonstrating East Berlin workers was given the ICFTU world congress by a union leader who was directly involved.

The story really began early last spring, Alfred Braun, an officer of the construction workers' union which touched off the bloody demonstration, told the respectfully attentive delegates.

"At that time we were subjected to an intensive speedup brought on by the raising of production quotas and the increase of prices," he explained.

The first protest was staged on May 1, he said. It was then the East Berlin workers had proof that the Communist unions, instead of representing them in grievances, were really working for the employer—in this case the Communist puppet government. They were forced back to work.

Another 20% increase in the work load quickly followed, Braun continued. So on June 16 the workers sent a delegation to the East German government buildings in East Berlin.

"As the delegation walked through the city it gathered strength," he said. "It included more than 1000 workers when it reached the government headquarters.

"The officials who refused to deal with the delegation turned an economic demand into a political crisis. On the following day, spontaneously, all the people of East Berlin rose against the tyranny.

"For a moment the government was overthrown. Then the occupying power intervened, and with tanks and armored cars, it restored the discredited and repudiated people's democracy."

Not A Miracle

"The uprising was not a miracle and it was not the work of American spies," he told the congress.

"It came from a people who were exhausted and desperate. It was not particularly aimed at the Russian occupying power, but at corrupt Communist officials who ran the so-called People's government and who were responsible for the destruction of freedom and the constant lowering of living standards.

"Help us, and demand of your government that it stand firm against the occupying power. I express the hope of hundreds of thousands of people in prison. Help us regain our freedom, and your own will be assured."

Stockholm Colorful For Conference

HE THIRD world congress of the CFTU opened in the midst of a gantic birthday celebration to an chestral and choral accompaniment.

Stockholm, capital of Sweden and host ty for the congress, is celebrating its 0th anniversary this year. The streets ere gay with flags and posters when the legates began to arrive, banners and reamers were flying everywhere.

Two posters, displayed on every kiosk d billboard, particularly caught the eyes ICFTU delegates. One was that of the wedish Federation of Labor (LO) an-ncing that it has 1,340,000 members—ore than 90% of those eligible. The other as that of the cooperative movement, owing a strong arm helping a small ild.

The opening session was held in the oncert Hall, with the city's Concert Hall rchestra and the Workers Choral Society pplying stirring trade union music—in ct, the first item on the program was the aying of the Swedish Trade Union March the orchestra.

Addresses of welcome were given by C. A. Anderson, chairman of the Stockholm City Council; Prime Minister Tage Erlander of Sweden, who visited the National CIO office in Washington last year, and Pres. Axel Strand, of the LO.

Responses were made by one representative of each continent. Pres. George Meany of the AFL replied for North America. Leon Jouhaux, head of the French Force Ouvriere and a veteran of the international labor movement, answered for Europe; R. Chaudry, of Pakistan, for Asia; E. F. Small, of Gambia, for Africa, and M. Figueira, of Uruguay, for South America.

Sir Vincent Tewson, president of the ICFTU and sercetary of the British Trades Union Congress, made the official opening address. He reviewed ICFTU growth since the Milan congress two years ago, paid tribute to East German workers, and touched off an internal split by emphasizing the opportunity for peace he held was offered by the so-called "softening" attitude of Russia.

In The Legislatures—

Big Business Gains In States Reported

"WE NEVER had it worse . . . We anticipated little and we got less." That's how the recent session of the North Carolina Legislature was described by J. R. Graham, State CIO-PAC executive director. And his description applies in large part to other legislative sessions now winding up across the nation.

Here are recent developments, as reported by State CIO councils and PACs:

Illinois

Veto of the Larson Bill aimed at public housing was urged by Illinois CIO, describing the measure as "anti-social, vested interest legislation destroying public housing and slum clearance legislation."

The Broyles bill, setting up an Illinois McCarthy-type committee, was defeated shortly before the General Assembly adjourned, but a state employe loyalty oath bill was voted.

In the field of unemployment and pension on benefits, old age payments were upped from $65 to $75 a month, while an employer bill disqualifying thousands of workers from unemployment benefits was stopped.

"Some of the things we didn't get," as reported by Illinois CIO, were an increase in jobless benefits, a state 75c-an-hour minimum wage law, and a state equal job opportunities bill. The later was killed in Senate committee.

Ohio

Fair employment practices also were done in by the Ohio Senate Labor and Commerce Committee, which killed the measure by a 5-to-4 vote.

(FEPC bills were introduced in a dozen legislatures—most of them Republican-controlled—this year, according to the Jewish Labor Committee. But only Kansas acted favorably, and that was on an educational measure lacking enforcement powers.)

Pennsylvania

State CIO Pres. Harry Boyer reported the Republican "Administration is now using honey and threats" in an effort to win the General Assembly approval of proposals for state wage and sales taxes.

The Pennsylvania CIO Legislative Bulletin urged lawmakers "not to fall for promises or be scared by threats" and to act favorably upon fair practices legislation and measures to improve unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits.

Boyer last week urged Gov. John S. Fine to veto two bills that would exempt from taxation machinery and all kinds of equipment. He asked the Governor to kill the measures "so that taxes saved by corporations will not be shifted to the small property owner."

North Carolina

"As big business took over the operation of our nation in Washington, so did big business climb into the driver's seat in North Carolina," the state CIO-PAC reported in its legislative summary.

The report condemned the administration of Gov. William B. Umstead as "big business first, last and always," granting corporation tax benefits while "failing completely to take any positive step on behalf of the one million industrial workers of this state."

Lid Placed On Joe's Tax Files

Under a bill signed into law by Gov. Walter Kohler of Wisconsin, a lid has been clamped on state income tax returns.

The same Wisconsin Legislature which sealed up tax returns put through a bill opening names on relief rolls to public inspection. (LPA)

CIO Voices Protests On Atomic Grab

SUPPORT of CIO members in the fight against the threatened give-away of atomic energy to big business was enlisted last week by the CIO Committee on Regional Development Conservation.

In a letter to all CIO councils, regional directors and field offices, Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the committee, asked CIO members to urge their senators and congressmen to vote against the give-away when it comes up for final action.

"When you protest against it (proposed weakening of the Atomic Energy Act)," he wrote, "you are working to protect the national security, reasonable secrecy in atomic energy matters, and the property of the people of the U. S. in atomic energy.

A joint congressional committee under the chairmanship of Rep. Cole (R. N. Y.) is considering the legislation. In a recent speech, Cole warned the House that private industry will have to have government subsidies if it is ever to develop atomic energy for commercial use.

Tennessee Students Hit TVA Cuts

Twenty-nine of the 37 people wrote Pres. Eisenhower urging restoration of appropriation slashes for Tennessee Valley Authority and reminded him of his campaign pledge not to hamper TVA.

The letters were written after the students heard Stefan Robock, TVA economist. He is brother-in-law of Stanley Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Education and Research Dept.

ROBOCK said one effect of the proposed budget cuts would be the abolition of the TVA resources and development board which plans the future of the area. He said the slashed budget, which is being foisted on Congress by the Edison Utility group representing private companies, would restrict TVA to power development and strip it of its function of aiding the people to improve their condition.

Seven new members of the CIO Furniture Workers attended the school after their local at Chattanooga borrowed $500 for that purpose.

Special classes were held for CIO Rubber Workers by William Abbott, URW assistant education director, and Ray Nixon, the union's southern area representative. URW members also attended other classes.

Other teachers at the school, which was conducted by the CIO Education and Research Dept. and the Tennessee CIO, included Ben Segal and Stuart Brock, CIO assistant education directors, who were in charge; Paul Christopher, CIO regional director; Matthew Lynch, Tennessee CIO secretary-treasurer, and Dan Powell, PAC southern director.

In addition to URW and UFWA, other unions sending students to the school included Steelworkers, Clothing Workers, Electrical Workers, Chemical Workers and Paperworkers.

CIO Calls Special Interest Seaway Foes Shortsighted

RAILROAD, coal and port interests fighting the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project "serve neither themselves nor the nation in their misguided effort," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has told the House Public Committee.

"Less, not more, railroad tonnage will be hauled—less, not more coal will be burned—less, not more, ocean shipping will move in and out of Atlantic ports if Congress is persuaded by the shortsighted counsel of these special interests to hold back the economic development and productive power of the entire nation by failing to develop the natural resources available to us in the St. Lawrence," he said in a statement.

Reuther pointed out that CIO's endorsement of the project is grounded in the firm conviction that what helps one part of our nation helps all.

"We totally reject," he added, "the false philosophy that the economic advancement of one part of the country or one industry is achieved only to the detriment of other areas or industries. Increased employment and larger payrolls among any part of our people create better customers for the products of the entire country."

UPWA Wins Firing Case

FIVE YEARS' back pay, less any earnings on other jobs during the period, is in store for 30 CIO Packinghouse Workers refused reinstatement after strikes in 1948 at three plants of the big Wilson & Co. meat packing firm.

The back-pay order is part of a National Labor Relations Board decision which refused to accept Wilson's flimsy excuses for not permitting the 30 to return to their jobs at the close of strikes at Cedar Rapids, Ia., and Albert Lea and Faribault, Minn.

Wilson also was ordered to offer immediate job reinstatement to 26 of the workers. Four previously were offered their jobs back at the NLRB hearings in 1952 and a fifth died while the case was being processed. His estate will receive the back pay due him. (LPA)

A Fall In Time Saves Nine

THIS, SO HELP US, is a true story. It took place in one of Ohio's smaller towns, where a CIO union complained to management that some factory stairways were dangerous—a number of workers had tripped on them.

The safety-conscious union people pointed out that the tread on the steps was too narrow and did not meet legal requirements of Ohio's Safety Code.

Management did nothing.

The union called in a woman inspector from the State Div. of Females and Minors. She was not impressed and reported the steps were not dangerous.

Still convinced they were right, the union asked the State Div. of Factory and Building Inspection to check the dangerous stairways. The inspector took one look, reported the steps were dangerous and in violation of the law and that other stairways were in bad condition.

He ordered the hazard corrected within 30 days.

Then fate stepped in. Immediately after the inspector made his finding, these two events took place:

- The woman inspector, who said the steps were not dangerous, fell down these same steps and had to be taken to first-aid.
- The plant's general supervisor, who had been unimpressed by the union's arguments, fell down the same steps and broke his thumb.

According to last reports, repair work on the stairway was being rushed.

HERE'S WHAT HELPS—This stock of food contributions is part of gifts which helped CIO Electrical Workers win eight-week strike at Western Electric works in St. Paul, Minn. IUE stopped management effort to wreck plant-wide seniority, also gained 6c to 14c hourly increase. Checking canned goods are Catherine Claugherty, welfare chairman, and Financial Sec. John Bryant.

Raise Pensions With Wages Lehman Says On Old Age Pay

SOCIAL SECURITY benefit payments must be increased to a level that keeps them in line with rising wages, Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) told the Senate in support of his bill for a thoroughgoing revision of social security laws.

"The long-term trend of wages in this country has been consistently upward," he said.

"It is of the utmost importance that benefit levels be kept current with rising wage levels, so that benefits will represent a meaningful replacement of the money income lost by the worker upon his retirement or by his family in the event of his death."

TO THIS end, Lehman's bill would lift maximum monthly payments from the present $167.50 to $200 per family, and provide similar increases right down the line. It would also, however, provide new insurance for long-term and permanent disability as well as protection against temporary sickness or accident causing loss of income.

Calling the present lack of disability insurance "the most serious gap in the social insurance system today," Lehman said that disability in reality is more of a social burden than old age because it often comes at a time when responsibility for the support of a family is the greatest.

"To a family," he added, "disablement of its breadwinner is financially more ruinous than death itself, for it adds a dependent to be taken care of—a dependent who may need extra care and incur extra expenses."

BESIDES providing for disability benefits, Lehman's measure would greatly encourage rehabilitation of the disabled by providing rehabilitation benefits to totally disabled insured workers and to their dependent children and wives.

In urging new cash sickness and accident insurance benefits, Lehman pointed out that under the present law an insured person out of work can count on a modest substitute income through unemployment insurance if he is able bodied, but is left without protection if his unemployment is due to sickness. Only four states now compensate for short-term illnesses.

HIS BILL would provide cash benefits up to 26 weeks in a year to temporarily disabled persons insured on the basis of employment before their disability. Such benefits, he said, "would cushion the economic loss to a worker and his family when the worker is ill, even though the illness may not be of a permanently disabling nature."

The measure also would extend coverage to farm operators, several professions, farm and domestic workers, certain groups of public employes and others now denied social security protection. About 8.5 million additional workers would be included in social security under the bill.

Lehman said that his measure is the result of several years of study and review of the subject. He said it would "bring the social security system now in effect in line with current realities."

"IT WOULD make our social security system not a perfect system, but a better system; a sounder, more just, and more comprehensive system," he said. "We believe that our citizens can best contribute to the national welfare, and can best participate in the epic struggle for freedom which today grips the world if they are secure in their own lives."

One major change proposed would raise the limit on annual earnings that could be used in computing benefits from $3600 to $6000. This would make $500 a month the maximum wage on which benefits could be based in place of the present $300.

"With this change, all the annual earnings of 96% of the contributors to the system would be creditable for benefit purposes," Lehman said. "This change would restore the relationship that existed in 1939 under the old Social Security Act, when wage levels were much lower and the maximum credited was $3000. In that year 97% of all covered workers had covered earnings of less than $3000."

Runaway Plants Cost Thousands Of Jersey Jobs, IUE Aide Warns

RUNAWAY PLANTS are eliminating thousands of jobs in New Jersey and unemployment may rise to new heights there when U. S. defense contracts end.

That's what Pres. Richard A. Lynch of Local 410, CIO Electrical Workers, Bloomfield, N. J., says in an open letter to the newspapers of the State.

"In the past few years 64 textile, woolen and hosiery mills have closed their gates in our state," declares Lynch, who several weeks ago came to Washington with leaders of IUE and other CIO locals to urge that steps be taken to halt "the economic erosion" of New Jersey industry.

LYNCH cites figures showing that several thousand New Jersey workers have lost or will lose their jobs through moving of plants to the South.

Factories that have moved or are planning to move their plants or certain operations to the South and the number of jobs affected include:

General Electric washing machine plant, Trenton, 1000 jobs; American Pencil Co., Hoboken, 400; National Union Radio Tube Co., Newark, 1000; Westinghouse, Trenton, Bloomfield and Belleville, 1500.

"UNDER the accelerated amortization clause of the 1950 Tax Law which permits a corporation to receive tax concessions by depreciating a factory and the equipment in five instead of the usual 20 or 25 years, Westinghouse has secured a certificate of necessity to build a new meter plant at Raleigh, N. C.," Lynch points out.

"At first it was estimated that 800 jobs would be transferred from the Newark plants, but a later report states that 2500 will be the ultimate employment in the new plant at Raleigh.

"Several hundred have been laid off at the Singer (sewing machine) factory at Elizabethport due to the opening of new Singer plants at Pickens, N. C., and Anderson, S. C.

"OTHER corporations, too, have joined the movement South. Among these Sylvania, Magnavox, American Bosch, Sperry Gyroscope and others.

"With many plants going full blast on defense orders the loss of the above jobs has not been too apparent. The severe impact will be felt when government defense contracts are terminated."

Lynch called on New Jersey Senators and Representatives to "seriously consider" taking four steps "to arrest the economic erosion." They are: Close screening of requests of corporations for certificates of necessity for new plants, raising the minimum wage from 75c an hour to $1.25, repealing the Fulbright Amendment to the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Law, and repealing or amending the Taft-Hartley Act to remove obstacles to organizing workers in the South.

"The laws governing management-labor activities must remain the responsibility of our federal government and must not be transferred to the individual states," Lynch says.

"Unfortunately, Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), who is chairman of the Committee on Labor, does not perceive the danger to our state of such a transfer."

CCL Urges Labor Voters To Back CCF Candidates

TOP OFFICERS of the Canadian Congress of Labor last week recommended that the 370,000 members support Canadian Commonwealth Federation candidates in the national election next month.

Canada will elect a new Parliament on Aug. 10.

Pres. A. R. Mosher and Sec.-Treas. Donald J. MacDonald, in a joint statement, told CCL members that the CCF "is the only party whose position fully justifies" the votes of organized labor.

"The support which the Canadian Congress of Labor seeks for the CCF," they said, "is based on that party's realistic approach to issues which are vital to every citizen.

"It is significant that, despite a steady deterioration in our critical housing need, and despite repeated warnings from its own experts, there has been no effective approach by the government to this problem. Nor has there been any indication from the other parties, apart from the CCF, that such an operation could be expected."

Mosher and MacDonald also accused the Liberal Party government of stalling on "a long overdue" national health insurance plan, and of failure to increase old age and other benefits to keep pace with inflation.

Bowler Named To Labor Group

James B. Bowler, 77-year-old Chicago alderman, was elected overwhelmingly last week to fill the unexpired term of the late Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.). He represents the 7th Illinois congressional district, which includes Chicago's stockyards.

Final returns gave Bowler more than 31,000 votes to his opponent's 6000. He is a Democrat.

Appearing to take his seat in Congress on the day following election, Bowler was assigned to the House Labor Committee.

Wood Union Decries Raid On Forests

A SCATHING attack on big West Coast lumber operators for their "game of distortion" and "spouting vicious half-truths" about public forest lands was delivered last week by Pres. A. F. Hartung of the CIO Woodworkers.

Hartung called a statement attributed to Wildred Laird, president of the Willamette Valley Logging Congress, blaming the U. S. Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management for waste of over-ripe timber on publicly-owned lands, "a complete misrepresentation of the truth."

THE TIMBER is wasted because it is inaccessible, the IWA-CIO president said, and because Laird's associates have fought every effort of the agencies he criticizes to get appropriations for access roads from Congress.

Laurence F. Lee, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, has said the country loses millions of dollars in taxes because federal land is not privately owned, Hartung said, whereas "the truth is that . . . it pays millions of dollars into state and federal treasuries annually in lieu of taxes."

"WE IN THE CIO Woodworkers have a 'vested interest' in the wise and complete use of the nation's private and public timber lands," Hartung explained.

"We have learned from the terrible examples of forest destruction in the Midwest and farther east that the big timber exploiters can't be trusted to have a monopoly over the timber without government protection of the public interest.

"We know from observation that the federal bureaus have been much more zealous in requiring proper cutting methods than state or private interests."

Senator Tries To Pry Consumer Interests Bill Out For Vote

A NEW MOVE to pry the resolution setting up a new Special Committee on Consumer Interests out of the Senate Banking Committee pigeonhole will be made by its 17 sponsors, Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) said last week.

The legislation, introduced by Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) last January, has since been held up in committee. Meanwhile, Congress has followed the wishes of the Republican Administration in voting to end all price and rent protections, even on a stand-by basis.

"Those of us from farm states are deeply concerned by the prevailing situation in which consumer prices continue at an extremely high level at the same time that farm prices are falling to the lowest point they have reached in many years," Sparkman said.

The farmer, he added, is being unjustly blamed for causing the highest consumer prices in history when "in truth the farmer is receiving less for his products than he has in years." Sparkman said that, actually, farmers are suffering from a shrinkage of their proper share of the national income.

"Not only is the farmer receiving less for his produce, but he is receiving a smaller share of the consumer dollar, and furthermore is obliged to pay high prices for all the things he needs to live and to operate his farm," he pointed out.

Sparkman cited figures showing that last year the average American paid $5 less for meat than he paid the year before, but at the same time, the farmer got $15 less for his cattle than a year earlier. He said the farmer lost three times what the rest of us gained, and the real question is "what happened to the other $10?"

The Gillette resolution would set up a committee of the Senate authorized to study and report on all problems affecting consumer interests. Sparkman said the committee, if set up, "would give particular attention to prices charged the ultimate consumer for food, fuel and clothing, and the costs and methods of producing, processing and distributing such goods."

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

SOME YEARS AGO this department published a list of discount houses and promised to bring it up to date as we learned of more such low-cost sellers.

Our new list is bigger, but we still don't have names for all sections. We can only suggest ways you might find a discount house locally yourself, or suggest you write for prices to those in other cities on our list.

No Soap

A Federal Trade Commission hearing examiner has moved to dismiss long-pending charges against the "big three" soap manufacturers.

Discriminatory price practices and advertising allowances were charged in 1948 against Lever Bros., Proctor & Gamble and Colgate-Palmolive-Peet. Examiner E. J. Kolb said the evidence didn't uphold the charges, recommended the dismissal.

In this time of abundant supplies, many "street stores" in effect are discount houses. It's not unsual to walk into some local stores and be offered 20% off on standard-brand goods. You can even get discounts at some of the largest appliance and television chains, and even in some department stores in cities where discount houses are active. But you may have to ask for it. Regular discount houses give reductions to all customers.

In some of the larger cities where there are many discount houses (especially New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles), competition has gotten so keen that the discount sellers give as much as 25-30% off on many standard items. The more expensive the item, generally the higher the discount. Discounts on watches and jewelry are especially big because the manufacturers put extra-high list prices on these items to permit the credit jewelers to charge more.

AN EXAMPLE is the discount house currently offering a famous-brand automatic toaster which lists at $24, for only $12; one of the most popular lawn mowers, which lists at $32, for only $19. Another offers a well-known steam iron which lists at $19.95, for $12.50; a famous-make 17-inch table-model television set, which has a regular retail price of $199.95, for $145.

Not only do discount houses provide bargains on individual purchases, but they are one of the best sources for group purchasing. These merchants are more flexible in their operations and thinking than some of the larger retailers. They frequently make arrangements with labor organizations and community groups for special prices.

More and more independent merchants and jobbers these days are willing to sell at very close to wholesale prices on large orders. They are eager for volume as a means of reducing their currently inflated costs of doing business, and they themselves can get lower prices on larger orders.

HOW TO FIND A DISCOUNT HOUSE: One of the best ways to get the name of a discount seller, if you are an employe of a large firm, is to ask either the purchasing agent or the personnel director of your company if he can introduce you to one. (If you do not work for such a firm, you may know someone who does, and make your connection that way.)

Another way to get in touch with discount sellers is through your union local. Many unions have arrangements for their members to buy at discounts.

A third way is to shop independent and neighborhood stores until you find one that will sell to you at a discount.

N. Y. Hillman Health Center Expansion Set

FACILITIES of the Sidney Hillman Health Center in New York will be expanded this summer with the equipping of two additional floors, Louis Hollander, president of the center and manager of the New York Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers, announced last week.

The center is named for the first president of the ACWA-CIO. It is supported by contributions of one-quarter of 1% of weekly payrolls by employers under contract with the union, and gives 40,000 union members and their wives full medical service for a flat fee of $10 a year.

BY CONTRAST, over in Brooklyn the Kings County Medical Society was voting overwhelmingly for a revision in the profession's "code of ethics" which would wreck such programs as that of the clothing industry and the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York.

The society wants to prevent prepayment medical care plans from advertising for members; ban treatment of patients by hospitals and other clinics except for "public charges"; disapprove hospitals and clinics offering physicians' services to patients, and approve fee splitting.

"Of course I could care for you, Roger, and if you'd join the Union, they'd care for the both of us!"

'We're Feeling Pretty Good,' Oil Price Boosters Allow

THE OIL industry, with an air of bewildered innocence, last week voiced its denials to charges that recent price increases involved collusion among big producers.

The denials had little apparent effect on the House Commerce Committee, before which the original charges were made. The committee has been holding hearings in an effort to find out why gasoline, fuel oil and other petroleum items have risen in price while the industry wants to curb imports by applying quotas and domestic production is being cut back because of surpluses.

Vice Pres. W. W. Keeler of the Phillips Petroleum Co., which touched off the series of price rises, declared the boosts were "well-warranted and long overdue." The industry, he declared, hasn't had a general price raise since December 1947, while costs of discovering, developing and producing oil have jumped 50%.

"The price of crude must be maintained at a level sufficient to provide the necessary incentive for providing additional reserves," he said.

Chairman Wolverton (R. N.J.) was unconvinced. He couldn't follow Keeler's argument that a 25c a barrel crude oil increase was much of an incentive to promote exploration and development of new wells.

He was unkind enough to remind Keeler that the oil industry has a proprietary interest in the biggest loop-hole in the income tax laws, under which it gets a 27.5% "depletion allowance" on income taxes, and in addition can deduct drilling and exploration costs from taxable income.

Rep. Derounian (D. N.Y.) likewise was unimpressed. He remarked that the company might have done without the price boost " when we are trying to stop inflation."

"Is Phillips in a financial plight?" he asked.

"No," replied Keeler, "we're feeling very good."

REP. HESELTON (R. Mass.), a committee member, has introduced a bill for federal control of the oil and gas industry in all its phases. The measure would create a national petroleum commission to regulate "production, refining, distribution and sale" in the interests of the national economy and security.

Pres. T. S. Peterson of the Standard Oil Co. of California filed a statement with the committee that his firm's price decisions were "independently" made. Vice Pres. Herbert Willetts of the Socony-Vacuum Co., in another statement, declared the "free play" of economic forces will assure ample supplies at "reasonable" prices.

'Hoodwinking' Of Milk Buyers Hit By Jersey CIO

GOV. DRISCOLL was urged by the New Jersey CIO Council last week to veto a bill that would "hoodwink consumers" on the type of milk they buy.

The bill, which was passed on the last day of the legislative session, would reduce from two inches to one-eighth of an inch the size of the words "non-fat" or "skimmed" on milk containers.

"The effect of this bill can only be to hoodwink consumers," said Council Pres. Carl Holderman. He said the reduction in the size of the lettering would serve that purpose and the measure was pushed through the Legislature "by a powerful milk corporation lobby."

Tax Dependent Change Proposed

A bill amending income tax laws to permit dependents to earn up to $1000 without denying their supporter a deduction has been introduced by Rep. Machrowicz (D. Mich.).

At present, anyone earning more than $600 cannot be claimed as a dependent in filing tax returns. Machrowicz pointed out that this amount is obviously insufficient for support under present living costs. He urged that his measure be made applicable to 1953 income.

Vodka Or Milk, N. Y. Worker Earns Them Easier Than Russian

THINGS are so tough in Russia that it takes less effort for a worker in New York to get himself a bottle of Vodka than it does his counterpart in Russia, the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has figured out.

The worker in the Communist homeland has to stay on the job three times as long as the man in New York to earn enough to buy himself a fifth of the Soviet Union's most popular alcoholic beverage, the BLS reports in the Monthly Labor Review.

If the New York worker's wife needs a cotton dress, it costs two hours of his wages, the bureau said. But if Mrs. Moscow Worker needs one, it costs hubby 20 hours works, or 10 times as long. If she needs a wool suit, her breadwinner must labor eight times as long as Mrs. New York's.

The man of the house himself must work 22 times as long in Moscow as in New York to buy a cotton shirt, 16 times as long for a wool suit, 14 times as long for an overcoat and 13 times as long for a pair of shoes.

FOR A pound of bread the Moscow worker must work twice as long as his New York counterpart; for potatoes, three times as long; for beef, five times as long; for milk, six times as long; for butter, nine times as long, and for tea (nearly as popular as vodka) 21 times as long.

And for the tobacco the Moscow worker stuffs into his pipe after a hard day trying to keep up with the Stakhanovites, he works three times as long as the New Yorker.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

CIO REP. LEO LAMOTTE reports an election victory for the CIO Auto Workers at the J. I. Case plant, Bettendorf, Ia., by a vote of 623 for the UAW-CIO to 580 for no union.

Assistant Organization Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the Ace Foundry, Los Angeles, Calif., the workers favored the CIO Steelworkers by a vote of 74 to 48 for no union. Intl. Reps. Dell Coffey, Bob Porch and Pat Nall handled this campaign.

The Auto Workers scored decisive victories in two representation elections at the Chrysler Corp. jet engine plant, Detroit, Mich. The UAW-CIO, appearing alone on the ballot for production and non-production employes, won by a vote of 81 to 6. In an election for maintenance employes, the UAW-CIO received 152 votes to 71 for the AFL, 7 for no union and 6 challenged.

The UAW-CIO also won a representation election at the Federal-Mogul Corp., Greenville, Mich., where the toolroom employes favored the UAW by a vote of 19 to 3.

Empoyes of the Automatic Merchandising Co., Hamtramck, Mich., voted unanimously for the United Bakery and Confectionery Workers, RWDSU-CIO, in a representation election. This same local won another election victory at the Canteen Co., Ferndale, Mich., by a 48 to 5 count.

CIO Rep. Lee Tucker reports that the UAW-CIO won a representation election at the All-States Trailer Co., Jacksonville, Ark., by the following vote: eligible 45, UAW-CIO 26, no union 14, challenged 3, void 1. Intl. Rep. Jack Crump directed this campaign.

CIO Rep. Charles Cowl reports that the CIO won a representation election at the Jefferson Stores, Inc., Miami, Fla., by a vote of 17 to 3. This group will be given a CIO local industrial union charter.

UAW Raps Air Force Chief For Willow Run Shutdown

CIO AUTO Workers last week accused Air Force Sec. Talbott of "disregard" for workers in cancelling a $198 million cargo plane contract at the Kaiser plant at Willow Run, Mich.

That charge was made by UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey who led a delegation of 18 union officials to Washington to protest the cancellation which will cost 10,000 workers their jobs.

Members of the delegation included Pres. Harley Neideffer of the UAW Kaiser-Frazer local, James McGahey of the Plant Guard Workers and Carl Brown of the Foremen's Association.

DURING the heated exchange with Talbott, Mazey criticized the secretary because the workers at Willow Run had no advance knowledge and were not consulted about the cancellation.

He cited a report prepared by two representatives of the Air Materiel Command at the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Dayton, O., which showed work at the Willow Run plant was progressing "beyond normal expectations" and the prospects for cargo planes were favorable.

Earlier Mazey denounced as slanderous statements attributed to Air Force officials that Detroit area industrial workers are lazy and indifferent.

"Air Force officials who made such statements are either deliberately misrepresenting the truth or else they are speaking out of gross stupidity," he said.

"THIS IS particularly true when they speak of auto workers with high seniority 'bumping' aircraft workers off jobs. It is a known and obvious fact that practically all aircraft workers in the Detroit area either are or have been auto workers. The exceptions are the new and inexperienced workers recruited from outside the automobile industry."

As another result of the curtailment of U. S. military orders, the Chrysler Corp. last week announced that around Jan. 1 it will begin closing down the Michoud tank engine plant near New Orleans, where 2000 UAW members work.

"To refute these charges," Mazey said, "one has only to look at the astronomical profit figures of the automobile industry. It has the reputation throughout the world as being a model of efficiency and productivity. An industry doesn't achieve that reputation or those profits through the employment of 'lazy, inefficient and indifferent' workers.

"THE AIRCRAFT industry, on the other hand, makes profits only when it is being subsidized by the taxpayers. Its managements are the gold-plated panhandlers of our era. They have always paid lower wages than the automobile industry . . .

"It has been our experience that such delays and difficulties as have been experienced in aircraft production have been due more to Pentagon bungling, red tape and inefficiency than anything else.

"I believe the present charges against the automobile workers are also an effort to raise a smokescreen to conceal these inefficiencies and to head off a complete investigation of Air Force procurement policies. The nation would be better served by such an investigation than by anonymous slanders against the workers in the automobile industry in Detroit."

TWU Wins IIc At Pan Am

WAGE GAINS of from 11c to 31c an hour have been won by the CIO Transport Workers for 7000 employes of Pan American and three other airlines.

The other firms are Allied Aviation Service, KLM Airlines and American Airmotive. The Pan American contract brought a new high scale for flight personnel other than pilots, with stewards and stewardesses receiving $342 a month and pursers $417 a month.

American Airmotive workers won a top rate of $2.40 an hour in their first contract under TWU, which last March won a representation election covering 600 workers.

Rulings Curb Housing Bias

"THE RIGHT to lease property is a civil right protected by the 14th Amendment."

That's what Federal Judge Williams E. Steckler said as he ordered the Evansville, Ind., Housing Authority to accept bids from four Negro women who want to live in a project now occupied by white families.

This was the second such ruling in recent weeks. Earlier Federal Judge Frank E. Kloeb ordered the Toledo, O., Housing Authority to end segregation in its low-rent housing facilities after four families claimed they were barred solely because they were Negroes.

Beattie New Head Of UGCCW District

Andrew Beattie has assumed his post as new director of Michigan District 4 of the CIO Chemical Workers following his victory in a membership election.

CIO Protests 10% Slash In Shipping Fund

CONGRESS and Pres. Eisenhower were urged last week by the CIO Maritime Committee to reconsider crippling cuts in appropriations for the Maritime Administration and the Federal Maritime Board.

Hoyt Haddock, executive secretary of the committee, said the 10% slash in the $8 million administrative appropriation would "greatly retard" the Maritime Administration's work and would cause inefficiency and confusion.

He said the cut would remove 180 jobs from the agencies' work force of 1350 persons. Such a reduction, he forecast, would be most noticeable in federal offices in direct contact with ship operators, ship builders and suppliers —all offices safeguarding U. S. interests in the administration of shipping laws.

Haddock explained curtailed activities would include computation of construction and operating subsidies, and determination of the amount of operating subsidies returnable to the government where shipping profits exceed 10% of the capital investment.

John O'Connell Of UAW Dies

John J. O'Connell, 55, a veteran representative of the CIO Auto Workers, died recently in Boston after a heart attack.

O'Connell, who had been first president of UAW Local 901 at the Greater Boston Ford plant, suffered the attack shortly after leaving his office for the Fourth of July weekend. He became a UAW representative in 1942 and was prominent in CIO activities in the Boston area for many years.

UPWA Aids Cuban Union

MEMBERS of the Sugar Workers Div. of the CIO Packinghouse Workers have reciprocated for aid the Cuban Sugar Workers Federation gave Local 1101 when it was on strike against the American Sugar Refining Co. at Chalmette, La.

When the Cuban union got into a dispute with the Cuban-Atlantic Sugar Co. over nonpayment of a bonus under its contract, UPWA-CIO sugar locals on the East and Gulf coasts advised employers of their reluctance to handle the firm's products. The Cubans had refused to ship raw sugar to the Chalmette plant during the walkout there.

Bargaining—

Steel Union Wins 8.5c For 13,000 At Timken

AFTER negotiations under a reopening of the contract proposed by management, the CIO Steelworkers and the Timken Roller Bearing Co. agreed on wage increases for 13,000 employes of five plants in Ohio.

The pay boost yields 8.5c an hour for hourly-paid employes earning $1.755 or less, and 5% for those earning more. The negotiators said it equals increases granted recently by other steel companies.

The company suggested opening the contract, which expires Aug. 21, 1954, after it had given a 5% pay raise to salaried workers and other employes not represented by the USA-CIO. The largest plant is at Canton, where 8650 are employed. Other plants are in Columbus, Zanesville, Mt. Vernon and Wooster.

Oil

A 4% wage increase averaging 9c to 9.5c an hour was accepted by CIO Oil Workers Local 210, representing about 600 employes of the Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Service Pipe Line Co. and the Texas Co. in the Chicago-Calumet area.

Rubber

Members of CIO Rubber Workers Local 102 ended a three-week strike at the Republic Rubber Div. of the Lee Rubber & Tire Corp., Youngstown, O., by voting approval of a settlement under which the company agreed to grant the same wage and collateral benefits that the major producers may yield in current negotiations.

The settlement also included pay for the July 4 holiday, which came during the walkout; equal pay for equal work by women, and adjustment of some piece rates.

Shipbuilding

The CIO Shipbuilders completed negotiations with major employers between Maine and Baltimore, Md., last week when they reached agreement on a 7c hourly pay increase for about 7000 employes of the Maryland Dry Dock Co., Baltimore. The settlement followed seven weeks of negotiations during which the union voted to strike if management did not offer satisfactory proposals.

Shipping

The first break in the strike of CIO Maritime Union members on Great Lakes tankers occurred last week when NMU-CIO and the Sinclair Oil Co. reached an agreement, which may prove a settlement pattern. Some 600 NMU members are involved in the strike which has idled 30 ships since June 15, when the old pact expired.

NMU won a general wage increase ranging from 2% to 6% depending on job classifications, incorporation into the basic wage structure of a 10% seasonal bonus for sailors staying on a ship the entire shipping season, and a 10% boost in overtime rates.

Utility

Increases of 11c to 17c hourly were won by CIO Utility Workers Local 197 in a new contract with the Mountain States Power Co. at Coos Bay, Ore., along with overtime and sick leave gains.

At Tillamook, Ore., CIO Local Industrial Union 1361 gained 12c to 17c hourly and seven paid holidays in a new contract with the same utility firm.

Certification Asked By N. Y. News Guild

The CIO Newspaper Guild of New York has asked the National Labor Relations Board for certification as collective bargaining agent for four departments of the Yonkers Herald-Statesman. A majority of the employes have signed membership application cards.

'Weakened By Witch-hunts'—

Guild Convention Defends Freedom To Read

By FRED ROSS

A BLOW for freedom was struck by the CIO Newspaper Guild in its 20th annual convention at Boston, home of Faneuil Hall—"the cradle of American liberty."

Almost 250 delegates representing 70 locals heard speakers denounce most newspaper publishers for their failure to take a strong stand against efforts of some congressmen to curb freedom of the press.

They heard ANG Pres. Harry Martin declare that when the world is looking to the U. S. for leadership, "we stand before it weakened by witch-hunts, frightened by the professional fomenters of phobias that are foul and obscene in the extreme, blinded by smoke from the burning of books, deafened by the bray of bigotry and divided by the maneuvers of a callous corps of name-calling nitwits who would rather smear labor and liberals at home than smash communism and fascism abroad."

Martin, who is labor information director for the Mutual Security Agency, said "there are signs that America is awakening to this menace."

He reported that "never before, in its 20 years, has the ANG been in as good condition as it is today. The Guild, he said, "has a total of 26,348 members, 1474 members more than the last time we met together at Portland, Ore."

The delegates also heard Louis M. Lyons, curator of the Nieman Foundation, which grants Harvard Univ. scholarships to outstanding newspapermen, express his anxiety that "so few editors are deeply concerned over the efforts of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) to use the power of government to infringe the freedom of criticism of the New York Post."

"It is disturbing," Lyons said, "to find so few deeply concerned over the State Dept.'s directives to purge our overseas libraries of books that somebody says are less American than some other books. Who says so? Who is he to say so? Not enough editors are asking these American questions."

LOUIS M. LYONS
Nieman Fund curator protested silence of publishers.

One-Party Press

The delegates also received a report from ANG officers on "The One-Party Press." Reference was made to Editor & Publisher poll taken before the 1952 election which reported that 67.34% of the daily newspapers with 80.24% of the total daily circulation were supporting Eisenhower. The report said:

"This almost single-mindedness of publishers in their political views would be serious enough were it confined to the hurly-burly of party politics. It has aided, however, in creating the climate of conformity, the demand for orthodoxy which now pervades every aspect of community life."

And the delegates also heard a message from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who was on his way to Stockholm to attend the convention of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Reuther said our contest with the Communists were hindered by "McCarthy's political side show," and our world leadership was hampered by attacks on "creeping socialism" and the Tennessee Valley Authority, and by turning "the national resources over to private interests."

"We can't keep our democracy strong, we can't keep our democratic wits about us, by intimidating college teachers and clergymen and editors, by attempting to throttle free expression of ideas, by hampering men with unpopular views," Reuther said. "We can't fight communism by becoming commissars ourselves."

Membership referendums will decide the election of some of the ANG officers, including the president, and whether the mandatory dues schedule should apply to 32 locals not now covered by it.

Officer Contest

Martin, and Joseph F. Collis, Wilkes-Barre, vice president at large, were nominated for the presidency. There are also 10 contestants for six vice presidents at large. And there are two-way contests for vice presidencies in the Midwest and Far West regions.

Unopposed for the posts they now hold, Executive Vice Pres. Ralph B. Novak and Sec.-Treas. William J. Farson were re-elected by acclamation.

The convention also labored on "bread and butter" issues. It set a new minimum wage goals of $150 a week for experienced employes in the key editorial, advertising, circulation and business office classifications, and $75 a week for all adult classifications.

Parley Pleaders Were Terrific

"Come to Heaven in '57" proclaimed a big placard in the Boston convention hall of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

It was posted by the Seattle-Tacoma, Wash., Guild, getting in a few early licks for a future ANG parley.

Not to be outdone, the San Jose, Calif., local added a placard postscript to the Pacific Northwest banner. It read: "Go to Hell in San Jose."

PRINCIPAL SPEAKER at Broun memorial dinner was W. Averell Harriman, former Mutual Security director, at whose home the ANG founder spent Thanksgiving Days. Mrs. Harriman joins in applauding her husband's speech. ANG Pres. Harry Martin peers over Harriman's shoulder.

'Democracy Is Not For The Frightened,' Says Harriman

HEYWOOD BROUN, who died 13 years ago, had a word to say to the CIO Newspaper Guild he founded.

The occasion was the Broun memorial dinner held during the Guild's 20th convention. Broun's advice was brought to some 350 delegates and their guests by W. Averell Harriman, former Mutual Security director, who was introduced by ANG Pres. Harry Martin as an intimate friend of Broun.

"THANK GOD we have corrected the appalling social conditions that existed 20 years ago which, if continued, would have been a fertile soil, as it is in other countries, for the breeding of the Communist disease," Harriman said.

"It is significant that the kinds of men that opposed these social advances are now, in the name of anti-communism, weakening the real fight for freedom and aganist communism.

In the attempts to intimidate freedom of thought and expression and of reading, it is not difficult to know where Heywood Broun would have stood.

"He would have fought those who are attempting to enforce conformity, and through intimidation, to impose restrictions on what we are permitted to say and to read. His voice would have been loud in the defense of those whose careers are being destroyed without a full and fair hearing.

"Heywood understood that democracy is not for the frightened. It is for the confident. He understood that our democracy has expanded and developed through free expression of ideas."

He also paid tribute to the contribution made by the ANG to the Mutual Security program through the work of Martin and a number of other Guildsmen.

What Lawmakers Can Do To Weaken Union Contracts

POLITICAL ACTION is a bread-and-butter issue. That was learned by delegates to the CIO Newspaper Guild convention when the research and information committee reported.

The committee said the California Legislature, acting on the advice of a Hearst newspaper lobbyist, passed a bill which would deprive Guildsmen of unemployment compensation for the number of weeks they receive severance pay.

"Thus, with alarming ease one Hearst lobbyist destroyed gains which it took the Guild years to achieve through collective bargaining," said the resolution which was reported by a subcommittee headed by Henry Santiestevan of Los Angeles.

"We feel this is only the beginning of direct attacks on the Guild's program," the resolution continued. "Increasingly stringent anti-labor laws outdoing even the infamous Taft-Hartley Act are adopted in state after state. Many states already prohibit any type of union security such as the Guild (union) shop."

The resolution "especially" recommended that Guildsmen offer their services to assist PAC groups in public relations.

LOCALS were urged to conduct PAC voluntary dollar drives "within the period from June 1 to Oct. 1."

Delegates decided not to wait until they returned home to begin the dollar collections. They started then and there with ANG Pres. Harry Martin starting the bucks rolling into the hand of the collectors by giving $10. Within minutes more than $170 was collected.

Wire Service Division Plan Is Rejected

WHAT THREATENED to be a thorny issue for the CIO Newspaper Guild was settled by the ANG convention meeting as a committee of the whole.

The issue was the demand of wire service members for a separate division within the Guild. The wire service members now belong to the Guild locals in the cities in which they work, but their contracts are negotiated nationally and policed by the ANG.

It was decided that the present set-up, which provides for a wire service council and national committees for the Associated Press, United Press-Newspaper Editorial Association, and the Intl. News Service-Intl. News Photos-Central Press should be continued with administrative improvements.

However, the convention decided that the eight members of the wire service council should be seated as delegates with one vote each but not as representatives of their locals at the 1954 convention, as they were at the Boston convention.

Reuther Warns AFL On Raids

The Edelman Case—

CIO Protests White House 'Appeasement'

THE CIO charged last week that the Eisenhower Administration's appointment of John W. Edelman as an assistant secretary of labor was blocked by appeasement of "immoral forces that are threatening the very freedom which has made our country great."

The charge was contained in letters by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to Sherman Adams, Pres. Eisenhower's executive assistant. The letters were made public last week by the CIO after other appointments as assistant secretary of labor. The letters were dated May 5 and June 9.

A Labor Veteran

In the first Reuther reaffirmed his original position, made clear in conversations with Adams, that he could not "in good conscience" withdraw Edelman's nomination. In the second, he advised Adams that the CIO Executive Committee backed his stand.

Edelman, a "young" veteran of more than 40 years in the labor and liberal movements, has been Washington legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers since 1943. He was picked as the CIO's nominee when the Eisenhower Administration asked the CIO to submit a name for assistant secretary of labor. The White House was advised of the selection on Feb. 5.

The correspondence shows that Reuther said the CIO could not "acquiesce in the immoral and un-American principle that an unjustified accusation which cannot stand up on the basis of real evidence" should bar a loyal and capable American from serving his country.

It could not, "in good conscience," withdraw its nomination of Edelman, he continued, "since the forces of bigotry and intolerance cannot be stopped by appeasement." These forces, he contended, "can be stopped only when the people who believe in the worth and diginty of the free human spirit will take their stand together."

Reuther told Adams that the CIO recommended Edelman "not only because we knew of his unquestioned loyalty and integrity, but also because he is eminently qualified by experience and training."

If valid objections had been raised, he added, the CIO would have quickly offered another name.

A Clear Record

Reuther made these points in the letters:

1 Government investigation, Adams told Reuther last spring, gave Edelman a clean bill of health on loyalty and security matters, and indicated acknowledgement of his integrity and capability.

2 The nomination of a CIO representative to the Labor Dept. post had been sought by the Administration, not proposed by the CIO.

3 The Administration's unwillingness to send Edelman's name to the Senate was based on alleged fear that "certain people in Congress might attempt to exploit unsubstantiated gossip and hearsay to the embarrassment of the CIO," a reason which the CIO "could not accept as valid."

4 A check by the CIO among Republican senators last April indicated that Edelman would have been confirmed had the White House submitted his name for confirmation.

5 The CIO was advised by Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin that "Mr. Edelman is completely satisfactory and acceptable" to him.

6 The CIO, after re-studying the entire case, decided it could not withdraw its nomination of Edelman in favor of another CIO official because of the appeasement factor in the Administration's declination to submit his name to the Senate.

7 The CIO's position is that "we are not . . . willing to be a party to any action which would tend directly or indirectly to strengthen those immoral and unprincipled forces of hatred and hysteria which use slander and character assassination for achieving greater political power."

Steel Union Gains 8.5c In Alcoa Pact

AN INCREASE of 8.5c an hour has been won for 17,000 employes in a new agreement signed by the CIO Steelworkers with the Aluminum Co. of America.

This was the same increase obtained by USA-CIO in recent wage negotiations with the basic steel industry.

A feature of the new Alcoa pact—covering 10 plants—is the payment of additional 2c an hour to workers in the South and the Southwest to eliminate wage differentials.

Unlike the steel industry, there is no standard base rate in the aluminum industry, which makes the elimination of differentials difficult.

AS RESULT, the contract provides for raising the base rate in southern plants to that of the Kensington, Pa., establishment. The matter will be determined by a survey to be completed within a year.

If a worker's holiday falls on his day-off he gets paid for the holiday under the new contract.

The contract went into effect July 13, 18 days before the expiration date on the old pact, and will continue until July 31, 1954.

USA NEGOTIATORS were headed by Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, until he went to Stockholm for the congress of the Intl. Confederation of Labor, when he was succeeded by Nick A. Zonarich, international representative.

Following the signing of the agreement, Alcoa raised the price of aluminum pig .5c to 20c a pound, and aluminum ingots 1c to 21.5c a pound.

Free People Must Stand Up To Bigots, Reuther Letter Says

Excerpts from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther's letter of May 9 to Sherman Adams, executive assistant to Pres. Eisenhower, on the withdrawn nomination of John W. Edelman for assistant secretary of labor.

WE IN THE CIO who have worked with Mr. Edelman for many years are conversant with his beliefs and activities and have complete confidence in his loyalty to our government and to the democratic ideals for which it stands.

Mr. Edelman shares our abhorrence of communism and all other forms of totalitarianism. He has participated with the rest of us in the leadership of CIO in our successful efforts to protect the free American labor movement against Communist infiltration, and our nation against Communist conspiracy.

Not Academic

To the CIO the struggle against communism, is not an academic exercise. We have had to meet the Communist threat in terms of the practical, day-to-day struggle to keep our unions free . . . John Edelman was not only actively associated with . . . (the) effort to expel the Communists from the CIO, but his forthright anti-communism dates back to his early activities in the American labor movement.

During our conversation you repeated several times the fact that in your opinion the security report which you summarized to me contained no information that would disqualify Mr. Edelman from a security point of view.

Nevertheless, you indicated, on behalf of the Administration, your reluctance to submit his nomination for confirmation due to the fact that certain people in Congress might attempt to exploit unsubstantiated gossip and hearsay to the embarrassment of the CIO.

Insofar as the CIO is concerned, we cannot accept that as a valid reason for withdrawing Mr. Edelman's name as a candidate. Moreover, under the circumstances, we would not deem it justifiable or morally right for us to submit another candidate . . . if Mr. Edelman's name were not submitted to the Senate for confirmation.

At a meeting with Pres. Eisenhower and you which David J. McDonald (president of the CIO Steelworkers) and I had shortly after the inaugural ceremonies, we advised that the CIO was not interested in patronage but that we were prepared to cooperate with the Eisenhower Administration in every way possible in order to strengthen America in the face of the worldwide danger and threat of communism.

It was in accordance with the spirit of this pledge that we agreed to recommend John Edelman for the post of assistant secretary of labor after we were asked by the Administration to submit a name.

If, in our judgment, Mr. Edelman's loyalty and integrity to our free institutions were remotely in question, we would not have submitted his name in the first place.

Flood Of Slander

As I stated to you during our conversation, we are greatly disturbed by the growing use of character assassination and the use of unsubstantiated charges as a political technique to destroy one's opposition and to achieve political conformity . . .

During the past several months, certain congressional representatives have not only slandered the good name of innocent people, they have also immeasurable weakened Pres. Eisenhower's efforts to carry on an effective and constructive foreign policy.

America cannot be the moral symbol to which free men look for hope and inspiration if we permit a bigoted and unprincipled minority to stifle the voice of freedom in America under the guise of defending freedom in the world.

The alternative is to become a party to appeasing the immoral political forces that are threatening the very freedom which has made our nation great. The tragic history that led to the last world war is unassailable proof that the forces of bigotry and intolerance cannot be stopped by appeasement.

They can be stopped only when the people who believe in the worth and dignity of the free human spirit will take their stand together.

'Unprincipled Forces Of Hate'

The CIO did not solicit the post of assistant secretary of labor but was willing to make a man available when asked by the Administration, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote Sherman Adams, executive assistant to Pres. Eisenhower, on June 9.

"We are prepared to cooperate in every way possible with the present Administration in strengthening America to meet the threat of Communist tyranny and to do what is possible to advance the welfare and well-being of the American people," he added.

"We are not, however, willing to be a party to any action which would tend directly or indirectly to strengthen those immoral and unprincipled forces of hatred and hysteria which use slander and character assassination for achieving political power."

Real Union Solidarity—

CIO Lends A Big Hand To Brewery Strikers

By ROBERT TREUER
Wisconsin CIO News Editor

THE STRIKING Milwaukee CIO Brewery Workers got a demonstration of real union solidarity.

From every industrial center in Wisconsin, and from Michigan and Illinois—some from as far as 240 miles away—CIO members came to Milwaukee to form a four-and-a-half mile motorcade and take part in the strike support rally.

Motor contingents from CIO auto, steel, rubber, brewery and other international unions in Racine, Kenosha, Beloit, Eau Claire, Madison, Fond du Lac and other centers — 500 cars strong — assembled in the County Stadium.

From far up north in the State, CIO Woodworkers and CIO Lithographers sent delegations. They were joined by additional cars full of CIO members from industrial centers in Michigan and Illinois.

IT WAS A colorful parade, with an old-fashioned Milwaukee brass band and floats, which wound its way along a seven-mile parade route in the downtown district of the city.

To underscore their demand for a 35-hour week with no loss in pay, and a further pay increase so that they would be assured of work every week in the year, the strikers put a gray mare to good use.

Anchored to a trailer, the horse bore the sign: "I eat 52 weeks of the year. That's all the Brewery Workers want!"

Other issues in the strike, which has been going on nine weeks at all of the Milwaukee breweries, are pension and welfare programs. Recently the strikers turned down a $6-a-week pay increase offer because there was no provision for a shorter week.

Negotiations were resumed last week, after being in abeyance several days.

THE ISSUES remained unsettled, but there was no doubt of CIO support. That was demonstrated by the size of the motorcade, and by speakers at the rally in the Auditorium.

Every director of a CIO international union in the State pledged moral, financial and any other type of support needed by the strikers.

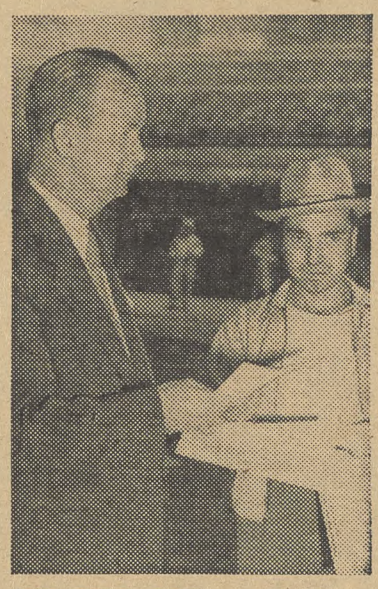
Harvey Kitzman, Auto Workers Region 10 director, Walter Burke, director of Steelworkers Dist. 32, CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson and many others joined in an impressive statement of solidarity.

The regional directors for the other CIO unions said the dispute was part of a management plan to "lower the boom" on labor, which was appearing in auto, steel and other industries in the State.

CIO representatives from Michigan and Illinois said they were "proud of the staunch and determined fight of Brewery Local 9."

Local union delegates arose on the floor of the Auditorium to pledge money to the strikers, and even while the rally was going on, telegrams arrived pledging donations.

The rally, which was attended by several thousand CIO members, strikers and their wives and the public, was sponsored by the Wisconsin CIO Council.



ON THE JOB — National CIO Rep. Richard T. Leonard (l.) and Brewery Local 9 member passed out strike leaflets along the parade route in Milwaukee.

Council Pres. Charles Schultz received a roaring ovation when he said:

"We felt it necessary to demonstrate to the citizenry of Wisconsin the power, dignity and strength of CIO, in view of the fact that a cold-blooded and vicious war has been declared against the social gains of the last 20 years, starting with social security and ending with basic contract questions which have been in contracts for years.

"THIS IS NOT A question of trying to have a shorter work week—but rather is it a question of providing 52 weeks a year employment for the people in the struck breweries.

"This is a question of pensions for people who have no pensions. This is a question of health insurance for people who have no health insurance as you have in your industry."

BW-CIO Local 9 Pres. Kenneth Mueller told the rally:

"The Milwaukee brewers have a 35-hour and a 37.5-hour week in their out-of-town plants; they have pensions and welfare plans there, but here in Milwaukee, at the parent plants, they want to deny these conditions."

Reuther Challenges AFL To End Teamster Raids

CIO PRES. WALTER P. REUTHER last week accused the AFL Teamsters of raiding the CIO Brewery Workers and charged "these raids violate the spirit of the tentative no-raiding agreements worked out by the responsible leaders of the CIO and AFL."

Reuther's statement (full text in adjoining column) was forwarded to the CIO's Washington headquarters from Stockholm, where he was attending the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions congress. He added:

"I trust that the leaders of the AFL, and all of its affiliates, will give serious consideration to the harm caused by these raids. The CIO, now as in the past, is prepared to protect itself from raids such as those of the teamsters."

Reuther's statement followed orders from Dave Beck, Teamsters president, to raid the CIO Brewery Workers. Reuther called these raids "harmful to the Brewery Workers Union and to the welfare of its membership . . . equally harmful to the genuine, long-range interests of the rank and file teamsters."

ONLY benefit, he said, would come "to employers in the brewing industry, and to enemies of labor who rejoice each time the unity of labor is disputed."

"Responsible leaders of American unions," Reuther said, "have come to learn, through hard experience, that we have nothing to gain and much to lose, from raids, from jurisdictional disputes and from every other form of inter-union warfare."

"Tremendous progress" had been made toward ending "such negative conflict," Reuther said and he added:

"The leaders of the teamsters union have in effect repudiated these efforts."

Burke Interview On NBC July 26

Tom Burke, CIO Legislative Dept. congressional liaison chief, will be interviewed on developments—or lack of them—on a National Broadcasting Co. program next Sunday, July 26.

Burke will be interviewed by Ray Sherer on the NBC Radio program, "Viewpoint U.S.A." The program will be aired at 11:15 a.m. E.S.T. on July 26.

Reuther Statement—

'. . . These Raiding Activities Benefit Only Labor's Foes'

THE BROTHERHOOD of Teamsters, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, has been conducting a series of raiding excursions against the United Brewery Workers, an affiliate of the CIO.

Those raiding activities are harmful to the Brewery Workers Union and to the welfare of its membership. Those raiding activities are equally harmful to the genuine, long-range interests of the rank and file teamster. Those raiding activities bring benefits only to employers in the brewery industry, and to enemies of labor who rejoice each time the unity of labor is disrupted.

Responsible leaders of American unions have come to learn, through hard experience, that we have nothing to gain, and much to lose, from raids, from jurisdictional disputes and from every other form of inter-union warfare.

Within the last few months, tremendous progress has been made toward reaching an agreement that would end such negative conflict between unions of the CIO and the AFL. The leaders of the teamsters union have in effect repudiated these efforts.

It is time that these divide-and-rule policies of the teamsters leadership are brought to a halt. They are doing great harm to labor in America. They are injuring the welfare of the workers in the plants, as well as in the trucks. They are giving comfort to those who lose no opportunity to castigate the unions of America, be they CIO or AFL.

IT IS EQUALLY CLEAR that these raids by the teamsters union leadership violate the spirit of the tentative non-raiding agreements worked out by the responsible leaders of the CIO and AFL. In fact they seriously jeopardize that entire constructive program.

I trust that the leaders of the AFL, and of all of its affiliates, will give serious consideration to the harm caused by these raids. The CIO, now as in the past, is prepared to protect itself from raids such as those of the teamsters.

A better method for labor in America, however, is to banish raiding. The leaders of the American Federation of Labor and all its affiliates must agree with the obvious concept that jurisdictional matters should not be settled by the laws of the jungle.

There is a responsibility here that the AFL leaders and the teamsters leaders cannot ignore.

We must—all of us in the democratic trade union movements of this country—stand together: to organize the unorganized; to improve the economic and social status of workers; to protect labor from its enemies; and to build a stronger, more democratic America for all the people.

That must be our goal; and we must not permit little men, in labor or out of it, to divert our attentions and our energies from the real needs of the millions of good Americans who are American labor.

Appeasement

It was good to see Pres. Eisenhower defend civil liberties and fundamental decencies by striking back against J. B. Matthews' absurd charges that 7000 Protestant clergymen form a hard core of Communist strength in America.

Up until the Matthews incident, the President had shown little enthusiasm for meeting the attack of the McCarthy-Jenner-Velde crowd—an attack against the Administration as well as against traditional American rights.

One case of appeasement involved the CIO's recommendation—upon Administration request—that John Edelman of the Textile Workers be named as assistant secretary of labor. (Details of the case are set forth on Page 2.)

John Edelman is a devoted servant of organized labor in this country. He has the trust and confidence of men in many unions, both CIO and AFL, because of the fine record he has compiled throughout the years.

The Administration asked CIO to recommend a man for a top job in the Labor Dept. Edelman, deservedly, was that man. The White House—looking more like a flock of sacred rabbits than the center of executive power in the United States government—declined to appoint him.

So, the reactionaries were appeased.

Perhaps the Matthews case, coming along a month later, represents a change of heart and attitude—a realization that appeasement doesn't pay. We hope so.

The only decent apology for its handling of John Edelman will be the Administration's acknowledgement that it has learned from that experience something about civil liberties and the common decencies.

Could Happen . . .

The Big Three Foreign Ministers have proposed a meeting with Molotov in the autumn. By that time, in view of 1953's midsummer madness, two things could happen:

(1) Molotov could be in Moscow jail on charges of being an "agent" of Allen Dulles, head of American secret intelligence; and (2) Dulles could be under attack from Sen. McCarthy for being an "agent" of Molotov.

Give-Away, Take-Away

As Congress moves towards adjournment, we keep wondering how the Republican National Committee propaganda boys are going to present the record of the "absurd 83rd" to the American public.

The 83rd Congress hasn't done very much business. One of its few accomplishments was the "give-away" of offshore oil lands. Now the "take-away," is shaping up.

As of July 31, for instance, rent controls are going to be taken away. Millions of tenants will enjoy the high privilege of paying higher rents.

The House has passed the Reed Bill, which would "take away" substantial state unemployment benefits.

GOP members of both Senate and House have been looking with interest at Chamber of Commerce proposals that would "take away" sizeable hunks of social security.

Fund cuts have "taken away" essential services previously made available to the people by their government.

And powerful lobbies are working with special-interest Congressmen to "take away" from the public domain.

Give-away, take-away—whichever, we don't like it.

In Other Words—

Betrayal At Hell's Canyon

Here is background on the significance of the dispute on the Hells Canyon Dam as given by Richard L. Neuberger, a Democratic member of the Oregon Legislature and recognized authority on the Northwest, in "Betrayal at Hells Canyon," digested from the current Progressive Magazine:

By RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

GRAND COULEE DAM stirs the pride of nearly every American. The greatest edifice ever reared by man, it towers athwart the upper Columbia River like a fortress. But it is more than mere masonry.

In its twin powerhouses are generated more than 1,373,000 kilowatts of electricity. Another 651,000 kilowatts are added to the capacity of dams farther downstream, by water impounded back of its lofty parapets.

This vast pool of energy has strengthened private industry in the Northwest by making possible aluminum, plants, shipyards, airplane factories and mechanized farms.

Yet there was a time, a generation ago, that Grand Coulee nearly was blocked forever. A utility company wanted to erect a small dam at Kettle Falls on the Columbia, above the Coulee site. This would have foreclosed construction of the high dam, for it would have flooded the works at Kettle Falls.

Short-Changing The Future

But far-sighted men in the region prevented this short-changing of the Northwest's future. They refused to trade 2,024,000 kilowatts for approximately 500,000 kilowatts. Why leave three-fourths of a fertile field fallow? Who would use only a fraction of a magnificent waterpower site?

A similar dilemma confronts the Northwest today, but this time the region's destiny will be jettisoned. A pigmy view of the next decade has prevailed.

Both the Reclamation Bureau and the Army Engineers have proposed building a huge dam in the mile-deep slot of Hells Canyon on the Snake River, principal tributary of the Columbia. The Idaho Power Co. has suggested, instead, three smaller projects along the same general section of the Snake. When the company filed an application with the Federal Power Commission in 1952, Sec. of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman intervened in opposition. He said granting of the application would block the high dam in Hells Canyon.

But now the Interior Dept. has a new secretary, former Gov. Douglas McKay of Oregon. He has formally withdrawn the objections presented by his predecessor. The way now is clear for approval of the company plan. This plan will be to the big dam in Hells Canyon what acceptance of the Kettle Falls application might have been to Grand Coulee in the 1930's—the ax, the end, fini.

In the Denver Post, Robert W. Lucas has pointed out that Hells Canyon Dam would have an installed capacity of 900,000 kilowatts, while the three Idaho Power dams would have a capacity of 783,000 kilowatts. And Lucas adds:

The Best GOP Lineage

"Nor will the smaller dams be able to contribute more than a fraction of the downstream supplemental water for turning generator wheels that will spin out at least 400,000 more kilowatts with the push from Hells Canyon storage, released when most needed."

One of the arguments against Hells Canyon Dam has been that it would be "socialistic." Herbert Hoover evidently is proud to have his name associated with Hoover Dam on the Colorado. When Douglas McKay ran for reelection in 1950, he boasted that he had helped secure the Lookout Point and Detroit Dams from the federal government for his state.

It has not been made clear why one federal dam should be "socialistic" and another worthy of the best Republican lineage.

In no respect is the issue between "socialism" and free enterprise. Actually, government dams in the Northwest have made possible hundreds of prospering privately-owned manufacturing plants, which pay taxes and support payrolls. The issue is complete utilization of the falling water of a region containing 2% of all the untapped water power in the United States.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. EISENHOWER cancelled a scheduled weekly press conference and unofficially word was leaked to reporters that the President didn't want to talk "off the cuff" during delicate stages of Korean negotiations.

The betting was 100 to 8 that he also didn't want to talk "off the cuff" about delicate affairs involving Sen. McCarthy, whom he finally slapped indirectly a few days earlier by denouncing charges against the Protestant clergy by McCarthy's ex-staff director, J. B. Matthews.

Double Shuffle

Capital wisecrackers say the GOP program can be described in terms of a dance called the Republican Glide: One step forward, two steps back; pause, pause, hesitate; one step sideways, one step back.

In the fullness of time, of course, Ike will have to talk about McCarthy freely and frankly, on and off "the cuff."

The President stood up boldly when he lashed the Matthews charge as "unwarranted and deplorable," betraying "a contempt for the principles of freedom and decency."

The White House released Ike's denunciation despite intervention by that amiable self-appointed liaison man, Vice-Pres. Nixon. Nixon tried to block the assault by sending word an hour earlier that McCarthy was willing to accept Matthews' "resignation."

A slap at McCarthy is not good enough to curb his pernicious influence. If Ike doesn't know by now that this is an anti-Eisenhower influence, he is more naive politically than anyone here even suspects.

The Bitter-End Boys

Asked for comment on Eisenhower's attack on the Matthews charge, McCarthy had the cold gall to adopt Ike's own phraseology in refusing comment on McCarthy's methods: "I never indulge in personalities." That was open mockery of the President.

Sen. Joe is joining anti-Eisenhower bitter-end Republicans in vote after vote on the Senate floor. He is trying, although thus far he has failed, to push around Allen Dulles and the Central Intelligence Agency as earlier he pushed around John Foster Dulles, the Voice of America and the State Dept.

Most significant—and Ike's advisers should not overlook it—is McCarthy's now obvious attempt to destroy his Republican senatorial colleague from Wisconsin, Sen. Wiley, pro-Eisenhower chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Wiley doesn't come up for re-election until 1956, but he was booed and denounced by resolution in a recent Wisconsin Republican State Convention controlled by McCarthy men. Wiley has loyally fought for the President's programs. Is the President going to fight for him, or let his usefulness be destroyed by the steady undermining of support from the GOP leaders in Wiley's own state?

An 'Inaccurate' Report

Touching on another McCarthy item, this observer pointed out two weeks ago the remarkable publicity mileage Sen. Joe had gained from an unsubstantiated "report" that former Pres. Truman in 1945 failed to turn over to the FBI a list of "roughly 150 American citizens" alleged by a Canadian Prime Minister to be Soviet spies.

McCarthy now admits the "report" was inaccurate—as he might well have discovered had he bothered to inquire before he talked.

The Royal Commission investigating Soviet atom espionage did not convene until 1946—not 1945. And the Justice Dept. affirms that in 1946 Mr. Truman suppressed no facts or allegations the FBI should have had.

Any Old Bonds?

If you happen to have any old pre-Hitler German bonds, hang on to them. They're a gold mine, by courtesy of the U. S. Senate.

There is a strong suspicion afloat that most of the bonds are now held by speculators, bought up as defaulted securities for 2c or 3c on the dollar, so that the speculators will get the gravy.

West German spokesmen have promised to pay off in full, with accrued interest at 5.5%, an estimated $546 million in securities held by unknown Americans.

The Senate ratified an agreement to make this possible for the West Germans by writing off $2 billion of the $3.2 billion advanced by our government since the war to put the German economy back on its feet. It was freely admitted in debate that the write-off of money furnished by all taxpayers was designed to make possible complete payment, with accrued interest, to private bondholders.

A few senators protested that the usual "bondholders' protective committees," composed of Wall St. lawyers, financiers and front men, helped work out this scheme. They broadly suggested that speculators would make a killing. Everyone conceded that no one knows who now holds the pre-Hitler bonds.

★ Report from St. Paul says that an International Bank official, after making a technical speech to Minnesota bankers, was asked for the "inside dope" on the "real strong man" in Washington. "Humphrey," said the speaker. The bankers froze—and the official hastily explained he didn't mean Minnesota's Sen. Hubert Humphrey, liberal Democrat, but Ike's Treas. Sec. George Humphrey.

CIO Asks Big Shipbuilding Program To Meet U. S. Needs

A GOOD PART of the U. S. merchant marine is not worth towing to a ship graveyard. That's what Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, told a Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce subcommittee in a plea for an adequate ship construction program.

"A modern peacetime merchant fleet and shipbuilding industry must be maintained," Haddock testified, "to meet the initial needs of war and capable of expanding to meet the full needs of an entire war. Today we are warned, but we are not responding properly."

He said "56% of our merchant ships are classified as poor by the Maritime Commission."

"Out of a total of 3348 active and inactive ships in our merchant marine, 1875 are ready for the scrap pile, "Haddock continued. "This is not surprising when we realize that 1713 ships in our merchant marine are obsolete Liberty-type ships.

"Our nation never had as clear a warning of impending war as the one given us by the Communists. Despite this warning, our policy makers both administrative and legislative believe that we need not start building modern merchant ships to keep the fighting away from our shores."

HE URGED Congress and the Administration to profit by the lessons of two world wars which we entered with a run-down merchant marine which had to be built up at terrific cost in an inflated economy.

"The U. S. built 54,224,100 deadweight tons of merchant type ships during World War II," Haddock said. The cost was about $12.5 billion. The same cargo carrying capacity could have been built into a fleet of 40 million DWT before World War II at a cost of about $4 billion.

"With this saving of $8.5 billion in ship construction we could have operated, and had available an additional 2000 modern ships at the outbreak of the war. In addition we could have saved about $7.3 billion, large amounts of critical materials, time, and countless lives."

He said our commercial fleet should consist of 1995 ships, including 135 passenger and combination ships, 1006 freighters and 854 tankers—sufficient ships to carry at least 50% of our foreign trade in peacetime.

He also told the subcommittee the "Military Sea Transportation Service must be taken out of competition with our privately-owned merchant marine," and "foreign flag ships owned by American companies must be brought under the American flag."

Ike Defied As Foreign Aid Fund Sliced

THE HOUSE Appropriations subcommittee last week slapped Pres. Eisenhower in the face when it lopped off $1.1 billion from the Administration's foreign aid program.

Despite the President's plea at a White House breakfast meeting, the subcommittee swung the economy ax on his program to help anti-Red nations. It was regarded as the most serious rebuff yet handed to the President by the GOP-dominated 83rd Congress.

The foreign aid fund fight is now in the second stage, of actual appropriations. Both the House and Senate have passed through the first stage of voting authorization bills. The President's views were ignored in the authorization bills in these four major respects:

1. The amount authorized was slashed $317 million below Eisenhower's request.

2. Foreign economic aid will end June 30, 1956, and military aid one year later, although the President had asked that they be continued through 1958.

3. Not less than $100 million and not more than $250 million must be used to finance the purchase of U. S. farm surpluses by overseas allies. The Administration had opposed this provision, which in effect cuts the mutual security program by an equivalent amount.

4. "Dollar diplomacy" was written into the act through a compromise which ties up over $1 billion of the funds for European military aid in arms contracts, pending establishment of the proposed six-nation European Defense Army.

As sent to the White House, the authorization was for a total of $5.1 billion during the current fiscal year. For military aid, the bill earmarks $2.1 billion for Europe, $1 billion for Asia and the Pacific, $355 million for the Middle East and Africa and $15 million for South America.

Condon Challenges Ban From Atom-Bomb Test

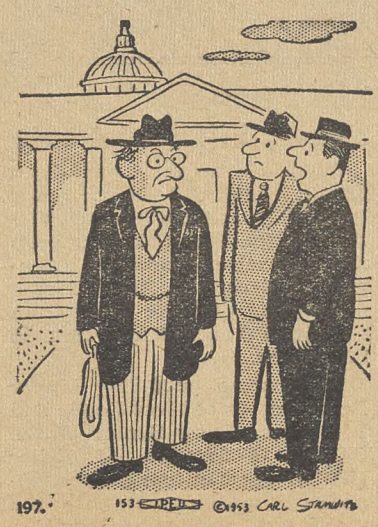
THE ATOMIC Energy Commission "did not fairly evaluate" information in FBI files on which it based its refusal to admit him to an atom bomb test, Rep. Condon (D. Cal.) told the House last week.

The freshman congressman, speaking on a point of personal privilege, staunchly defended "my reputation, my integrity and my character." He won applause from both sides of the House when he flatly declared:

"I have said before, and I say again today, I am not and never have been a Communist or Communist sympathizer."

Two AEC employes, acting on orders, barred Condon from a bomb blast at Yucca Flat, Nev., on May 5 when he arrived at the test area with other members of Congress. The AEC decision was based on anonymous and unproven allegations in the FBI files.

NEWSPAPER stories a few days later also claimed the Navy, acting on the basis of the same FBI files, had considered cancelling a ship launching at which he was due to speak, and had indicated to post commanders that he was persona non grata. Sec. of the Navy Robert B. Anderson, specifically and categorically" denied the latter of these allegations, Condon told the House.



"Is that a promise, Senator; or will you really do something about it?"

"I recognize the existence of a real need for measures to protect our national security," he said. "We face a powerful and determined enemy outside our borders, ready to exploit any weakness.

"We have discovered spies and traitors in our midst. Undoubtedly there are some still among us. The indiscriminate accusation of innocent people, however, makes it only more difficult to discover the guilty.

"There has been developing in America an atmosphere of suspicion and distrust that is alien to our heritage of freedom.

"THE FOG of distrust and suspicion can choke the freedom of thought and expression on which this nation was founded. In order to protect ourselves from a totalitarian threat, we cannot afford to adopt the tactics of the very dictators we are fighting.

"We must guard against the Communist menace, but we cannot allow our understandable fear of aggression to blind us to the ever-present necessity of protecting the freedom of speech and thought that is the heart of our democratic way of life.

"I feel that the AEC did not fairly evaluate the information concerning me. Furthermore, I deeply resent the way in which the AEC handled this whole affair.

"I wish to make it clear that I do not contend that a member of Congress should necessarily be immune from security requirements applicable to other individuals.

"I DO BELIEVE, however, that there is a real question involving the relationship between the executive and the legislative branches of our government. Obviously, the Congress cannot allow the executive branch to foreclose it from performing its constitutional functions.

"A wholesale bar of members of Congress could easily lead to absolute power by the executive over the Congress."

Bread, Peace, Freedom—

ICFTU Congress Urges Aid For West Berlin

By GERVASE N. LOVE

INTERNATIONAL worker solidarity had new strength and meaning last week as delegates to the world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, their sessions behind them, left Stockholm for homes in all parts of the globe.

They carried back to the 54 million free workers who sent them word that democratic labor, more than ever before, stands united in defense of its rights and in its fight for bread, peace and freedom.

In final sessions, the congress voted to carry the fight against totalitarianism into the camp of the enemy, and to press it with new vigor, by expanding aid to the embattled workers of Soviet-controlled East Berlin and East Germany.

OMER BECU

And they approved an international strike fund, to be built up by contributions from unions in the more prosperous countries, to help finance walkouts against exploiting employers in underdeveloped nations.

The united front in support of workers behind the Iron Curtain was spurred, of course, by the recent angry worker demonstrations in the Communist Zone of Germany—plus reports of further uprisings in other Iron Curtain countries—and the spectacular fall from power of Lavrenty Beria, Russian deputy premier.

Red Rule Shaken

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther made a special trip from the congress to Berlin to look over the situation. The congress itself later sent a three-man group to the city for an official investigation.

Reporting back, Reuther told the delegates that the workers' revolt in West Berlin "has shaken the very foundations of the Soviet system." His talks with refugees, he said, convinced him there is "great strength" in the East German demonstrations.

He called on the delegates to demand that their governments put diplomatic pressure on Russia to ease the plight of East German workers, and warned that the free world must find a solution to unemployment in West Berlin, where because of the flow of refugees one of every four persons is jobless.

After hearing the additional report of its official committee, the congress unanimously passed a resolution to ask their governments to apply the pressure, with special emphasis on demands for the release of labor leaders arrested in the demonstrations.

Earlier, Reuther had introduced a resolution accepted by the congress calling on affiliates to give financial as well as moral aid to East German workers. After its passage, he announced the CIO would make a "substantial contribution."

The international fund to help strikers in the underdeveloped countries is intended to make it possible for financially weak unions to apply maximum pressure during walkouts. The money would be spent largely on relief for strikers and their families.

The fund received its first contribution from the ICFTU executive board, which voted a $10,000 appropriation.

CIO delegates took an active part in the deliberations of important committees. Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey was a member of the Organization, Finance and Constitution Committee. Sec. Michael Ross of the CIO International Committee served on the Resolutions Committee.

The political pot boiled vigorously during the sessions. Out of it came the election, with united support of U. S. delegates, of Omer Becu as president in place of Sir Vincent Tewson, secretary of the British Trades Union Congress.

J. H. Oldenbroek, a Hollander, was reelected general secretary-treasurer.

Reuther Reelected

Reuther was reelected a vice president.

The congress went through two hours of debate, in which Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers took a leading part, before voting by a 72 to 50 margin to expand the executive board from 19 to 25 members.

The additional seats included one for Pres. John L. Lewis of the Mine Workers and another for R. Barkatt of Histadrut, the Israel federation of labor, which was admitted to membership during the congress.

Becu's election was made possible by a constitutional revision which permitted, for the first time, the selection of a leader from outside the executive board from outside the executive board.

Debate at times grew heated, but the proposal was passed by a vote of 20 organizations representing 29 million members to 34 organizations representing 9.6 million members.

The Name's The Same, But Not Quite

The confusion must have been terrific when CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and his brother, Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, landed at Templehof Airport in West Berlin at the end of their flight from the ICFTU world congress in Stockholm.

They were met by Mayor Ernst Reuter of West Berlin and Vice Pres. Georg Reuter of the German Federation of Labor (DGB). German newspapers, apparently unconcerned with the niceties of spelling, referred to it as a "Reuter convention."

Russ Tried To Block Reuther Visit To Berlin

RUSSIAN military authorities made a last-minute attempt to bar CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and his party from visiting Berlin, it was learned last week.

The Soviet overlords of East Germany—in which the West sector of Berlin is an island of freedom—sought to close the air corridor from Hamburg to the plane ferrying the CIO leader from the ICFTU congress in Stockholm. Also aboard were Reuther's wife; his brother, Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, and Guy Nunn, his adviser and interpreter.

The Communist effort failed, however, and Reuther reached the city safely. He spent the best part of three days in intensive conferences with West Berlin and East Berlin civic and labor leaders and workers.

Gives CARE Packages

He also visited several of the centers where refugees from the Communist East Zone are given temporary shelter, talked with them at length, and toured the east sector to trace the course of the June 17 worker demonstration.

In East Berlin, he presented a large number of CARE packages to survivors of the Soviet attacks and to the widows and children of workers jailed or murdered by the Communists.

Reuther held a series of press conferences and made several radio and television broadcasts which were beamed to both sides of the Iron Curtain. He stressed:

1 The East Zone uprisings are clearly a spontaneous revolt against the Communist speedup, the extinction of civil liberties and the thwarting of every East German's natural desire for unification with the West.

2 The fact that the demonstrations were led largely by young workers proves the Communists have failed to enslave the minds and spirits of German youth.

3 The West should recognize the "tremendous contribution" East Zone workers have made toward their own eventual liberation by giving every possible encouragement, moral and material, and should realize that "the time for propaganda platitudes is past."

He called on the free world to provide West Berlin with the economic means to reduce its burden of 250,000 unemployed, the result of the heavy flow of refugees from the East and the Soviet disruption of the city's economy.

"Every dollar spent providing jobs in West Berlin," he declared, "is worth $100 spent for military divisions in the fight against Soviet tyranny.

"But most important, West Berlin must be maintained as the show window through which the people behind the Iron Curtain can see freedom in action. It is the best place for democracy to offer tangible proof that economy security and spiritual freedom are jointly realizable.

"As long as every fourth worker in West Berlin is jobless, the Communists will exploit that against the Western system. We must show that you can have both bread and freedom.

Asks Financial Aid

"Licking West Berlin's unemployment problem would be worth 10 military divisions to the cause of the West."

Reuther said that on his return to the United States, he would ask Pres. Eisenhower to speed long-promised financial help to cut down the number of the city's jobless.

In a report to the ICFTU congress on his return to Stockholm, he urged delegates to demand that the West take immediate steps to relieve West Berlin unemployment. Its continuance, he said, is causing doubts in East Germany as to the free world's ability to stay prosperous without a big arms program.

Delegates Visit Arctic Mills

THE SWEDISH steel industry offered a couple of surprises to CIO Steelworkers who inspected it while accompanying the CIO delegation to the ICFTU world congress at Stockholm.

They found their own union-won welfare program as good or better than the one their Swedish counterparts enjoy. And they found that technically, Swedish steel-making is as good as in the United States, if not better.

They were astonished on both counts.

USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, and Thomas Murray, assistant to Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel, plunged north of the Arctic Circle, into the Land of the Midnight Sun, to visit the mines and mills at Karuna and Lulea as guests of the Swedish Metal Workers Union.

No Jobless Benefits

Goldberg pointed out that Sweden has no system of compulsory unemployment compensation as in the U. S. The medical program protecting Swedish steel workers is voluntary, he added, and does not approach in quality the surgical and hospital care plan set up in USA-CIO contracts.

Swedish steelworkers and miners earn from $2500 to $4500 a year, with the iron ore miners the highest paid employes in the country. The three agreed that these wages give them less purchasing power than USA-CIO members with earnings in the $4500 to $6500 receive.

However, they reported that the iron and steel establishments they visited are the most modern they had ever seen. The steel mills, unlike those in the U. S., are completely electrified, they said.

The operations are comparatively new. They are joint enterprises of the government and private industry, and were built as a kind of TVA project to provide jobs for people in the area who otherwise would be unemployed.

EYEWITNESS account of demonstrations in Communist East Berlin was given delegates by Alfred Braun, officer of construction workers union.

They Don't Say 'Sorry'—

Handicapped Get A Hand At Kreisler

THIS IS THE story of a plant where the handicapped get a break—where the polio stricken, the deaf mutes and the disabled have set some records as skilled craftsmen and strong "union guys."

The plant is in North Bergen, N. J., the watchband shop of the Jacques Kreisler Manufacturing Corp.

About 500 men and women work there, and

- Some 25% have physical handicaps of varying degrees.
- Some 40% are women workers, including GI war brides from seven nations.
- There's a strong local union, CIO Playthings Workers Local 147, with a good collective bargaining relationship with management, one of the few in the industry which puts a union label on its products.

A Different Answer

At many plant employment offices, the answer is a curt "sorry" when a disabled worker applies for a job. But not at Kreisler. Every new employe gets a physical exam, but the company isn't concerned about how able-bodied he is. It only wants to know whether he can handle a specific job.

And most of the disabled workers can.

They ask no favors and receive none. Their chief wish is to be treated as equals.

Disabled and able-bodied workers usually work side by side. Occasionally, a new worker is on the job for months before his colleagues are aware that he has a physical impairment.

On Equal Footing

The types of handicaps among Kreisler employes vary considerably. Some are paralytics, a few are deaf mutes, some have recovered from polio.

Whatever the illness, they are hired, paid and promoted on the same basis and the same scale as the able-bodied, under terms of the CIO Playthings Union contract.

His legs stricken by polio, he has proved an expert parts adjustor for watchbands. He's an active Local 147 member, attends most union meetings. And his wife, whom he met while she was working at Kreisler, has the same polio impairment.

Another Local 147 member is pretty Teresa Brotz. Born a deaf mute, she lets her smile speak for her. And she has a very good record on her job of inserting fine springs into watchbands.

Another woman unionist at Kreisler is Mona Nowatnick, a self-taught artist who has sold more than a dozen of her oil paintings. She's a local shop steward.

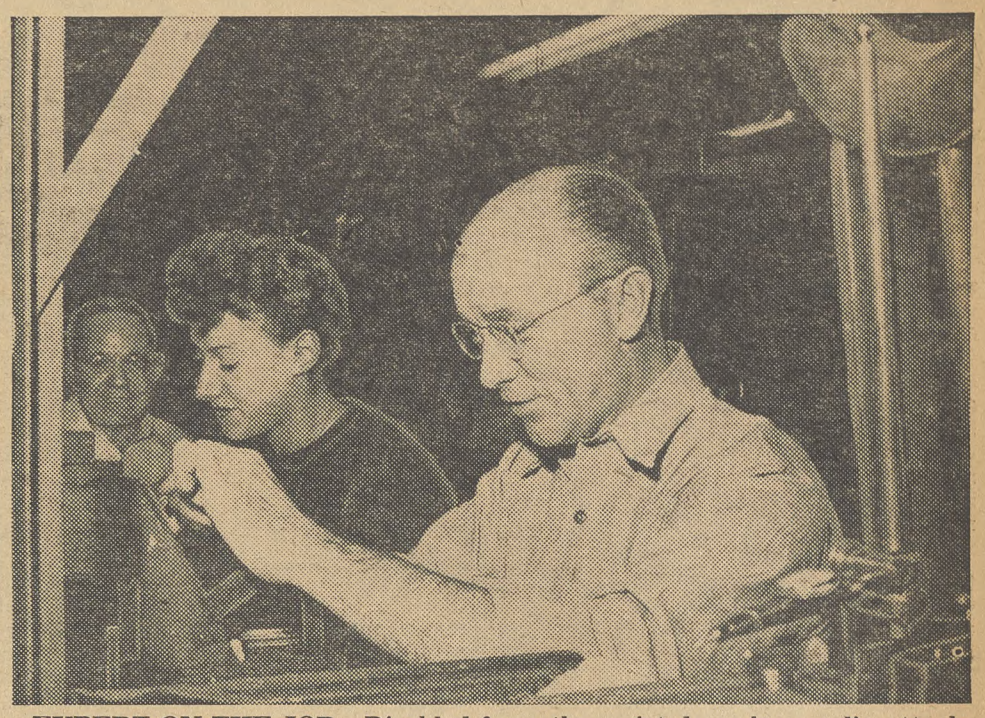
Several GI Brides

Also in the large group of women workers in the shop are seven war brides from four different nations, who have learned at first hand how much better are working conditions in union shops in the U. S.

The contract of CIO Playthings Local 147 with the Jacques Kreisler Corp. spells out those benefits: An unusually liberal insurance policy averaging about $6000 per employe, a fully company-paid pension and retirement program, an incentive production plan which helps workers fatten each week's pay envelope.

It adds up to a case of realistic and enlightened management, and a strong local union working together through collective bargaining and in day-by-day plant relations to give disabled workers a break.

HANDICAPPED — Pretty Teresa Brotz, born a deaf mute, lets her smile speak for her. She's one of many handicapped workers at Kreisler plant.



EXPERT ON THE JOB—Disabled from the waist down by a polio attack, John Louis is a skilled craftsman, among handicapped who form 25% of working force at Kreisler firm. And he's a veteran of the CIO Playthings Union, has been employed for 11 years.

Watchbands With A Union Label

Back in 1939, the Jacques Kreisler Manufacturing Corp. broke precedent among watchband manufacturers by signing a union contract.

It's still the only major firm in the industry to use the union label.

Local union in the plant is Jewelry Workers Local 147, part of the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers.

Beirne Urges Approval Of Federal Handicapped Agency

APPROVAL of legislation creating a Federal Agency for the Handicapped was urged last week by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers in testimony before a House Labor subcommittee.

"The federal government can no longer ignore a problem involving one-fifth of all citizens," he declared in reminding the committee that 30 million Americans are handicapped in one way or another.

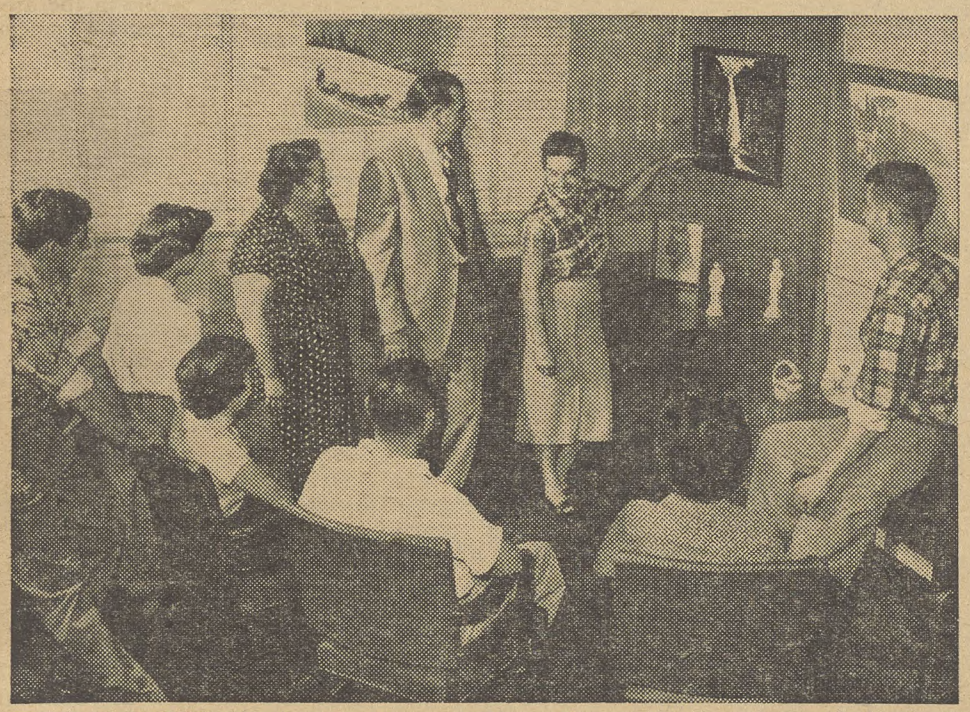
The bill under consideration, he said, is "well thought-out," and provides for "the bare minimums of what we should do immediately" for the handicapped.

"For the past four years I have served as a national vice president of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, a non-profit organization working in the interests of the physically disabled," he said.

"These problems are so broad in scope and involve so many people that they cannot be solved by any other agency than our federal government, or at least without the active and continuing assistance of some agency of the government at the federal level, operating under broad, comprehensive legislation such as that now being considered by this committee.

"To continue ignoring the problems of medical attention, vocational training, education and placement of the physically handicapped would amount to a national disgrace, one which no progressive government should allow.

"Care for the handicapped is no charity. It is an investment for the future."



"ART IS LONG, life is short"—and Mona Nowatnick receives admiration of fellow employes for one of her oil paintings. Self-taught, she's sold a dozen paintings. She's also a steward for CIO Playthings Local 147. Periodic art exhibitions are sponsored jointly by the local and the firm.

CIO In West Raps Hells Canyon Give-Away; Niagara Bill Wins

STRONG condemnation of the Idaho Power Co.'s Hells Canyon dam proposal was sounded by delegates from CIO state and local councils in seven Western states at a regional meeting last week in Salt Lake City, Utah.

They unanimously requested the Federal Power Commission to reject the firm's request for construction license. At the same time, CIO delegates called on the commission to recommend to Congress the construction of a high dam, such as the Reclamation Bureau and the Army Engineers have proposed, "by an agency of the federal government."

The group acted in a resolution commending the National CIO for having taken steps, in accordance with CIO policy, to achieve these goals.

They said a high dam at Hells Canyon is essential to develop low-cost electric power which would mean industrial expansion, greater employment, increased soil protection and flood control, and a better standard of living for the community it would serve.

"The Idaho Power Co. proposal," the resolution said, "would be bad for workers, bad for business, bad for the community and bad for the nation. It would benefit only the stockholders of a concern 90% owned by Eastern financial interests."

THE PRIVATE power company's plan would mean a loss of 300,000 to 400,000 kilowatt hours of prime power production, it continued, adding that its three planned dams would not provide anything approximating the flood storage capacity of one multi-purpose dam.

The CIO delegates estimated that the company would charge industrial customers $50 per kilowatt year, compared to $17.50 now paid by big aluminum firms. The industry's break-even point is about $25, they said.

"Anything more will drive industry away and boost power rates throughout the Northwest," they claimed.

The high dam will permit development of phosphate deposits, they said, while the company's would not, thus depriving farmers of a cheap source of fertilizer.

MEANTIME, the FPC continued hearings in Washington apparently aimed at getting authority to construct its three small dams to Idaho Power as quickly as possible.

The National Hells Canyon Association, which was formed late last month after Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay abandoned the public's interest in the fight and withdrew federal opposition to licensing the power company, was denied adequate time to prepare its case.

William J. Costello, FPC examiner, last week rejected for a third time the efforts of C. Girard Davidson, former assistant secretary of the interior and counsel for the public groups, to force Idaho Power to comply with the FPC's own rules.

Inquiry Asked On McKay's Actions

Senate investigation of the "procedures" of the Federal Power Commission and Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay in connection with the Hells Canyon dam dispute was demanded by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.)

He said McKay's abandonment of a proposed federal dam and his withdrawal of objections to an application by the Idaho Power Co., plus FPC actions, apparently have involved a denial of public rights and a "weighting" in favor of the company.

Monroney Praised For Blast At Joe

THE STAND of Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) against a proposed investigation of the super-secret Central Intelligence Agency by Wisconsin's Sen. McCarthy has been praised by Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the CIO Electrical Workers.

Monroney delivered a blistering attack against McCarthy, warning that the inquiry—subsequently side tracked—into the CIA would "divulge to our enemies information that the Kremlin's best spy apparatus could not get." He added that it was time that the Senate turned Communist-hunting over to Pres. Eisenhower and the FBI.

HARTNETT'S telegram to the Oklahoma senator said that the speech deserved "the attention of every American who cherishes our free way of life."

"We agree with your statement that the internal security of our country can be better protected by the executive branch of our government than by the headline-hunting junior senator from Wisconsin.

"The shadows of doubt and suspicion being spread throughout the land by Sen. McCarthy were pierced by a ray of light when you courageously stood up in the Senate and expressed faith in our public servants."

HOUSE Republicans, their give-away machine all oiled and primed, have voted to make five private utility companies a present of the right to develop the power potential of Niagara Falls.

The bill was passed by a 262-120 roll call vote after the House had refused to send it back to committee by a 254-120 count.

The GOP majority acted after a group of Democrats had shouted "power grab" and in defiance of the plea of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, an early Eisenhower supporter, that the New York Power Authority be permitted to develop the site.

Gov. Dewey and his top aides pleaded with the Senate group to defeat the House measure, which he said would be "surrendering great natural resources for private exploitation."

"I'M AGAINST this grab," shouted Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.), who led the vain fight against the bill. "I'm for more power at cheaper rates. . . . This would give a five-headed monster a property that belongs to the State of New York."

He told the Republicans they were "flying in the face" of Pres. Eisenhower, who wants the Federal Power Commission to determine if the site should be developed by federal, state or private enterprise. He offered an amendment requiring the five firms to give preference to municipalities, public agencies and cooperatives in selling the power, but this too was defeated.

THE PROJECT, estimated to cost $400 million, is made possible by a 1950 treaty with Canada permitting additional diversion of Niagara River water. In the U. S., it is estimated 8.6 billion kilowatt hours of electricity will be produced annually.

New York State was given permission to share in power development on another waterway when the FPC announced approval of its proposal to build the U. S. half of a $600 million project near Massena, on the St. Lawrence River.

The Canadian part will be built by the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, which will pay the cost and obtain half the more than 12 billion kilowatt hours of electricity to be developed each year.

CIO Shed Union Fights Mexican Labor Imports

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

VIGOROUS new protests have been voiced by CIO against the growing importation of Mexican field workers into California, displacing the jobs of hundreds of CIO lettuce shed workers.

"Blame for the situation lies squarely on the big growers, who are using political pressure in Washington in order to get a source of cheap labor," Irwin L. DeShetler told a rally of 3000 shed workers in Salinas, Calif.

DeShetler, CIO organizational director in California and four other far western states, said a full investigation has been demanded of Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin.

The job displacement results from a new field packing technique instituted by lettuce packers. Mexican field workers pack the crates in the fields and they're quickly frozen with dry ice. Bypassed in the process are packingshed workers belonging to CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, Local Industrial Union 78.

DESHETLER said the admission of field workers violates the U. S.-Mexican agreement, which provides that Mexican nationals cannot be employed if they displace American workers.

"'CIO does not object to the use of imported labor where necessary," DeShetler told the Local 78 rally, "but the CIO is vigorously protesting the displacement of our own domestic workers by their use.

"The blame for the situation lies squarely on the big growers who are using political pressure in Washington in order to get a source of cheap labor. Don't blame the Mexican nationals. They are just the victims of this exploitation, not the ones who cause the situation.

"WE ARE confident that public opinion will support us so that American workers do not have to go on the relief rolls while cheap, foreign slave labor takes their jobs. We know that the Mexican labor movement supports us because it means justice to all workers, foreign and domestic."

The Salinas packingshed workers mass meeting also heard reports on contract negotiations by James Smith, LIU 78 general president, and Al Provence, district officer, and voted full confidence in the negotiating committee.

Representation

CIO Packingshed Workers have sent protests to California's 30 congressmen and two senators on displacement of U. S. workers by importation of more Mexican field hands.

So far they haven't received any replies from Republican Reps. Bramblett and Gubser—the two lawmakers whose districts include the Salinas-Watsonville "lettuce bowl" where thousands of packingshed workers normally are employed.

Riffe Leads CIO Protest On Migrants

FOR 80c an hour, some 1500 to 1800 Mexican nationals were working in California's lush Imperial Valley the past season, dry packing lettuce in the fields.

All the while more than 550 CIO Packingshed workers—who normally earn up to $3 an hour—were unemployed, drawing state unemployment compensation in the Imperial Valley.

And another 850 shed workers from the Salinas-Watsonville area, who normally move south with the season, couldn't get jobs at all in the Imperial.

THAT SITUATION—of job displacement and depressing wages—was placed before Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin last week by a CIO delegation led by Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

The growing scandal over illegal "wetback" migrants—plus changes in the industry with the new dry ice field packing methods—were the twin issues placed before Durkin by the CIO delegation.

With Riffe, other members of the delegation were R. J. Thomas, his assistant; National CIO Rep. William Smith, formerly assigned to CIO citrus workers organization in Florida; Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO organizational director in California and four other western states; and Katharine Ellickson, CIO assistant director of research and education.

BOTH DeSHETLER and Mrs. Ellickson are members of a Labor Dept. advisory committee on migrant problems.

After the conference, DeShetler reported the wetback labor "situation is getting worse all the time. More and more people are being thrown out of work because of the importation of foreign labor."

Some 93,000 illegal Mexican entrants were apprehended in June alone, the CIO organizational aide reported. And he estimated they were barely a third of the wetbacks who crossed the border

Of the 44 packing sheds in Imperial Valley, five were closed, three operated less than one week, and 33 worked at two-thirds of capacity. Only three sheds, DeShetler said, operated at full capacity.

THEY PACKED THE STANDS — Some 3000 lettuce packingshed workers give rising vote of confidence to negotiating committee, at rally of Salinas-Watsonville, Calif., members of CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers in Salinas grandstand.

Mazey Warning—

Defense Cutback Perils Auto Jobs

THE ARMY'S drastic curtailment of contracts for tanks and trucks coupled with a shrinking civilian market for cars and trucks threatens "serious" unemployment in the auto industry.

That fear was expressed by Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers. Mazey came to Washington to protest the cancellation of the Air Force contracts for C-119 flying box cars and C-123s, a new type of assault plane, at the Willow Run plant of Kaiser-Frazer Corp.

He warned that the industry might be in "serious trouble before winter." Mazey said truck sales are slow and it may be difficult to sell passenger cars —now at top production—in the next few months.

GOVERNMENT spending for tanks and trucks will be cut more than two-thirds—from $160 million a month to less than $50 million a month, ordnance officers disclosed at Detroit.

Mazey's fear of a slump in civilian buying was borne out by Business Week, which pointed out 3.25 million cars were produced in the first half of this year and "the full year can hardly be expected to top six million."

"That means a cutback of at least 15% for the second half (of the year)," the management publication said. "Monthly production in September may be off as much as 25% from July—and in later months even more."

FORD IS planning to stop M-48 medium tank production at Lavonia, Mich., in December. The two other producers of the tank —Chrysler at Newark, Del., and Fisher Body Div. of General Motors at Grand Blanc, Mich.— will bid against each other for the remaining tank orders. Which means that the higher bidder will shut down next spring.

The visit of Mazey and a score of Detroit union leaders to Washington caused Air Force Sec. Harold E. Talbott to modify his adamant stand against giving a contract for C-123s to the Willow Run plant.

Talbott opened the meeting with the union leaders by reading a prepared statement in which he said that no final decision had been reached on building the C-123, but "if it is built it will not be manufactured at the Willow Run plant."

There followed a heated exchange between Talbott and Mazey. The UAW secretary-treasurer accused Talbott of disregarding the workers in cancelling the Willow Run contract.

At the end of the argument, Talbott's statement was changed to state "should a decision be reached to produce the C-123, Kaiser-Frazer will be given an equal opportunity along with other manufacturers to submit a proposition to supply our requirements."

TALBOTT also took issue with a story in the Detroit News which said the Air Force and the Defense Dept. intended to take contracts out of the Detroit area because of what the newspaper called a "lazy and indifferent" labor force.

"I have heard adverse criticism of the Air Force position toward labor and Air Force contracts in general in the Detroit area," Talbott said. "I want you to know that I am sure there are no higher class mechanics, workmen, and artisans in the country than there are in the Detroit area."

Chance To Save 5000 Jobs Seen

Some 5000 members of the CIO Auto Workers will be assured jobs at the Willow Run plant of Kaiser-Frazer if it gets the Army contract for building C-123s.

The C-123 is a new type of assault plane which the Air Force intended to build at Willow Run until it cancelled its contract for that plane and for the C-119, the flying box car.

Some Michigan congressmen said the Army wants the C-123s —and more of them than had been planned by the Air Force. Clay Bedford, K-F executive, said the awarding of the contract to his company would mean the employment of 5000 persons at Willow Run.

GCEOC Signs Pacts In Social Agency Tieups

SOCIAL WORKER members of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee ended four to six weeks of picketing and the application of community pressures.

Three of the strikes, in Philadelphia, were forced when managements refused to recognize the union as collective bargaining agent or even to enter into any agreements for the determination of representation rights.

THE STRIKES at the Rebecca Gratz Club and the Association for Jewish Children were ended when management recognized the union and agreed to negotiate contracts.

The union and the Neighborhood Center are still in dispute over recognition although the strikers suspended activity to allow the opening of day camps delayed for almost a week of their eight-week seasons.

Management had announced that it would cancel its camp program, turning into the streets about 300 children whose parents pay from nothing to $64 for the camps services.

National GCEOC-CIO Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray said "we didn't want the kids to suffer. We had to show concern for the kids even if the center's directors won't."

The fourth strike, in Pittsburgh, occurred after nine fruitless months of negotiations between the union and the Soho Neighborhood Center.

This strike was settled when National GCEOC-CIO Chairman Anthony J. Federoff mobilized the United Labor Committee of Pittsburgh, mine workers, railroad brotherhoods, AFL and CIO, to withdraw all of their member units from the Community Fund.

Before any action could be taken by the meetings, union negotiators were informed that the Center would agree to the union contract and substantial wage increases for all categories of employes.

A fifth strike, of employes of the J. C. Blair Memorial Hospital in Huntingdon, Pa., now going into its third month, shows no signs of early settlement.

CWA Gains In Duluth

THE CIO Communications Workers last week signed an agreement bringing wage increases averaging 8.5c an hour to 500 employes at the Western Electric plant at Duluth, Minn.

The pay hikes range from 7c to 13c an hour. Newly-established wage rates in the plant range from $1.29 to $2.38 an hour under the contracts which is for a year.

The plant had been closed since the end of World War II, when the contract was held by the AFL Electrical Workers. When it was reopened last fall, both CWA and the AFL union bid to represent the workers. CWA won a a run-off election last April.

Chicago TWU Wins to 16c

IMPRESSIVE gains have been won in new contracts recently negotiated by locals of the CIO Transport Workers, Sec.-Treas. Gustav Fabor reported last week.

In Chicago, Local 236 secured a total of 16c in general wage increases in four steps—8c retroactive to June 1, 2c on Jan. 1, 1954, 4c on June 1, 1954, and 2c on Jan. 1, 1955. In addition, life insurance coverage was increased from $1250 to $1500, and weekly sick benefits from $20 to $25.

Local 223, at Omaha, Neb., won a pay boost of 13c an hour in negotiations with the Omaha & Council Bluffs Street Railway Co.

More than 3200 members of Local 101-Utility Div. obtained 5c an hour wage increases under a contract with the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Union Gas Co. Agreement also was reached on a joint labor-management health and safety committee, and joint consultation on schedules.

CIO Joins In White Collar Institute

WHAT HAPPENS to white collar workers if full employment ends?

This was the theme of a one-week school for office employes held July 5-12 by the American Labor Education Service at Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y.

Both CIO and AFL trade unionists from a dozen or more cities in the East, South and Midwest attended the school and the conference on Labor and the World Today held on the weekend.

AS PART of the conference program, the students visited United Nations headquarters in New York. They also took part in a panel discussion presented by a group of foreign students at the school who came from England, Germany, Sweden and Burma.

Representatives of CIO white collar workers in the Steel, Auto, Textile and Government & Civic Employees were among the students and speakers.

John Edelman, legislative representative for the Textile Workers, interpreted the political scene in Washington, and Helen Blanchard, on the GCEOC staff, and Edward Wilms, UAW-CIO Dept. of Office Workers, led discussions in a union workshop. ALES Director Eleanor Coit was in charge of the school.

UAW Gains 15c In Tool, Die Pact

A 41-DAY strike of 5000 Detroit tool and die makers belonging to the CIO Auto Workers ended last week in a new contract boosting their pay 15c an hour and granting new fringe benefits.

The tool and die makers returned to work after the agreement had been ratified by the membership of Locals 155 and 157, and the 70 firms belonging to the Automotive Tool and Die Manufacturers Association.

At Indianapolis, the UAW's Intl. Harvester Council last week authorized a strike vote of Harvester locals in plants throughout the country.

UAW represents about 24,000 workers employed by the farm machinery firm. The Indianapolis local already had authorized a strike. Other UAW locals represent employes at plants in Fort Wayne and Evansville, Ind.; Chicago, Melrose Park and Canton, Ill.; St. Paul Minn., Memphis, Tenn., and Springfield, O.

THE UNION seeks the same contract improvements won through reopening negotiations with General Motors, Chrysler and Ford, including pegging the escalator clause to the new cost-of-living index.

Tom Burns, council chairman, announced that a committee had been set up to plan joint strategy and negotiations with the AFL Machinists who represent employes at three Intl. Harvester plants.

At South Bend, Ind., headquarters of the Studebaker Corp., UAW signed an agreement boosting the hourly wage of skilled workers by 10c at the New Brunswick, N. J., Studebaker plant.

The cost-of-living allowance reduction was limited to 5c an hour, and the annual improvement factor was boosted by 1c to 5c an hour. The agreement is similar to one recently negotiated for the South Bend, Ind., plant.

You And Your Money—

Landlords See 'Gold Rush' As Chicago CIO Aids Tenants

Take The Froth With Some Salt

As the mercury climbs, so does the temperature of the radio-TV commercials and newspaper ads for beers that supposedly are "99% sugar free" and mighty slim in starch.

So does the temperature of the Treasury Dept. Alcohol Tax Division, which recently suggested you take the claims for a bucket of suds—or case of throwaways—with more than a dash of salt.

Here are some facts letting the air out of beer ads, as reported by Labor Press Associated: All beer is free of starch; the sugar in beer "isn't enough to put in your eye;" the claims of some beers to be "dietetically less fattening" are eyewash, because the average bottle of beer has 155 to 165 calories.

It's hot—have another!

"A GOLD RUSH" is what landlords expect when federal rent controls end in 10 days, and one big CIO council—in Chicago—is going all-out to ease the blow on tenants.

All the resources of the Chicago CIO Council's Community Services Committee, local union counsellors, legal aides and community agencies are being tapped to assist CIO members and the general public and to give them full rent information.

UNDER its "Citizenship in Operation" program, Sec.-Treas. Ellsworth M. Smith reported, Chicago CIO gave wide publicity to a detailed 18 questions-and-answers on rent decontrol.

The fact sheet was published in some of the Chicago dailies, translated for foreign language speaking areas, broadcast and issued through local union halls. While some of the problems are peculiar to Illinois—where a state law gives Chicago judges the power to limit initial rent increases to 10% in "hardship" cases—others are of nation-wide effect:

- After July 31, tenants are on their own. Federal rent controls end. Only a few states—New York, New Jersey—have their own laws.
- Landlords can boost rents to any level they please, subject only to prior leases or rent agreements.
- Tenants' only recourse will be to state eviction laws, which usually require 30 days notice of rent increase.
- If you get in a tangle with your landlord, you'll probably need a lawyer.
- Whatever you do, get in touch first with your CIO local union counsellor or your local CIO Council Community Services Committee.

The Chicago CIO Council began its rent information program because of the acute housing situation in the city, where a slum scandal recently exploded. Thousands of eviction suits have been predicted.

THE prediction of a landlords' "gold rush" was voiced in a Chicago builder's ad suggesting more attics and basements be converted into apartments. The ad read in part:

"Just think what decontrol can do for you. Rents will spiral to a new high. Tenants will compete for any flat—anywhere. Will you be ready?"

The Chicago CIO Council and its affiliates are.

Gillette Tries New Move On Price Inquiry

DEFEATED in one Senate committee, Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) has moved in seven other Senate standing committees to get action on his proposed consumer interest investigation.

Gillette has asked the Senate groups to establish subcommittees "by which the interests of the consumers of America can be adequately protected in the legislative and governmental processes."

Such groups, he said, would look into where the consumer's dollar goes, the spread between farm prices and retail prices, the effect on consumers of administration of related laws, the adding of taxes onto prices, and similar problems.

HE ASKED the Senate Labor, Commerce, Judiciary, Banking, Finance, Interior and Agriculture Committees to establish such investigative subcommittees.

The original Gillette proposal—co-authored by 26 senators and endorsed by CIO—for a special consumer interest probe was quashed by the Banking Committee. And the House has voted a rider banning the Federal Trade Commission from looking into consumer spending.

"The implication of these two actions," Gillette told the Senate, "is clear to all. The consumer is not to be allowed to know the economic facts of life.

"WHY THIS CURTAIN of silence? What is the reason for hiding the facts about our economy? Who is afraid to let the consumers of America learn where their dollar goes?

"Who is afraid to let the farmers of America learn why only 46c of the consumer dollar spent for farm products ever reaches the farmer who produced those products?"

The answer to Gillette's questions seems to be the powerful associations of food processors, wholesalers, middlemen and retailer, who pile profits upon profits all along the line.

How's Business? Net Profits Of Big Firms Climb By 11%

NET PROFITS of American manufacturing corporations for the first three months of 1953 were up 11% over the same quarter a year ago although sales climbed only 9%, according to the joint quarterly report by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission.

At the same time, total corporation assets have been building up steadily. For the first quarter of 1953 they were set at $166.8 billion, compared with $166 billion three months before and $159.3 billion during the first three months of 1952.

Current liabilities were down more than current assets, increasing the corporations' net working capital from $55 billion at the end of 1952 to $55.9 billion as of Mar. 31, 1953.

The rate of return on stockholders' equity was 24.9% before taxes, against 23.6% in the first quarter of 1952, and 10.7% after taxes against 10.1% for the first three months last year.

The quarterly report surveyed 23 different industries. When compared with the report for the last quarter of 1952, 20 industries showed increases and 3 had decreases in profits before taxes; after taxes 14 showed decreases, 6 showed gains and 3 reported no change.

TEXTILE and mill products jumped 31% before taxes, 19% after taxes; petroleum and coal, 31% and zero; rubber, up 25% before taxes, a decrease of 11% after taxes; automobiles, 22% increase before taxes, 3% decrease after taxes; chemicals, up 8% before, up 4% after; primary iron and steel, up 14% before, down 11% after.

Price Fixing Law Nixed

PRICE FIXING state laws got rapped over the knuckles by Superior Judge Walter J. Freund in a recent Newark, N. J., case.

The Jersey justice ruled against Lionel Corp. and for the S. Kline department store in Newark.

Lionel complained that Kline violated the State Fair Trade Act and the federal McGuire Act by selling Lionel's toy electric trains below the company's established prices.

Judge Freund refused to order the store to abide by Lionel's price-boosting fair trade agreement, observing that "under fair trade the price level is probably higher than would obtain under active price competition." (LPA)

FTC Puts Label On Foreign-Made Sewing Machines

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission last week clamped down on the practice of passing off Japanese and other foreign sewing machines as U. S. made.

FTC got an agreement from Eli Tempkin and Allen Gordon, trading as National Stores, Los Angeles, Calif., to mark on the machines where they are made.

The partners also agreed not to use the word "Eureka" or any other brand name to represent that the machines were not foreign-made. The agreement also restrained the firm from misrepresenting the price, guarantee and testing.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THE PRICE OF GAS has been raised in most parts of the country and in some areas like the Atlantic Seaboard, the price was raised twice within less than two weeks. In that region the total increase amounted to about 1.5c at wholesale, which was promptly reflected in boosts of about 2 cents to motorists.

How To Save On Gas

Significantly, the increase occurred right at the start of the summer motoring season, when people use more gas. It's a real jolt when you consider that the cost of fueling a car is already the biggest expense in operating a car several years old (in newer cars, depreciation is the largest expense).

According to the National Automotive Service Dept. of the AAA, it cost the average car owner 2.14c per mile for gas and oil—before the increase. If you drive your car the currently typical 9000 miles a year, at the new prices your bill will come to a good $200 a year. (In comparison to the 2.14c for gas, the average motorist spends .68c a mile for maintenance and .46c for tires).

It's worth practicing every good trick of car operation to cut down your use of gas this summer, both for your sake and to teach the major oil companies a lesson for this price boost that is unwarranted. Here are ways you can save gas:

Drive Slower: Auto engineers say the greatest gas wasters are jack-rabbit starts; quick, tire-dragging stops; unnecessary high-speed driving, and reluctance to turn off the engine during stops of uncertain duration.

According to the AAA, during a 1000-mile trip an average car will consume 60 gallons of gas if you drive it at 35 mph, but will eat up more than 100 gallons if you drive at 65.

Save One Gallon In Four

A moderate economical cruising speed on long trips of 45 mph; gas seems to burn most evenly at that speed. By driving around 45-50 instead of 65-70, you'll save one gallon out of every four.

Shift Sooner: A slow start and prompt upshifting are important gas savers. Continuing to drive in second gear at 20 mph uses 15% more gas than high; low gear at 20 consumes 35% more. Let the other guy break away from the traffic light first; let him be poor.

Hold A Steady Speed: Keep a steady pace to take advantage of car momentum. The biggest gas-waster is the guy who drives with frequent bursts of speed, then slows up, then picks up speed. When you know you have to stop, roll there slowly instead of getting there in a hurry and jamming on the brakes.

Keep Your Car in Good Condition: As you saw above, gas and oil costs are more than three times as much as maintenance costs. The money you invest in car maintenance more than pays for itself in gas saving.

First of all, don't postpone having your car greased regularly. The big value is not only to avoid chassis damage, squeaks and rattles, but you don't need as much power to move a properly-lubricated chassis.

Get The Engine Checked

Don't drive with worn, dirty spark plugs, especially on a long trip. Spark plugs may seem to operate all right when your engine is idling, but at high speed, poor plugs miss and thus waste gas. Even if your plugs are in good condition they may need regapping.

Also have your distributor, muffler and carburetor checked. A clogged muffler is often a cause of gas waste, especially on older cars. Another component often neglected by motorists is the air cleaner on top of your carburetor. If dirty or clogged it causes your engine to eat extra gas. It's wise to have it serviced every 2500 miles.

Ask your mechanic to make sure your spark is properly adjusted. Excessive knocking on hills, or black smoke when you start, are signs of improper adjustment.

Other tips:

- —Park in the shade when possible to avoid evaporation of gas.
- —Buy gas in the cool of the morning; gas expands in midday heat and you get less actual fuel per gallon.
- —Shop for gas. When prices are raised unnecessarily as now, there's more margin for cutting prices too, and you'll find more enterprising station operators doing it.

Food Price Index Sets 2-Year Peak

The wholesale food price index compiled by Dun & Bradstreet climbed on July 14 to the highest level since October 1951. The 12c jump sent the index up 1.8% to $6.74. The high 21 months ago was $6.77.

Dun & Bradstreet's barometer represents the total of the price per pound of 31 commonly used foods. Of these, 12 advanced, six declined and 13 showed no change.

FDA Inspection Bill Is Voted

The House last week passed a CIO-supported bill to restore authority to the Food & Drug Administration to inspect food and drug processing and manufacture. The measure was sent to the Senate.

The Supreme Court last December ruled that the Food and Drug Act does not clearly grant federal inspectors the right to enter factories without the owners' permission.

Organizationally Speaking

By John Y. Riffe

THE WRITER this past week held a meeting with the 13 CIO regional directors in Washington, D. C.

The meeting was a very constructive one in which I pointed out the responsibility of the directors in the new regional set-up. My assistants, Brothers Oral Garrison, R. J. Thomas and Carl A. McPeak all spoke about their particular departments.

Following the talks we held a question and answer period in which many problems were discussed and clarified. Each regional director then gave a brief report on his own region. It was a very instructive meeting, one that will enable each of us to carry out to the best of our ability our job for CIO.

Asst. Dir. of Councils Carl A. McPeak reports that in Salt Lake City, the Councils Dept. held the last of seven regional conferences of CIO Councils. Delegates from state and local councils in California, Colorado, Montana, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming attended the three-day meeting.

Following the pattern of previous regional council conferences, the Salt Lake City meeting was a working conference, the delegates participating actively in the discussions with "speeches" barred. Among the problems that aroused greatest interest were those of national and state taxation, conservation, re-apportionment and responsibilities of state and local councils.

As in previous conferences, representatives of National CIO departments and officers of several state and local councils served as discussion leaders.

These council conferences have been hailed by those who have participated as a great step forward in preparing our IUC's for the tremendous responsibilities they have always had inherently but which have now been made explicit by the recent changes in CIO's organizing and field administrative.

I want to congratulate all those who took part in these conferences and express my appreciation for the services of the various conference chairmen, executive secretaries and discussion leaders.

Big Newark Westinghouse Local Dumps UE, Joins IUE

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

MORE THAN 3400 workers returned to CIO last week when the employes of a big Newark, N. J., plant voted to quit the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers and to join the CIO Electrical Workers.

With only 12 "no" votes, Local 426 voted to disaffiliate from UE and to affiliate with the IUE-CIO. The local represents production, maintenance and salaried workers at Westinghouse's meter plant.

In a resolution, the local expressed disgust and disturbance over the repeated failures of UE at the bargaining table and in organizing. The workers declared they knew IUE-CIO brought them their gains and that in IUE-CIO the combined strength would be even more effective.

(IUE-CIO last week resumed negotiations with Westinghouse on a nation-wide scale after rejecting as "inadequate" a wage and pension offer which UE had accepted.)

IUE-CIO Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett hailed the Newark affiliation move, praising the local and its leaders who urged the action.

"UE's slavish policy of putting the Communist Party line above all sold out the workers over and over again in negotiations," he declared.

"This move by Local 426 should be followed by others in the Westinghouse chain and elsewhere. The IUE-CIO and the CIO stand ready to welcome all non-Communists from UE.

"Under UE, those Newark meter workers had only despair. Back in CIO, they join the thousands of real trade union members building for a decent present and future."

THE MEMBERSHIP voted their session would be only for paid-up members and observers from other UE Westinghouse plants. The latter included observers from Essington, Pa. (South Philadelphia) and Bridgeport, Conn., plants.

James Matles, UE's director of organization, tried to get into the meeting and was refused admittance under the membership decision. Matles, long identified with the Communist Party, faces deportation proceedings.

ON THE OUTSIDE—That's where James Matles was as the 3400-member Local 426 of the United Electrical Workers at the Newark, N. J., Westinghouse plant voted overwhelmingly to affiliate with the CIO Electrical Workers. Matles (arrow), UE organization director, was barred from meeting, confers with local members outside.

Reuther Urges Signing Of Home Rule, FEP Petitions

THE CIO last week called on members of the House "who truly believe in the democratic right of equal opportunity" to sign Discharge Petitions Nos. 4 and 5 and force to the floor bills barring discrimination in the nation's capital and in employment.

"The need for both measures has been so amply demonstrated as to make argument unnecessary," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said in a letter to congressmen.

The bills were introduced on the opening day of Congress by Rep. Powell (D. N.Y.) but have since been buried in the House District and Labor Committees. Neither group has even held hearings on the proposals.

When committees refuse to report measures, one way of prying them loose is through discharge petitions. A total of 218 congressmen must sign before bills thus cleared can be brought to the floor for debate.

Discharge Petition No. 4 covers H.R. 169, a bill to assure all persons within the District of Columbia full and equal privileges in places of public education, accommodation, resort, entertainment and amusement. The District Committee has bottled up this and all similar measures despite Pres. Eisenhower's campaign pledge to end segregation in the nation's capital.

THE OTHER petition would free H.R. 170, a fair employment practices measure, prohibiting discrimination by employers because of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry. There seems little likelihood that the House Labor Committee, to which it was referred, will act on this or other pending FEP bills before adjournment.

Reuther termed the two Powell measures "morally right, economically sound and socially desirable." He said their enactment would "prove to the world that the U. S. practices as well as preaches democracy."

Wage Pacts Settled By Glass Union

THE CIO Glass Workers have won wage increases for 22,000 employes of the two biggest firms in the glass industry under a voluntary wage reopening.

The agreement of the union with Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. and Pitsburgh Plate Glass Co. provides for a general wage increase for production workers of 1c an hour under the annual improvement factor clause, making a total of 5c for the year.

MAINTENANCE workers received an 8c hourly increase. Cost-of-living increases will be figured on the new consumer price index instead of the old index, based on the Mar. 15 relationship of the two indexes.

Three cents of the 8c cost-of-living increase will not be subject to declines in the cost-of-living.

The union was represented by Pres. Burl W. Phares, First Vice Pres. Leland Beard, Second Vice Pres. Ralph Reiser, Sec.-Treas. Lewis McCracken, and wage committeemen from local unions.

Textile Gains 6c To 20c In Jersey Plants

WAGE GAINS ranging from 6c to 20c an hour for approximately 1100 employes of the Celanese Corp. of America and the Permacel Tape Corp. in New Jersey have been written into contracts by the CIO Textile Workers.

The 600 workers at Celanese Corp. in Newark will get 8c across the board, with hikes of 13c for four groups and 11c for five other groups who are members of Local 1166. Agreement on the new wage schedule came only an hour and a half before a strike deadline set by the local.

Workers at the Permacel plant in New Brunswick, N. J., won gains of 6c for some groups and as much as 20c for women employes, with 9c and 10c increases for those in the first six labor grades.

BY CONTRAST, an agreement to a wage cut of 5c an hour for 4000 workers of Goodall-Sanford Inc. at Sanford, Me., by the AFL Textile union has been branded as a "betrayal . . . of the interests of textile workers" by Sec.-Treas. John Chupka of the CIO Textile Workers.

Chupka, who also heads the union's woolen and worsted industry division, called the UTW-AFL's action "shameful and indefensible" in view of the fact that TWUA-CIO, pattern-setter for the industry, has held the line, without exception, against cuts in woolen and worsted wages.

He charged the UTW-AFL "jammed down the throats" of Goodall-Sanford workers a 1c cut in second shift premium pay and has also committed itself to a slash in individual job rates.

TWU Navigators Strike Airline

Some 90 navigators belonging to the CIO Transport Workers are on strike against the Trans World Airlines overseas flights, charging contract violation.

The dispute centered on the firm's decision to eliminate navigators on the Paris-Rome flights. The company complicated the issue by saying that all navigators who did not report for scheduled flights were discharged, a decision which led the union to state that it would not consider terminating the walkout.

Guild Strikes Seattle Daily

The walkout by editorial, advertising and circulation employes forced management to suspend publication immediately. The Times, with 212,000 circulation, is one of the largest dailies in the Far West.

The strike came some two and one-half months after the Guild local authorized strike action and U. S. mediators entered negotiations. Guild wage proposals were for a 7.3% general increase, with a $13 increase to $115 weekly for the key editorial minimum, plus numerous gains in working conditions.

NMU Ends Lake Tanker Tieup As ARA Gains On West Coast

SOME 500 seamen have won 2% to 6% general wage increases under a settlement of the CIO Maritime Union with six firms ending a strike on Great Lake tankers.

In addition to the wage increase, the settlement brought inclusion of the 10% seasonal bonus in the basic wage schedule.

Agreement was reached with five firms several hours after Sinclair Oil came to term with the strikers, who left their ships June 30.

The Sinclair agreement set the pattern for the five other firms. They are Standard Oil of Indiana, Texas Oil, Gulf Oil, the Lake Tankers Corp., and Cleveland Tanker Corp.

The increase put scales for wheelmen and oilers at $335 a month, watchmen and firemen $330, second cook $320, new crewmen without experience $260, steward $468 and pumpmen $383.

ON THE West Coast, the CIO Radio Association has won an agreement with the Pacific Maritime Association identical with a contract obtained earlier from East Coast dry cargo firms.

The pact provides undisputed jurisdiction of the radio officers over radio phones and their location in radio room. The radio officer will receive $10 monthly for handling ship business radiophone calls during regular watches.

Congress Prepares To Quit— Four-Fifths Of Work Undone

By MILTON PLUMB

WITH ONLY 20% of the skimpy legislative program they drew up last February completed, Republican leaders of the 83rd Congress last week agreed to step up their drive to adjourn July 31.

There now seems little chance that more than half of the program—at the most—will be completed this session, although originally announced plans called for completion of it all and adjournment "by no later than July 4."

When Pres. Eisenhower and GOP Congressional leaders agreed on 11 proposals and designated them "must legislation" for this session, one of the items listed—a bill continuing the President's power to reorganize the government — had already passed. In the six months since that time, only three of the 10 other goals have been realized.

Bitter internal disputes within Republican ranks and the unwillingness of large numbers of GOP congressmen to back the Eisenhower program are largely responsible for this failure.

In fact, except for the "tidelands" oil give-away, even those other parts of the program that have passed would have failed without Democratic support.

APPROPRIATIONS bills, a normal routine of government, are currently the biggest legislative logjam that must be broken before adjournment. The Republican legislative program called for all of them to reach the Senate "not later than May 15."

But Chairman Taber (R. N. Y.) of the House Appropriations Committee hired a staff of 75 "foremost business and management experts" to help him slash money bills for agencies they didn't like. As result, only 4 of the 13 regular money bills reached the Senate on schedule.

By late this week one major money bill still had not even cleared the House and two others still hadn't been reported to the Senate. Only one regular appropriations bill has become law, although the new fiscal year started July 1.

Apparently shelved for the rest of this session at least are GOP promises to enact Hawaiian statehood, amend the Taft-Hartley Act to make it "fairer" to labor, extend social security coverage, and give the District of Columbia two additional commissioners.

THREE of these "must" items never even got out of committee, and the Senate has bottled up the House-approved Hawaiian statehood measure.

Counting the oil give-away and the badly butchered bill continuing controls over scarce materials already enacted into law, only three items on the original legislative program have cleared both houses. The one still pending in conference is a one-year extension of the reciprocal trade law.

STILL GIVEN chance for action this session are measures for simplification of the customs laws and extension (although badly trimmed) of temporary aid to schools in critical areas. Congress will have to enact both of these to accomplish even half of the "must" program it set for itself at the start of the year.

More recently, the Republican Administration has been trying to get Congress to pass other measures before adjournment. These include bills to admit 240,000 anti-Communist refugees, to authorize U. S. participation with Canada in building the St. Lawrence Seeway, and to increase postal rates. Only the first two are given the remotest chance for action this year.

THE SENATE last week passed and the President signed the excess profits tax extension bill, another Administration "must" added to the original program.

Chairman Reed (R. N. Y.) of the House Ways and Means Committee had managed to bottle this up until late in the session.

House Puts Gag On The Voice

A cut of 31% in Pres. Eisenhower's request for overseas informational actvities, including the Voice of America, was voted last week by the House.

Eisenhower has asked for $87 million, but the House approved only $60 million. A Democratic moye to restore $20 million led by Rep. Rooney (D. N.Y.) was beaten by a vote of 155 to 102. Republicans generally opposed it.

Joint Labor Protests Hit Oak Ridge Rent Boosts

FOLLOWING PROTESTS by a joint CIO-AFL delegation from the government-owned atomic community of Oak Ridge, Tenn., the Senate last week told the Atomic Energy Commission flatly that it can't increase rents for its workers.

Not a single member of the Senate voted against the amendment to the AEC appropriations bill which upset the commission's plans to boost rents an average of 28% at all atomic energy installations. Introduced by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.), it forbids the commission to use any funds for its operations if rents at atomic centers are hiked above those in effect last June 30.

The Oak Ridge delegation, made up of the leaders of both branches of organized labor in the 8000-family community, said they intended to urge "the most drastic action necessary" to halt the rent increases scheduled for July 31. They called Oak Ridge, and other atomic communities, "the last company towns in America" because both the wage rate and rent are controlled by the same employer.

Included in the delegation were Emerson Pownall, president of Oak Ridge Local 288 of the CIO Chemical Workers; Pres. Jess Hamon of the AFL Atomic Trades and Labor Council. They were joined in Washington by Pres. Elwood P. Swisher and Vice Pres. Joseph Joy of the UGCCWA-CIO and Leo Goodman, assisting the Chemical Workers in legislative matters.

IN A JOINT statement, Pownall and Hamon called the scheduled AEC rent increase a "disguised wage cut" and predicted that it would "result in so much unrest that we do not guarantee the continued operation of the plant" at Oak Ridge.

"Even the Chamber of Commerce yesterday issued a statement regarding the critical housing shortage in Oak Ridge," they pointed out. "In the face of a $600 million expansion program, the failure of the government to assist the workers in securing adequate housing and the attempt to raise rents between 28% and 40% is scandalous. Government monopoly and control of housing should be ended."

CIO Urges Conferees' Okeh For Cordon Oil Measure

THE CIO called last week for renewed activity in the field to secure final congressional approval of the Cordon offshore oil bill.

Senate and House conferees begin committee sessions this week to reconcile conflicting versions of measures dealing with natural resources in the continental shelf, beyond the so-called tidelands.

The Senate bill, sponsored by Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.), would save five-sixths of the offshore oil, gas and mineral wealth for all the people. The Hill Amendment, earmarking the income for aid to education, is part of it.

The CIO rallied considerable support for its passage.

The House bill, for which the Senate substituted Cordon's measure, was passed in the flush of victory the big oil interests enjoyed immediately after passage of the tidelands give-away act. It opened the door to still further give-aways.

A STIFF FIGHT is predicted when seven-man committees representing each branch of Congress get together this week and try to come up with a compromise acceptable to House and Senate.

The House originally was represented by a five-man committee. When this was increased to seven members by the addition of one Republican and one Democrat, Minority Leader Rayburn selected Rep. Wilson (D. Tex.), a bitter foe of federal ownership of both tidelands and offshore resources.

Thomas Burke, CIO chief of congressional liaison, reminded international and local unions in the field that final approval of the Cordon Bill, rather than the House measure, will pour into the federal treasury billions of dollars that otherwise might be grabbed by powerful oil interests.

The Hill Amendment, he said, eventually will yield funds to replace outmoded schools, hire better teachers at decent salaries, and give more young people—especially the children of workers—better educations.

Strike Vote At Firestone

SOME 25,000 CIO Rubber Workers at eight plants or the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. last week were preparing to take a strike vote.

The company and the union have been meeting at Cleveland since June 23 in an effort to reach an agreement under a wage reopener. The URW Firestone Policy Committee last week called on the Firestone local unions to take strike votes after "three weeks of fruitless bargaining."

URW also is conducting wage reopener negotiations with two others of the Big Four rubber companies, Goodrich in Chicago, and Goodyear in Cleveland.

CIO Warns Senate On Jobless Pay Raid Bill, Asks Hearing

THE CIO Coordinator of Legislative Activities Robert Oliver last week asked the Senate Finance Committee to hold hearings on the House-approved bill by Rep. Reed (R. N.Y.) which undermines the federal system of social security.

"We would like to have the opportunity in such hearing to discuss our belief that this bill would not only adversely affect benefit levels, but would also affect employment opportunities in important states," Oliver wrote.

"IT WOULD, in addition, drastically change the financing of unemployment insurance and the employment service, perhaps paving the way for complete separation of the 51 different state systems from the present minor amount of federal coordination."

Oliver said that, as passed by the House, the measure is "contrary to two major recommendations" of the Eisenhower Administration. He pointed out that Treasury Undersecretary Marion B. Folsom specifically opposed provisions giving the states excess tax collections to use for administrative purposes and requiring the repayment of loans before a state has built up a sufficient reserve.

"If the members of the House had understood that these valid objections of the Eisenhower Administration had not been met, as claimed, the vote might have been substantially different," Oliver said.

"Precipitate action by the Senate, without full hearings, would be most unfortunate because of the harm that would be done to the unemployment insurance program and because of the damaging effect on proper democratic procedures."

Hoffman Gets Wings Clipped

Free-wheeling investigative powers of Chairman Hoffman (R. Mich.) of the House Government Operations Committee were clipped last week by the committee members.

The unit stripped Hoffman of all powers to set up his own special investigating subcommittees, such as the one he sent to Los Angeles recently. That unit looked into the California city's public housing dispute, just before the mayoralty election in which housing was a major issue.

Reading The Record On The First Six Months Of The GOP

A year ago, the Republicans were promising big to the American people. Six months ago—on the basis of those promises—the GOP Administration took over in Washington.

Here's a look at the past six months:

Performance	And Still Promises
1. A few big oil firms get the nation's coastal oil reserves.	1. Peace in Korea.
2. Utilities, lumbermen, stockmen reach for resources.	2. Lower taxes.
3. Inflation curbs killed; living costs at new peak.	3. A balanced budget.
4. Rent controls killed; public housing knifed.	4. To combat inflation.
5. Big business takes over in government agencies.	5. Better housing.
6. Chamber of Commerce drives to destroy Social Security by "pay-as-you-go" scheme.	6. Expanded Social Security.
7. Funds slashed for Labor Dept., social agencies.	7. Strengthened Labor Dept.
8. Foreign aid, defense funds slashed.	8. A fair labor-management law replacing Taft-Hartley.

Public Housing Gets The Ax

THE REPUBLICAN Congress has knocked the props out from under the low-rent public housing program, handing another big bonanza to tenement owners and landlords on top of the recent axing of federal rent ceilings.

Here is what happened:

1. House and Senate conferees agreed to limit the program to 20,000 units in 1954—not enough to finish those already started. Further, they provided that no new loan and annual contribution contracts can be entered into this year.

2. Rep. Phillips (R. Calif.), chairman of the House conferees, in reporting to the House gleefully declared that the action will liquidate the program—and condemn hundreds of thousands of low-income families to live out their lives in slums. Rep. Thomas (Tex.), ranking Democratic member, agreed.

3. The House, which originally had refused to grant any funds for the program, accepted the committee compromise. The Senate, which had voted for 35,000 units, was due to act this week and was expected to approve it.

Pres. Eisenhower, who in a campaign speech in Boston three days before the election said "we must have better housing for those Americans who are forced to live in slums and substandard dwellings," said nothing. He had asked for 35,000 units.

The CIO had asked Congress for 125,000 new units this year. Former Pres. Truman had proposed 75,000.

THUS ENDS the government's effort, set forth in the Housing Act of 1949, to give its least wealthy citizens and their children a chance to live as human beings and to protect them from slum-owning landlords who have been boosting rents wherever rent controls have been dropped.

The battle was lost in spite of a valiant fight in the committee by Rep. Yates (D. Ill.), who refused to sign the report. On the House floor, Rep. McCormack (D. Mass.), minority floor leader, and Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N. Y.), joined him in the losing battle.

The bill also bailed out the city of Los Angeles, where the real estate lobby ganged up on the City Council and browbeat it into halting two large projects already under way. The settlement will cost the taxpayers $5 to $6 millions for the architects' fees and other costs on the abandoned projects.

Reuther Speaks At Labor Day Rally In Akron

Tentative plans are being made for national radio and TV broadcasts of Reuther's address. The rally is sponsored by the Akron CIO Council.

Upwards of 25,000 are expected to attend the affair in Summit Beach Park, Akron.

Small Business Bill Criticized As A 'Phony'

ECONOMY-MINDED senators last week voted to kill off a 21-year-old government agency—then created a new one to take its place.

The Reconstruction Finance Corp., established more than two decades ago during a Republican administration, would be abolished. In its stead, a new small business lending agency will be established.

Passage of the bill—described by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) as "a purely phony political move"—came after Pres. Eisenhower in a letter had asked for approval.

The CIO opposed ending the RFC, which made loans to smaller business firms, often when credit was not available from other sources.

SEN. SPARKMAN (D. Ala.) said the new legislation was "drawn in haste" and that it "would have been better to have taken time to really explore this field." He said he supported the bill only because of the possibility that the country would have no government agency to help small business.

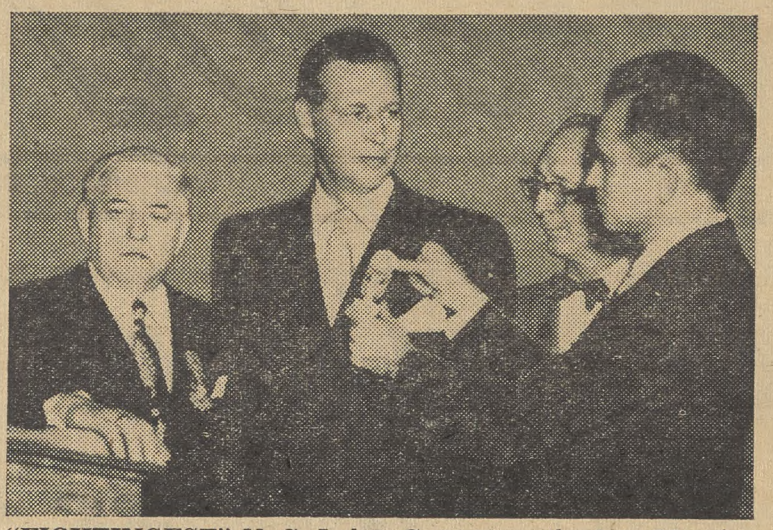
A defense of the RFC was offered by Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.) who pointed out the agency showed a profit of $650 million over 20 years. Maybank's amendment was adopted making $25 million available for loans to municipalities, primarily for public works.

The newly-created agency would have a revolving fund of $300 million on which to operate. Of this, $150 million would be earmarked for loans to small business, with a ceiling of $200,000 on each loan.

SEN. HUMPHREY (D. Minn.) contended that "you're not going to have much friendship for small business" with Treasury Sec. George M. Humphrey and Commerce Sec. Sinclair Weeks on the governing board of the new agency. Both Cabinet members are big businessmen.

Sec. Humphrey had indicated previously that he hoped only 10% would be straight government loans. The Senate bill says the agency must try to get banks to share the loans wherever possible.

CIO Mourns Former Sec. Tobin As 'Staunch Friend' Of Workers



"FIGHTINGEST" U. S. Labor Secretary, the late Maurice J. Tobin (center), receives honorary badge from CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey at 1953 CIO convention. Tobin addressed seven CIO conventions. Others in group are the late Allan S. Haywood (left) and Pres. O. A. (Jack) Knight of the CIO Oil Workers.

MAURICE J. Tobin, secretary of labor in former Pres. Truman's cabinet from 1948 until the Republicans took office, died suddenly of a heart attack last week at his summer home at Scituate, Mass.

The one-time "boy wonder" of Massachusetts politics was 52 when death ended a career marked by steadfast devotion to the interests of the great mass of Americans and firm friendship for working men and women.

He had been a favorite speaker at National CIO Conventions, including the last. He also was greatly in demand as a speaker at the conventions of CIO international unions.

The great and the small, including Truman and Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin, crowded Boston's Cathedral of the Holy Cross for the funeral services.

THE CIO was represented by a committee consisting of Vice Presidents Emil Rieve, Joseph A. Beirne and Frank Rosenblum and Robert Oliver, executive assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The CIO's regrets were cabled from Europe by Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

"The CIO learned of the untimely death of Maurice J. Tobin with shock and deep sense of personal loss," said Reuther.

"In his earlier career in Massachusetts as well as in his more recent public service in Washington, he was always a staunch friend of American working men and women.

"HE WAS a courageous advocate of their interests, fighting everlastingly against reactionary efforts to take away labor's gains. His record makes clear even today that he belongs to history as one of our greatest secretaries of labor."

He also cabled Mrs. Tobin that "words are inadequate to express the deep sense of loss the CIO and its officers feel."

"American workers and their families have lost a true friend and courageous advocate," he said.

Carey extended "heartfelt condolences" to Mrs. Tobin.

"Probably more than any other man in public life, Maurice Tobin was sincerely and selflessly dedicated to economic justice for the wage earner and the common man," he wrote.

In a message to the family, Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers, wrote that American textile workers "had no better friend in public life" than Tobin.

SEC.-TREAS. Al Hartnett extended the sympathies of the CIO Electrical Workers. Tobin had been a speaker at each convention the IUE-CIO has held.

Tobin, son of immigrant Irish parents, entered politics as a Massachusetts State representative in 1927. He was elected to the Boston School Committee in 1931, was reelected in 1935.

He defeated James M. Curley for mayor of Boston in 1937, gave him another licking in 1941, and in 1944 was elected governor of Massachusetts. He became secretary of labor in August 1948.

Tobin Told CIO—

'Past Gains Are In Peril, Labor Must Unite Now'

Maurice J. Tobin's last major address as secretary of labor was given before the National CIO convention at Atlantic City on Dec. 1, 1952. He paid tribute as a friend of the CIO to former CIO Pres. Philip Murray, called for support for the then President-elect Eisenhower, and declared the GOP victory was "not a mandate to tear down the great edifice of social reform built up under the New Deal and the Fair Deal." On labor unity he said:

THE PAST GAINS of American working men and women are in jeopardy. Their future progress is in doubt. This is a time to close ranks and present a united front against labor's enemies. This is a time, more than any other, for unity in the American labor movement.

There are two mighty federations working for the same objectives, representing the same kind of working people, fighting the same enemies, harassed by the same problems and dedicated to the same ideals.

They cannot afford to remain divided. They cannot afford to fight each other while their common enemy grows powerful at their expense. They cannot afford to lose in selfishness and bickering the gains they have won through heroic struggle.

MOST IMPORTANT of all, they cannot afford to turn their backs on the unorganized. Millions of American workers are desperately in need of the benefits of trade unionism. They need the wages and the security and the dignity that unions can bring them. They need these things, and the nation needs them too.

One of the best guarantees against a depression is a labor force of working men and women whose wages keep pace with the cost of living and their own productivity.

Only thus can they buy the goods they produce, and only through collective bargaining can the wages of most of them make the prompt adjustment to economic change that is necessary to keep our private enterprise economy strong and stable.

The millions of unorganized workers are a perpetual challenge to the trade unions of this country. While they remain outside the fold of the labor movement, the unions have no moral right to dissipate their strength and energy on internal conflict.

U. S. Rubber Plants Put On Block

THE SENATE last week passed a bill directing the Reconstruction Finance Corp. to sell 28 government-owned synthetic rubber plants, built during the war, which in 1952 earned the taxpayers the equivalent of $62 million before taxes.

It acted after defeating amendments proposed by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) aimed at safeguarding against monopoly by restricting the number of plants to be sold to one buyer.

However, Chairman Capehart (R. Ind.) of the Banking Committee, which handled the legislation, accepted an amendment by Sen. Maybank (D. S. C.) requiring the Attorney General to agree that any sale does not violate anti-trust laws. He also accepted another Maybank amendment extending the sale deadline from July 1, 1954, to Mar. 2, 1955.

THE BILL sets up a three-man commission, appointed by the President, to draw up a disposal plan, advertise for bids and negotiate sales, then report to Congress for approval before a sale would become final. It contains safeguards to assure the production of synthetic rubber for the government during emergencies.

The anti-trust safeguards are not strong enough, Douglas contended. He claimed the sale might lead to a monopoly by the Big Four—Firestone, Goodyear, Goodrich and U. S. Rubber—or by what he called the "Big Four and a Half," the same firms plus General Tire & Rubber.

"What I am very much afraid of," he said, "in view of the favored position of these companies, is that we shall get competitive bidding for the plants, and that instead they shall be transferred to existing operators at prices far below their fair value and under circumstances which will increase monopoly and control by a few of the raw products used by fabricators."

The plants are owned by the RFC and operated by private industry. They cost the public $518 million.

Cost of GOP Living Sets All-Time Record

THE COST OF LIVING, climbing for the fourth consecutive month, set a new all-time high record in June, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The Consumer's Price Index advanced four-tenths of 1% between the middle of May and the middle of June, the BLS said, to 114.5, or two-tenths of 1% above the previous high reached last November. The new figure is 1.5% higher than in June 1952, and 12.5% above the level of June 1950, just before the outbreak of hostilities in Korea.

Food prices, on the rise since March, led the way to the new high with a 1.4% increase. Fruit and vegetable costs soared 5.6%, reflecting boosts of 8% for fresh fruits and 10% for fresh vegetables. Meats, poultry and fish jumped 1.9%, with pork and lamb prices in the van.

Further increases in retail food prices were indicated in the continued climb of the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index, which rose 1c in the week ended July 21 to $6.75. The new figure is 2.4% above the level a year ago of $6.59 and the highest since $6.77 was reached on Oct. 16, 1951.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index:

Billion Dollar Give-Away On Atomic Energy Rapped

THE CIO charged last week that the proposed "multi-billion dollar give-away of atomic know-how" to private industry "may dwarf the combined value of all previous and other proposed give-aways of our country's national resources."

"There is, of course, no accurate way of assessing how many tens of billions of dollars this know-how represents, nor how much additional money from the American taxpayer will be necessary to enable private industry to exploit fully these advantages.

"It is a virtual certainty, however, that the possible future value of these acquisitions, which private industry wishes to monopolize, would make the tidelands oil give-away look like a bargain-basement transaction."

SIGAL urged the committee to retain intact the 1946 Atomic Energy Act and to oppose proposed legislation which would permit ownership and operation of nuclear power facilities by private interests. The proposal also would permit sale or lease of fissionable materials, and grant more liberal patent rights than are presently granted to private persons.

Sigal, who is counsel for the CIO Electrical Workers, appeared on behalf of CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is IUE-CIO president. Carey is in Europe.

Also testifying was Elwood D. Swisher, president of the CIO Chemical Workers, representing workers in the atomic energy industry.

Swisher sharply criticized the Atomic Energy Commission, charging it is using security "to bamboozle the public, misrepresent the facts to Congress, and pose as virtuous angels in the realm of publicity they pour on the American people."

DESPITE shortcomings of the AEC, he said, the union wants "primary focus on the public interest." He backed the National CIO position for continued government control over the program.

Sigal defended progress of atomic energy development under the control and supervision of the Atomic Energy Commission. He said that the CIO believes "there is no reasonable basis for asserting that the act, in its present form, does not permit the widest possible development of the potentialities of atomic energy."

The CIO spokesman pointed out that "most of those who support the proposed amendments attempt to create the impression that if private industry were permitted to participate in the atomic energy program on the basis of private ownership of facilities and materials, privately owned power reactors would spring up as soon as they could be built."

"In every case it was stipulated that the federal government should put up the bulk of the money involved for either a pilot plant or a fullscale plant, would actively participate in research and development, and would guarantee these brave entrepreneurs against any loss."

"Finally," Sigal continued, "putting a frosting on the cake, these free-enterprisers want the benefit of the patents which they would be able to develop after acquiring all the knowledge available from the Atomic Energy Commission."

SIGAL also emphasized that practically all atomic energy facilities are now operated by private industry.

"Indeed, this manufacture is concentrated in the hands of only a few firms like General Electric Co., DuPont, Union Carbide, and Monsanto.

"Indeed, the CIO is firmly of the opinion that the AEC should never have begun this process of delegating its production responsibility. We believe that the public welfare demands public operation, as well as public ownership, of the atomic energy industry."

Dewey's Private Hearing On Niagara Power Is Protested

A VIGOROUS protest against the appearance of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey in closed session before the Senate public works committee was issued this week by the CIO. CIO also opposed the exclusion of opposition witnesses.

The Senate group has reopened hearings on the controversial Niagara River power development. The House earlier voted 262-120 to let five private utilities company exploit the river's power potential.

New York's Governor wants the power project handled by a State agency. When senators agreed to hear him behind closed doors, CIO launched its protest and demanded an opportunity to offer testimony of its own.

"THERE would seem to be no possible warrant . . . for hearing any witness on an issue as important as the Niagara River public power project in an off-the-record session," John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers wrote to Chairman Martin (R. Pa.) of the Senate committee.

The CIO protested "bringing in a big-name witness in this peculiar manner." Thomas H. Burke, CIO chief of congressional liaison, asked Martin for time in which to present CIO testimony.

The five utility companies meanwhile drew fire from another quarter. Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) spurred an investigation by the Internal Revenue Bureau and the Justice Dept. to see if lobbying costs have been deducted from the firms' taxes or whether federal lobbying laws have been violated. Roosevelt is an advocate of federal development of the Niagara power potential.

CIO Board Meet Set For Aug. 20

The next meeting of the CIO Executive Board will be held Aug. 20 in Washington, it was announced by the office of Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

2 CIO Unions Urge Ike To Back School Aid

LEADERS of two CIO unions asked Pres. Eisenhower last week to use his influence to persuade Senate and House conferees on the Cordon Bill to accept the "oil for the lamps of learning" amendment sponsored by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.).

The Cordon Bill, a follow-up on the off-shore oil give-away, gives the federal government full authority over natural resources in the continental shelf beyond the off-shore limits, which range from three to 10.5 miles seaward.

The conferees reportedly have bogged down on the Hill Amendment, which was acted on only by the Senate. It earmarks federal royalties from billions of dollars worth of oil, gas and other resources for educational purposes.

The pleas to Eisenhower were voiced by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers and by the top officers of the CIO Rubber Workers—Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs and Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker. The URW-CIO officers also asked Undersecretary of Health, Education & Labor Nelson Rockefeller for his active support.

"CWA-CIO favors the Cordon Bill as amended in the Senate," Beirne wrote the President. "In our opinion there is no finer way to assure a better America than to see that the educational needs of its young people are adequately met."

The URW-CIO officers asked Eisenhower and Rockefeller "to actively support" the Hill Amendment "on behalf of our greatest national resource, the millions of American school children."

MANY of the deplorable conditions existing in much of our school system in terms of facilities and in low salaries paid to teachers will be alleviated by passage of his measure," they contended.

"Enactment of the Hill Amendment will be a great stride forward in insuring the perpetuation of a vigorous, dynamic democracy in years to come."

It's Summertime On Capitol Hill

AN "OLD CHINA HAND" in the House is Walter H. Judd, Minnesota Republican who used to be a medical missionary in the Far East.

Up to now, his congressional service has been marked by frequent and strong expression of his views on the situation in Asia, Formosa, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, etc.

Judd took another tack the other day, as Washington simmered through a typical hot spell of summertime on the Potomac.

As the House debated the Administration's foreign information program, and plans to take it out of the State Dept. and set up a separate agency, Judd rose in a moment of candor to say:

"I don't oppose bathing beauties. I like 'em."

On the beaches at home, presumably, but not in U. S. propaganda films overseas, the Minnesota lawmaker continued. He objected specifically to a Voice of America propaganda film sent to the Moslem Middle East—the land of the veil, you know—which included shots of bathing beauties.

Judd allowed that the people responsible for such films—if they are still around—should be given the boot.

He also predicted the press would report his remarks under the headline: "Former Missionary Opposes Bathing Girls." (Editor's note: we won't.)

Consequently the GOP Congressman exercised the lawmakers' rights to alter, censor, delete and expurgate the Congressional Record, and not a word of his remarks appeared in the next day's issue

Playing With Fire

The bookkeeping figures which the Republican 83rd Congress substitute for facts about the world of 1953 stood out sharply last week as the House cut gleefully away from funds for America's anti-Communist allies abroad while the Senate chopped into funds for U. S. military defense.

The GOP theory behind the twin moves was indicated in the report by Rep. Taber's (R. N. Y.) House Appropriations Committee accompanying a cut by more than $1.1 billions from funds requested by Pres. Eisenhower.

Strength against communism, according to the report of Rep. Taber, can come "only from a balanced budget and a sound economy."

The President himself challenged the Taber school of international relations. With the Eisenhower budget request already reduced from the previous Truman Administration proposal, the President said bluntly that the further House Committee cut on mutual aid funds is too heavy on the basis of national security.

The same danger to national security also can be charged to the bookkeeping methods by which the Administration has moved to cut U. S. defense funds, with virtually all of the slash aimed at the Air Force.

The facts about the world situation are plain: There is no armistice, let alone peace, yet in Korea. There is no relaxation of Soviet militarism. There is no halt in the world-wide Communist assault on freedom.

The answer, as Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) reminded bookkeeping-minded senators, is to "have a defense second to none instead of going around asking ourselves can we save another dollar."

Through The Looking Glass

"We're experts in hindsight," said Sen. Humphrey during the defense fund debate. "Nobody in the world has more vision in the rear than the Congress."

An Old Friend Is Gone

Now Maurice J. Tobin is dead, and American labor has lost one of its best friends in public life within months after the deaths of three of our own leaders, Philip Murray, Allan Haywood and William Green.

Ever since he was Governor of Massachusetts and through his years as Secretary of Labor, Tobin was an old friend of the CIO. Each year, the National CIO convention heard him with applause and respect, as when he voiced his urgent plea at Atlantic City for real labor unity.

Tobin has been called the "fightingest" of U. S. Labor Secretaries. Labor remembers him as the staunchest of supporters when the going was tough.

Fair Play In Congress

Throughout the present sessions, both House and Senate members have voiced increasingly support for reforms in investigating procedures, to end the present abuses.

Now Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) has suggested 10 "fair play" rules to guide committee inquiries. Their adoption would restore respect for the investigating powers properly belonging to Congress.

Question

"What's the matter with us?" asked Rep. Reed (R. N. Y.) "Can't we do better than Mr. Truman? We said we would."

No Bat For A Heavy Hitter

In Other Words—

The Answer Must Come From Ike

The breakdown of the U. S. alliance with free European nations against Communist aggression is detailed in this editorial, digested from The Commonweal, weekly Catholic magazine of opinion:

THE WESTERN ALLIANCE is today like a half-finished building which the contractor has abandoned. Occasionally a mason comes along to put in a few more bricks. A handy-man has thrown a tarpaulin over a pile of lumber. But the rain sweeps through the paneless windows, the naked rafters are warping, and the nails rust.

This nation debated last summer over where it was going. We decided, according to the election returns, to continue erecting our alliance, to continue to strengthen it, and to look into the possibility of helping some of the East Europeans to free themselves from Soviet domination.

Now, nine months later, we are in an appreciably weaker position than we were during the paralyzed last months of the Truman Administration.

Our closest associates in the governments of France, Italy and Germany have been hurt. We have passively watched the East German attempt to liberate itself. We have, all of us, by ignoring the implications of all that Syngman Rhee has been saying for three years, got ourselves into a cruel dilemma in Korea, the solution to which is invisible at this writing.

Aid Our Own Undoing

The blame is not wholly ours. But we cannot avoid the fact that we Americans have contributed prodigally to our own undoing, and as yet give no sign of bringing an end to this masochistic passivity of ours.

We Americans have done nothing to counter the Russian peace offensive. Churchill tried singly, and perhaps unwisely, to meet it with four-power negotiations. Consequently, neutralism got a shot in the arm, and revived in Europe to a popularity it has not enjoyed since before the attack in Korea. Neutralism weakened DeGasperi in Italy and brought to power in France a government resolutely pledged to do nothing of any consequence. Neutralism boomed in Germany and only the riots there countered it—again we thank Soviet stupidity for helping us out of trouble.

We have squabbled over the value of economic assistance. We have discredited our information services and burnt our books, making ourselves look like buffoons with totalitarian inclinations. We have failed to liberalize our trade policies—are, in fact, on the verge of stiffening them. We have not liberalized our immigration laws. We cut our military appropriations.

When the East German riots took place, we made newsreels of them, and advised "prudence." We followed with a weak demand for free elections. We ignored the opportunity for real diplomatic attack, for a powerful high-level demand that East Germans be given their basic political rights, that the will of the East German people be heard.

What We Have Lost

The sum of it all is that we have lost prestige, have lost initiative, and consequently have lost leadership; and it is now a case of every man for himself.

One may say that if Europe does not have enough fortitude to hold up when the going gets tough, then we should go it alone. But the whole revolutionary alliance of the West has been the work of a few men with vision, building on the inarticulate yearning for union and security which undeniably exists among the common people of the West.

The responsibility now lies on a few—the few who lead the United States of America. American leadership can rejuvenate the alliance, and find new policies to meet the emerging shape of the opportunities and challenges of the future. But leadership is now absent. An internationalist president is trying to make international policy with the cooperation of an isolationist-nationalist majority in Congress.

For six months we have seen Mr. Eisenhower's policies strangled, blocked and compromised by Congress. Congress was elected by the people; but Mr. Eisenhower was also elected by the people—on a platform and in a spirit which is now being demolished by the dominant Republicans in Congress.

The answer can come from only one place—the White House. The responsibility is there, as inescapable and inevitable as the summer air, heavy with heat, ominous and demanding.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THREE WEEKS AGO hopeful pro-Eisenhower newspapers began running editorials demanding "leadership" from the President during what they called the "showdown" period before the July 31 scheduled adjournment of Congress.

Patronage

Wisecrackers in Washington, observing the Eisenhower Administration's orders stripping civil service protection from more than 100,000 "Schedule A" jobholders, call the process: "Improving the merit system by eliminating it."

The question now is whether Mr. Eisenhower will abandon "leadership" for 1953 or force a genuine "showdown" by insisting that Congress stay in session to complete its necessary business.

Late in the session, the bill proposing extension of the reciprocal trade law was stuck in conference committee. The House wanted a seventh (Republican member authorized to "pack" the Tariff Commission with "protectionist" ideas, and the Senate was resisting.

Rep. Reed (R. N. Y.), ruler of the conference committee, flatly refused to call any more meetings until the Senate agreed to surrender.

Mr. Eisenhower's contribution in this crisis was to confess, at a press conference, that he hadn't realized how controversial this seventh Tariff Commission member was. It has been represented to him, he said, that with a six-member commission, equally divided between Democrats and Republicans, decisions couldn't be made. He really did not care whether one member was added or one member subtracted.

In short, he didn't care how the commission was "packed"—whether by adding a new protectionist Republican or subtracting a free-trade Democrat. And he didn't comprehend that free-traders would make a "controversial" issue of either type of "packing."

A conservative Democrat, Sen. Pat McCarran (Nev.) was the obstacle to the President's request for 240,000 European immigrants above present quotas. McCarran, 75-year-old son of Irish immigrant parents, delayed action in the Senate Judiciary Committee by literally hanging around outside the committee-room door in hope that his absence would block a quorum.

A Belated 'Must' List

The President belatedly put on his "must" list of bills a measure to raise postal rates. A Senate committee refused to consider the proposition unless and until the House acted favorably—and informed congressional staff members predicted that the bill would not even get through the House committee.

The alleged "showdown" between the White House and Congress was at the point of admitted crisis. But there wasn't a chance that Congress would give the President all he wanted, or even the scaled-down most recent "must" list, before the July 31 adjournment date.

A truly terrifying backlog of work already confronts the next session of Congress in 1954—revision of taxes, expansion of Social Security, a new farm program, another reciprocal trade pact fight, Taft-Hartley revision, statehood for Hawaii.

Trial Balloons On U. S. Debt

There is trouble for Ike in Sen. Byrd's sudden indignant statement that he would fight any 1953 Administration proposal to raise the permissible public debt limit above $275 billion.

Byrd spoke out of conviction and principle. His tidy conservative Virginia soul was shocked when he discovered that Mr. Eisenhower's Republican Treasury Secretary, George Humphrey, was floating trial balloons to see if he could get the debt limit lifted.

Humphrey, now commonly known as the "strong man" in Ike's Cabinet, is desperately frightened about the fiscal situation. This part of the year is a period of relatively low federal tax receipts, while the military spending program is hitting high gear.

Byrd's own calculations indicated that, although the public debt is now above $272 billion, Humphrey and Ike could hold down spending the rest of this year so that the $275 billion limit would not be violated.

A New Theory Of Law

When Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam testified before the House un-American Activities Committee, Robert L. Kunzig Jr., committee counsel, announced a new doctrine in American jurisprudence —the "guilt by retroactivity" doctrine.

Bishop Oxnam, a distinguished Methodist clergyman who has been smeared for years, testified that he had served only a few months in 1943 as a "trustee" of a Massachusetts Council for Soviet-American Friendship. He quit because he suspected that Communists were running it, and refused to become a national trustee.

Five years later the Attorney General called the Soviet-American Friendship Council a "subversive" group—and Committee Counsel Kunzig insisted, in public hearings on Oxnam, "that's retroactive." You're guilty of subversion, that is, even though you suspected in 1943 that Communists were running something and pulled out.

We've had "guilt by association" and "guilt by accusation." Now we have "guilt by retroactivity."

Dwight David Eisenhower in 1945—two years after the Oxnam experiences—sent a message to the Soviet-American Friendship Council praising its objectives and asserting that the American-Soviet friendship was a necessary "cornerstone for building the peace." Does that make Ike subversive by retroactivity?

New Round Of Gas Price Boosts Knifes Through U. S. Economy

By Public Affairs Institute

RECENT PRICE increases on gasoline may not have rated many newspaper headlines but they have resulted in House committee hearings on whether the increases were necessary.

Chairman Charles A. Wolverton (R. N. J.) of the House Committee on Interstate Commerce says he intends to find out "why gasoline and oil prices should go up just at this time, when commodity prices generally are soft and reflect a firming up of the purchasing power of the dollar . . ."

Cost of the increase to American users of petroleum products is tremendous. It is estimated that it will cost them $353 million the next six months. On the basis of normal use, it is expected to cost them $750 million more annually.

This will affect millions of consumers including drivers of passenger autos, farmers, bus companies, freight trucking companies, barge companies and airlines. It will increase the cost of the national defense program, manufacturing and heating of homes. It knifes straight through our economy.

Oil Production At Peak

The House committee is hearing from representatives of leading oil companies and consumer groups in an effort to learn if the increases were dictated by a few powerful oil companies.

On the surface the increases appear unjustified. Oil experts agree that the country has the highest reserves in history, record rates of production, heavy inventories of petroleum products and access to large foreign supplies.

It is also noteworthy that production exceeds demand by 400,000 barrels daily and production capacity exceeds current rates of production by a million barrels a day.

Why, then, has the oil industry advanced prices? This is the question the House committee is seeking to answer. The committee, in announcing the hearings, said it had received many complaints relating to the series of gasoline and fuel oil price increases.

The committee also said that the price increases "follow a period of successive cutbacks in the amount of production allowed, and . . . at the very time that stringent reduction of oil imports is being urged."

Among the factors in the increases which the committee will seek to uncover:

"The new wage contract was retroactive to three years ago."

1. Do the increased prices result from the operation of the normal market forces or do they result from other causes?
2. Was an invitation issued for some one else to start these price increases by our biggest oil company?
3. When one company initiated a price increase why did all of the others follow so quickly? Was this an expression of free competition?
4. In what way do the sustained high earnings of the oil companies show a need for price increase to meet rising costs?

U. S. Regulation Urged

The first witness at the hearing was the chairman of a committee of the Michigan State Legislature investigating the increase of petroleum product prices in its state. He said that "the people of Michigan are very much alarmed at the ever-increasing price increases and certainly want to know when they are going to stop."

Rep. Heselton (R. Mass.) has introduced a bill which would create a National Petroleum Commission. It would have power to regulate all segments of the petroleum industry, including refining, distribution and sale, in such a manner as the commission "should deem necessary for the protection of the national security and economy."

The hearings will seek to determine if the increases are justified or whether it will be necessary to regulate the industry in the public interest along lines proposed by the Massachusetts Congressman.

A Big Job Ahead—

A Look At The Labor Press

THE LABOR PRESS in the United States has come a long way since eight shoemakers in Philadelphia were convicted of "criminal conspiracy" in 1806 because they formed a union to seek higher wages and since the first ferment of unionism in the Eighteen Thirties was reflected in the initial labor weeklies.

The labor press has come a long way—particularly in the last two decades, with the growth of industrial unionism and the CIO. But it still has a long, long way to go, toward helping to accomplish the job that CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has called "unionizing the organized."

Such are the conclusions implicit in the latest, full-dress survey of the state of the labor press, as reported by Ben Pearse, a Washington free-lance writer, in a recent issue of The Nation magazine.

Pearse finds the quantitative growth of the labor press impressive: At least 174 papers for the members of 174 national and international unions, another 90-odd state and city CIO and AFL council publications, an indeterminate number of local publications, all told a possible 800 papers with an estimated circulation (in some cases overlapping) of 20 to 30 millions.

The real growth of the labor press, Pearse says, came during the great organizing drives which paralleled the New Deal.

"With the establishment of the CIO," he notes, came the various technical news-photo-feature services which improved the quality of labor papers. And while "organization of the unorganized and improvements in wages and working conditions were the main themes, labor's interests broadened to include health, social security, welfare, education and politics in a big way."

Pearse points out that the CIO Newspaper Guild "probably deserves credit for the widespread improvement in the format and content" of labor papers, noting that "newspapermen who had paid little or no attention to labor organizations suddenly became intensely interested, contributing time and experience to the avalanche of newspapers and pamphlets that deluged the unorganized."

The survey mentions The CIO News, Steel Labor, Union Voice, and the AFL's News-Reporter, The Machinist and San Francisco Labor, and Labor of the railroad brotherhoods, among others, as newspapers seeking to improve the quality of the labor press. Labor Press Associated also is singled out for praise.

A Continuing Task

Summing it up, Pearse finds that "there are still too many pages of solid type and too many pictures of officials shaking hands, but the trend is toward attractive format, better typography, and content tailored to the interests of the individual union member."

Still ahead—and never to be completed—is the continuing job of "unionizing the organized," of fully informing the nation's 15-million union members of the national and worldwide economic and political issues which are part of the picture when the boss says "no" to a 15c hourly wage increase.

Just one example, cited by Pearse: A survey by Princeton Univ. of a large New Jersey plant found (1) company publications were more widely read than that of the union and (2) more than half of the members interviewed didn't know whether their union was for or against the Taft-Hartley Act.

That's an indication of the job still ahead.

Potofsky Predicts—

'ICFTU Rally Hastens Soviet Breakup'

THE SIGNIFICANT role of free labor in the breakup of Soviet tyranny was demonstrated to the whole world at the third congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers said after conclusion of the sessions in Stockholm.

Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International and Latin American Affairs Committees, was one of the CIO delegates to the world parley.

"Decisions made by the congress," he said, "will hasten the reconstruction of a democratic world from Berlin east just as the inspiration and support of free labor has weakened the foundations of Soviet tyranny in East Germany and the other satellite despotisms.

Working Together

"For Americans, there is reason to take pride in the harmonious relationship established at the congress between the CIO, the AFL, the Mine Workers, the railroad brotherhoods and the Canadian labor movement.

"The unity and good will and close cooperation that prevailed among the North American union representatives made it possible for all of them to make an important contribution to the extension of democracy and the principle of free unionism around the world.

"As a result of the broadened representation on the ICFTU executive board, which has given underdeveloped countries a new voice in the affairs of the ICFTU, we can look forward to an enormously strengthened organizational and educational program among the people of the world who need it most."

CANDID CAMERAMAN O. A. (Jack) Knight, president of CIO Oil Workers, smiles as he prepares for a shot at ICFTU congress. At left is CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg.

FLAGS of many nations surrounded the mikes as Paul Finet, first ICFTU president and now with Schuman Plan Coal & Steel High Authority, addressed delegates at Stockholm congress.

The congress did far more work than was indicated by the wide publicity given its financial and moral aid to East German strikers, its campaign against totalitarianism, and its revamping of the constitution and election of a new president.

It took a look at a three-year experimental, worldwide organizing campaign, pronounced it a success, and voted to call on affiliates for contributions to a new Regional Activities Fund to permit the continuance of "this all-important aspect of the ICFTU's work."

To make the work more effective, it also asked affiliates to make available trained personnel from their staffs for organizing on a regional basis.

Fighting Campaign

As part of the drive, a "large scale fighting" campaign will be waged in Latin America under the leadership of the ICFTU's Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT). It will be aimed at combating Argentine Dictator Peron's ATLAS fascist labor organization, at encircling the Communist - dominated Confederation Trabajadores de America Latina (CTAL), and at breaking up the reactionary forces that stand in the way of the general advancement of Latin American workers.

The CIO contributed $100,000 to the original fund. Other large contributions came from the Canadian Congress of Labor, British Trades Union Congress and German Federation of Labor. The CIO is now raising money from its member-unions for a Free World Labor Fund to help labor movements in other countries.

Economic Proposals

The congress also adopted a program to improve living standards throughout the world after speeches stressing its necessity by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany.

The program includes free world support for a United Nations economic development fund from which grants-in-aid and low-interest, long-term loans can be made to help industrialize underdeveloped nations; an ICFTU campaign for minimum wage standards throughout the world, an accompanying campaign to secure equal pay for equal work for women, and a third to secure adequate social security legislation in colonies and dependent territories.

In addition, it proposed an international drive for higher wages, and the creation of machinery for Europe-wide standards of pensions, health care and other social benefits so workers can move freely from one country to another.

The congress instructed Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek to explore the possibility of a method for transferring the union membership of an immigrant worker from his old country to the new as part of an over-all migration program.

In other actions, the delegates:

Paid tribute to the memories of Farhat Hached, Tunisian labor leader and ICFTU board member, murdered in the fight for Tunisian freedom; Tomas Centeno, Spanish union leader murdered by Franco's police, and to all men and women slain behind the Iron Curtain.

Pointed to the need for social and economic reforms in Kenya in dealing justly with the Mau Mau problem.

White Supremacy Hit

Supported African workers resisting the British government's attempt forcibly to federate their areas into a white-dominated Central African federation.

Expressed abhorrence of Malan white supremacy policies in South Africa and pledged support in the fight against the "monstrous evil of racism."

Greeted all persons jailed or put into forced labor camps by Communist and fascist dictatorships.

Called on affiliates to urge their governments to provide the Intl. Labor Organization with the money it needs, and to defend it against continuing employer attacks.

CIO Delegates See Europe, Israel After Stockholm Meet

DELEGATES of the CIO to the world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions fanned out to all parts of Europe after the Stockholm sessions.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Vice Pres. James Thimmes of the Steelworkers attended meetings of the Intl. Metalworkers Federation in Stockholm before leaving the Swedish capital. Reuther planned a series of meetings with labor and political leaders in Germany, Switzerland, Italy, France and Austria before returning home.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers and Sec. Michael Ross of the CIO International Committee went from Stockholm to Finland as guests of the Finnish labor movement.

Carey planned to fly to Greece for conferences with union leaders on intensive educational and organizing campaigns, then rejoin Quill in Israel for more meetings at the invitation of Histadrut, the Israel labor body.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, who also is chairman of the CIO International Committee, intended to confer with leaders of clothing and textile unions in Denmark and Italy.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers and Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers met with the Intl. Chemical Workers Federation in Brussels, and met with union leaders of their industries in France and Italy.

A Union Man For 30 Years —That's New ICFTU Chief

THE NEW president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, Omer Becu, is a sturdy, middle-aged man whose trade union career began more than 30 years ago, when he went into the Belgian merchant marine as a radio operator.

Almost immediately he began the climb that led to his new office. He became active in the Belgian Seaman's Union, soon rose to become head of the Dockers Federation.

His interest in developing cooperation among seamen and dock workers around the world led him into the activities of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation, the international trade secretariat of unions concerned with every phase of transportation.

He served it as president, and took over as general secretary when J. H. Oldenbroek, of the Netherlands, resigned to become general secretary of the then fledgling ICFTU, where the two will once more work closely together.

Hail To Thee, Ohio State—

Senate Rock-Throwers Send Profs To Storm Cellar

THERE'S NOT a Communist "in a carload" on the faculty of Ohio State Univ. Judging from appearances, the teaching staff at Ohio State is among the most conservative in the country.

But now even conservative teachers on this campus and others are showing deep concern about psychological scars left upon teachers by congressional investigators.

TWENTY professors at Ohio State were asked about congressional investigations of teaching on their campus. The questions were put to them by the "Ohio State University Monthly," alumni magazine, and the promise was made that their names would not be revealed.

Almost unanimously, the professors were opposed to the methods and results of congressional inquisitions on college campuses.

Professor "A" said: "(In) economics, history, political science and allied subjects . . . only a damned fool would be so stupid at this juncture as to express his honest, balanced judgment on any matter bearing on Russia.

"No matter how carefully he weighed his words . . . some soured student who flunked the last exam or some dope who had been dozing for the last half hour would seize upon a few stray words entirely out of context and would rush from the classroom affirming that 'Prof. So-and-So said . . . ' and the tragic factor in the situation is that he would gain credence. A fortnight later, a summons to Washington! This is no exaggeration!"

Professor "B" related: "Congressional investigations, as practiced, exemplify the methods they pretend to condemn. They close off free debate and objective discussion, the very life of democratic society.

"By introducing fear and distrust, between teacher and student, teacher and public, they destroy the environment for learning, the respect for persons, the integrity of public opinion."

Professor "C" complained: "Faculty members see such hysteria and wonder how far we are going in this ridiculous quest. Ohio State professors, as well as your neighbors, stand for three square meals a day. So do the Communists. Does this make us fellow travelers? We are in some kind of intellectual panic psychology."

Professor "D" observed: "They don't heave rocks any more at inventors of new machines, but social inventors, even in normal times, have to be able to duck.

"Congressional investigating committees, by their smearing, brow-beating methods (watch television, my friend) cause the normally conservative professor to pull his neck in still further."

'It's Like Hitler's Beginning'—Adlai

McCarthyism in the United States is something like the beginning of Hitlerism in Germany.

That warning has come from Adlai E. Stevenson, Democratic candidate for the presidency last year, who called the tactics of Wisconsin's junior senator "a rather serious danger."

Speaking to newsmen in Paris near the end of his round-the-world trip Stevenson said, "it seems to me that McCarthyism runs the risk of presenting from now on a rather serious threat, so much so that it would not be out of place to make an analogy with certain aspects of the beginning of Hitlerism."

Williams Named To Steel Post

Jack Williams, for several years publicity director for the Canadian Congress of Labor, has resigned to become Canadian publicity director for the CIO Steelworkers.

'Fair Play' Rules Urged To Curb Free-Wheeling Senate Inquiries

TWO SENATORS last week called for a code of "fair play" for witnesses in an effort to curb free-wheeling McCarthy-type investigations.

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) strongly defended the right of Congress to conduct investigations but he said the time had come to "reform" some of their practices.

"I am not proposing in any sense the abandonment of congressional investigating committees. But in view of their importance and the damage which they can do to men's reputations (which are the most precious worldly possessions which we have) it is important that we work out rules of fair procedure and adopt them without undue delay," Douglas said.

"FOR THESE committees are in fact fast becoming legislative courts. At present the committees are in effect given a wide hunting license and allowed to cruise at large without any restraint as to rules of evidence, procedures, questioning or the making of public statements.

"The degree of fairness or lack of fairness which is followed therefore largely depends upon the members of the committees themselves and more particularly upon their chairmen. All too often, they in effect make their own rules and do anything they wish.

Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.), a bitter critic of Sen. McCarthy's "one-man rule" of his committee, proposed legislation to make the Senate responsible for investigations conducted by its committees. Monroney wants to change the Senate rules to let the Senate stop any investigation by majority vote or transfer it to some other committee.

MONRONEY'S proposal would let any senator challenge the jurisdiction of a committee in any investigation it starts. The Senate president would then have to rule on the question.

Chairman Velde (R. Ill.) of the House Un-American Activities Committee announced that persons named as past or present Communists before his group would be notified by registered mail and invited to reply to the charges before his group. He rejected any other changes in committee procedures.

SEN. DOUGLAS
Proposals for fair play.

Here Are Douglas' 10 Points

Here are the 10 points proposed by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) for "fair play" by congressional investigating committees:

1. Witnesses reflecting "adversely" on others should testify privately until their credibility is established, in order that "unreliable witnesses" may be prevented from wrecking reputations.

2. Testimony adversely affecting others should not be given a public hearing until it has been privately heard and backed up by other witnesses or by printed material.

3. Derogatory material not disclosed in public hearings, rumors or other unsubstantiated reports should not be "leaked" to the press or public.

4. Persons who may be adversely reflected upon in a public hearing should be notified in advance of the probable nature of the charges and be permitted to make a statement at the end of the adverse testimony. An alternative would be to allow the person charged to place a printed reply in the record of the hearings.

5. A "limited right" to cross-examine the accuser would be given those charged with offenses or subjected to derogatory comment.

6. Witnesses would be given the right to counsel.

7. The purpose of the hearing should be stated in advance to prevent vague and unauthorized "fishing parties."

8. No reports should be published until submitted to all members and approved by a majority.

9. Staff appointments should be approved by the committee as a whole or by agreement between the chairman and the ranking minority member.

10. Committee members should get 24 hours advance notice of meetings, the subject to be discussed and the witnesses to appear.

The Cost Of Investigations: A Cool Million This Year

INVESTIGATIONS of subversive activities in the 83rd Congress have already cost the American people more than $1 million in this session alone, Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) charged in sponsoring the move to centralize investigative responsibility.

Roosevelt said that three committees now are concerned with such investigations and that other subcommittees recently "have made excursions into this area." To get rid of this costly overlapping, he urged adoption of the proposal by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) to establish a Joint Committee on Subversive Activities with exclusive jurisdiction.

"Each of the various subcommittees now at work with its own staff, attorneys, investigators, stenographers and clerks; with duplicate offices, office equipment and supplies, is basically concerned with the same problem," Roosevelt said.

How can the efforts of what have become rival groups, when spread in so many directions, produce the best results?"

ROOSEVELT said "everyone is agreed" that Congress has the duty to investigate subversive activities which threaten the public interest.

The Celler proposal, he said, would "enable us to get on with the job and stop the forays into headline hunting and crying 'wolf' which have been promoted by the competition of various committees of the Congress which claim a unity of objective."

McCarthy Challenged On Finances

SEN. McCARTHY was challenged on the Senate floor last week to explain his personal finances.

The demand was thrown at the Wisconsin senator during a turbulent debate that brought forth some of the bitterest name-calling heard in the chamber in years.

A blistering three-way exchange involved McCarthy and Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.). Lehman charged McCarthy with posing as an enemy of communism but reminded that he had accepted the support of Wisconsin Communists while a candidate in 1946.

THE NEW YORK senator demanded to know why McCarthy failed to answer questions raised in an official Senate report about some of his financial transactions. He was referring to the elections sub-committee report on an investigation of charges McCarthy and former Sen. Benton made against each other.

Relatively few copies of the report were printed but Americans for Democratic Action has made reprints available. One of McCarthy's aides hinted recently the senator might sue for libel if sale of the reprints was not halted. ADA replied it would welcome the suit and a chance to get McCarthy into court where he would not enjoy congressional immunity.

MONRONEY was challenged by McCarthy to name "one individual he has exposed as being a Communist." Monroney, for answer, demanded from McCarthy the names of any Communists who had been "convicted" after his disclosures.

Previously, Monroney had assailed two McCarthy investigators, Roy Cohn and David A. Schine, for their activities. In a recent TV broadcast McCarthy claimed this attack on his aides was "anti-Semitism."

Lehman, in the Senate debate, came to the defense of Monroney and branded McCarthy's charge as "false and ridiculous—pure demagoguery."

Learning Their Union Lessons

Our Vanishing Resources—

Waste In Forests Boosts Prices For Homes, CIO Group Warns

TIMBER resources of the U. S. are in a "deplorable" condition despite the great efforts of conservationists, the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation declared in a statement of policy based on National CIO convention actions.

"A substantial majority of all timber holdings managed by the large interests are poorly managed by U. S. Forest Service standards," the committee said. "An even larger proportion of the holdings of small investors and farmers are poorly managed.

"MANY dangerous consequences flow from such mismanagement. Our watersheds erode and deteriorate. Our wildlife and recreational resources are seriously injured. Our municipal and hydro-electric reservoirs fill with silt.

"The price of lumber soars, and good housing becomes a luxury for the few. Employment becomes uncertain and communities become unstable in regions dependent on wood-products industries."

The committee called for a program of sound forest management policies and practices that would include direct federal regulation of cutting practices on lands owned by large interests; rapid extension of federal and state timberland holdings; and management on the basis of sustained yield, selective cutting and multiple use, with consideration for preserving the natural balance.

It also urged integrated sawmill, pulp and paper, and wood chemistry plants of moderate size in each cutting area to permit full use of forest resources; adequate access roads in all timber areas, and avoidance of large block cutting and short rotations.

It commended the CIO Woodworkers for the "loyal support and cooperation" the union has given the National CIO in its fight for sound forest management practices.

In another statement, on natural recreation, the committee pointed out that industrial workers, "confined almost all of their lives by the artificialities and restrictions of big cities," greatly need and desire to get into the open spaces.

THE COMMITTEE renewed its demand for the type of regional development and conservation it has urged for years, with its consideration for providing inexpensive natural recreational opportunities for the average man.

It urged protection of the national parks with a view to preserving their recreational and scenic resources, and a program of extending them for which it made a series of specific suggestions.

It renewed its opposition to the construction of dams within the Dinosaur National Monument area, and commended the Forest Service for the type of recreational facilities it provides with its limited funds.

The committee also asked for the extension of state parks and forests for recreation, and called for protection and replenishment of the wildlife resources of the entire continent, which it said "are not in good condition."

It suggested that state industrial union councils work with constructive and conservation-minded elements in sportsmen's associations to remove fish and game commissions from political influence and to fight pollution of streams.

Stockmen's Rule On Grazing Lands Hit

A bill to end "domination" by stockmen of advisory committees on public land use set up under the Taylor Grazing Act is being sponsored by Rep. Metcalf (D. Mont.).

The act now allows boards of five to 11 stockmen and one non-voting wildlife representative. Metcalf proposes "multiple-use" boards which would include representatives of grazing, watershed protection, timber, recreation, wildlife and public interests.

Alcoa Named In Trust Suit

FEDERAL COURTS have been asked to cancel a contract under which Aluminum Company of America would buy 1.2 billion pounds of aluminum from Aluminum Ltd. of Canada over a six-year period.

Atty. Gen. Brownell said that competitive conditions in the domestic industry would be impaired unless the contract is "promptly cancelled."

A 1951 court case found Alcoa controlled the Canadian concern to the extent that competition was stifled. Brownell wants the present contract, signed May 22, voided and an order that no new contract be entered into without prior permission of the court.

10 Million Injuries A Year—

Expand U. S. Aid For Handicapped, CIO Says

EXPANSION of federal programs to rehabilitate the physically handicapped was urged by Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers Union. As chairman of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health, Quill called for a "bona fide census of the nation's handicapped" to determine the scope of needed rehabilitation.

The House committee on labor and education was informed that there were approximately 10 million accident injuries in the U. S. last year which left approximately 350,000 with some permanent physical handicap. The committee is conducting hearings on rehabilitating the handicapped.

Harry Read, secretary of the CIO committee, read Quill's statement. It pointed out that 30 million Americans suffer some degree of disability. Industry now employs about three million permanently disabled persons.

"IT IS by no means inconceivable that if we should unfortunately become involved in World War III, we might eventually be almost totally dependent on the work services in the factory and war plants of persons who are permanently physically handicapped," Quill predicted.

He called for better coordination between state and federal programs and called for centralization of administration in the Labor Dept.

Quill praised the work done in the field by the American College of Surgeons, which, he said, should not be confused with the American Medical Association. Labor, he added, has found the American College of Surgeons is . . . sympathetic to the problems that confront working people in the field of rehabilitation for restoration to a job.

Quill wrote to Pres. Eisenhower urging surveys of workmen's compensation needs and extent of the problem confronting handicapped persons capable of rehabilitation, retraining and restoration to steady jobs.

Pres. Elwood D. Swisher of the CIO Chemical Workers told the House hearing that vocational training and rehabilitation should be taken out of "the penny-pinching, lip-service category and given the funds and personnel to do the job right. Congress should provide adequate funds for greater research in 'human engineering'."

What Happened To The 111,000?

Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers told the House committee on labor and education last week that approximately 350,000 Americans were left with permanent physical handicaps after accidents in 1952. Half of these were workers.

Quill said that the total of these rehabilitated by federal and state agencies last year was only 64,000.

"I repeat: 175,000 workers emerged from their accident with some degree of permanent disability and yet we find that only 64,000 received service," he said, "Our question is: What about the other 111,000?"

UAW Local Builds New Headquarters

Local 174 of the CIO Auto Workers will have a new $300,000 home in Detroit which will be the last word in modern design. Three connected one-story buildings will occupy more than half of a site that spreads over more than seven acres. There will be an 800-seat auditorium, kitchen, bar and parking area for 250 cars.

Lehman Social Security Bill Gets More Congress Backing

SEVEN ADDITIONAL congressmen, all of them Democrats, last week joined the 21 original sponsors in backing the omnibus social security bill introduced recently by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.)

Many other congressmen have indicated that they will sponsor the measure if it comes to a vote. The AFL has joined the CIO in wholehearted support of the Lehman proposal.

The new backers of the bill are Reps. Dollinger (N.Y.), Addonizio (N. J.), Fine (N. Y.), Holifield (Cailf.), Klein (N. Y.), Metcalf (Mont.) and Perkins (Ky.). Each, following House rules which prevent joint sponsorship, has reintroduced the Lehman bill under his own name.

ANOTHER move to provide greater economic security for all persons over 65 was made by Rep. Heller (D. N. Y.), who introduced a bill calling for a monthly old-age pension of $40. This would be given to citizens 65 or older in addition to any present federal pension or old-age assistance they now are receiving.

Heller estimated that under his plan some 7.5 million people would be eligible for the pension. He pointed out that a similar plan has been in operation in Canada since January 1952 and urged this country not to fall behind Canada in dealing with the problem.

Meanwhile, an influential Republican, Rep. Kean (N. J.) questioned the wisdom of the Chamber of Commerce demand that social security be put on a "pay-as-you-go" basis, at the same time paying for new benefits for uninsured persons out of contributions which have been made to the present system.

Kean estimated that the Chamber's plan would cost taxpayers as much as $2.5 billion a year.

Old Age Pay Improvements In Lehman Proposal Detailed

Here is a summary of the improvements to the Social Security Act proposed by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and 20 other senators and representatives.

COVERAGE: Add eight million new jobs and protect more than 13 million additional persons.

BENEFITS: Raise minimum from $25 to $35 per month.

Raise maximum for a family from $168.50 to $200 per month; for an individual, from $85 to $135 per month.

Calculate all benefits more generously by basing "average monthly wage" on earnings in 10 best consecutive years instead of all years; by adding one-half of 1% for every year of coverage; by permitting a "new start" in 1954, and by having benefits replace 20% of the amount by which the average wage exceeds $100, instead of the present 15% (benefit of 55% of first $100 would continue).

FINANCING: Collect payroll taxes on first $6000 of annual earnings, instead of the present $3600; and increase the tax more speedily and to a higher level than under present laws (to 2% in 1954, in steps to 4% in 1961).

DISABILITY INSURANCE: Add new protection yielding similar benefits when family bread-winner, before reaching retirement age of 65, is unable to work for more than six months.

REHABILITATION: Provide increased funds to help train disabled workers for jobs they can fill.

SICKNESS BENEFITS: Add new program of cash benefits to replace part of lost wages for up to 26 weeks in cases of temporary sickness or disability.

OUTSIDE EARNINGS: Increase from $75 to $100 per month the amount a pensioner may earn without losing his benefits.

Bargaining Held To Work In Setting U. S. Wage Rates

FREE COLLECTIVE bargaining has proved itself a flexible and effective method of setting wage rates for American workers, says a special committee of the Twentieth Century Fund.

But labor and management should give more attention to the possible effects of their action on the entire economic system, the committee says in a report on "Employment and Wages in the United States."

Committee members included union officials, businessmen and economists. Chairman was Lloyd K. Garrison, former chairman of the National War Labor Board; Solomon Barkin, research director of the CIO Textile Workers, was a member.

In a supplemental report, Barkin calls for protection for the workers from cost-of-living increases by some automatic adjustment or escalator.

The committee recommends that in setting wages no rigid standard of pay determination should be substituted for negotiation and compromise of conflicting pressures and interests.

The report has advice for management, unions and jointly for government and unions.

It tells management that it can improve employment conditions by merit hiring, giving employes jobs which fit them best, and increasing job security and employment regularity.

UNIONS are told they should give their members better information on job opportunities, eliminate race and sex discrimination in membership, and aid management in getting workers out of declining industries and into expanding ones.

And if government does its part in preventing inflation, the committee says, unions, generally speaking, should accept raises approximately the probable rate of productivity increase for the economy as a whole.

PAC Aide Urges Joint Action By Townsend Group, Labor

ADVOCATES of the Townsend Plan and organized labor should coordinate their political activities on a nationwide scale, Tilford E. Dudley, assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee, told the recent convention of Townsend Clubs in Cleveland.

"Convert the numerical strength of the Townsend organization into political reality at the precinct and congressional district levels," he advised more than 2000 delegates.

"If you are not a registered voter, a congressman does not need to care for your opinion. Every man and woman in the Townsend organization should be a registered and crusading voter."

The CIO shares many objectives with the Townsend Plan for national insurance, Dudley said.

"We in the ranks of organized labor," he said, "stand with you, side by side, in your great crusade for adequate social security for the country's aged citizens, the totally disabled and the widowed mothers of dependent children.

"Like you, we are waging a constant battle to increase the purchasing power of America's average families. We should show our united strength in courageous political action."

National Health Insurance Plan Adopted For Sweden

A PREPAID nationwide health insurance plan, effective in 1955, has been approved by the Swedish Riksdag (parliament) by a substantial majority.

Covering practically all Swedes, including children and housewives, it will pay 65% to 70% of income losses during illness through tax-free benefits.

In addition, it will provide free hospital care, 75% of the normal cost of treatment by a private physician, and free or low-cost medicines, and pay the cost of trips to hospitals and the major part of costlier trips to physicians.

The insurance is expected to cost about $150 million during the first year. Policyholders—average Swedes—will pay an estimated 44%, employers 27% and the government 29%.

The new plan also will cover the first 90 days of industrial injuries or occupational diseases, against which all workers have been automatically insured by employers. The present law will be replaced by a new occupational disability plan to cover costs of cases lasting longer than 90 days.

Basic benefits of three kroner a day, or about 60c, will be paid to all persons over 16 who earn above $240 a year and to housewives, national pensioners, etc. Payments will rise to a maximum of about $4 a day according to earnings.

Murray Named

Thomas Murray, assistant to Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the CIO Steelworkers, is one of two labor officials named by the State Dept. to represent the U. S. at seminars on workers education in Paris under UNESCO sponsorship.

Legislative Dept. Names Bookbinder To Research Post

Hyman H. Bookbinder has joined the expanded staff of the CIO Legislative Dept. as research coordinator, Thomas H. Burke, CIO chief of congressional liaison, announced last week.

On leave from the CIO Clothing Workers, Bookbinder comes to the CIO after spending the last two years as deputy assistant administrator of the National Production Authority. Earlier, he had worked as special assistant to the director of manpower in the National Security Resources Board.

Except for service in the Navy, Bookbinder served as economist and assistant director of research for the ACWA-CIO from 1940 until being granted a leave-of-absence to enter government service in 1950.

Barkin In Asia On State Dept. Mission

Solomon Barkin, research director for the CIO Textile Workers, is spending two months overseas as a specialist for the State Dept. Barkin will spend one month in Japan and another month in Australia and New Zealand, assisting with the problems of the trade union movement in those countries.

GM Meets Its Thanatopsis Trying To Chisel Pensioner

AN EFFORT by General Motors, wealthiest corporation in the country, to chisel a sick, retiring employe out of a few weeks of unemployment compensation benefits has been blocked by a referee for the Michigan Employment Security Commission.

Involved was Francis Hughes, 68, an employe of GM's Ternstedt Div. for 25 years, who was on sick leave when he was retired. The company claimed he was unable to work and thus was not entitled to benefits.

Referee Charles Rubinoff conceded that the productive power of the aging worker diminishes "upon his reaching life's ebbing tide."

"It must be admitted with equal candor," he continued, "that he (the claimant) cannot be expected to give up the business of living for the altruistic purpose of supporting the employer's interpretation of the law."

In granting the claim, he wrote:

"While youth may not appreciate its (old age's) grimness from a safe distance, no one can escape his own Thanatopsis. (Thanatopsis, title of a poem by William Cullen Bryant, means a meditation on death.)

"For the 'present' is only a shifting point at which youth and old age meet. There is never a moment when the new dawn is not breaking, and never a moment when the sunset ceases to fade.

"A claimant, however, has the right to decide for himself when the 'final hour' has come to withdraw from life's activities."

Wage, Hour Gains Safeguarded As Equal Rights Bill Approved

AN EQUAL rights amendment to the Constitution which protects working women against the loss of legal protections built up over the years has been passed by the Senate.

Originally sponsored by Sen. Butler (R. Md.), it was made acceptable to many CIO unions only by the addition of an amendment offered on the floor by Sen. Hayden (D. Ariz.) assuring women against losing any special rights, such as on hours of work, which they now enjoy under state laws.

The Butler proposal would be the 23d amendment if approved. His language was:

"Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

HAYDEN'S amendment to the amendment added the following words:

"The provisions of this article shall not be construed to impair any rights, benefits, or exemptions now or hereafter conferred by law upon persons of the female sex."

Hayden's addition, which led to considerable discussion, was adopted on a roll call by a vote of 58 to 25. Then the amended amendment was approved by a 73-11 tally. A two-thirds vote was required.

As it now stands, the amendment if approved by the House and by three-fourths of the states will not take away the special protections that safeguard working women against exploitation—including minimum wage and maximum hours laws enacted by states, or prohibitions against dangerous work. It would, however, insure equal pay for equal work.

During the discussion, Hayden read into the record letters from many unions with substantial proportions of women in their membership.

"The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America have gone on record for two decades as being in favor of equal pay and equal rights for the women of America, without at the same time destroying hard-won state laws which protect women," wrote ACWA-CIO Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

"WE FULLY agree that Senate Joint Resolution 49 might eventually help to tear down the entire fabric of protection of women's rights under the guise of protecting their equality.

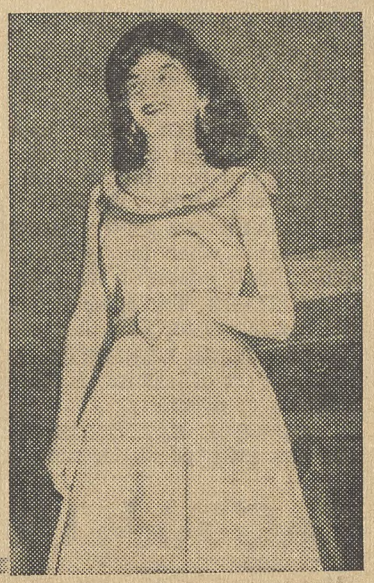
"On behalf of the approximately 100,000 women who are members of our union, I fully support your amendment to SR 49."

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers in a letter to Hayden recalled that about half of the union's members are women.

"It is the conviction of the TWUA," he wrote "that the practical effect of SR 49, if enacted into law, would be to create injustices as between the sexes and result in placing women workers in a seriously disadvantageous position in many instances . . .

"On behalf of the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, I place myself formally on record as urging and approving your suggested move to offer the so-called Hayden amendment to SR 49."

Fashions And Politics Do Mix—



Fashions and political action were combined before recent Newark, N. J., election as 4000 members turned out for show sponsored by CIO Electrical Workers Local 447 political action committee.

Irene Murphy of local PAC was commentator as bridal fashions (above), beachwear, street suits were modeled. At right, Ann Guidetti models an antique taffeta cocktail dress.

Old Matthews Charge Against Consumers Union Gets Nailed

THE THREE thousand employes of the Naval Ordnance Laboratory at White Oak, Md., near Washington, were in a state of bewilderment last week.

They were trying to recover their equilibrium after a hard ride in the how-silly-can-you-get sweepstakes with the old Navy tie for reins and a worn-out J. B. Matthews charge of "communism" for a bit.

The excursion started when Comm. H. C. Wessling, the administrative officer, wrote a bulletin describing Consumers Union and its magazine, Consumer Reports, as subversive, warned the employes their job security might be affected if they subscribed, stamped it "RESTRICTED . . . SECURITY INFORMATION" with a great big stamp, and distributed it.

HE LISTED five citations against Consumers Union he found in a publication of the House un-American Activities Committee, including a sentence declaring it ". . . a Communist front headed by the Communist Arthur Kallet (whose party name is Edward Adams)."

He added orally that Consumers Union is among the subversive groups listed by the Attorney General.

Kallet, in New York, branded the charge as "completely irresponsible." Some people have been sniping at Consumers Union since 1939, he said, when Matthews accused it before the old Dies Committee.

Matthews at the time was a vice president of a competing organization, Consumers Research, Kallet said. He is the same Matthews who recently resigned as chief investigator for the Senate Investigating Committee headed by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

KALLET DENIED he is a Communist. The Attorney General's office denied Consumers Union is on its list of subversive organizations.

Wessling's superior, Capt. Edward L. Woodyard, staunchly defended the administrative officer as having "the basic ingredients to live on salt water."

"He was trying to be helpful," Woodyard explained gravely. But no NOL employe who joins Consumers Union or reads Consumer Reports is going to find his job security impaired as a result, he added.

Pennsylvania Sales Tax Set

PENNSYLVANIANS will begin paying a 1% sales tax on Sept. 1. Gov. John Fine signed the bill which was passed by a Republican-dominated Legislature to make up a $118 million deficit.

Democrats have promised to make repeal of the tax a campaign issue in '54.

Exempted from the tax are sales of 10c or less, food and medicine bought on prescription, clothing and shoes, false teeth and hearing aids, restaurant meals, newspapers, cigarettes, gasoline, beer and liquor, haircuts and shaves and securities.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

DESPITE several new price increases just put into effect on some household appliances, consumer resistance is beginning to punch some noticeable holes in prices of "hard goods," especially household furnishings, appliances, used cars and older houses, There are some better values available now if you do some extra comparison-shopping.

Buying Calendar

People who have been waiting to buy rugs and carpeting will also find some good buys in the August rug sales. Carpet business has been slow recently and inventories have piled up.

Here are tips on buying opportunities this month:

APPLIANCES: Even while several manufacturers have raised list prices on refrigerators, toasters and table radios, stores are cutting prices sharply. You can get a good buy on a refrigerator particularly at this time. Many stores are advertising trade-in offers of $100 for your old refrigerator which is really a thinly-disguised discount, and you can find plenty of independent retailers who will give you 20%-25% off on refrigerators without a trade-in.

In television sets, Admiral is offering a summer special: a 17-inch table model for $159.95. Get a 15%-20% discount on this, which many dealers give, and the price comes down to $128-$136. This is one of the best values yet offered in one of the better-quality makes of TV sets. Emerson has a similar good value in a 17-inch set.

USED CARS: The current drop in used-car prices is good news for the moderate-income families who are driving the 10 million cars over 12 years old still on the roads. Production of new cars has been near record heights this year, and dealers are having trouble disposing of the trade-ins. Some now are refusing to take in cars older than '48. Many used cars have dropped $150 to $300 in cost in the past two months alone.

Shop hard and bargain hard for a good price on a used car, and you'll get it. Asking price means nothing now. While I was checking used-car prices last week a salesman dropped the asking price of a 1950 Ford from $1150 to $950 with no prompting at all. Shop cars offered by individuals, too. Some owners are getting such low trade-in offers from dealers for their old cars, especially on Fords and Chevvies, they are trying to sell themselves rather than trade in.

If you've got a car to trade in, do some extra shopping to see what allowance you can get. Sizeable variations among dealers in the same make have been reported by car buyers recently, and of course variations in allowances among dealers in different makes are even wider. One man reports the variation in allowances offered by Plymouth dealers on his old car was $170. Another reports a variation of $270 in trade-in allowance offers among Pontiac dealers.

What's happening is that some dealers are now absorbing losses on trade-ins instead of profiting on them as in the years of postwar scarcity. In times of abundant production as now, it's considered customary for dealers to absorb a trade-in loss in the 25% profit margin they get on new cars.

FUR COATS: August is "fur sale" month too. Can you really save during the August fur sales? One expert tells this department you usually find lower prices in the January and February clearance sales, but that selection is good in August and prices reasonable.

Is a fur coat a good buy at all? Not necessarily, if you are buying it mainly for warmth. The National Bureau of Standards has said that a coat of all-new wool with a liner of new wool is about as warm a garment as you can get.

The best buy among the low-priced furs is mouton lamb. According to one trade source, this year you ought to be able to get a high-quality mouton for $175-$190. You can tell good-quality mouton by its softness, silkiness, smooth, even texture, and absence of noticeable breaks in the surface.

CIO Protests Crippling Of Michigan Family Aid Plan

MICHIGAN CIO has strongly protested a new state program for crippling state aid to mothers and dependent children in fatherless families.

The State CIO Council's Community Services Committee charged the new program forces mothers of dependent children to seek and take any form of employment—even if it means breaking up the home.

Robert Halbeisen, president of CIO Government & Civic Employees Local 52 and State CIO-CSC member, urged the State Social Welfare Commission to rescind the rules.

"We believe that the social security act embodying aid the dependent children program was designed to help maintain decent family living and to provide maintenance of income to a family because of the loss of the breadwinner," Halbeisen told the commission.

"We think that this rule revision completely subverts the original intention of this program and that it would have the effect of breaking up the family, rather than keeping it together.

"IT WOULD have the effect of neglecting children and, in so doing, increase the probability of higher juvenile delinquency and crime rates.

"We believe that this is an apparent attempt to fall in line with the few people of this state who are attempting to defeat the purpose of our health and welfare legislation by continuously equating such programs with chiselers."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

SOME OF THE PEOPLE attacking our union these days seem to be working on the idea: "If you can't abuse 'em, confuse 'em." In our years of progress, the interests who have opposed our militant organization of the unorganized have pretty much run out of abuse.

In spite of all they say CIO stands today as a symbol of hope not only for the millions of organized workers in the basic industries, but for millions who still look to us to help them along the road to self-organization.

It might be that the idea of planting confusion in our midst is a deadlier weapon than name-calling; that is, it would be if we fell for it. The enemies of labor have taken a leaf out of the hate-seller's book. They practice "divide and conquer" and they try to do it in men's minds.

But a plain fact shines through all the nonsense that is whispered, rumored, and planted about us, and that is the truth of our aims and ideals—that in a short 18 years we have not only set up an economic standard for the world to envy, but that we have also set up a spiritual standard based on our faith in the brotherhood of man.

Our enemies would like us to descend into a bickering brawl with them. It seems to me we can do better by raising our banner even higher yet, where all men of good will can see it, from all walks of life.

There's a verse from St. Paul which contains some pretty good advice for union men, in these times. I'd like to take the liberty of quoting it to you: " . . . that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel; And in nothing terrified by your adversaries . . . "

We can certainly stand together in the spirit of economic advances we have made. We can take equal pride in standing together as the living proof of what happens when men practice the ideals they preach.

Some recent victories show how our international unions, their representatives, and CIO's staff men are carrying the challenge of trade unionism all over the country, large plants and small plants, wherever working men signify they are ready to organize.

IN CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Joe Joy, vice president of the CIO Chemical Workers, reports an election at the Atlas Powder Co. with 939 eligible voters, UGC&CWA-CIO was victorious by six to one, ably assisted by CIO staff representatives.

CIO Rep. Dave Sternback reports victory in Puerto Rico in the Aviation Division of the Transport Authority, 42 eligible, 39 votes for the TWU-CIO.

CIO Southern Organizing Dir. Lorne Nelles reports victories at Kinoca Shirt Co., Kinston, N. C., where the CIO Clothing Workers won an election involving 167 workers; and Santee Print Works, Sumter, S. C., where Textile Workers were chosen in an election with 143 eligible.

CIO's Glassworkers were chosen to represent 160 workers at Shawnee Pottery, in Zanesville, O.

Claude Ballard, vice president of the CIO Woodworkers, reports four victories in Steamboat, O.; Merrimac Veneer Co., Jackson, Miss.; Cascadia Lumber Co., Mill "B," Toledo, Ore.; Fruit Growers Supply Co., Susanville, Calif. That's a total of 803 workers who have chosen IWA-CIO as collective bargaining agent.

President Of Panama Lauds CIO Local In Canal Zone

PANAMA'S Pres. Jose Antonio Remon Cantera has acknowledged the effort of the CIO's Government Employees Organizing Committee on behalf of Panamanian workers in the Canal Zone.

The republic's chief executive told a delegation from Local 900, GCEOC-CIO, that he would instruct his negotiators to confer with the union on matters affecting workers when a treaty between Panama and the U. S. is revised.

Following Cantera's directive, a conference was held between Local 900 spokesmen and Panama's foreign minister and other officials on social problems and job opportunities in the Zone. Pres. Edward A. Gaskin and Staff Rep. William H. Sinclair represented Local 900.

The local has won a fight to extend to 60 days the period a retired employe of the government-owned Panama Canal Co. may occupy government quarters at regular rental rates. This is an extension of 30 days on the time previously allotted.

Local 900 has been informed that action on increasing cash relief rates for disabled employes has been delayed for further study by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Civil Service.

Brewery Strike Enters 11th Week

The strike of 7500 members of CIO Brewery Workers Local 9 against six major Milwaukee breweries went into its 11th week as negotiators resumed bargaining sessions with federal conciliators in attendance.

The discussions apparently were centered around a union compromise offer, details of which were not made public, which the operators had studied for several days. The strikers are asking a 35-hour week, a wage increase of 25c an hour, and a health and welfare plan.

UPA Pushes Organizing In The South

TARGET AREAS have been designated for organizing teams of the CIO Paperworkers. Chosen on the basis of paper industry growth, sections of the South and Southwest will be the focus of attention by UPA-CIO organizers.

Assisting them will be CIO organizing teams assigned by CIO Exec. Vice Pres. John V. Riffe. Plans for the organizing drive were mapped at a session in Knoxville, Tenn.

"This organizing drive aims at creating a solid union foundation in the wage structure of the South's second richest industry," UPA Sec.-Treas. Frank Grasso told the meeting.

ALL-OUT CIO support of the UPA drive was pledged by Lloyd Vaughn, assistant to CIO Southern Organizing Director Lorne Nelles.

UPA's Local 258 at the Corrugated Container Co. plant in Columbus, Ohio, won an 8c an hour general increase plus 18c in cost-of-living escalator hikes added to base rates in a new two-year agreement. One hike of 4c was to be paid immediately, the other 4c to come next June.

Wage increases of 14c an hour for all female workers and 15c an hour for all male classifications were negotiated by Local 522 at the Revere Mfg. Co., Phoenix, N. Y.

MILITANCY paid off for members of Local 226 at the Mercer Paper Tube Co. in Trenton, N. J. When management offered 2c an hour, "take it or leave it," the union was "leaving it" until a 10c increase was negotiated.

An increase of 10c an hour has also been negotiated for Local 292 members at the Berlin & Jones Co., New York City, averting a threatened strike.

GE Earnings Climb By 32%

GENERAL ELECTRIC Co. last week reported its net income for the first six months of 1953 was up 32% over the same period last year to more than $75 million in earnings after taxes.

Sales set a record six-months total, more than $1.5 billion, up 33% over the first half of 1952. Earnings were equal to $2.61 a share for the six months just ended compared with $1.98 in the same period a year ago.

GE will pay a 75c dividend this month on its common stock, making a total of $1.50 declared this year.

Gold Miners Out In Ontario Area

Seven mines in the rich gold fields of the Porcupine District of Northern Ontario were shut down by a strike of the CIO Steelworkers last week after years of attempting to negotiate union security, according to Labor Press Associated.

C. H. Millard, USA-CIO Canadian director, charged the mine operators have agreed among themselves "to maintain low wages, long hours, and to refuse even minimum union security" as recommended by a conciliation board. The striking miners have set up picket lines.

CIO-Backed Drive Gains Pennsylvania FEP Okeh

LABOR IN Pennsylvania won an important legislative victory last week when the House passed, 152-30, a bill to establish a Fair Employment Practices Commission in that State. The measure now goes to the Senate for action.

CIO affiliates have been urged to contact their state senators to secure passage of the bill, known as H. 1165. Gov. John Fine called for the legislation in his opening message to the Assembly and only recently berated the lawmakers for delaying action on the bill.

Establishment of an FEPC has the endorsement of the National CIO and the Pennsylvania CIO Council.

THE FIGHT to get civil rights legislation on the books is being led by the State Council for a Pennsylvania FEPC. Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers is on the advisory committee of that body. Support of the group's work has been called for from all affiliates of the CIO Council in the state.

Significant progress and steady improvement in the attitudes of American trade unions towards Negro members was noted in a report made to delegates at the tenth annual Institute of Race Relations at Fisk Univ.

Emanuel Muravchik, national field director of the Jewish Labor Committee's anti-discrimination committee, revealed results of a 10-year survey conducted by his organization.

IN 1943, according to the study, 30 international unions discriminated against Negroes through constitutional provisions, practices and segregation in separate auxiliaries. These unions represented 18.7% of the total number of organized workers.

Since that time, there has been great progress in eliminating discrimination against minority groups. Today, the membership of those unions which still discriminate in some form has been reduced from 18.7% to 4% of the total number of organized workers.

Muravchik also pointed out that employers who once took advantage of racial antagonisms to depress wage standards no longer find it possible or profitable to do so in the face of a strong and united trade union movement.

Shipbuilding Union Warns Ike On Jobs

SHIPYARD unemployment has almost reached "the danger point, according to Pres. John J. Grogan of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

In a letter to Pres. Eisenhower, Grogan urged cancellation of the Administration overseas naval ship procurement.

He asked that construction of these craft be carried on in American private shipyards. Grogan advocated preservation of the domestic industry by building 214 new merchant vessels. The U. S. shipbuilding and ship repair industry is in a state of depression and unemployment is at a dangerous level, Grogan warned.

"The only work which would seem to be available to keep a nucleus of shipyard skills in the privately owned shipyards is that represented by the naval overseas procurement program," Grogan told the chief executive. He said the Administration's budget reveals a ship construction subsidy policy that will result in even greater unemployment in U. S. shipyards and repair docks.

Construction of 214 new merchant ships is needed to "support our defense effort adequately" Grogan said.

Airline Walkout Ended By TWU

Striking navigators belonging to the CIO Transport Workers have ended a 12-day walkout against Trans World Airlines. Included in the settlement is provision for reinstatement of those who lost their jobs during the strike. Almost 100 overseas flights were cancelled by the airline because of the walkout.

CIO Raps Slash Of Foreign Aid By House Vote

THE DRASTIC slash in appropriations for the mutual security program by the House amounts to "a repudiation of American promises abroad," the CIO declared last week.

The House knocked $1.1 billion from the amount asked by Pres. Eisenhower to $4,432,678,000 in cash. A few hours before it upheld Appropriations Committee recommendations with minor modifications, the President had described the cut as "too heavy" on a basis of national security.

THE CIO's position on the House's repudiation of the President was made public by Robert W. Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and formerly labor adviser to the Mutual Security Agency.

"At this crucial time, when the free world is making tremendous progress in the struggle against Communist aggression," the statement said, "the House has faltered in expressing the American people's determination to do their part in the battle to preserve human freedom."

It described Appropriations Committee hacking of the budget request as "an act of irresponsibility," and pointed out that the program is not a give-away, but "an investment in security."

"The CIO vigorously protests these cuts and the feebleness of the few restorations made by the House," it continued.

"We call upon the Senate to reaffirm the leadership of this country in world affairs by insisting upon the restoration of foreign aid funds to the full amount authorized earlier this year by Congress."

IN THE HOUSE pro-Administration Republicans, with divided Democratic support, tried in vain to restore some of the cuts recommended by the Appropriations Committee. As fast as amendments were offered by Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N.Y.) and Rep. Judd (R. Minn.), they were voted down.

Eisenhower had asked $9 million for the United Nations Intl. Children's Emergency Fund. The committee killed the full amount. A motion by Rep. Bolton (R. O.) to restore $4 million was beaten by an 80 to 100 vote.

Former Pres. Truman had asked $7.6 billion for military, economic and technical assistance. Eisenhower had cut the request to $5.1 billion. The House knocked out $700 million from this amount, then slashed another $400 million from funds previously allocated but unspent.

LABOR PIONEER HONORED.—Wreath honoring Eugene V. Debs, pioneer of railroad industrial unionism and oldtime Socialist leader, was placed on Debs' grave by Chairman John Green (left) and Sec.-Treas. Eugene Attreed of CIO Railroad Workers during conference of URRWA Pennsylvania Railroad Policy Committee in Terre Haute, Ind. Debs' leadership of American Railway Union in Pullman strike of Nineties is part of U. S. labor history. Earlier he was an organizer for the railroad brotherhoods.

Refugee Bills Approved In 2 Committees

SENATE and House Judiciary Committees last week passed conflicting versions of a bill to admit over-quota refugee immigrants to the United States, with the prospect of a Senate filibuster by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) looming when the Senate acts.

The committees prepared the legislation in answer to a request by Pres. Eisenhower for a law to admit 240,000 extra refugees during the next two years, a proposal the CIO endorsed.

The House committee proposes to admit 240,000 additional migrants and the Senate body 220,000 refugees, both over the next three years rather than the next two, and both in addition to regular immigration quotas.

THE TWO measures pro rated the total differently in dividing it among refugees and expellees from the various European countries. The House version specified that 1000 Korean orphans be admitted, a proviso lacking in the Senate measure.

McCarran, irritated, threatened to filibuster on the Senate floor and delay adjournment unless the 220,000 figure is cut. At first he held out for a slash to 180,000, later said if it were cut to 194,000 he would not oppose it. Other committee members said they would not meet the new demand.

McDonald, Fairless Plan Visits To Mills

A SERIES of visits to major mills of the U. S. Steel Corp. will be undertaken this fall by Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers and Benjamin F. Fairless, U. S. Steel board chairman.

At each plant, according to plans, they will sit down with key figures in the union and management, and invite them to raise for discussion the problems they meet in their day-to-day relations, as well as any suggestions they have for improvements.

THE TRIPS were originally planned by Fairless and the late Philip Murray, then USA-CIO president, as a result of White House negotiations that ended the steel strike last year. When Murray died, McDonald succeeded him and volunteered to carry out his share of the new joint approach to better labor-management relations.

If the venture is successful in U. S. Steel plants, McDonald is expected to follow them up with trips to the mills of other producers in company with a top executive of each.

UAW Gives The Odds On Gamblers

GAMBLERS "never give a sucker an even break" and the CIO Auto Workers is preparing a booklet to prove that to its members.

"Factual evidence" against gamblers and the odds against the player in all common forms of gambling from baseball pools to horse race betting will be published.

"The customer is always wrong if he thinks he stands a chance," says Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the UAW-CIO under whose direction the booklet is being published.

The union has expressed concern over professional gamblers who have wormed their way into the ranks of the UAW and who are carrying on in-plant rackets.

Minnesota CIO Aids Drive For Humphrey

THE MINNESOTA CIO Council plans a vigorous campaign to re-elect Sen. Humphrey, liberal Democrat, and Reps. Blatnik, McCarthy, Marshall and Wier.

Every section of the state was represented at a recent CIO-PAC session where plans for the 1954 campaign were drawn. Efforts won't stop at sending back proven friends to Congress but attempts will be made to win seats now held by reactionaries in several districts, the Council said.

Pres. Robert E. Hess of the State CIO Council warned that anti-liberal forces throughout the nation "are going to pour millions of dollars into the state in their effort to defeat Humphrey, who not only is Minnesota's outstanding liberal leader, but also a strong bulwark of the national liberal forces.

"Not only will the reactionaries try to defeat Humphrey, but they will try to defeat Sen. Kefauver in Tennessee, Sen. Douglas in Illinois and Sen. Murray in Montana. They've got the money, they've got the propaganda outlets and they can hire the best talent available to attempt to fool the voters into voting against their best interest.

"AGAINST this we've got to pit what dollars we can raise and, more than that, the hard, unceasing work of every man and woman we can enlist in this fight.

"We know that we are right, but we've got to fight to prove it. We must not let ourselves think that November of 1954 is a long time away. The campaign is on right now and we've got to get in there and pitch."

Crippled Children Get Help Of Brewers For Sixth Year

"THANKS A LOT," little Teddy Brenner, six-year-old arthritis victim, tells Joseph E. Brady of BW-CIO.

CIO BREWERY Workers have made their sixth annual contribution to the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults.

Joseph E. Brady, coordinator of state councils for the union, made the presentation of a check for $1788.

Teddy Brenner, six years old and confined to a wheel chair with arthritis, accepted the check for the society. The Brewery Workers' grant will be used to continue and expand the financing of a traveling exhibit including special chairs and other equipment designed to train crippled youngsters to walk and talk.

The society, also known as the Easter Seal Society, expressed thanks to the thousands of brewery workers who made the 1953 grant possible.

U. S. Rubber Pay Talks Set

WAGE NEGOTIATIONS between the CIO Rubber Workers and the U. S. Rubber Co. will open Aug. 18 in Cincinnati.

"Substantial wage increases" will be sought along with extension and improvement of pension and insurance benefits and adjustment of area wage inequalities, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said.

U. S. Rubber is the fourth of the industry's Big Four to meet on wages with URW-CIO this year. Negotiations are now in progress with the union with the Goodyear and Firestone companies in Cleveland and the B. F. Goodrich Co. in Chicago.

Representatives of 19 URW-CIO locals in the U. S. Rubber system, with 35,000 members, will meet one day before negotiations open to spell out their specific demands.

Ike's Brother Says Joe Reminds Him Of Hitler

The Kansas City banker made this statement in an interview in the Las Vegas, Nev., Sun. When asked about the junior Senator from Wisconsin, the chief executive's older brother called McCarthy "a throwback to the Spanish Inquisition."

"It is a horrible shame that he (McCarthy) is a Republican, for he has done the party no credit," Eisenhower told a reporter.

"When I think of McCarthy, I automatically think of Hitler."

Asked if he thought that McCarthy had any ultimate objective, Eisenhower replied, "Of course he has. He wants to keep his name in the papers at all costs. He follows the oldest political game, which is 'Whose name is mentioned the most in politics is often selected for the highest office.'

ARTHUR EISENHOWER
The President's brother calls Wisconsin's junior senator . . .

"I don't know when, but I think McCarthy's popularity has to wane. McCarthy gets attention because he has a ready answer, but does he? He has never to my knowledge answered any question yet satisfactorily."

In referring to McCarthy's treatment of witnesses called before investigating committees, Eisenhower described the Senator as a throwback to the Spanish Inquisition.

"He calls in people and proceeds to make fools of them by twisting their answers. What chance do they have? They have no rebuttal because they have no recourse to the press, radio, and magazines," he said.

"It is Nazi-like and what makes it all so much more of a fiasco is that he has never been responsible for the conviction of one—of one, mind you—Communist."

Asked, "what effect do you think McCarthy has on the European mind?" the President's brother was quoted: "Well, after this latest book-burning episode he instigated I imagine that our prestige has hit a new low."

Congress Cuts Labor Dept. In Rush For Recess

The Republican 83rd Congress last week was rushing toward a scheduled recess at weekend. A possible roadblock was the last-minute request by Pres. Eisenhower that Congress raise the national debt ceiling above the present $275 billion. Highlights of developments:

Labor Dept.

CONGRESS approved a final hatchet job by Appropriations Committee conferees which reduces the Labor Dept. to almost the same state it was in after the Taft-Hartley 80th Congress did its wrecking job.

Earlier restorations voted in both the House and Senate were largely sacrificed in the rush to adjournment. The bill now on the President's desk allows a total of only $27.5 million in administrative funds, a reduction of 14.4% in the Labor Dept.'s $32.3 million administrative appropriation last year. Pres. Eisenhower asked $30.3 million.

The conferees' final figure was up only 2.4% over the drastic slashes voted by the House. They gave back but 32 of the more than 800 Labor Dept. jobs lopped off by the House, leaving the department with about 4674 employes. When the Republican 80th Congress got through it had 4675.

The Wage and Hour Division, which enforces protective labor laws, was the worst mauled, losing 300 employes. The Solicitor's Office was cut back to less than the amount voted by the Senate, leaving the department with a smaller legal staff than when the Fair Labor Standards Act was passed in 1938.

Give-Aways

Determined Democratic opposition blocked at least until next session the giving away of Niagara Falls' hydroelectric power potential to five New York power companies.

The Senate passed a compromise undersea oil bill, after conferees knifed the Hill Amendment that would have set aside the federal revenues for education purposes. It was a follow-up of the earlier give-away of the tidelands oil.

The federal portion of the submerged lands contains oil and other resources estimated to be worth between $40 billion and $250 billion. Rights to the resources were given away for 12.5c on the dollar.

Big business got another handout when Congress approved a bill to sell 28 government-owned synthetic rubber plants. The plants were built during the last war.

Debt Limit

Another Republican campaign promise—to cut federal spending—was junked. Pres. Eisenhower asked for a boost in the national debt ceiling, from $275 billion to $290 billion, a new record high. The request may delay the recess.

Housing

Congress approved a "token" 20,000-unit public housing program, but specifically forbade scheduling of future construction. The National Housing Conference said that the action "liquidates" public housing.

"For the defeat of the low-rent public housing program we may thank the Republican leadership of the Congress and many so-called Dixiecrats," the NHC said.

"Rep. Phillips (R. Calif.), chairman of the House conferees, and Rep. Thomas (D. Tex.), ranking minority member, have served their supporters well. They have made certain that families will remain in slums and owners of slum properties will continue to prosper. They have made the real estate lobby very happy."

Foreign Aid

The Senate beat down a move to cut more than $500 million off the appropriation for foreign aid, but at the same time restored less than half of the earlier House slashes.

It sent to conference a measure calling for expenditures of $6.7 billion, as compared with the $6.1 billion voted by the House. Eisenhower had asked for $7.2 billion and warned that "grave consequences" would result from a major cut.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a cable to Pres. Eisenhower earlier assailed the butchering of the overseas aid program. "This is no time to falter in our struggle against Communist imperialism," Reuther noted.

The cuts were "a repudiation of American promises abroad," according to Robert Oliver, CIO coordinator of legislative activities. He also asked larger funds for the Voice of America.

On a related measure, the Senate Appropriations Committee voted 7 to 4 to restore $20 million in funds for the International Information Administration which had been knocked out in the House. This brought the IIA total to $80 million, still $7.6 million less than asked by Eisenhower. Floor action was pending.

Also awaiting final action were bills to let the President send up to $100 million worth of surplus food to hungry nations abroad and legislation to implement Eisenhower's request for $200 million to begin the job of rebuilding South Korea.

Defense

Conferees on defense appropriations reported back a compromise measure even lower than either house had voted, but it breezed through both chambers to the White House.

Totalling $34.3 billion, the amount was $1.4 billion less than Pres. Eisenhower thought was needed for the country's safety, and it was $6.3 billion below the requests of former Pres. Truman.

Less than half of the "crippling" $240 million slash in air force funds voted by the House was restored, although the Senate originally voted a $200 million restoration.

Refugees

The Senate voted to admit 209,000 special quota refugees from behind the Iron Curtain during the next three years. The measure went to conference with a House bill that authorized 217,000 admissions.

Eisenhower wanted 240,000 admitted within a two-year period.

Government Loans

Over Democratic warnings that the agency might be needed to combat a recession, congress voted to kill the Reconstruction Finance Corp., set up in 1932 to help pull the nation out of the depression.

In its place, a new small business lending agency was created, which in addition to taking over the functions of the Small Defense Plants Administration will have limited authority to make loans to small firms. Its policy will be determined by a three-man board made up of the Secretaries of the Treasury and Commerce and the new agency's administrator.

Mail Rates

Another casualty of the rush to adjourn was the Administration's request for a $240 million increase in postal rates. The House completed its hearings last week, but legislation was put off until next session.

Foundations

The House ordered a new investigation into tax-exempt foundations although it had just completed one last year.

Rep. Reece (R. Tenn.), sponsor of the resolution, justified it by referring to the recent announcement of the Ford Foundation that it would spend $15 million on a broad investigation of civil rights. He complained that the foundation proposed "to investigate the investigative rights of Congress."

That, Rep. Hays (D. Ark.) pointed out, is a constitutional right of anyone.

But the House voted the expenditure of another chunk of the taxpayers' money, apparently just so Reece could find it out.

—M. P.

Curbed

Rep. Hoffman (R. Mich.), about the bitterest anti-labor member of either house of Congress, got sat upon hard last week. The House, in an unusual move, voted 171 to 6 to strip Chairman Hoffman of control over all but $100,000 of the $355,000 granted the House Government Operations Committee for investigations.

Summing Up

The shortest summary of the "give-away, take-away, dodge-away" Congress came from Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) when he noted that the GOP 83rd Congress produced "molehills of legislation and mountains of McCarthy."

Taft Dies Of Cancer

THE REPUBLICANS last week suffered a heavy blow in the death of Robert A. Taft (O.), GOP Senate leader, son of a President, and unsuccessful candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination.

He died at the New York (N. Y.) Hospital of leukemia, an incurable cancer of the blood. He was 63.

Despite Taft's death, the Republicans are expected to continue in control of the Senate.

Gov. Frank Lausche of Ohio is a Democrat and is reported considering naming a Democrat, Michael DiSalle, to succeed Taft. DiSalle was Price Administrator under former Pres. Truman.

The appointment of a Democrat would give them 48 seats and leave the GOP with 47 seats in the Senate.

There is one Independent, Sen. Morse (Ore.). Before Taft's death he had said he would vote to keep the GOP in control. In the event of a tie vote, Vice Pres. Nixon would, of course, decide in favor of his party.

The last time Taft ran for reelection in 1950 he was opposed by both the CIO and the AFL because he was co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act, which emasculated the Wagner Labor Act.

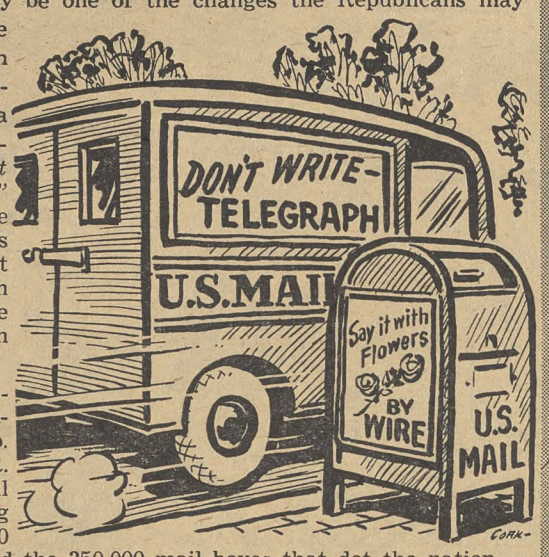
Postoffice Prescription—

...Or Put Chlorophyll In The Mucilage

IF YOU SEE one of Uncle Sam's mail trucks lurching down your street, its panelled side bearing an advertising poster reading "Don't Write—Telegraph," don't do a double-take.

It will only be one of the changes the Republicans may have in store for you. Though they campaigned on a "take government out of business" theme, some GOP leaders want to put government in business more solidly than ever.



Before Congress is a proposal by Rep. Latham (R. N.Y.) to sell advertising space on 16,500 mail trucks and the 350,000 mail boxes that dot the nation.

Union leaders with an ironic sense of humor declare that Latham's brainstorm doesn't go half far enough.

"He completely missed the biggest opportunity of all," said one union official. "He should have proposed—and he probably will—that the government sell advertising space on our postage stamps.

"Instead of George Washington on one stamp, we could have an ad for General Electric garbage disposals. Instead of Thomas Jefferson on another stamp we'd have an appeal to eat Crunchie-Wunchies, and we'd drop Abraham Lincoln's portrait and replace it with a slogan for El Skunko cigars or even with the Western Union motto, 'Don't Write—Telegraph!'

"And don't forget the great advertising possibilities on the other side of the stamp. Candy mint manufacturers will want to mix their flavors into the mucilage, and it's a cinch that at least one businessman will figure out a way to work in the fragrance of a deodorant he manufactures."

Reuther Hails Truce, Asks War On Poverty

THE KOREAN TRUCE signed last week offers America and the free world "an unlimited opportunity to launch a positive offensive in man's age-old struggle against poverty, hunger and illiteracy and disease," said CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther. The truce, product of two years of negotiating and many concessions by the United Nations, halted fighting on July 27. Reuther described it as "most welcome and most encouraging."

"However, a truce in Korea has not resolved the final conflicts between the forces of freedom and the forces of Communist tyranny of which the Korean conflict was but a localized manifestation," he said.

"America and the free world must continue to take the steps necessary to insure the measure of military strength needed to discourage future Communist aggression.

"WE MUST realize, however, that military strength is but the negative aspect of a dynamic foreign policy; and if we are to win the minds, hearts and loyalties of millions of people in the struggle against Soviet imperialism, we must take the offensive in the economic and social fields in a practical day-to-day struggle against poverty, hunger and human insecurity.

"In a world in which more than half the people are ill-clothed, ill-fed and ill-housed, the basic struggle between freedom and tyranny will be won in the rice field and not on the battlefield. For people will judge the free world not by its military strength, but rather by its dedication to the advancement of human progress, human happiness and human dignity.

"It is in the field of human betterment that America and the free world have an overwhelming margin of superiority over the Soviet Union and its satellite nations."

CIO Urges Planning For 'Plenty In Peace'

BROAD increases in private spending are required to sustain full employment and economic growth in the wake of the Korean truce, the CIO Committee on Economic Policy warned last week.

The committee's views were made public by the chairman, Emil Rieve, vice president of the CIO and president of the CIO Textile Workers. The detailed adjustments it feels are necessary, he said, are spelled out in its report, "Maintaining Prosperity," which was released last month.

THE COMMITTEE says eight specific steps must be taken to keep the national economy on a sound course and to counter Communist propaganda that the United States cannot survive economically without war, Rieve said.

"We must demonstrate that a free society can continue to produce plenty in peace," he said. "The free nations of the world continue to look to us for unswerving economic leadership and strength.

"But an orderly transition cannot be accomplished automatically. During the past few weeks there have already been clear signs that the peak of the current boom is behind us. While we must not let our guard down as the hot war draws to a close, there is the additional prospect of some reduction in defense expenditures.

"THIS MAKES it more than ever imperative to adjust private and public policies to the basic task of sustaining full employment and economic growth by broad increases in private spending."

The eight steps the committee maintains must be taken to put more purchasing power in the hands of the people include union-negotiated wage increases, increasing the income tax exemption level from $600 to $800 a person, repealing excise taxes, and permitting the excess profits tax to expire and thus make possible lower prices and higher wages.

Also, carrying out of plans for expansion, terminating war contracts with due regard for the impact on employment, abandoning the government's hard money policy with its cramping effect on business expansion and consumer durable sales, and enactment of a broad program of public improvements.

"In the light of the limitless needs of the American people as well as the entire free world, a recession or depression is unthinkable," Rieve concluded.

"We must keep our economic machine in high gear to meet these great needs. The free world can and must continue to out-produce the Soviet slave system."

CIO Brewers Win Long Milwaukee Strike With 20c Boost, Shorter Hours, Pensions

A SPECTACULAR victory was won by CIO Brewery Workers Local 9 last week after a 76-day strike that closed six major Milwaukee breweries.

The settlement, which included a 37.5-hour week, a general wage increase of 20c an hour and a pension plan, was approved by a three-to-one margin at a membership meeting. The minority wanted to hold out for a straight 35-hour week despite 11 weeks on the picket line.

"The solid support of the National CIO, State CIO Council and CIO local unions in Wisconsin, Michigan and Illinois made the victory possible," commented Sec. John Schmitt of BW-CIO Local 9.

James Paradise, the union's general counsel, described the new contract as "the outstanding accomplishment in the industry in the last decade."

THE CONTRACT, including the wage increases and except for a health and welfare program, is retroactive to Mar. 1 and will remain in force until June 15, 1955.

Power house employes get an additional 10c an hour on top of the general pay boost of 20c. Another general increase of 7.5c will become effective June 1, 1954. Good Friday was added to the list of paid holidays, and shift differentials were boosted 2c an hour to 7c on the second shift and 12c on the third.

Workers are guaranteed a full day's pay if called in on a Saturday, Sunday or holiday. They get a paid 30-minute lunch period, and a 15-minute rest period, or "beer time," each morning and afternoon. Maintenance workers are given all work clothes, with brew shop employes getting both clothing and boots.

The union won a major improvement in union security with inclusion of the checkoff in the contract for the first time.

The pension plan is non-contributory and is industrywide in Milwaukee, permitting Local 9 members to shift jobs among the six employers without losing retirement rights. The firms will pay into the fund at the rate of 10c an hour for all straight time worked, plus unworked paid holidays and vacation, rest and lunch periods.

It is to become effective by

GM And Big Steel Report New Sales, Earnings Gains

GENERAL MOTORS, the world's largest corporation, and Big Steel last week reported fabulous sales and profits so far this year.

GM sales in the second quarter of 1953 totaled $3 billion, a new record. Passenger car sales were up 65% over 1952's second quarter. Net income was over $161.5 million, equal to $1.81 a common share, up from $142 million a year ago.

U. S. Steel Corporation's financial picture for the half-year issued last week reported record shipments of finished steel, sales of nearly $2 billion and sharply higher earnings. Plants operated at over 98% of capacity.

Net profits amounted to more than $105 million in the first six months of 1953. They were up more than $92 million over the corresponding period last year, during the steel strike. Latest earnings equalled $3.54 a share on the common stock. The directors declared the usual 75c dividend on the stock, payable Sept. 10.

PAC Rally Called For Aug. 19

HEIGHTENED political activity at all levels will be charted at a big CIO rally to be held in Washington Aug. 19.

The call for the meeting was issued last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. The session will be held one day before the regular meeting of the CIO Executive Board.

Reviewing the record of the 83rd Congress' first session, which last week was drawing to a close, Reuther and Kroll said that "our organization and the nation" are faced with problems "which deserve our closest attention."

Intensified political action on the national, state and local level in 1953-54 will be discussed at the conference.

Participating will be CIO officers and Executive Board members, members of the National CIO-PAC, CIO international union officers, CIO regional directors and PAC officials from State CIO Councils.

"Our political action committees must be brought to a higher state of organization, more adequately financed, and better equipped to carry on an intensive program of political education and activity," Reuther and Kroll said.

The seven months of the first session of the 83rd Congress, they noted, demonstrated "a predisposition to give away the natural resources of our country to private exploiters, a reluctance to face our responsibilities and obligations as the leader of the free world, and an earnest desire to blot out the pattern of liberal government so painstakingly established over the past 20 years."

Unless action is taken to mobilize CIO forces for the battles which lie ahead, Reuther and Kroll said, "there is grave danger that these tendencies, so clearly expressed in this session, will be accelerated in the next session and carried on into future sessions of Congress."

Rieve Protests Naming Of Byrnes

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has protested to Pres. Eisenhower the appointment of Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina as a U. S. delegate to the United Nations. Rieve said that the Dixiecrat governor was "outstandingly unqualified" and would furnish the Kremlin a "propaganda weapon of untold value."

People, Not Statistics

The biggest change in Washington—in the week of the Korean truce and as the 83rd Congress prepares to go home—is that statistics apparently are more important than people in the minds of the Republican Administration.

Take the case of the developing cloud of unemployment on the economic horizon, most notably in the automobile and aircraft industries.

It was only a few short weeks ago that Pres. Eisenhower, echoing the views of most Americans, pledged to employ "every useful measure, private and public" to help "create conditions that foster economic stability and a rising standard of living."

In his letter to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, the President applauded the "determination of the American people to see to it that the stupidity of mass unemployment never again visits this land."

A test of that determination is developing fast for the Eisenhower Administration in the Detroit area. There cutbacks in defense orders plus slackening auto sales and production have resulted in layoffs for some 25,000 auto workers. Another 15,000 face layoffs in the near future as result of military contract shifts.

So far, it is the auto workers themselves, men and women with years on the production line, with families at home, who are paying the freight. Their story, told in this issue of The CIO News (see Pages 6 and 7), is a foreboding one.

Paging Charlie Wilson

So far, there is no action by the Administration—from the White House on down—to deliver on Pres. Eisenhower's promises to maintain a full employment economy.

The President's three-man Council of Economic Advisers was junked months ago. It hasn't been reconstituted. The watchdog congressional committee on the nation's economy isn't functioning.

What discussion of the employment outlook appears in the business press dismisses the present million-plus unemployed as "frictional" and cavalierly suggests that a post-Korean "recession"—depression to you, that is—might result in four or five million unemployed without any cause for alarm. It's the old GOP-big business theory: putting statistics ahead of people. So far as we're concerned, one unemployed U. S. worker is one too many.

When the CIO Auto Workers came to Washington recently, they didn't get much satisfaction out of the Defense Dept.

When Michigan's Gov. G. Mennen Williams asked Defense Sec. Charles E. Wilson for a conference on the auto-aircraft cutbacks, he got a curt dismisal from the former General Motors president who thinks what's good for GM is good for the country.

"General Motors Charlie" told Gov. Williams that a conference "on this matter is unnecessary."

And the President should give some serious consideration to the nation's economy, to demonstrate, as CIO suggests, that "a free society can continue to produce plenty in peacetime."

In Other Words—

Knifing The Wage-Hour Law

A plea to stop further wrecking of the Walsh-Healey Act and the Wages and Hours Act comes from Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.). Writing in the New Republic, he calls for realism in the nation's basic wage legislation and an end to the amendments that cripple wage-setting policies.

By JOHN F. KENNEDY

THIRTY DOLLARS a week is not a living wage in any part of the U. S. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the average four-person family in Mobile, Ala., needed more than twice that amount in order to maintain a modest standard of living—to pay $51 monthly rent, for example.

But $30 a week, 75c an hour, is the minimum wage now set by the Fair Labor Standards Act; and thus that is the incredible sum which, for example, thousands of cotton-textile mill workers in the Southeast region of the United States are paid.

What sort of homes, food, clothing and medical care can these workers obtain for themselves and their families? Yet, a proposed increase to $1 an hour is protested.

A child of nine is far too young to be working in the cotton fields of this country. But the small investigative staff of the Dept. of Labor found several hundred such children employed illegally during school hours last year; yet some Congressmen are now seeking to exempt agriculture from coverage of the Act.

Courts Curtail Wage Orders

For nearly two decades it has been established national policy that the Secretary of Labor should determine and enforce the current prevailing minimum wage rates in industries with which the government is contracting, in order to prevent sweatshop employers from underbidding employers who pay a decent wage.

And yet under an amendment adopted at the close of the last session of Congress, we find a temporary injunction granted which suspends the recent determination made by the Secretary of Labor of the national minimum wage in the textile industry. This is but a part of the struggle to break the Walsh-Healey Act and provide for a setting of minimum rates on a regional rather than a national scale.

The Wages and Hours Act: Our basic labor standards law, is, of course, the Fair Labor Standards Act, currently requiring a minimum wage of 75c an hour and a regular work week of no longer than 40 hours, with time-and-a-half for overtime. Employment of children under 16 or in hazardous industries is prohibited. Exemptions are provided in great number.

A Ph.D. in economics is not required to realize that 75c an hour is a nearly meaningless and obsolete wage floor. In terms of maintaining a home and family, 40c an hour was admitted by its sponsors to be inadequate in the 1938 Act, as was 75c an hour in the 1949 amendments. One dollar an hour would be inadequate in 1953.

The Walsh-Healey Act:—The object of the Act by determining the current prevailing minimum wage on a national basis, said the Supreme Court, was to "obviate the possibility that any part of our tremendous national expenditures would go to forces tending to depress wages and purchasing power and offending fair social standards of employment."

Drive To Cut Wages

The Act worked well without far-reaching amendment until 1952. Near the close of the 82nd Congress, several extensive amendments . . . were introduced by Sen. Fulbright under the guise of amendments to the temporary Defense Production Act, thus avoiding the more progressive Senate Labor Committee.

The Fulbright Amendments introduce the confusing uncertainties of court decisions to a matter for administrative finding of fact. It thus serves only to cripple unnecessarily the effective operation of the Act.

Its encumbering effect was recognized by the Report on the Textile Industry prepared for the New England Governors' Conference of which Gov. Sherman Adams of New Hampshire (now assistant to the President) was Chairman; and demonstrated by a suit filed by Southern mill owners against the Secretary's recent finding in the textile industry.

Challenging the finding in a number of ways, these owners were successful in obtaining a temporary injunction suspending the textile increase for their employes. Thus, the whole intent of the Act was frustrated as these southern mills continued to undercut the industry with low wages.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE FRANTIC-TO-ADJOURN first session of the 83rd Congress planted two time bombs intended to tick quietly away, for a year or so, and then blow up the New Deal.

The first of them is the new Hoover Commission to study functions as well as the "efficiency" of the federal government, and Herbert Hoover's self-announced reluctant acceptance of the chairmanship can be attributed exclusively to an excess of false modesty.

Time Bomb Under The New Deal

Mr. Hoover's got exactly the job he wants, on exactly his own terms, and it looks as if he has a "team" of other commission members that may be depended on to recommend the gutting of the New Deal.

The old Hoover Commission was limited to study of the operations of the federal government and recommending reforms in the interests of efficiency.

Hoover did not like this limitation and, on one occasion, he tried to ram through some recommendations hostile to public power. He was stopped when other members protested that the group was not authorized to make policy proposals.

Now his new commission has full authority to investigate policy as well as operations in the executive department.

Technically the commission is nonpartisan—six Democrats and six Republicans. But the only noticeable Democratic liberal is Rep. Holifield (D. Calif.). Others are Joseph P. Kennedy, former ambassador to Britain; James A. Farley, who broke with Roosevelt in 1940; Arthur B. Flemming, now Ike's mobilization planner; Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.) and one of the most conservative men in the Senate; Robert Story of Dallas, dean of the law school at Southern Methodist Univ. and president of the American Bar Association.

What Herbie Plans

Hoover has repeatedly told intimates that his first commission just scratched the surface of executive operations, that the important thing was to get the government out of various fields of activity.

He said immediately after Ike's election that the government ought to sell its big dams and generators to private enterprise. Now he has a commission from which he may obtain formal proposals in a direct report to Congress.

The second group set up by the Congress to lay the foundations for attacks on federal functions in the field of health, welfare, public power is the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

This group was approved, on Ike's recommendation, to study the "proper" division of functions and tax sources between federal, state and local governments.

Business groups are moving fast to influence this commission in the direction of "decentralization" of what the U. S. Chamber of Commerce calls "big national government."

In at least 16 states local Chambers of Commerce are setting up "citizens' committees" to persuade people that the national government should be whittled down by attacking its revenues and its operations.

The new Hoover Commission and the President's new Commission on Intergovernmental Relations are in a position to land a one-two punch—to kill a number of federal functions and make sure that they stay killed by slashing federal tax sources and revenues to the level that the Chamber of Commerce considers "proper."

Grumbling Over Knowland

With the death of Sen. Taft, Sen. Knowland (R. Calif.) has little assurance that he can hang on to the job of GOP Senate floor leader next January.

Taft "appointed" Knowland as acting floor leader without clearing the appointment with other Republican senators. This irritated them although no serious protests were lodged. Knowland's heavy-handed driving tactics have produced both public and private grumbling.

He took a beating when he tried to push through controversial measures even though the skillful Sen. Johnson of Texas, Democratic floor leader, protested that assurances against such bills had been given absent senators. Some of Knowland's fellow Republicans long to chastise him.

The major loss to the Eisenhower Administration, in any case, would be Taft. The dominant anti-Eisenhower Republicans won't let the floor leadership go to one of Ike's pre-convention friends such as Sen. Saltonstall (Mass.) or Sen. Ives (N. Y.).

No floor leader lacking Taft's great prestige can do Ike's work well among the GOP primitives—and Knowland's influence has been weakened, rather than strengthened, by his performance this session.

★ Joseph Harsch, Christian Science Monitor reporter who covered Western Europe immediately after the Berlin riots, had to spend most of his time explaining away McCarthyism. Typical response from his European friends: "If you say Sen. McCarthy is only the scum on the pool, we say that where there is scum the pool is stagnant."

★ Defense Sec. Wilson took top-ranking military and civilian brass to Quantico, Va., for a three-day get-acquainted period of indoctrination and recreation. Said one officer who escaped: "Thank God, I don't have to go to Charlie Wilson's company picnic."

Tom Burke On Radio—

The 'Take-Away, Give-Away' Congress Leaves Barren Record

"I THINK the record of the present Congress to date is just as barren of legislation for the public good as that of the 80th."

That was the comment of Thomas H. Burke, CIO Chief of Congressional Liaison, during a radio interview on "Viewpoint, U. S. A." over NBC. The former Ohio Congressman, who recently assumed his CIO post, had been asked his opinion of the 83rd Congress which last week end was near the end of its first session.

He conceded that some legislation has been enacted. "But those laws which have been passed in this Congress are characterized by their one-sided favoritism for big business and special interests. Small business, farmers, labor and the consuming public generally have lost out," Burke said.

"Inasmuch as the only really major piece of legislation passed this session was the bill that gave away billions of dollars of offshore oil and gas belonging to all of the American people, perhaps an even better description than 'do-nothing' would be to call the 83rd the 'Take-away, give-away' Congress."

'Watered-down, Stymied'

Burke said that the President and Republican leaders in Congress had agreed upon an 11-point program to be pushed through "not later than July 4." He continued:

"One of the items . . . included the comparatively minor bill containing the President's power to reorganize the government. This has already passed Congress. That meant that, despite the multitude of campaign promises, only 10 other major legislative actions were proposed for the first session.

"It seemed to me then a pitifully weak confession of the lack of unity within Republican ranks, especially when one recalls the great avalanche of social reforms that were enacted in the first 100 days of the Roosevelt New Deal. Yet even this watered-down program has been stymied in Congress.

"The most serious failures from labor's viewpoint, of course, are the shelving of Republican campaign promises to amend the Taft-Hartley Act to make it 'fairer' to labor and extend social security coverage to millions of workers now denied its protection. Neither of these pledges even got out of committee, and we now seem to be faced with the prospect that, instead of enacting improvements in these two fields, Congress in the next session may try to make the Taft-Hartley Law even more anti-labor and take away and curtail existing social security benefits.

"Folks, how about a nice fat hot dog with loads of onions and french fries!"

"In this area, too, members of the Democratic minority have taken the lead in supporting the Eisenhower position. Sen. Lehman of New York is the author of an omnibus bill which would not only provide the extended coverage that the President promised during his campaign, but would increase benefit payments and bring the entire system more in line with present-day realities. All but one of the 10 other Senators and 17 Representatives who have joined Sen. Lehman in sponsoring this measure are Democrats. The CIO, and, I might add, the AFL, have both strongly endorsed this proposal.

"I would like to refer . . . to the anti-labor bias which is evident in many of the actions of this Congress as providing a sound basis for our concern. One example of this was the crippling slash in the Labor Dept. appropriation which has been reduced to its lowest level since the 80th Congress, while at the same time Congress voted even more money than the Administration asked for the Agriculture Dept. in a desperate effort to win back farm support in the face of sagging farm prices."

The Hate Drive Against The UN

By Public Affairs Institute

THE UNITED NATIONS is now eight years old. During its brief existence it has chalked up notable successes, several failures and a major operation in Korea.

Public opinion polls attest to the fact that the great majority of American people believe in the United Nations, so efforts to cut UN appropriations in Congress have come as a great surprise to many.

Pres. Eisenhower and his State Dept.—as did Pres. Truman and his State Dept.—have publicly reaffirmed the faith of the American government in the UN and have denounced the "go-it-alone" isolationist viewpoint as dangerous to American security.

Recently there has been an upsurge of attacks leveled at either the UN or some of its specialized agencies. Some of these attacks come from the "hate" groups such as Gerald L. K. Smith's Christian Nationalist Crusade or Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council. They want to pull the United States out of the UN.

Fear Of Foreigners

These groups fight the UN in the name of patriotism and the Bill of Rights. They hate the foreigner and fear that the UN may be used to "impose" domestic legislation on the United States contrary to the "American way of life."

Other opposition to the UN comes from more moderate organizations which may officially endorse the UN and the principle of world cooperation but concentrate their fire on specialized UN agencies such as the Intl. Labor Organization, the Food & Agriculture Organization, or the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization.

In a recently published Public Affairs Institute study, "The Assault on the UN" by Alexander Uhl, it is contended that the groups attacking the UN are finding common ground in their support of the proposed Bricker Amendment to the Constitution, as well as in their attack of appropriations by the U. S.

Sen. Bricker (R. O.) seeks to amend the treaty-making sections of the Constitution, limiting substantially the subject matter of treaties that can be made by the U. S. government. It would severely restrict the executive department in negotiating executive agreements or treaties which could become the "supreme law of the land."

Supporters of this amendment express fear that the United States, under its present constitutional treaty-making processes, is heading toward "legislation by treaty." They say that the Constitution as now written is not sufficient to protect basic freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights.

Open A 'Pandora's Box'

Uhl contends these fears are baseless. He further charges that "the proposed change would open a Pandora's box of problems, might seriously undermine the balance of power between the executive and legislative branches of the government, and would pose the question of the relationship between the United States and the United Nations."

Supporters of the Bricker Amendment contend that it is essentially designed to "protect" American rights and freedoms. "Nevertheless," writes Uhl, "the fact remains that the 1952 and 1953 Senate hearings on the Bricker and ABA (American Bar Association) amendments have served as the vehicle for a huge amount of direct and indirect anti-UN criticism and hostile propaganda.

"Legitimate complaints against the UN and its specialized agencies have been distorted in many cases or exaggerated to a fantastic degree in a widespread propaganda campaign that cannot be disregarded."

Storm Over Detroit: Job Lay

8000 At Kaiser Look For Work

(First of two articles)
By FRED ROSS

YOU HAVE to see the Willow Run plant of Kaiser Motors Corp. to believe it. It is 3121 feet long—three-fifths of a mile. The ground and the mezzanine floors contain 3.65 million square feet—more than 38 acres of space.

A lot of people could work there and did until about a month ago. There are now only a few thousand working, and some of them were being laid off, according to officials of Local 142 of the CIO Auto Workers.

Since a month ago, some 12,000 UAW members have been given layoff slips.

June 26 is the day they will long remember.

That was the day the Kaiser firm announced:

- The Air Force had cancelled its contract to build C-119s, flying boxcars, and C-123s, a new type of assault plane.
- It was halting passenger car production.
- It wished to renegotiate the union contract. (Subsequent developments showed the firm wanted to weaken the agreement.)

A Rent Boost, Too

And if that was not enough, federal authorities announced a 30% increase in rents at Willow Run and Norwayne Villages, housing projects which are mostly occupied by Kaiser workers. Quick action by UAW and the local gained cancellation of the order.

The UAW leadership was well aware of what the contract cancellation meant. A delegation headed by UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey came to Washington to protest and got a promise that Kaiser would be considered if it were decided that C-123s should be built for the Army.

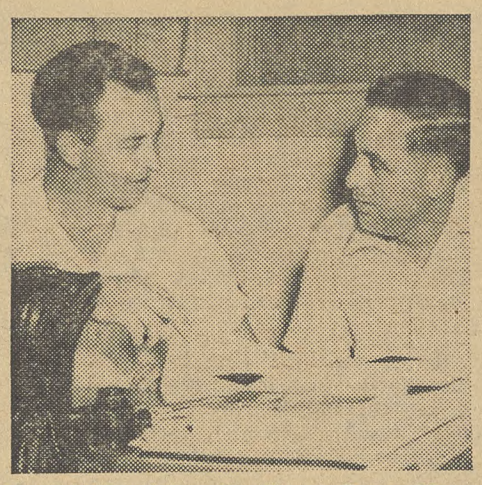
UAW feared the impact of the layoffs on Detroit and elsewhere when the curtailment in military orders and slackening of the sale of passenger cars and trucks began to be felt.

Local 142's leadership was well aware of what was happening, despite the efforts of Detroit newspapers to minimize the effect of the layoffs.

8000 Looking For Work

Terry Trout, Local 142's financial secretary, denied that a half of those laid off had found jobs as reported by the press. He said there are 8000 UAW members looking for work.

"See that bunch of men in the lobby?" Trout asked. "They were told at other plants they would have to get quit slips at Kaiser to get jobs. If they get quit slips they will lose their seniority and vacation pay at Kaiser."



FACING "firing line" are Pres. Harley Neideffer (left) and Financial Sec. Terry Trout of UAW-CIO Kaiser Local 142.

The reason the other motor companies asked for quit slips is economic but nonetheless horrible. If Kaiser starts rehiring, the firms don't want the men to leave after being trained for new jobs.

It also shows another thing, explained UAW officials at Solidarity House, the international union's headquarters at Detroit. If it were hard to get workers, the auto builders would hire workers and no questions asked. Now, with more men available, the companies can pick and choose.

A Trip To The Village

Let's take a trip to Willow Run Village, which Uncle Sam put up during World War II to house some of the workers who were making B-24 bombers at the plant. (Ford was turning out the bombers in the plant which the Army put up at a cost of $100 million; after Ford stopped making the planes, Kaiser picked up the lease in 1946 to make his new car.)

The frame houses, which look like Army barracks, are showing the effects of time and weather.

Cleatis Potter, 24-year-old Korean war veteran, and his sister, Sylvia Jean, who lives with him, his wife and his step-son, Garry, 13 months old, were painting the walls of their living room.

Potter said he had looked for work at several auto and parts plants. He said:

"A couple of them simply said they were not hiring and that was that. 'If we need you, we will call you,' I was told at two or three other places after they took my application.

"I know that some of the boys who used to work with me at Kaiser were told they would have to get quit slips to work at a Detroit parts factory."

His step-father-in-law, Tracy Green, who was minding Garry to keep him out of the paint, was still working at the Kaiser plant.

Green, who is an assembler on C-119s, faced an uncertain future. His foreman told him he would be laid off in a few days.

Families Fear Loss Of Homes

Long Seniority Gone

Things also were tough for the family of Van L. Allison. Allison was laid off with almost seven years seniority. He went to work for Kaiser the year after the firm leased the plant.

The Allisons have eight children, two of them married and with homes of their own.

Now that he has been laid off at Kaiser, his sole income is a part-time job as janitor at Local 142.

"When they find out my age, they don't give me much encouragement," said Allison, who is 56.

For five years the Allisons have been buying their home. Now they've had to notify the bank they will be able only to meet the interest payments.

Their real concern, they said, is their paralytic son, Lloyd, who since last Christmas has been either in Wayne County Hospital or in the Kitson Convalescent Home at Rockwood.

Their son has been kept at the Kitson home under a union-negotiated Blue Cross policy, paid for by Kaiser, but they have been notified that the benefits for the care of their son have been exhausted.

Woman Worker's Story

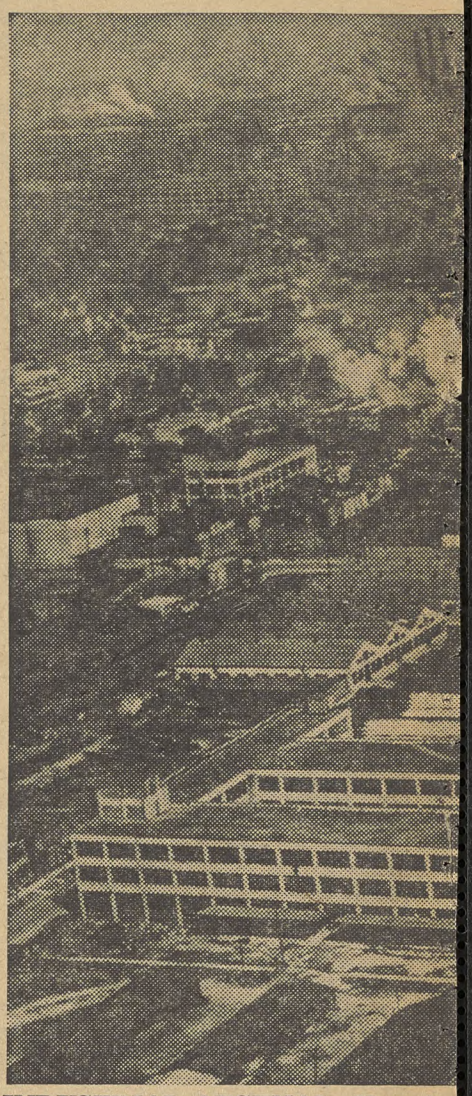
Another laid-off worker is Mrs. Ella Keeney. She has even more seniority than Potter, Green or Allison.

Mrs. Keeney has nine years' seniority, which antedates the operation of the Willow Run plant by Kaiser. Her seniority dates back to her employment by the Graham-Paige Co., which was purchased by Kaiser. She said:

"Except for illness, I was absent only one day, when I missed a ride with my friend who usually took me to the plant."

The Keeneys reared three daughters and three sons, one of whom was killed in the battle for Saipan.

Mrs. Keeney recalled with a chuckle a birthday party she had held a few days earlier for herself and Mrs. Noonan, who lives with her. Mrs. Keeney is 62 and Mrs. Noonan 75.



INDUSTRIAL ARSENAL: Here is ... more thousands will be laid off.

"Some of the girls from the shop cam... and we had a wonderful time," Mrs. Keeney beamed.

"Who is going to hire a 62-year-old wom... an?" she asked, her eyes clouding. "Whe... I went to a Wayne factory to ask for ... job, the employment man looked at me a... if he thought I was out of my mind."

She also was worried about how she wa... going to continue payments on her hom... which was neatly kept with geranium... and petunias in front.

Mrs. Keeney said she bought the hous... with her earnings and owes only $453.

"My children will help me," she said... "but I don't want them to pay my bill... I want to work and pay them myself.

"What we pay to the church, for socia... security, as income tax and to the union ... money well spent.

"I would rather be able to work an... pay than not work and not be able to pay.

Sales Lag Slashes Chrysler Jobs

SOME 23,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers, most of them in the Detroit area, have been laid off within the past month and a half by two firms.

This has been due to cancellation of Air Force contracts and the halting of civilian car production at the Kaiser Willow Run plant, and the slackening of sales of cars and trucks.

Some 12,000 workers had been employed by Kaiser, and some 11,000 by Chrysler plants in the Detroit area and throughout the country. The latter were laid off because of the slump in sales, according to the UAW.

Thousands more have been laid off by independent car manufacturers in Detroit and elsewhere because of the weakening of the civilian market.

Add to these the curtailment of military orders for tanks and trucks—the full effect of which has yet to be felt—and you may have the beginning of a depression in the auto industry.

The UAW Chrysler Dept. reported that the military cutbacks has or will throw more than 9000 out of work at that company alone — unless the government changes its policy.

Some 6000 civilian production workers were let go one day recently at the big Dodge plant in Detroit.

"They took their badges away for the first time in about eight years," said Pres. Joe Cheal of UAW Local 3, which represents the Dodge workers.

"That means the plant is not going to start up production for some time."

Auto Workers Pay The Bill As Big Firms, U. S. Dodge Layoffs

THE AUTO industry is sick—and the CIO Auto Workers are going to have to pay the doctor's bill unless the industry and the government act.

The doctor's bill will be measured in terms of unemployment of thousands of workers. The sicker the industry, the more unemployment, and nobody knows how long the illness will last.

This much is certain. The independent car manufacturers either have stopped or curtailed production, and there have been cutbacks by one of the Big Three—Chrysler. Production is holding up well at Ford and General Motors, but how long is another matter.

"The $500 million cutback in tank and truck production means the end of jobs, and hardships, for many thousands of workers and their families," said UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey.

Thousands Are Hurt

"Similar retrenchment in other areas of the defense program has already meant, and will in the future mean, unemployment for many thousands of additional workers. Meanwhile, there are already many signs that point to declining employment in civilian goods industries in the months immediately ahead.

"The auto industry where truck production is already substantially below recent levels and where both used and new cars are piling up in dealers' hands is a case in point.

"These developments emphasize the responsibility that rests on business and the national government to develop effective counter-measures that will sustain employment and enable us as a nation to make the fullest use of our enormous productive power to wipe out need and raise living standards here and abroad."

Prices Too High

Yet there is a demand for cars. The rich are able to buy Cadillacs, but the rest of the people want the so-called cheap cars but can't afford them.

As Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, former chairman of President Truman's Council for Economic Advisers, put it, "the price of a car in the popular ranges has gone up more than the net incomes of the great middle and working class, where the bulk of the market lies."

What makes the UAW members mad is that Walter P. Reuther, president of CIO and UAW, warned the industry last May against its production scheduling that helped cause the present situation.

FEARING jobless crisis are UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey (left) and Edward Cote, co-director, Region 1-A in which Kaiser plant is located.

That schedule called for the production of 60% of the year's total output of 5.5 million passenger cars in the first six months.

Reuther's Protest

Reuther wrote 15 car, truck and parts manufacturers:

"Efforts on the part of industry to produce in excess of 60% of their annual output during the first six months of the year is both economically and morally wrong. If management persists in these efforts, it must assume the full responsibility for the unemployment and the hardships that thousands of workers and their families will experience . . .

"I can assure you the UAW-CIO will be glad to cooperate in any way we can with your company and the industry as a whole to prevent unemployment and the resulting personal and community hardships later in the year."

The warning went unheeded.

One of the firms receiving Reuther's letter was GM, of which Defense Sec. Charles E. Wilson used to be president.

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan has been trying to get Wilson to show a little interest in the effect the military production cut-backs will have on the state's employment picture—but has met with little success.

Wilson said a conference "on this matter is unnecessary."

CIO Protests Hells Canyon Give-Away To Power Trust

OPPOSITION to the Idaho Power Co. application for Hells Canyon dam sites was registered by the CIO with the Federal Power Commission last week in a letter that also called for construction of a high dam as recommended by government agencies.

The CIO's position was detailed in a letter to Jerome Kuykendall, FPC chairman, from Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

Smith made three main points: the application should be dismissed because the company has not filed a comprehensive plan, as required by law; because the dam site should be developed by a public agency, and because Idaho Power's plan would not develop the water power potential to its fullest.

The letter reflected the stand on natural resources taken by many past National CIO conventions.

On Idaho Power's lack of a comprehensive plan, Smith reminded Kuykendall that Congress often has shown its intention of working toward the "integrated planning and management of all the resources in each of our river basins and their component smaller watersheds."

"THE PURPOSE of regional planning in the Pacific Northwest, as elsewhere, should be to satisfy the requirements of human beings as they relate to all the resources together," he wrote.

" . . . It is the contention of the CIO that the first question the commission should inquire into in any such case as this would be whether an integrated program for the conservation and development of the resources of the region and the particular watershed is in existence and whether the facilities proposed by the applicant comply with requirements of that plan.

"No showing has been made in these proceedings that any such plan is in existence or that the proposals of the applicant comply with such a plan."

The CIO believes public agencies—federal, state, local and genuinely cooperative and non-profit bodies—should develop water power potentials because regulatory systems for controlling privately-owned companies do no function effectively, Smith went on.

"BUT regardless of the above contention," he continued, "we favor public development and management of hydro-power potentials because only through such development can we hope to bring hydro-electric power operations under a general plan of the kind referred to above."

Smith also reminded the FPC that the CIO has favored for years the construction of a high dam in Hells Canyon, instead of the three small dams proposed by Idaho Power, because all the electricity generated at the site is needed and will promptly be utilized.

Coast CIO Backs High Dam To Save Jobs In Northwest

PROPOSALS of the Idaho Power Co. to take over the Hells Canyon dam site were under new fire last week as the executive board of the CIO-California Industrial Union Council called for their rejection by the Federal Power Commission.

The board also urged the FPC to recommend that Congress authorize "construction of a high dam at Hells Canyon by an agency of the federal government."

The U. S. Army Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation have proposed building a high dam in the mile-deep canyon of the Snake River so as to boost electric power production and benefit the whole Northwest.

IDAHO POWER, owned 90% by Eastern financial interests, wants to build three small dams which would generate but a fraction of the power the big dam would turn out and impound far less water for release during dry spells.

Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay has withdrawn government opposition to the Idaho Power application and has pulled the government out of the fight to develop the site fully instead of partially.

The California CIO charged the private utility's plan would produce between 300,000 and 400,000 fewer kilowatt hours of prime power than the high dam, and that the price tag would be "prohibitive . . . thus blocking new industry from the area."

George Brown, executive secretary of the Oregon CIO Council, in a radio address warned the new Oregon Development Commission to support the high dam proposal because "we shall continue to be haunted by brownouts, surcharges and unemployment until the problem of upstream storage on the Columbia River had been solved."

DURING the brownout last winter, caused by lack of water to turn generator wheels at dams, nearly 10% of Oregon's labor force was idle, he recalled.

"Like the brownouts, the 20% surcharge on power bills was the result of failure to store water for use during dry periods," he said.

Rodgers Named To Labor Board

Philip Ray Rodgers has been nominated by Pres. Eisenhower to a five-year term as a member of the National Labor Relations Board. He succeeds John M. Houston, whose term has expired.

Rodgers is a former staff director of the Senate Labor Committee. The President recently named Guy Farmer as chairman of the NLRB.

LABOR AIDE HONORED—Former Pres. Truman (center) was honorary pallbearer at Boston rites for former Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin. Some 45,000 lined streets for the procession. At Holy Cross Cathedral, Archbishop Richard J. Cushing eulogized Tobin as "a good man" who "never outgrew his own."

Seamen's Families Gain Benefits In NMUMedicalPlan

MEDICAL benefits for families of CIO Maritime Union members began last week and are expected to cover 100,000 dependents of seamen.

The family benefit program was among the points won by NMU-CIO in its brief June strike against Atlantic and Gulf Coast shippers. Union members are already insured. Operation of the family plan will be included in the NMU pension and welfare setup which is financed by employer contributions of 60c for each man-day worked.

Treas. M. Hedley Stone of NMU said a booklet with details of the new extended coverage would be distributed soon to the more than 40,000 members.

TORNADO RELIEF—Check for $25,000 is presented by Massachusetts CIO Council Pres. J. William Belanger to Bishop John J. Wright, treasurer of Central Massachusetts Disaster Relief Committee in Worcester.

Coast Curb On Severance Pay Vetoed

A PUBLISHER inspired bill that would have taken thousands of dollars in severance pay benefits from California members of the CIO Newspaper Guild has been vetoed not once—but twice.

Gov. Earl Warren, just before leaving for Europe, refused to sign it. After he left, Lt.-Gov. Goodwin Knight also refused to yield to employer pressure and declined to sign it along with other bills which Warren had not approved.

The bill would have prevented ANG-CIO members from receiving unemployment compensation for the number of weeks they receive severance pay under Guild contracts.

WARREN had expressed agreement with the Guild contention that severance pay is an equity earned by past performance, and is not related to jobless benefits in any way.

Introduced by Sen. Jack Tenney (R. Los Angeles)—the California Legislature's version of Joe McCarthy—the measure was pushed through both houses by a publisher lobby sparked by Robert Bassett, Hearst labor relations man, and John B. Long, general manager of the California Newspaper Publishers Association. It was fought bitterly by the ANG-CIO and the rest of organized labor.

24 Communities Keep Rent Control

The areas, located in 19 states and all close to big military or naval installations, will remain under federal control until next Apr. 30, or until rent controls are no longer needed, whichever comes sooner.

CIO Supports Meyner For N. J. Governor

ENDORSEMENT of Robert B. Meyner, a Democrat, in New Jersey's contest for governor was announced last week by the State CIO Council Political Action Committee. New Jersey is the only state that will elect a governor this year.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the CIO Council, and Chairman Paul Krebs of the State CIO-PAC, reported the unanimous action of the 72-member committee. Meyner's endorsement, they said, was based upon his replies to a 54-point questionnaire on legislative items of importance to the state. Major candidates were interviewed and their past records surveyed before the endorsement was issued.

"The State CIO-PAC has gone to great lengths," Holderman and Krebs said, "to determine the views of the major candidates for governor of New Jersey.

"ON THE BASIS of (an) exhaustive survey, it is the unanimous opinion of the . . . State CIO-PAC that the interests of CIO members and the general public will best be served by the election of Robert B. Meyner in November."

Plans for the election campaign are now being drawn. Officials of county CIO councils have been alerted to urge local election officials to arrange additional evening registration hours.

"It is imperative that county councils launch their campaigns immediately so that the all-important task of registering every eligible CIO worker and member of his family can be accomplished," Holderman and Krebs concluded.

GOP Senate Kills FEP In Pennsylvania

PENNSYLVANIA'S Republican-controlled Senate has gone back on a 1952 campaign promise to establish a Fair Employment Practices Commission.

For the fifth consecutive year the GOP Senate leadership strangled the FEPC measure which had strong CIO support.

The measure died last week in the Judiciary General Committee, 16 to 8, with only two Republicans voting for the bill. Gov. John S. Fine earlier had asked for "fair play" and assignment of the measure to the Senate Education Committee.

The FEPC legislation previously passed the House by an overwhelming 152-30.

House approval is expected for a bill to increase unemployment compensation benefits from $30 to $32.50 a week. CIO leaders in the State say the measure does not go as far as they desire but it represents an improvement.

Deadline for registration in the Quaker State is Sept. 28. The State CIO Council's PAC has called for an opening of the registration campaign at once in preparation for municipal elections this year and state and national elections in 1954.

BIRTHDAY BANNER hailed 20th anniversary of CIO Electrical Workers Local 101 as workers in Philadelphia's Philco plant celebrated founding of first national union in electrical-radio industry. IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey, who also is CIO secretary-treasurer, sent greetings by cable from Europe to his home local union. Among speakers was Al Hartnett (left), IUE-CIO secretary-treasurer.

'Distressed Area' Arms Policy Curbed

A COMPROMISE policy to channel defense contracts into "distressed areas" was tagged on to the $34 billion military appropriations bill sent to the President late last week but the compromise made very few people happy.

The issue which stirred bitter debate along sectional lines and fanned the fires of Republican rebellion against their own Administration was Policy 4 of the Office of Defense Mobilization.

Earlier in the week the Senate sustained an amendment by Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.) to curb this policy, which allowed defense contracts to go to areas for correcting or preventing "economic dislocation."

Southerners and many westerners joined the coalition, among them many Republicans, despite the Administration's approval for Policy 4. A conference between the two chambers came up with a new policy to permit awards of defense contracts to surplus labor areas provided they meet the low bid.

AMONG the areas currently regarded as "critical" and which could have shared in defense awards are Lowell and Lawrence, Mass., Providence, R. I., the Crab Orchard area of Illinois, the Iron Mountain area of Michigan, Terre Haute and Vincennes, Ind., and a number of sections in West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The compromise version passed the Senate only after Majority Leader Knowland (R. Cal.) promised he would see Pres. Eisenhower "personally" to take up the procurement policy. Knowland supported Maybank's proposal and promised the Administration would "proceed at its peril" if it ignored the Senate record. He told Maybank he would join in legislation to "tie the hands" of the Administration if the policy continues, despite the fact that it is "my own party."

NEW ENGLAND House members professed dissatisfaction with the compromise but conceded it was an improvement over the earlier Senate version, which flatly banned use of defense orders but specifies that no "price differentials" can be paid. Differentials had been authorized in the past but never were actually paid.

Basically, the fight is an old one between textile interests in New England and the South. Unemployment has been running high in some New England areas as mills have moved to the South to escape organization and get lower costs.

There was more than a veiled threat in the promise of Rep. Rivers (D. S.C.) that Republicans may not have the help of Southern Democrats to hold their slim majority in the House if the preference measure was not killed.

"YOU'RE trying to stop a law of nature, which you can't do. We're sorry for the textile industry of New England. But if you do this to us, we won't forget it," Rivers warned northern congressmen.

Sen. Saltonstall (D. Mass.) recalled that Pres. Eisenhower promised during his campaign last year that defense funds would be used to aid distressed areas. Unless the present policy was continued, he said, the chief executive's promises could not be fulfilled.

World Of Labor—

100,000 Germans Defy Reds To Get U. S. Food Packages

HUNGRY East Germans, defying their Communist government, jammed into West Berlin at a rate of better than 100,000 a day last week for free American food.

They arrived in rags and tatters, their bodies showing the effects of years of privation but their spirits undimmed, to put the lie to the Soviet-dominated East German government's claim that there is no hunger behind the Iron Curtain.

Some of them travelled hundreds of miles, from as far away as the Czechoslovakia border and the Baltic Sea, to get the food they could not get at home. Many of them spent nights in West German refugee centers, then queued up at dawn to claim their five-pound boxes of what became known as "Eisenhower food packages."

THE SITUATION was tense. Reports were received in West Germany that an occasional Communist Zone police detail had confiscated a package, but there was no general move to seize the food the puppet government could not—or would not—supply.

The confiscated packages were in open bags; most easterners carried the food so it could not be readily seen.

American plans to give away one million packages were speedily abandoned. One official said at least double that number will be distributed, or "as many as are demanded and as long as there are people who want it."

MEANTIME, the East German campaign to enforce the no strike edict of Minister of Justice "Red Hilde" Benjamin apparently had dimmed the resistance spirit of East Berlin workers.

Thousands of workers who participated in the strikes and demonstrations that started on June 17 were jailed in the past two weeks as Red police conducted widespread raids. No new strikes were reported, but slowdowns were taking place in many factories, with sharp drops in production.

One fruit of the Communist anti-labor policy has been a wave of withdrawals from the Soviet Zone Free German Trade Union Federation (FDGE), according to articles in East German newspapers.

One report was that within two weeks after the demonstrations began, more than 30,000 members quit the puppet union because it had opposed the workers' demands.

ICFTU

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has never received the invitation to united action the Communist World Federation of Trade Unions said it sent last April, Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek said last week at ICFTU headquarters.

"We look forward to the time," he added, "when we shall again be able to welcome at internal trade union gatherings the bona fide representatives of workers now cut off by the Iron Curtain. But cooperation with the WFTU would certainly not hasten that day."

DC Lithographers Strike For Raise

The CIO Lithographers have been on strike five weeks at two Washington, D. C., area plants to back their demand for a $10-a-week increase in two installments.

In an unfair labor practice charge filed recently with the National Labor Relations Board, the union accused the Haynes Lithograph Co. of Silver Spring, Md., with refusing to bargain. The other struck firm is Colortone Press, Washington. A reduction of the work week to 35 hours also is sought.

You Oughta Try It, Ivan, You'd Like It

The American worker who stays on the job ONLY eight hours a day is suffering from "partial unemployment," according to a Russian radio broadcast picked up by the National Committee for a Free Europe.

The only workers enjoying full employment, the expert on U. S. life noted, are those "happily toiling under the sun of Soviet socialism." He could have pointed out, but didn't, that workers in Soviet labor camps do more toiling under the sun of Soviet socialism than anyone else. As long as the sun lasts, and then some, they're toiling in it.

Digby Named To FPC

The nomination of Seaborn Lee Digby, Monroe, La., to a 5-year term as a Democratic member of the Federal Power Commission has been sent to the Senate for confirmation by Pres. Eisenhower.

Long-Term Pacts Undercut In NLRB Bargaining Ruling

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board has ruled unanimously that a newly-elected union can get immediate bargaining rights despite what it called an "unreasonably long-term contract" held by another union.

The first such decision in the 18-year history of the board involved the CIO Auto Workers, the American Seating Co. of Grand Rapids, Mich., and the AFL Pattern Makers. The UAW-CIO was certified as collective bargaining agent for the seating firm's employes in 1949. A three-year contract was signed July 1, 1950.

Less than two years later the AFL union filed for an election for six pattern makers to carve out a craft unit. Both the company and the UAW objected, claiming the contract was a bar to such an election. The board disagreed on the ground that the contract was in effect two years and the parties failed to prove three-year agreements were customary in that industry.

An election was ordered and the six workers voted for the Pattern Makers. The board certified the election but the company refused to bargain until the three-year contract with UAW had expired.

This policy has now been held as an unfair labor practice of refusal to bargain. The NLRB pointed out that the law bars the frequency of such elections only by a provision that an election cannot be held among the same group of workers more often than once a year.

Des Moines CIO Asks State Study Of Welfare Aid

DEMAND FOR a detailed study of Iowa's social welfare program has been voiced by the Des Moines CIO Council in a resolution sent to Gov. William S. Beardsley.

A legislative inquiry to prepare recommendations for the next session of the Legislature was called for. The action came after the State Social Welfare Board announced its decision to eliminate medical benefits for dependent children Aug. 1. Also affected would be the deaf, the blind and old-age pensioners.

"The failure to provide proper medical care to meet the needs of these people, is in our opinion false economy that will create a greater problem at a much greater cost to all taxpayers, as well as overloading the present existing health centers and clinics," the Council said.

VETERAN Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R. N. H.) died last week at 73. A member of Congress since 1933, Tobey had a record of opposing monopolies, racketeers. CIO-PAC backed him in 1950 campaign.

You And Your Money—

O'Hara Lowers The Boom On GOP For Sales Tax Drive

REPUBLICAN leaders were warned last week that if they go ahead with plans to enact a federal sales tax in the second session, "there never again will be a Republican Congress."

Rep. O'Hara (D. Ill.) chided his GOP colleagues for past tax policies favoring "men and corporations in the high-income brackets." He pointed out that the movie excise tax which Congress voted to repeal was made a permanent tax by the Republican 80th Congress.

"The Republican 80th Congress voted to make permanent the tax on the little people who attend movies so that it could get the money to pay off its debts to the big people to whom it was beholden," O'Hara charged.

"The Republican leadership of the House was under heavy obligations to certain large corporations and individuals in the highest-income bracket. These corporations and rich individuals insisted on heavy cuts in their income tax rates."

O'Hara branded the movie excise tax an "evil" since it places upon the little people an unfair share of the tax burden. He added that it had given "a break" to big corporations and rich individuals "at the expense even of schoolchildren who in peacetime had to go on paying out their pennies when they went to the movies."

"It is gossiped about that to save the bankers and the big industrialists from the payment of their proper share in federal taxes you are contemplating putting the tax burden on the backs of the little people," O'Hara said.

"Just as in the 80th Congress you spared the bankers and industrialists by making the little people pay through their noses, so now we are told you have as the prize package for the second session of this Congress a bill for a federal sales tax. I am saying now to my Republican colleagues that if they attempt anything of that sort, there never again will be a Republican Congress."

FTC Nails GM, Champion For Price Collusion Policy

TWO FEDERAL agencies have cracked down on firms to protect the interests of American consumers. The Federal Trade Commission and the Food & Drug Administration acted last week against companies ranging from giants to small operations.

Discrimination in the price of spark plugs sold for replacement purposes was banned by the FTC in an order against General Motors, Champion Spark Plug Co. and Electric Auto-Lite.

GM was also ordered to halt discrimination in the price of such auto parts and accessories as oil filters, fuel pumps and speedometer cables sold for replacement.

FTC said the three firms violated the Clayton Act by selling spark plugs to competing purchasers, both direct and indirect, at differing prices. The firms were ordered to stop sales to any direct purchaser at net prices higher than those charged any other direct purchaser who competes in the resale and distribution of such products with the purchaser paying more.

GM and Champion also were found to have violated the Clayton Act by making agreements with some of their distributors barring them from dealing in products made or sold by their competitors.

THE FOOD & Drug Administration seized 94 shipments of products during June, that agency has reported. Danger to health was charged in two food seizures. One involved a carload of wheat treated with a poisonous mercurial compound.

The second action against a dangerous food product involved a meat preservative containing a substance to prevent discoloration. This chemical, which was not declared on the label, could have caused thyroid disturbances and other injuries to those eating the treated meat.

Food shipments totaling over 234,000 pounds were removed from the market on charges of decomposition or contamination by rodents and insects. Approximately half of the food had become unfit while in storage. Thirty shipments of food were seized because they were shortweight, below standard or misleadingly labeled.

Steel, Auto Officials Back U. S. Handicapped Agency

CIO'S TWO largest unions, the Steelworkers and Auto Workers, have thrown their support behind the bill establishing a federal agency for the handicapped.

Testimony was given before the House Labor and Education Committee by Sec.-Treas. I W. Abel of the USA-CIO and Acting Dir. James Brindle of the UAW-CIO Social Security Dept.

Both emphasized the need for coordinating the present services for handicapped which are scattered among 35 federal agencies and urged greater cooperation between the states and the federal government.

"Rehabilitation must be closely coordinated with workmen's compensation and disability programs to provide income for the disabled and their families during periods of unemployment, and to insure prompt referral of each case to the rehabilitation agencies," Abel told the committee.

POINTING to recent enactment of federal mine safety legislation, Abel called for passage of similar legislation covering iron ore, lead, zinc and copper mines and quarries and in steel mills.

Brindle asked that a separate agency be empowered to set up an advisory council composed of representatives of labor, employers, the medical profession and other technical personnel engaged in rehabilitation, training, finding jobs and placing the handicapped workers.

Needed also, Brindle said, is a coordinating committee to encourage cooperation among the scattered governmental agencies dealing with problems of the handicapped.

Poor Ol' Buck Ain't What It Used To Be

Remember the 1952 Republican promise of a "sound dollar"? They've been in six months now and—like Republican promises—the dollar has less value than it had a year ago.

The National Industrial Conference Board announced last week that your buck was worth 55.9c in June 1952 on the basis of the 1939 dollar as 100c, and was worth only 55.6c in June 1953. The board also reported, as if you didn't know, that consumer prices went up during the same period. (LPA)

'Just Put One Pot On Back Burner,' Housewife Pleads

THE HOUSEWIVES' Buyers Resistance Cycles has started its second year with an appeal that housewives "resist making more than one pot of coffee a day."

Head of the national group is Mrs. Ray Evanson of Tigard, Ore. "Although we have less than 2000 postcard members I feel sure many others are going along with us," she said.

Mrs. Evanson began the movement to fight inflated prices and to get better value for the consumer. The members each month send her a blank self-addressed postcard, along with suggestions as to what items should be given the "resistance" treatment each month.

For August, the "resistance project" is "Let's resist making more than one pot of coffee a day." Enough consumer resistance, she believes, will mean lower prices, better products. (LPA)

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

HAMBURGER, used cars and clothes are cheaper. But the big blow to wage-earners is the sharp rise in rents, both already in effect and to come. You can drive an old car another thousand miles or wear your pants another month, but when the landlord comes along with a boost there's often no other place to go these days.

Rent Boosts And Co-op Housing

In just the few months since last winter, rents have gone up in various industrial cities at such speeds as an average of 8% in Detroit; 9% in Denver, Colo.; 5% in Savannah, Ga. Since the 1947-49 period, rents have bounced up 28% in Atlanta, 23% in Chicago, 25% in Kansas City, Mo., and so on. In Houston, Tex., among the cities where controls were removed early, average rents have gone up 55% since 1946.

Federal controls will be off completely by the end of July except for a few defense areas, and only in some towns and states that have local rent regulations will there be any control.

Nor is it possible to excuse the recent and prospective rent hikes on the basis that landlords need more return. U. S. Commerce Dept. figures show that one-fourth of all rent money paid in 1952 remained with the landlords (after all taxes and other expenses were paid) as profit on their investments. Of the $10 billion tenants paid, $2.5 billion went to the owners of the properties.

IN THIS PERIOD of rising rents, cooperative apartment buildings have shown some savings. Even the "Section 213" apartment co-ops built by speculative real-estate developers look reasonable compared to the high rentals charged in other new buildings. However, there are risks in the Section 213 "co-ops" apartment-seekers should know about.

First of all, families should understand that there are two kinds of apartment co-ops. One kind is a genuine co-op in that a group of families itself initiates and controls construction on a non-profit basis, often under the sponsorship of a union, a state or city housing agency, or a committee of civic-minded people.

The second type—the Section 213 apartments—are built by commercial developers who then sell them to individual families. Then the developer gets out of the picture and the tenants take over the management of the building.

In either type of co-op, you usually buy shares in the corporation that owns the building, and this "down payment" generally amounts to $1000-$3000, depending on the number of rooms, location and quality of the building, and whether more of the real cost of the apartment has been loaded into the monthly carrying charges or included in the down payment.

AS SHOWN by Queensview, Amalgamated Houses, the electrical workers' housing development, other big New York co-ops, this true kind of non-profit co-op offers much the better value. Queensview, for example, is opening up a new group of buildings. Down payment for a five-room apartment (two bedrooms) is $2650 and carrying charges, including light, gas and heat, are $81-$90 a month.

However, there are more of the commercially-built Section 213 co-ops going up around the country than the genuine co-ops, and it is to these that many people are turning.

The gimmick in many of the "213" co-ops is that the builder makes an extra profit by renting the land to the cooperative on a long-term basis, rather than selling it.

Families interested in apartment co-ops can get a booklet from the United Housing Foundation, 370 Lexington Ave., New York, called "What Every Co-operator Should Know," for 25c.

Old Price Index Up 2 Points

THE "OLD" CONSUMER Price Index made its final appearance last week, yielding to the "new" series which purports to reflect changes in the cost of living more accurately.

It bowed out with a 1.1% increase in the price levels of goods and services purchased by average consumers between May 15 and June 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said in its last report. The final figure stood at 190.9, a jump of 2.1 points in the 30-day period, reflecting sharp raises in food costs.

The "old" index originally was discontinued in January, but was extended for six months to allow adjustments by unions and employers with contracts carrying escalator clauses.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index:

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

THE FIRST report of victory to cross my desk this week comes from Brother Bob Starnes, CIO Director of Region XI. Bob tells of an election at the Delta Manufacturing Co., in Wichita Falls, Tex., where a heavy majority of the 170 workers chose to organize themselves in the CIO Clothing Workers.

Brother Starnes adds that Harry Marshall was the union representative in the campaign. It calls to my mind a fact that I, and all other officers of CIO, try to keep foremost in our thoughts, and that is the great work being done by our field representatives.

Most of my own work in the labor movement has been as an organizer, working alongside the people who carry the union message all over the country, traveling all the back roads, in and out of towns that don't even show on the map. When some fellows try to say that the old union spirit is gone, I just think about our people in the field and the hardships they face, the cheerful way they move themselves and their families—if that is even possible—from one town and mill to another, working night and day.

YOUNG FOLKS, fresh from school, used to come to my office in Atlanta, when my union had me assigned in the South, and they would talk starry-eyed about "union work" as a future.

On one hand, I wanted to encourage them. Working in the cause of brotherhood is a noble thing and we need good young people. But on the other hand, I also wanted to ask them if they thought they could measure up to what is demanded of our folks.

An organizer not only deals with educating workers in the trade labor movement, he must act as well as a father confessor for his workers, a friend to all in all situations, a person they can turn to in all sorts of problems. He is expected to know everything about everything, to be a legal expert, a publicity genius, a production man, and a leader. Backing it all up he has to have the constitution to stand up to the never ending traveling, the meals gulped down in roadside cafes, the loneliness of being a stranger, often in hostile surroundings. He has to have the courage to defend himself and his people against all comers.

Now, I'm not saying that our people are supermen and women. We're all human beings doing human work, but the very idea that we do have this dedicated group of folks working for us is proof of that union spirit I've mentioned.

I wish I had the space to list the work and names of all of our people, but I'm afraid it would take a volume the size of the Washington phone book.

The point is that our people are doing the job, and I think we are all deeply grateful to them.

BROTHER DICK LEONARD has the happy job of reporting on the settlement of the Milwaukee brewery strike, where CIO workers got themselves a new contract, including wage increases from 20c to 30c an hour. You'll find a complete story about it on Page 3 of this issue. But it's also good to know that Brother Leonard won himself many friends throughout the Brewery Workers union by his efforts in assisting them in a very tough situation.

By the way, ACWA-CIO also won an election in California at the Raco Co. by a margin of five to one. Isador Wegal was in charge assisted by staff members, according to CIO's Irwin De Shetler. A victory is reported from Detroit, by Brother Gus Scholle, CIO Regional Director, for cafeteria workers at American Blower Corp., LIU 1064-CIO. We'll bring you a more complete victory round-up next week.

Marathon Bargaining Asked By CWA-CIO In Bell Impasse

MARATHON bargaining sessions were being sought last week by negotiators for the CIO Communications Workers with 12 Bell System subsidiaries in a move to break stalemates that have blocked contract settlements covering more than 200,000 union members.

The move was decided upon at an informal meeting on July 27 in Chicago of some members of the CWA-CIO executive board, directors of districts with major bargaining problems, and negotiating committee chairmen. The session was called to review the whole negotiating situation and to exchange information on company offers — or lack of them.

At the same time, CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne declared that more than 7000 striking members employed by the Indiana Bell Telephone Co. will have the full support of the international union. Included is use of the international defense fund of more than $1 million.

Indiana Bell accounting, plant and traffic workers walked out last week after nearly two months of futile negotiations following expiration of their contract on June 2. The best company offer has been wage increases of $1 to $2.50 a week, with some schedule shortening and town reclassifications.

THE OFFER contrasts with settlements earlier this year with 14 other Bell subsidiaries, covering about 85,000 CWA-CIO members, which averaged 7.5c an hour.

Union wage proposals in the current series of negotiations have not been made public. However, negotiators indicated they were striving for agreements in the general area of the earlier contracts.

Beirne described company bargaining over the last three months as "shameful, irresponsible stalling." No offer made has been "anywhere near" the earlier settlements, he said.

Contracts have expired with the following companies, in addition to Indiana Bell:

Southern Bell, Chesapeake & Potomac of the District of Columbia, Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph, Wisconsin Telephone, Illinois Bell, Chesapeake & Potomac of West Virginia, American Telephone & Telegraph long lines, Pacific Telephone & Telegraph (separate agreements in Northern and Southern California), Southwestern Bell, and Chesapeake & Potomac of Baltimore.

IUE Aids 5000 New York Strikers

FINANCIAL HELP for 5000 striking CIO Electrical Workers was being mobilized last week as employer violence marked early days of a walkout at the Arma Corp. plants in Brooklyn and Nassau County, N. Y.

The strikers were pledged $100,000 support by leaders of 47 locals in IUE-CIO Dist. 4. Additional funds were promised if that sum was not enough.

"Not one child shall go hungry during this strike and not one family will be dispossessed," said Dist. 4 Pres. Milton Weihreuch.

ON STRIKE are members of IUE Locals 460 and 464. Local 460 represents production and maintenance employes at the two plants. Local 464 covers the professional, technical and clerical workers.

The IUE members walked off the job July 24 at the Brooklyn plant and a larger unit at Roosevelt Field, Garden City, L. I., charging the company with wage cuts and layoffs out of seniority.

On the second morning of the strike, Arthur Crowder, a company executive, ran his car into a group of pickets. He struck a policeman and seriously injured two young women, hospitalizing one of them with a possible fractured hip. Police arrested the driver and he was booked on an assault charge. IUE filed a complaint charging felonious assault.

A similar complaint has been lodged with police by the union against Richard C. Smyth, Arma vice president in charge of labor relations. The union contends Smyth drove out of the plant the first morning of the strike, hitting two pickets and inflicting leg injuries on one of them.

SMYTH was brought into the company several months ago. IUE claims bargaining relations with the company have deteriorated since his arrival. Smyth has made numerous demands to which the union will not yield. Among these are that the union have no voice in writing job descriptions, reclassifications, pay cuts, transfers, promotions, discipline, discharge, hirings, etc.

Protests have been made to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the New York police commissioner, the district attorney and county officials. They pointed out that nearly 400 police were at the Nassau County plant, thus endangering the property of other county residents by depriving them of police protection.

Guild Aids Seattle Strike

FINANCIAL support for some 250 striking CIO Newspaper Guild members on the Seattle Times has been arranged.

Sec. Treas. William J. Farson of ANG-CIO announced that an emergency had been declared by the executive board and assessments of from 50c to $3 a month will be levied during Aug. Sept. and Oct. He estimated the levy would bring in about $50,000 a month to aid the strikers.

Guild members struck July 16 after four months of negotiation and conciliation failed to produce a new contract. A 7.8% wage increase and other benefits are sought. The Times offered raises varying from 3.5% to 5.8%. Publication of the paper has been suspended since the strike began, with craft union members respecting ANG picket lines.

Milwaukee Brewers Gain On Pay, Hours As Long Tieup Ends

March 1954. If the union-management committee setting it up is unable to agree, it will be submitted to arbitration.

The health and welfare program will yield sick benefits of $45 a week and $3000 in life insurance. It is regarded by Local 9 members as the best in the industry.

Fulltime union employes are covered by the pension program and the health and welfare plan. The breweries where they hold seniority pay the cost.

The union also won changes in a number of contract clauses that have plagued it for years.

The agreement provides that helpers must be carried on all Milwaukee city delivery trucks. It eliminates the "boy helper" proviso, ending the companies' practice of hiring youths 18 to 21 years old at rates lower than the job rate. In addition, it prohibits the farming out of work.

The 7200 Local 9 members waged a stern, persistent fight to achieve their victory and raise their standards to the levels enjoyed by BW-CIO members elsewhere. No effort was made to scab, although members of the AFL Teamsters constantly crossed picket lines to deliver building materials.

Mass picketing was resorted to regularly, and a tri-state CIO rally in support of the walkout was held July 11.

The breweries' united front broke when Blatz offered to settle separately. The others—Schlitz, Pabst, Miller, Gettleman and Independent—were forced to fall in line to meet competition.

Pres. Kenneth Mueller of Local 9 headed the union negotiators. With him were Schmitt, Paradise and National CIO Rep. Richard T. Leonard, who was assigned by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to assist the strikers.

2 Westinghouse Aides Bolt UE

TWO high-ranking officials of the discredited United Electrical Workers in the Westinghouse chain have resigned from their posts, withdrawn from the UE and cast their lot with the CIO Electrical Workers, the IUE-CIO announced last week.

They are Edward Matthews, a UE member for 17 years and secretary of the UE Westinghouse Conference Board for 11 years, and Francis Bradley, business agent of UE Local 107, representing 10,000 Westinghouse workers at Essington, Pa., a Philadelphia suburb. The two have joined forces to spark an IUE-CIO membership drive at Essington.

"My decision," said Matthews, "was based solely on concerns that have always activated me in my previous work for the UE —the welfare and economic advancement of the thousands of organized and unorganized Westinghouse workers."

4% Wage Boost Gained By OWIU In Major Pacts

By RAY DAVIDSON

CONTRACTS calling for general wage increases of 4% have been negotiated by the CIO Oil Workers with nearly all major oil companies, the union announced last week.

The one significant exception is the Sinclair Oil Corp. and its subsidiaries, with which the union has a nationwide agreement. Negotiations were under way last week in New York.

The 4% increase averages about 9c an hour. The new contracts all were reached amicably and without strikes or strike threats.

Among the companies which agreed to the increase during the past few weeks were Socony-Vacuum, Shell, Texas Co., various Standard Oil companies and their subsidiaries, Tide Water Associated, Continental, Phillips, Union, Richfield, Pure, Atlantic and many smaller firms.

In April and May of last year, the OWIU-CIO struck numerous employers in support of a request for a 25c an hour increase. A general increase of 15c was finally won after the old Wage Stabilization Board set that figure as the ceiling on the raises it would approve. The current increase virtually fulfills the union's goal of last year.

The pay boost is comparable to those won previously by the CIO Steelworkers and CIO Auto Workers.

Meet The Democratic Women—

'The Ladies Of Congress, God Bless 'Em . . .'

By MILTON PLUMB

GOP SISTERS outnumber them, but no matter how you look at it—or them—the five Democratic women members of the 83rd Congress deserve and get the most hat doffings as they go about their legislative business.

This is due to more than just a matter of feminine beauty, although the odds on this score are in their favor. The chief reason is that each of the five Democratic congresswomen is an outstanding legislator, capable and hard-working, with a high sense of public duty.

In contrast with the six Republican congresswomen, who are all veterans of the last and, in most cases, previous Congresses, only one of the Democratic women served throughout the entire 82nd Congress. Two others were elected to vacancies which occurred during the course of that body, and two are freshmen in the present Congress.

All of the Democratic women, however, are fighting liberals, dedicated to the welfare of the people. From the time of their entry into Congress, all have run up nearly perfect records of votes and activities.

Unfortunately, the same is not true of their GOP counterparts. The total of

"right" votes cast in the last Congress by Rep. Kelly (D. N.Y.), for example, was alone—according to The CIO News Voting Record—more than the total of "right" votes cast by any combination of five congresswomen of the opposite party.

The individual records of the five distaff members of Congress on the minority side of the aisle explain why a good many observers of Congress declare:

"The ladies of Congress, God bless 'em—and may they be lady Democrats!"

Edna F. Kelly

The young "dean" of Democratic congresswomen has represented New York's 10th district in Brooklyn since Nov. 1949. She was elected as the nominee of the Liberal Party as well as the Democratic candidate.

A native of Easthampton and a 1928 graduate of Hunter College with a B.A. degree in history and economics, Mrs. Kelly's political career began in 1943.

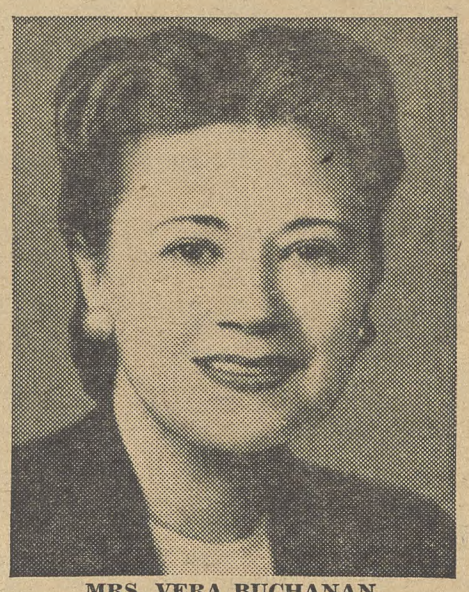
MRS. EDNA F. KELLY
Concern for "the little man."

A year later, she was made chief research director and held that post until coming to Congress. She was elected a member of the executive committee of the Kings County Democratic organization and re-elected successively. She is the widow of the late New York City Court Judge Edward L. Kelly and is the mother of two children.

A member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, her current legislative activities center on efforts to admit additional refugees from Iron Curtain countries and support for an adequate mutual security program.

Her broad interests, however, make her probably the most active of the Democratic women in introducing bills on many subjects.

The latter include measures designed to provide equal pay for equal work for women, to permit widows and widowers to deduct expenses of caring for children while working from income taxes.



MRS. VERA BUCHANAN
Succeeds liberal husband.

Elizabeth Kee

The first woman in Congress from West Virginia, Mrs. Kee was elected July 17, 1951, to fill out the term of her husband, the late Rep. John Kee (D. W.Va.). He was the liberal former chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Active in Democratic politics since 1922, she served as her husband's executive secretary from his election to Congress in 1932 until his death.

Mrs. Kee's 5th district is large and diversified, covering seven counties. A sincere, friendly and frank person, she describes herself as a "liberal" and "a friend of labor and the farmer."

Although her husband was a leading authority on foreign affairs and her son, James, now her administrative assistant, has served as a foreign service officer in Latin America, Mrs. Kee's legislative interests lie primarily with domestic problems.

A member of the Veterans Affairs Committee, she took an active part in the recent investigation of veterans' hospitals and fought hard to improve their facilities.

With what she describes as "very active" support from CIO-PAC, Mrs. Kee was re-elected last year with a 16,000 vote majority, the biggest of any West Virginia congressman.

Vera Buchanan

"My goal in Congress," declares the first woman ever elected from highly industrialized Allegheny County, Pa., "is to carry on the things my husband stood for."

To all who knew the late Rep. Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.), former head of the House Lobby Investigating Committee, this makes clear her devotion to a liberal, forward-looking legislative program. She was elected to fill his unexpired term on July 24, 1951, and overwhelmingly re-elected in her own right from the new 30th district last year.

Her margin of victory, with CIO-PAC support, was 49,000 votes. Speaking at five or six rallies every day, she made repeal of Taft-Hartley and opposition to the tidelands give-away key points in her campaign.

Married in 1929, she is probably the youngest grandmother in Congress.

A member of the House Public Works Committee, Mrs. Buchanan vigorously opposes current efforts to turn the nation's power resources over to private interests. She has also fought hard—but unsuccessfully—in this session to secure legislation to control inflation.

Her maiden speech in the House, delivered this year, was in the best Buchanan traditions of her husband. It was a stirring appeal for the preservation of rent controls.

MRS. LENOR SULLIVAN
She's a one-woman lobby.

Leonor Sullivan

To be "a one-woman lobby in Washington for human needs" is the declared legislative goal of the first woman elected to Congress from Missouri.

Unlike the traditional characteristic of people from her state, however, Mrs. Sullivan doesn't "need to be shown" how to achieve that objective. The widow of former liberal Rep. John M. Sullivan (D. Mo.), she has been actively working around Capitol Hill for more than a decade.

As her husband's assistant, she was so closely associated with his achievements that she came to be known as "the second representative from her husband's district." Following his death in January 1951, she became an assistant to former Rep. Irving (D. Mo.) and stayed in that post until her campaign for Congress.

MRS. ELIZABETH KEE
PAC helped her majority.

A graduate of Washington Univ., the hard-working Mrs. Sullivan taught at, and was director of, the St. Louis Business Training School for many years before her marriage in 1941. She is active in many civic groups, including the League of Women Voters and the American Legion Auxiliary.

In her first bid for public office last year, she trounced her Republican opponent by more than 50,000 votes. She campaigned on the basis of support for the Fair Deal program, including repeal of Taft-Hartley.

"A woman is especially qualified in the area of human needs and such matters as rising prices, pure food laws and education," she said.

She has made protection of consumers through the strengthening of the Food Drug Administration her No. 1 goal in the present session. And the House has approved a bill to grant full inspection powers to the FDA.

MRS. GRACIE PFOST
Hell raiser on Hells Canyon

Gracie Pfost

The only member of the Democratic congresswomen's quintet entirely new to Capitol Hill this year, vivacious, auburn-haired Mrs. Pfost (prononced "Post") is already widely known as one of the most active and capable members of the House.

A business woman, she campaigned in vigorous support of the Fair Deal, for improvements in social security, repeal of Taft-Hartley, higher minimum wages and federal aid to education. Mrs. Pfost won by 591 votes over the incumbent Republican congressman, although Pres. Eisenhower carried her district by 25,000 votes.

As the first congresswoman from Idaho, she represents the 1st district, which includes 19 counties and ranges from 500 miles in length to 250 miles across its widest point. She is the only woman member of Congress from the West.

Born in Arkansas and raised on an Idaho farm, she has worked 16 hours a day most of her life and hasn't changed her habits in Washington. In tribute to the strong fight she is waging in support of the multiple-purpose Hells Canyon dam on the Oregon-Idaho border, her friends on Capitol Hill gave her the nickname of "Hells' Belle."

Following graduation from Links Business Univ. in Boise, she worked two years as a chemist for a milk products company and entered politics in 1926.

She lost her first bid for Congress in 1950 by 783 votes and probably would not have run again last year without the urging of her husband, John W. Pfost. He is a retired master mechanic who holds an honorable withdrawal card from the AFL Teamsters. Mrs. Pfost had CIO-PAC support in both campaigns.

Liberals Move In On McCarran Act

HOUSE PAGES throw a shower of torn paper into the air around Speaker Martin (R. Mass.), center foreground, as Congress finally recessed. They had more to cheer about than senators and representatives, who left a staggering pile of work still undone when they called it quits. Congressmen who don't spend the summer junketing abroad, on official business of course, will probably hear about it from the voters.

Put-Off Congress Closes Lean Session

By MILTON PLUMB

IN AN OUTBURST of song and speeches of mutual admiration, members of the Republican 83rd Congress wrapped up their largely unproductive first session and adjourned sine die at 12:30 a.m. on Aug. 14.

That was exactly 31 days beyond the original target date GOP leaders set last February. There still had been no action on most major Republican campaign promises. Adjournment was put off merely so that Congress could complete overdue action on what was chiefly routine housekeeping legislation.

From the moment it convened, the 83rd Congress began to duck responsibility. Its first action was the shelving of Republican pledges to do something to curb Senate filibusters. In the main, it was a Put-Off Congress for the rest of the session.

Other observers last week were summing up its record in similar phrases.

Labor Press Associated called its record "somewhere between do-nothing and do-nothing-right."

'The Cadillac Crusade'

Within Congress itself, Democratic Sens. Jackson (Wash.), Humphrey (Minn.) and Murray (Mont.) hit at its "give-away, take-away" propensities. Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) held up adjournment for more than an hour with a lecture on the evils of "the Cadillac crusade."

House Minority Leader McCormack (Mass.) summarized the session by charging that the first Republican Administration in 20 years (1) has broken its campaign promises, (2) has proved a divided party incapable of responsibility, and (3) would not have enacted even the few recommendations of Pres. Eisenhower that have been passed if it had not been for Democratic support.

House Republican Leader Halleck (Ind.) blandly declared:

"Working with Pres. Eisenhower as a Republican team, we have kept the pledges made to the voters last November."

17,000-Page Record

The record, nevertheless, was preserved for all who cared to look in the more than 17,000 pages of the Congressional Record. It showed little to indicate Republican team-play and even less in the way of kept campaign pledges.

A Congressional Quarterly survey, published a month before adjournment, showed that of the 31 Eisenhower victories until that time, 23 could not have been won without Democratic support. Twelve of the President's other requests, the CQ check showed, had been totally ignored.

In the matter of campaign pledges, Congress kept only one major promise. That was the enactment of legislation giving away the rich "tidelands" oil and gas deposits worth many billions of dollars.

Put off until the next session were clear campaign pledges to:

- Amend the Taft-Hartley Act to make it "fairer" to labor.
- Extend coverage of social security to millions now denied its protection.
- Revise the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act.
- Grant statehood to Hawaii.
- Provide home rule for the District of Columbia.

Other campaign promises were simply repudiated.

Among the latter was the firm GOP commitment to cut government spending, balance the budget and reduce taxes. On the first, Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) told Congress on adjournment that the Administration will spend $74 billion in its first year, not a dollar below the amount spent last year under Pres. Truman.

In fact, the Administration's higher interest rates on the government debt will mean some $300 million a year and that much more in costs to the taxpayers.

Other pledges died when Congress killed the public housing program and rent controls by reducing both to a meaningless level. And instead of "building up" the Labor Dept. as Eisenhower promised, GOP hatchetmen wiped out all the reconstruction that Pres. Truman had done since 1948 by reducing it to exactly the same level as the Taft-Hartley 80th Congress.

Unsolved Problems

Major problems to be acted on next year include a new tax program, extension and revision of farm policies, and an Administration request for a hike in postal rates.

This session also postponed action on the "last-chance" bill for U. S. participation in the St. Lawrence Seaway. And House-Senate conferees at the last minute knocked out the Hill Amendment earmarking revenues from federally-owned oil deposits in the continental shelf for the nation's tottering educational system.

The President was handed one of his major defeats in the closing hours when the Senate tabled his request that the debt limit be boosted above the present $275 billion ceiling. The national debt is already about $272 billion, and Congress' failure to act may force the President to call it back for an emergency fall session.

No Taxes—No Balance

In any case, money problems will be a major headache whenever Congress reconvenes. Taxes netting some $8.5 billion annually are due to expire next spring, and the record of the first session makes it highly unlikely that Congress can balance the budget unless they are continued. Thus either the GOP promise of a balanced budget or that of a reduction in taxes will have to be scrapped.

It was typical that just before adjournment the Senate Internal Security subcommittee headed by Sen. Butler (R. Md.) announced plans for "extensive" hearings on Communist infiltration of labor unions.

With an election coming up next year, only those Senators whose seats won't be at stake will enjoy their five-month vacation with an easy conscience.

Most congressmen will be trying to do some fence-mending. Lines of constituents with gripes about their new rent hikes, highest living costs in history, and other personal problems arising from Congress' failures are awaiting them.

'Bombed Out'

It would cost an enemy tremendously in men, planes and materiel to do as much damage to American productive capacity as has the 83rd Congress, Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) charged last week.

Referring to cuts in appropriations for badly needed dams and rural electrification facilities, he said vital power sites had been "bombed out" just as effectively as by enemy attack.

Hellbent

Despite Congress' headaches over balancing the budget, one of the last actions of the House was to set up a commission to recommend to the next session that members' salaries be boosted above $15,000 a year.

The bill to create the commission was voted 171 to 28—a total of only 199, less than the 218 required for a quorum. Speaker Martin (R. Mass.), however, counted the House at 223 members.

CIO Warns Of Ghost Town In Niagara Power Give-Away

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., will become a ghost town and the surrounding area will lose much of its industry if Republican-backed plans to turn power rights over to five private utilities are approved in the next session of Congress.

That is the message a delegation of CIO Chemical Workers from the Niagara Falls area pounded home to the State's Senators last week.

To Sen. Lehman (D.) they promised the full backing of the CIO in his fight to prevent the give-away.

FOR SEN. IVES (R.) they had a number of questions, including one about the role of his former administrative assistant, Dwyer W. Shugrue, now chief lobbyist for the electric companies in their drive to grab the power bonanza.

Ives has introduced a bill to turn Niagara Falls power rights over to the New York State Power Authority but providing none of the customary "preference clause" safeguards for consumers. Some observers have said that the Ives Bill was only a "diversionary" maneuver, undertaken at the request of Gov. Dewey, in an effort to head off the Lehman-Roosevelt Bill for federal power development.

The delegation also conferred with Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.), who promised them that he will take the issue to the people of New York on a speaking tour.

Louis D. Marino, president of the UGCCW Dist. 2 Council, who led the group, told Roosevelt that high power costs under present utility operations are already leading firms in the Niagara Falls area to "run away."

Many have moved across the river to get the benefit of substantially lower rates in Canada, he pointed out. Others, he added, have bought land for new plants in the region supplied with low cost power by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Ike's Social Security Bill Hits Hill As Congress Quits

THE EISENHOWER Administration program for extending social security coverage was submitted to Congress last week only a few hours before adjournment.

Immediately there were indications it will run into heavy opposition next session. Chairman Reed (R. N. Y.), of the House Ways and Means Committee, who introduced the bill at the President's request, emphasized that he was not committing himself to support it.

He praised at the same time the social security study being made by a subcommittee headed by Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.) and suggested that the President might "see fit to approve some of the proposals of this subcommittee in preference to his own when the question is discussed."

The President's recommendations, which would extend social security to about 10.5 million additional people, were based on an unanimous report of a committee appointed by Sec. of Welfare Oveta Culp Hobby to study the problem.

The committee's action was regarded as surprisingly liberal. It came from a group dominated in the beginning by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which is backing a reactionary scheme for converting social security into a relief system.

The additional coverage proposed by the bill is roughly equivalent to the total that would be added under the omnibus bill introduced earlier by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.), although they differ in the groups covered.

THE LEHMAN bill, in addition, would considerably increase benefits and provide temporary and total disability benefits for the first time.

Dentists, doctors and lawyers would be brought into the system under the Administration's proposals. Both the American Medical and Dental Associations are against such coverage.

The President also proposed to include self-employed farmers, farm workers and household workers not now covered, accountants and other professional people, state and local government workers, ministers and other smaller groups.

One other Administration proposal would raise benefits for newly covered workers and others having a few low-income years. It would eliminate the three lowest years in computing the average monthly wage on which benefits are based.

Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, secretary of the CIO Social Security Committee, represented CIO on the advisory committee.

Approximately 500 technical employes of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. benefit under a first contract signed with the National Association of Broadcast Employes and Technicians, CCL-CIO.

The pact features a general wage increase, a 40-hour week, night differential, overtime pay, paid vacations and sick leave. The union was certified by the Canada Labour Relations Board in January following an election. Staff members in the radio and TV fields are covered by the agreement.

CIO Plaques In Home Towns To Honor Murray, Haywood

TWO BRONZE plaques, the loving tribute of the CIO to two of its greatest leaders, left New York last week for two small communities in the British Isles.

One bore the likeness of the late Philip Murray, president of the CIO and of the CIO Steelworkers. The other showed the late Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president of the CIO.

They will hang in the two small coal mining communities that gave them to the labor movement of a country far across the sea.

That of Murray will be hung in the autumn, with appropriate ceremonies, in the Miners' Hall at Blantyre, Scotland, where the gangling youth who later was to head the CIO went to school and started to work. The inscription reads:

"A native of Bothwell Park, (he) began his labours here at the age of 11 years as a member of the National Union of Mine Workers. Five years later he dedicated his great heart to free labourers in New York. He served the CIO as its devoted President for twelve full years. His life work binds together for all time the workers of Scotland and of America. Six million CIO members dedicate this tablet to his inspiring memory."

The Haywood plaque will be erected in Monk-Bretton, in the Yorkshire section of England, at about the same time. Its inscription reads:

"A native of Monk-Bretton, (he) began his labours at the age of 13 years in the ranks of the Yorkshire Miners Association. Five years later in America, he dedicated his life to the union and his fellow-workers. He served CIO faithfully as Executive Vice President. His devotion to the cause of free labour is a binding tie between the workers of Great Britain and of America. Six million CIO members dedicate this tablet to his inspiring memory."

The plaques are the work of Harry Lewis Raul, distinguished American sculptor, whose studio is in Washington.

Liberal Immigration Bill Offered GOP Leaders

FOR THE SECOND time in a matter of weeks, a group of minority senators and representatives has moved ahead of the Eisenhower Administration in introducing legislation intended to carry out major Republican campaign promises.

A sweeping Omnibus Immigration and Naturalization Bill which they said would wipe out the "cruelty and inequity" of the McCarran-Walter Act was introduced shortly before adjournment by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and 31 other congressmen. All but one—Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.)—are Democrats.

The measure is a complete recodification of the present law co-authored by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) and Rep. Walter (D. Pa.), which was passed over Pres. Truman's veto last year.

During his campaign, Pres. Eisenhower condemned its discriminatory features and promised to eliminate its racist provisions. He did not, however, send Congress specific legislation to carry out this pledge during the last session.

THE NEW bill is designed to eliminate all racial and national bias, establish a uniform right to review and appeal of administrative decisions, and remove distinctions between the rights of native-born and naturalized citizens. It is the result of more than eight months of study and intensive drafting work.

In introducing the measure, the co-sponsors said that it "carries out the pledges made last year by the spokesmen for both political parties, to remove the inequities and discriminations from our basic immigration and naturalization laws."

They added that it would clarify and simplify the present law and was aimed at "remoulding American immigration and naturalization policy into its traditional directions of justice, equity and welcome." It would bar "criminal, subversive or other undesirable elements."

The bill takes a basic new approach to immigration by scrapping the so-called national origins system, which limits admission quotas from each country according to the breakdown of the U. S. population by nationality in 1920.

In place of the "discriminatory and racist features" of the national origins system, the Lehman group proposes to set up a "liberalized" five-point "unified quota" plan that would permit the entry of immigrants "whose coming would advance the interest of the U. S." without regard to their national or racial gackground. Up to 251,000 immigrants would be admitted yearly.

ALTHOUGH introduction of the bill placed the initiative for revision of the McCarran-Walter Act with the minority, members of the majority party were not altogether silent concerning the need for action. Reps. Javits (R. N. Y.), and Cretella and Morane (R. Conn.), in a separate statement said that such a revision should be the "next step" in Eisenhower's immigration program.

A month ago, Lehman and several other sponsors of the bill joined in introducing an Omnibus Social Security Bill that would carry out Republican campaign promises to extend and improve the present social security system. The Administration submitted its recommendations in this area only a few hours before adjournment. (See story on Page 2.)

SOME observers wonder if the wide support with which the public welcomed the Lehman group's social security proposals didn't force the Administration to speed up action on its own bill.

The Lehman social security bill goes far beyond the Administration measure by providing higher benefits and new coverage for temporary and permanent and total disability.

Sponsors Of New Immigration Bill

Senators—Lehman (D. N. Y.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Morse (Ind. Ore.), Pastore (D. R. I.), Green (D. R. I.), Murray (D. Mont.), Kennedy (D. Mass), Magnuson (D. Wash.).

Reuther Cites Negotiating Lack Abroad

COLLECTIVE bargaining is the key to any improvement in the European labor situation, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther reported following several weeks overseas conferring with free trade union leaders of Europe.

Reuther, due home this week, said in Paris before his departure that European employers will not sit down and work out sound agreements.

"The maintenance of this disastrous status quo strengthens communism, their own worst enemy," he observed.

HE EXPRESSED criticism of French employers and government policy as unwilling to give French workers a greater share of the profits resulting from higher productivity. The free labor movement in France and Italy, he added, was not as strong as it should be but was making progress.

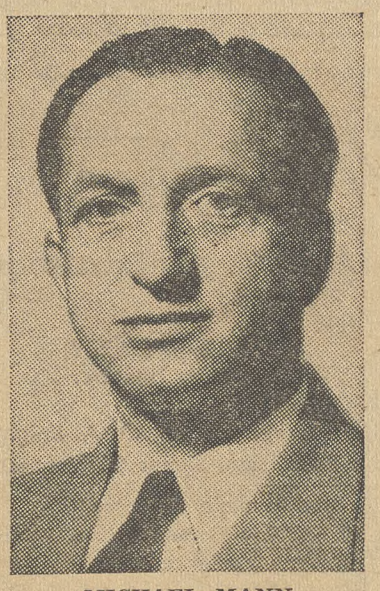
Commenting on anti-Americanism in Europe, Reuther said that this phenomenon decreased rapidly in direct relation to how close to Soviet domination people might be. "In East Berlin," he stated, "you find it has swung over to 150% pro-Americanism."

Reuther told newsmen that Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) "is un-American and immoral." "Everything he does strengthens communism," he added.

N. Y. Bus Decision Due Within Month

A DECISION in one of the biggest labor arbitration cases in U. S. labor history is expected to be issued within the next 30 days, according to CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann of New York.

Mann is representing Local 100, CIO Transport Workers,



MICHAEL MANN
. . . Arbitrates Bus Dispute

New York City, on a three-man panel in the arbitration, which grew out of a dispute between the local and nine privately-owned New York City bus lines.

The board was set up after a 29-day strike early this year which virtually halted New York City bus transportation. It was only after the lines agreed to the union's demand for arbitration that the walkout was called off.

More than 6000 pages of testimony were taken during 40 days of public hearings. Six hundred exhibits were presented by the union and management.

FIVE HUNDRED issues involving wages and working conditions for 8,200 workers are involved in the dispute. The arbitrators are now sitting in executive session wrestling with the problem.

Heading the parade of union witnesses was TWU Pres. Michael Quill and Pres. Matthew Guinan, of TWU Local 100. Throughout the hearings a contingent of officers and rank-and-file members was on hand to present TWU's case. John F. O'Donnell, TWU counsel, represented the union.

Besides Mann, other board members are John F. Curtin, noted transit authority from Philadelphia, and Judge Walter F. Lynch, the impartial chairman.

The Put-Off Congress

Well, Congress has quit. Pretty proud of itself, too, according to the Republicans who are supposed to be running it.

A conclusion that this pride is—well, misplaced, to put it kindly—is inevitable to any thoughtful reader of Milton Plumb's roundup on Page 2 of this issue of The CIO News.

As he points out, the 83rd Congress has been ducking its responsibilities to the voters since that day last January when it organized. It has procrastinated, delayed, deferred, referred, stalled and postponed ad nauseam, and the "Put-Off Congress" label he pins on it is well deserved.

It didn't, of course, procrastinate, delay, defer, etc. on absolutely everything. It carried out one of the Republican campaign pledges with uncommendable speed—it gave the tidelands oil lands and their great wealth to the oil industry just as fast as it could jam legislation through the two houses.

But what it did for the great mass of Americans, including the workers and the farmers who produce the nation's wealth, is something else again.

After six months of fiddling around, the Taft-Hartley Act still hangs like an albatross around the worker's neck. Congress consistently avoided legislation to aid farmers hit by falling prices—just as it has barely recognized the grim fact that jobs are growing fewer in our great industrial centers.

The drab record of these and other sins of omission and commission is there for all to see who aren't beguiled by GOP back-patting.

It adds up to one thing. At the risk of being repetitious, we'll mention it. It's political action. There is no need to go on at any great length about it. There's just this to say: Any worker who thinks his representative or senators has played him for a sucker in this last session doesn't have to sit back and turn his cheek.

All he has to do is use his vote, the best political weapon in the world, and persuade his friends and fellow-workers to use theirs. And to remember that after all, Election Day in 1954 isn't so far off that it's too early to start thinking about it.

Speaking of Labor Problems—

The Immigration Bill

The bill introduced by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and 31 other members of Congress to cancel out the "cruelty and inequity" of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act is one that appeals to all men of good will.

The steps it proposes for wiping out the brutal discriminations and neo-fascist racist provisions of the present act—just what Pres. Eisenhower called for in his campaign speeches—reflect the practical idealism that is inherent in the American character.

The bill's sponsors don't put out the welcome mat for every Tom, Dick and Harry in the rest of the world. Rather, they would set up safeguards to keep out the undesirable and the subversive, then put everybody else on what amounts to the same basis. In addition, they would clarify and simplify a law that needs a lot of both.

The co-sponsors summed it up when they said it would restore U. S. policy to its "traditional directions of justice, equity and welcome." These are directions the country has taken since it was established—and they are directions in which the vast majority of Americans still want to see it go.

In Other Words—

How To Get The Most From A Union

The article below is condensed from "Work of a Union and Its Members," by Pres. Harry A. Chappell, of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes & Other Transport Workers, a CCL affiliate. It appeared in Canadian Transport, the union's official organ.

By HARRY A. CHAPPELL

MANY MEMBERS think of their union as being purely a wage organism, designed to advance or protect wage rates and to govern working conditions and hours of employment.

Basically, this thinking is fairly correct because that is the No. 1 job of the union. However, it is only part of the story and part of the job of the union. A union is more than a wage organism—it is a broad social and economic instrument, fashioned by and for those within its ranks. As such the potential scope of its activities are almost limitless.

In addition to being created to give workers the right to bargain freely and thus have some say in the determination of their wages and working conditions, the union is also a medium of self-expression for working people and an instrument through which they have a cohesive and representative voice as citizens of the community and the nation. No better instrument has ever been conceived to carry out these particular functions.

Full Value Of Your Union

Your brotherhood—at whichever level is appropriate—should be your voice in giving expression to your thoughts and opinions and through which you secure action, on any and all matters which directly or indirectly affect your welfare.

Basically, your division—which is the fount of all brotherhood activity—deals with its local administrative problems and does the day-to-day policing of your collective agreement, as well as participating in overall brotherhood work.

This is as it should be. However, it can and should be doing much more if you and your fellow-members are to get full use and value out of their membership.

The local division is an important part of the overall fabric of your communal society. It is your ready-made medium of expression in your particular community. Through it you can provide a reasonable, responsible and effective degree of community leadership, and the average community will welcome your interest and participation.

Your wage rates and day-to-day working conditions are vitally important, but so are the educational opportunities of your children, the actions and decisions of your municipal councils, and the legislation they pass and enforce; the social and welfare services of your community—both public and private—your Community Chest, the local Red Cross, in fact all features of community activity.

Are the steps being taken by your local school board good or bad, from the point of view of education for workers' children? You should know. They affect your child's future. That is important.

Community Leadership

How closely do you, as a citizen and a unionist, watch what goes on in your municipal council? As a branch of government it has a tremendous impact on your daily lives. In your own interests it is vitally important that you do more than merely go out and vote for a mayor or alderman once a year. You must let them know, in true democratic fashion, whether you agree or disagree with what they plan and exert your influence, as a citizen and a unionist, to have them do what you consider best for yourself and other workers in the community.

Do you have labor representation on such bodies as the Community Chest, Red Cross, Blue Cross, etc.? You should, and in most cases such representation would be welcomed.

Your division has ample opportunity for "community leadership" in all of these essential fields.

Dependent upon the size of your community, there may be other local divisions of the brotherhood within your area with whom you can cooperate on these and other subjects, through a district council or an officers' club to the common good of all. In addition to this, if there is a labor council of the Canadian Congress of Labor in your community then your division (if it has not already done so) should be affiliated and, through your delegates, take an active part in its activities.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE ADJOURNMENT of Congress was partially overshadowed by the death of Sen. Taft. It is permitted, in the American system, that people who deeply disagreed with Taft should feel a sense of personal grief at his passing.

Not for a moment should one withdraw, in sentimental fashion, criticism of Taft in the past. It would be unworthy of the subject.

Taft was wrong in his encouragement of Sen. McCarthy of Wisconsin. He told McCarthy in 1950 to keep "bringing up cases," and if the Democrats knocked down one, "bring up another." Weeks after the quotation had been printed, Taft tried to deny it, but the wire service reporters insisted they had heard him correctly the first time.

Second Thought

Ohio Republican leaders have decided against changing the law to authorize a special election to name a successor to Sen. Taft, as Sen. Bricker had proposed. They'll let Gov. Lausche (D.) appoint a senator.

In a speech in Des Moines, Ia., in his rush for the presidency in 1952, Taft once said that he thought McCarthy had "overstated" himself. McCarthy growled at him—and the next thing was that Taft was in Wisconsin, praising Sen. Joe's record.

Taft told this reporter, in 1948, that the proposed Mundt-Nixon "Communist control" bill was unconstitutional, and that he would insist on "very drastic changes." In 1950 he voted for the McCarran "Communist control" bill containing almost exactly the provisions he had privately objected to two years earlier.

The Taft-Hartley law would have been worse had Taft and Joe Ball, then Minnesota Senator, pushed through their proposed plan to outlaw industry-wide bargaining. They got licked, and swallowed the defeat, but they were beaten on the Senate floor by a bare 44 to 43 vote.

Taft's "liberal" period, when he suddenly was discovered as advocating some "middle ground" policies on housing and other social issues, ended abruptly with his defeat for the GOP presidential nomination in 1948.

These things being true—and the truth not being altered by death—Taft was neverthless a man whose departure brings a sense of loss to almost anyone who knew him.

He Sat In The Center Of GOP

Wherever he sat, for many years, was the center of Republican power in the Senate. When he served as Policy Committee chairman it was he—not the floor leader—who dominated GOP programs. When he took over as floor leader last January, he carried his influence with him in his new post.

He was not, as the stories had it, a "cold" man. There was primness in him, and a distaste for those who could not speak on his intellectual level. He was never wholly at ease in the circus tricks of political campaigning in America.

But he was a warm and outgoing companion in any society that he felt equal to him. He would willingly give time to a reporter asking sensible questions and never resented the necessarily barbed questions. He had a sense of humor and a sure instinct that if he had granted an interview the reporter could be trusted not to distort confidences.

It was sometimes necessary to attribute to Taft a bad motive, a confusion of ends and means. He disbelieved in the New Deal and did his best to unhorse Roosevelt and Truman. But in a Senate where many members are occupationally cynical about the operations of democracy, Taft was not a cynic.

Monroney Having Fun

Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D. Okla.) is having the time of his life as self-appointed No. 1 foe of McCarthy.

Mike is a tall, easy-going former newspaperman who defies definition as a "conservative" or "liberal," but who has shown, for a couple of years now, that he doesn't like being bullied by McCarthy or anyone else. Recently he has been blasting at the Wisconsin Senator—by name, on the Senate floor.

Sen. Joe's natural response is to try to scare Monroney by charging that Mike is "doing the work of Communists." Mike doesn't scare easily. His mail from his home folks in Oklahoma has increased tremendously,

Mike says that it's perfectly all right with him if Joe tries to defeat him in Oklahoma in 1956, when Monroney must run again. He doesn't think McCarthy can do it—and, if he can, Mike wouldn't very much like to come back to a Senate dominated by the McCarthys, anyway.

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) personally blocked Senate passage of one of the more obscure "give-away" bills advocated by the GOP—the Hinshaw Bill to gut Federal Power Commission regulation of interstate gas pipelines.

White House reporters are muttering about Mr. Eisenhower's travel habits, including unescorted automobile trips at high speeds on heavily traversed highways. Cars carrying correspondents have to "keep up," which means sudden dashes at 70 to 80 miles an hour twisting through traffic. The reporters want Ike to use a motorcycle escort to clear the highway lanes.

Another thing they worry about is the President's insistence on making long-distance trips without having a physician in attendance. They don't think it's sensible or safe.

Facts On Our World—

'There Can Be Little Peace Until Poverty Is Conquered'

The U. S. cannot return to the isolationist policies of the 1920. Highlights of the testimony by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education, in support of the UN's specialized agencies before a group from the House Foreign Affairs Committee follow:

By STANLEY H. RUTTENBERG

IN A WORLD divided between great forces, the efforts to promote peace and security become extremely more difficult. No one country has all the answers.

We in CIO certainly do not claim to have the answer, but one thing appears fairly certain to us. It is not possible for this nation to remain aloof from the pressing problems of the world. We cannot return to the isolationism of the 1920s.

We cannot sit idly by and hope that the problems which lead to insecurity and war will be dealt with adequately by others. Trouble in one part of the world scene affects us here at home.

The most pressing problems facing the world as a whole are the problems relating to disease, hunger, poverty and illiteracy. It seems to us in the CIO that there can be little peace around the world as long as these threats are upon us.

Our Task As Leaders

We must recognize our role of leadership in joining with other nations of the world to solve the many problems that prevent the world from remaining at peace.

When people are hungry and their bodies are riddled with disease, they are continually on the lookout for aid and assistance. Communist propaganda has a knack for promising, a knack for giving a little aid, a little help—enough to make the promises which they hold out seem legitimate.

Peace and prosperity do not flow from Communist promises. Peace and security grow out of solutions to these problems—not promises. We in CIO proceed from the basic premise that an attack upon the world's pressing problems of disease, hunger, poverty and illiteracy will help in the promotion of peace and security.

I should like to point out a few of the facts relating to these problems:

Disease: In India, 25% of all babies die before they are a year old, and those who survive have only a 50-50 chance of reaching their 20th birthday. There are only 100 doctors in all of Afghanistan which has a population of 12 million people. Each year 300 million people suffer from malaria; five million die of TB, typhus, cholera or sleeping sickness.

Hunger: One-half of the world's people consume less than 2250 calories each day. In the U. S., our diet averages 3400 calories per day. Nutritional authorities point out that the minimum daily diet should provide at least 2500 calories.

"I'd leave him strictly alone, Sybil. He wants to be a corporation lawyer."

Each year one million people starve to death in China, millions more are too weak to do an adequate day's work.

Poverty: The existence of extreme conditions of poverty around the world is certainly no help to the disease and hunger that exist. Six out of 10 people throughout the world work on land that usually belongs to others. Often as much as 95% of the yield of the land goes in the form of rent to the landowner.

The Vicious Circle

In the underdeveloped areas of the world, the average yearly income equals $80 in American money. In India, it is $25; in China, $27; in all South Asia, it averages $55; and in Southeast Asia, $30.

Illiteracy: More than half the people of the world, that is, more than one billion people can neither read nor write. In the U. S., the illiteracy rate is 3%. In India, it is 91%; in Turkey, 79%; Korea, 60%; Burma, 64%. In the underdeveloped parts of the world, four-fifths of the people are illiterate.

Through reading, people learn about ways to improve their health and the crops and their standards of living. Thus illiteracy is part of the vicious circle of hunger, disease and poverty.

As long as these conditions continue to menace a great part of the world, the odds are against peace and freedom for all of us. We must find ways and means of helping these less fortunate people to help themselves. To leave them to their own resources to solve these problems is, in effect, to leave them to become victims of Communist propaganda.

Government, Private Agencies Arm Science For War On Cancer

By Public Affairs Institute

THE DEATH of Sen. Taft, caused by leukemia or cancer of the blood, has once again renewed interest and concern about cancer. As a cause of death for all ages it is second only to heart disease.

It is primarily a disease of old age, since about 90% of all cancer occurs in persons over 45. But it is also the leading cause of deaths among children between 5 and 9 years and second only to accidents among all children.

Deaths reported due to cancer have risen to startling proportions in recent years. Following are the increased ratio of cancer deaths to other deaths since 1937:

1947	1 to 7.7
1950	1 to 6.9

The growth of cancer deaths is partly a consequence of larger numbers of aging people in the population. Other major factors are the control of other diseases and, in part, improved diagnosis and reporting.

The last year of reliable statistics on cancer now available was 1950. In that year 210,000 deaths were reported, 700,000 persons were under treatment and there were 525,000 newly diagnosed cases.

The National Cancer Institute, a government agency, has made the following cancer forecast for 1975: 330,000 deaths, one million persons under treatment and 780,000 newly diagnosed cases.

Extensive Research

Private agencies engaged in medical research have devoted 27% of their research funds to cancer studies from 1946 to 1951. Since 1946 the American Cancer Society has spent a total of $20 million, while the Damon Runyon Memorial Fund has spent about $5 million on research. The Sloan-Kettering Institute and the Black-Stevenson Foundation have also engaged in extensive research.

The federal government has devoted about 14% of its medical research funds to cancer studies. Congress has just passed an appropriation of $20 million, although the President had requested only $15 million. Congressmen, who have seen many of their colleagues afflicted with the dread disease, have regularly appropriated more than requested.

Storm Over Detroit: The An

UAW Sets Annual Wage Goal To End Periodic Unemployment

(Last of two articles)
By FRED ROSS

"THE TIME has come to consider labor costs as annual costs because to the workers they are annual costs . . .

"But little will be done until employers are given a greater financial responsibility in stabilizing employment."

"The time has come" for the auto industry to agree to guaranteed annual wage, declared the 3000 delegates to the CIO Auto Workers' convention at Atlantic City last March.

Events in the auto industry proves these representatives of 1.3 million UAW-CIO members were right.

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers last week said the guaranteed annual wage would have prevented the unemployment situation now facing the union's members.

Warnings Ignored

The situation was compounded by cancellation of Air Force contracts at the Kaiser Willow Run plant, the falling-off of car and truck sales, and cutbacks of military orders for tanks and trucks.

Despite warnings sounded by CIO and UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther in letters last May to the industry, 60% of the civilian production was scheduled for the first half of the year. That left 40% for the last half of the year.

Nor did the industry heed Reuther's warning when he wrote 15 companies in the same letter:

"Workers being recruited in the South and in other non-industrial areas are being asked to uproot themselves from their communities for a few months to work in the auto plants followed by unemployment of unpredictable duration in strange surroundings. . .

Workers From South

"Recruitment of these in-migrants will intensify later unemployment for those workers who are normally attached to the auto industry."

Reuther offered the services of the UAW in meeting this problem. His warning of unemployment to come went unheeded.

More than a month after Reuther warned the industry, Business Week reported that Buick "runs large ads weekly in 64 cities in 11 states, mostly southern."

"So far," the article continued, "Buick says, they've been producing nicely."

Ford also advertised for workers in the South.

If there were a guaranteed annual wage, there would have been no irresponsible scheduling which in turn led to the irresponsible recruitment of workers in the South.

It would not have paid the industry to engage in these practices. It would not have found it profitable to have its employes sitting around at the end of the year doing nothing—and getting paid for it.

The Pocketbook Nerve

Here again the UAW convention warning is timely.

"We have seen repeatedly how financial responsibility can convert management to social responsibility," the resolution said. "A sound guaranteed annual wage plan will arouse management's social responsibility and stimulate its social ingenuity by putting pressure on its pocketbook nerve."

Old timers in the UAW recalled how workers used to be called in and sit around waiting for jobs—often to no avail and always without pay.

The UAW fought for and won an hour's pay for workers called in, and contracts now provide four hours' call-in pay. With the winning of the latter benefit by the union, auto companies no longer found it profitable to indulge in the practice.

Call-in pay was not won without a fight, and Reuther warned the delegates that a fight may be in store to gain the guaranteed annual wage.

"But when you adopt this resolution you had better go back home, and tell the brothers and sisters we mean what we say; we are not adopting this so that we can put out some fancy pamphlets," he said.

"We are adopting this with the clear understanding that your union is going to mobilize its resources, its power, its strength to do everything we can to lay the foundation to educate the public and the members of our union to get ready when our basic contracts open up to nail down the guaranteed wage.

Measure Of The Good Life

"We will exhaust every reasonable, sensible, constructive effort to resolve this as it ought to be resolved in a broad society, not by the exercise of economic pressure, but by the exercise of logic, by the development of economic facts at the bargaining table.

"We hope it can be done that way, and we will make every effort to resolve it in this spirit.

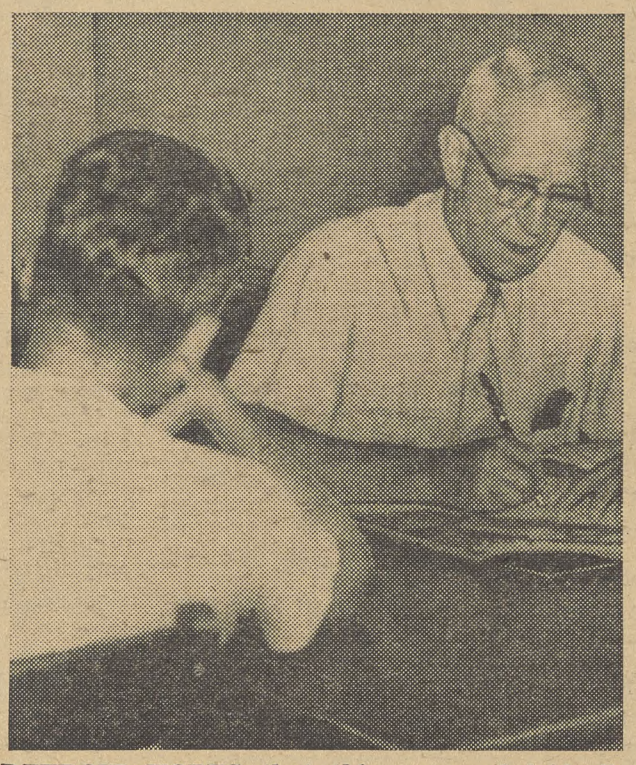
"But unless by that effort you are prepared to say to industry that the measure of justice we ask for, the measure of the good life, which we and our kids are entitled to, will be given to us at the bargaining table reasonably and peacefully and constructively, then we as free men will withhold our labor power. That is the last resort we have."

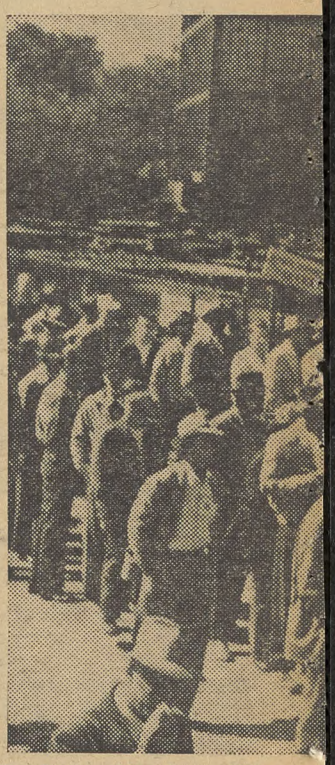
The basic contracts "open up" in 1955.

When they do, it is certain that the UAW-CIO members will remember the job layoff crisis now building up late in 1953.

As the representatives of 1.3 million UAW members resolved without a dissenting vote:

"The time has come to consider labor costs as annual costs. . . ."





DETROIT HOPES that this scene of laid-off CIO Auto Worker filing (

'—Button, Button, Who Has The Button?'

A Detroit newspaper story which said that 100,000 auto workers would be laid off for a week sounded like "button, button, who's got the button?"

The story said that 15,000 would be laid off during the week of Aug. 3 by Packard, which blamed Briggs Manufacturing Co., body makers, which was shutting down some of its operations that week. It was not known how many of the 37,500 Chrysler employes in the area would be affected, the story said.

Briggs said it was shutting down because of an inventory planned that week by Chrysler. And to round out the story, Budd Co., a Chrysler supplier, reported it would have to make adjustments in operations during the week.

Detroit Situatio

PRES. EISENHOWER has failed to make the "bold plans, quick decisions and actions" for maintaining full employment which CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther proposed four months ago.

As president of the CIO Auto Workers, Reuther wrote Eisenhower calling on him to act to maintain full production and full employment.

The CIO and UAW president asked Eisenhower to do two things.

1. "We urge you to call a broadly representative conference at the earliest possible date to draft a worksheet for full production and full employment," Reuther wrote.

2. "And we urge you and the Congress to continue and implement the Employment Act of 1946, now more needed than at any other time since its enactment."

The President replied he had "undertaken to rebuild the old Council of Economic Advisers and make it a genuinely useful agency." He also pledged:

"The Employment Act of 1946 (which created the council) reflects a determination on the part of the American people to see to it that the stupidity of mass unemployment never again visits this land.

Many Women Workers On Top Of Layoff List

Defense production cutbacks may first hit married women working in auto plants. The reason: they generally have less seniority than the men workers.

The Automobile Manufacturers Association reported that an estimated 50,000 women are working in car factories, which is almost double the number working eight to 10 months ago.

that our free economy faces. It is the most basic unsolved problem that your Administration and the Congress must meet."

Recent statements by Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, former chairman of Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, and by the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago gave substance to Reuther's prediction.

Dr. Nourse said "the price of a car in the popular ranges has gone up more than the net incomes of the great middle and working class, where the bulk of the market lies." He added that if the industry's managerial and technological efficiency had been advancing, the opposite should be true.

The June issue of Business Conditions, published by the Chicago FRB, said "a decline of 40% from the second quarter rate of output . . . would be accompanied by sharply reduced automobile employment."

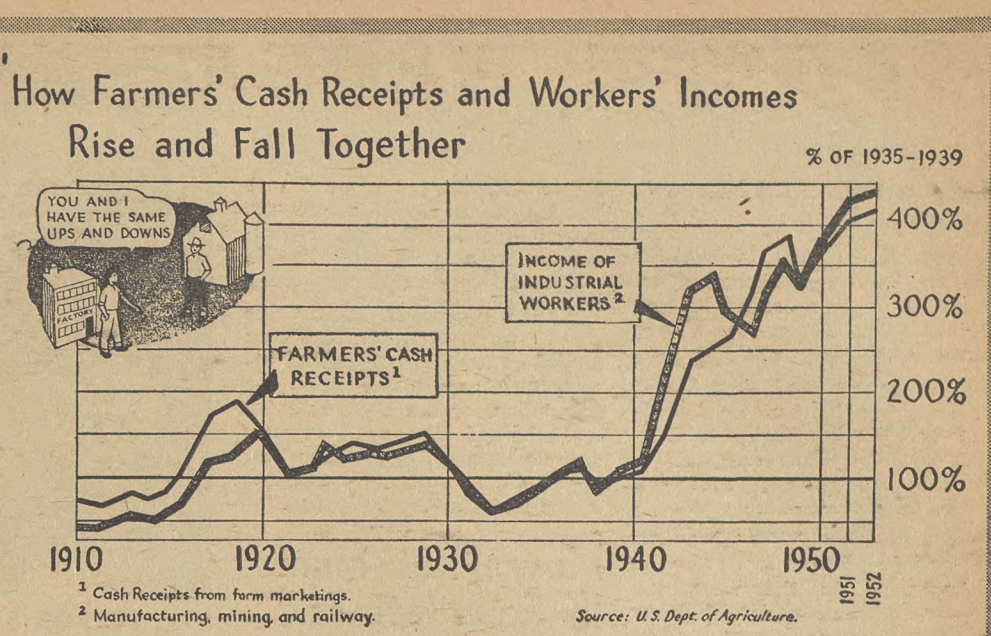
Warning By Bank

"At the present time about 950,000 workers—approximately 5% of all manufacturing employment—are engaged in producing motor vehicles or parts," the bank pointed out. "Several hundred thousand additional persons are making the material used by these plants.

"In recent years almost 20% of the nation's steel output has gone into the auto industry, as well as a substantial portion of all plate glass, copper, upholstery fabrics, and rubber products. Altogether motor vehicle production may account for 10% of the total industrial output."

The bank concluded with this warning:

"The real danger to automobile output and employment is not market saturation, but rather the effects of a general business downturn which could reduce the market for cars to a fraction of the current level."



'Farmers, Workers Must Stand Together,' CIO Says At Fairs

FARM INCOMES and workers' wages rise and fall together is the message told in a new pamphlet which will be distributed by CIO Councils at state and county fairs this summer and fall.

Thousands of the pamphlets will be put in the hands of visitors to fairs at booths hired by CIO councils to tell how farmers and workers are dependent on each other. A lot of misunderstanding and distrust between the two groups will be dispelled by the pamphlet, issued by CIO's Education and Research Dept.

Charts point up the relationship between farmers' cash receipts and the income of wage earners—and how bad times are ahead for both when the income of either starts to slip.

"We of CIO have learned that farmers and workers must stand together," the pamphlet says. "The depression in the thirties taught us that. The lesson still applies today."

Rumors spread among city dwellers since World War II that the farmer gets too much for his products are countered:

"Few city people realize however, that even in 1947, the best postwar year for agriculture, 70% of all farm families earned less than $3000, despite the long hours they work."

Farmers Get Less..

"Those who spread rumors take care not to point out that the farmer gets less than 50c of the $1 paid for food by the city housewife; that the rest goes for distribution costs, the profits of middlemen and to pay sales taxes levied in many states," according to the pamphlet.

It goes on to ask: "How many city folks know that in 1952 the farmer got only 13.5 from a 23c quart of milk; 31c for the cotton in a $3.50 shirt; 3.6c from a 23c can of corn; 3.3c for the tobacco in a standard brand pack of cigarettes and only 3.2c for the wheat in a 16-17c loaf of bread?

"And how many forget that from the receipts of farmers come the expenditures of farm families which, in turn, keep millions of city people on their jobs?"

The rumor that earnings of city workers are too high, prevalent in the countryside, gets attention from the pamphlet. It quotes government figures that a city worker's family of four needs an income of $4300 to provide a minimum standard of comfort, without provision for illness, education and other special needs.

"Yet in 1952," the pamphlet tells the farmer, "the average American factory worker earned only $3540. Workers in the auto industry just reached $4300; steel, $4050; coal mining, $3975; agricultural machinery and tractors, $3900; textiles, $2725; clothing, $2450.

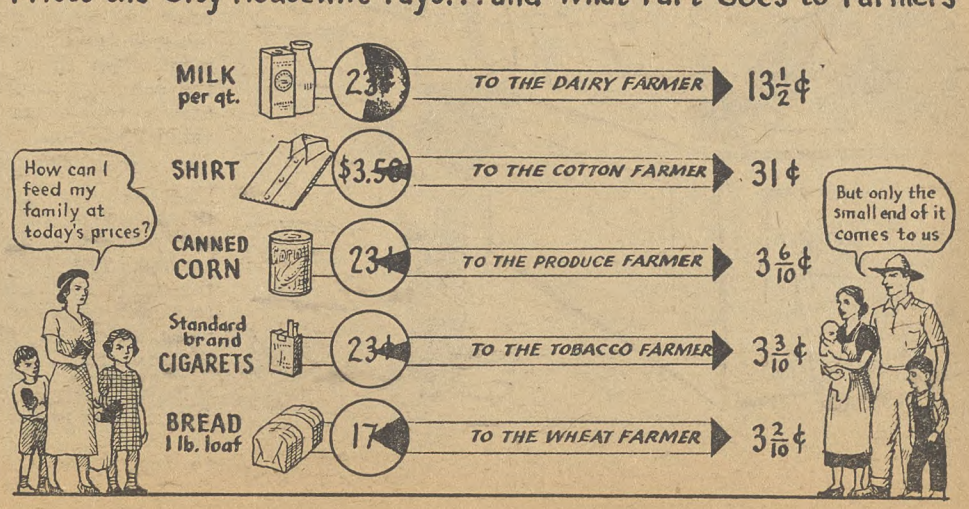
"But this is not even take-home pay. Taxes and other items are first deducted; then there are the workers' 'production costs' like transportation to and from work and work clothes."

Better City Customers

The pamphlet explains that higher industrial wages mean better customers for the farmer. "In 1948, for example, Dept. of Agriculture studies showed that those earning $2000 to $2999 spent only $22.35 for food each week. However, families earning $5000 to $7999 spent $31.36, or almost $500 more in the course of the year. As incomes rise, American families will spend billions more for food and be healthier and happier for it."

Corporation profits, not higher wages for the workers, have cost the farmer extra money when he bought a new tractor, truck or refrigerator, the pamphlet states in quashing another rumor. "Rising prices since World War II have far more than covered any increase in labor costs or other production expenses. Corporation profits, as a consequence, have soared," the report said.

"The income of all American corporations (after all production costs were met) rose from $23.5 billion in 1946 to a yearly rate of $42.8 at the present time. Profits after taxes for the years 1946 through 1952 totalled $127 billion (enough to buy all the farms in America with more than $30 billion left over)."



Tax-Exempt Group Accused Of Lobbying

THE GOVERNMENT was asked last week by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn) to revoke the tax-exemption status of an organization he said lobbied against the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Kefauver charged that Verne P. Kaub, president of the American Council of Christian Laymen (ACCL), sent senators two council publications attacking TVA while the Senate was considering appropriations for the project.

According to the Tennessee Senator, Kaub was for 14 years public relations assistant for the Wisconsin Power & Light Co. before he organized ACCL.

Kefauver called on T. Coleman Andrews, director of the Internal Revenue Service, to withdraw tax exemptions from ACCL immediately. He said that Kraub's letter to senators on ACCL stationery and two council publications which accompanied it violate the terms under which ACCL was granted tax exemption on Jan. 10, 1952.

In another letter to Chairman Reece (R. Tenn.) of a House committee that will investigate tax-exempt foundations, Kefauver asks a probe of ACCL, and said:

"It is a matter of considerable disgust to me that Mr. Kaub, on behalf of the council, should attack TVA as a 'drain' upon the tax dollars of the United States while he and his council unjustly enjoy exemption from taxes that are paid by other responsible citizens of the United States."

House Red-Hunts In Foundations

Congressional witch-hunting in wealthy foundations will be undertaken during the recess, it appeared last week.

Speaker Martin (R. Mass.) of the House named Rep. Reece (R. Tenn.) to head a special committee to look for subversive activities in the Rockefeller, Ford and some 300 other foundations which enjoy tax exemption. The job has already been done—and nothing subversive found — but Reece claimed it was not conclusive.

Slash Closing 19 'Wage' Offices

NINETEEN field offices of the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions are being closed. This will leave 44 offices to cover the country, 10 of them regional offices.

This translates in part the effect of the 22% budget slash voted by the 83rd Congress for the organization which administers and enforces the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act. In terms of staff, Wage-Hour is being cut from 1375 jobs to 1040.

The division spent $7,639,139 in fiscal year 1953. This was cut by Congress to $6,250,000. While the cuts were pending, the Administrator, William McComb, and Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin decided that the most effective way to absorb the cuts would be to close the regional offices at Kansas City, Nashville and Boston.

The conference report, as approved by Congress, directed, however, that "none of the . . . regional offices be closed . . . "

The field offices being closed are located at Manchester, N. H.; Springfield, Mass.; Syracuse, N. Y.; Camden, N. J.; Roanoke, Va.; Memphis, Tenn.; Mobile, Ala.; Savannah, Ga.; Miami, Fla.; Columbus and Toledo, O.; South Bend, Ind.; Madision, Wis.; Sioux City, Ia.; Fort Worth and El Paso, Tex.; Shreveport, La.; and Wichita, Kan.

BECAUSE of the administrative problems involved, the offices will not be closed on a single day but will all be out of business before the end of August.

The Washington Wage-Hour staff is being trimmed from 283 jobs to 224, a cut of 59. The field organization is going from 1092 jobs to 816, a drop of 276. The actual cut in the force of inspectors will be 124, from 612 to 488.

The field information staff is being cut from 10 to 4. —LPA

Baruch, Top Entertainers Respect CIO Picket Line

TV AND RADIO stars are helping the CIO Optical Workers by refusing to cross a picket line at Lugene, Inc., New York City optical concern.

Bernard Baruch, banker, elder statesman and adviser to several U. S. presidents, also saw the picket line of Local 208, UOIWA-CIO, and respected it.

Lugene's has a clientele that includes many top names in the entertainment field.

Happy Felton, who conducts the Knot Hole Gang television program, good-will builder for the Brooklyn Dodgers, came in for criticism for "constantly and deliberately" crossing the picket line. Telegrams of protest were sent to Felton, the Dodgers and a TV station by Pres. Michael J. Quill and Sec.-Treas. Morris Iueshewitz of the New York City Council.

Felton replied by apologizing for his action and assured CIO officials there would be no repetition. He said he visited the struck store for "adjustment of his prescription." Felton wrote that he was a member of several musicians' and TV unions and was "well aware" of the purpose of picket lines.

Transit Strike Ends In Columbus

CIO Transport Workers in Columbus, O., ended an 11-day strike last week and trolley buses rolled again through city streets. Local 208 members voted to accept an offer of a 2.5c hourly wage boost and a 40-hour week by Aug. 1, 1954.

Canyon Give-Away Hit

THE REST of the country feels the same way about the Hells Canyon Dam dispute as the people of the Northwest, Gov. G. Mennen Williams (D.) of Michigan told Western Oregon Democrats at their annual picnic at Eugene, Ore.

"The entire nation shares the indignation of the Northwest at the ignominious surrender of the Administration to private power interests at Hells Canyon," he said. "A philosophy of timidity is exposed by that decision.

"The excuse for turning Hells Canyon over to private exploiters is the claim that we cannot afford to develop the greatest potential source of public power in the nation.

"America, in the Republican philosophy, is over-extended and over-developed. This poor, small, backward nation cannot afford the outlay to develop industries of the Northwest, to protect your communities against floods, to produce cheap fertilizer and irrigation waters

Williams pointed out that Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay, former Oregon governor, is "the cabinet member who gave away Hells Canyon, one of your local boys." LPA

Quaker State Pay Garnishee Loophole Hit

A LEGAL loophole that permits garnisheeing a worker's paycheck would be closed under the terms of a bill supported by the Pennsylvania CIO Council.

The State has prohibited garnisheeing of wages since 1887 but some Pennsylvania firms have found a way of circumventing the law. They go to the courts of neighboring states (notably Ohio) and secure a judgment, then go to the office of the company in that State and attach the wages of Pennsylvania residents.

The Pennsylvania courts have held that this is a violation of the intent of the law but that the practice is not specifically banned. The loophole allowing the use of courts in other states to attach wages of Pennsylvania workers would be closed by House Bill 1542.

Pres. Harry Boyer of the CIO Council has urged a meeting of the House judiciary committee to report out the measure so the present vicious practice can be halted.

"Is there any way the government can keep my salary and I can take home what they deduct?"

Soviet Set To Crush Travel Ban Riots

SOVIET TROOPS were being assigned to cities in East Germany last week in the wake of rioting against the Red travel ban to West Berlin and its American food parcels.

Reliable reports from anti-Communist groups within the Soviet zone told of the deployment of tanks, artillery and machine guns last week to cities within a few miles of the western border.

Troops in division strength were massed at strategic points as eastern zone workers rebelled against the latest Soviet move to keep them from getting food the Red government could not supply.

ALMOST 1.6 million food packages supplied by America were distributed in 10 days to East German citizens. Their Red masters literally took this free food from the mouths of thousands, with consequent rioting, strikes and slowdowns. Police halted returning visitors from the western zone and "persuaded" them to abandon the food for which they had traveled long distances.

Despite the efforts of Communist police and troops to halt them, thousands flocked daily to West Germany to get the food the Reds say is not needed in their zone.

A ban on railroad travel was partially eased after a wave of protests and pitched battles with Communist authorities. More than 50 Communist police deserted to the west last week rather than carry out orders to confiscate the food parcels.

Some food packages went a full cycle. The West handed them out free to East Germans. The Communists took them away and presented them to West Berliners, many of whom turned them back to the original donors for redistribution to the East Germans.

CIO Opposes Utility Merger In Northwest

CIO OPPOSITION to a proposed merger of two Washing State private utility firms was announced last week.

Washington Water Power Co. is seeking to merge with the Puget Sound Power & Light Co. Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, declared this would be "against the public interest."

Such a merger would create a monopoly in the State, "which would be two and a half times larger than any utility combine in the U. S., he said.

In conversations with Washington representatives of the Public Utility Districts Association of Washington State, he said that CIO would oppose the merger at hearings by the Federal Power Commission or the Washington State Public Service Commission.

"The people of Washington State over and over have voted for a public power program and the proposed merger is a flagrant violation of that policy. We will fight it," Smith promised.

Harold Slater, secretary-treasurer of the Washington CIO Council, opposed the merger in a statement filed with the State PSC.

Carey Meets With Leaders Of Greek Labor Group

THE PROBLEMS facing workers in war-torn Greece were discussed recently at a meeting in Athens between CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Sec. Michael Ross, of the CIO International Committee, and officials of the Greek General Confederation of Labor (GSEE).

Carey and Ross, who had been among CIO delegates to the world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Stockholm and later had visited Finland, were guests of the GSEE.

After spending four days in the Greek capital, Carey and Mrs. Carey went on to Israel at the invitation of the Israeli Federation of Labor (Histradrut). Ross left Athens for Rome and Paris.

IN GREECE, Carey and Ross talked with government officials and representatives of the Mutual Security Agency, as well as with union leaders. The MSA people with whom they met included D. Alan Strachan, the labor adviser, who formerly was a CIO Auto Workers' staff member and who played a major role in rebuilding the Greek labor movement.

The CIO representatives were told that although the GSEE is still young and incompletely organized, it is waging a militant fight against low wages, the rising cost of living, and high unemployment.

It has been especially active in fighting anti-labor legislation in recent months. In June, it staged a series of 24-hour general strikes in protest against pending legislation.

CAREY told Minister of Labor Gonis that he was deeply impressed with the GSEE's efforts to raise the living standards of the workers. He warned the minister that the government must cooperate with the labor movement in the task, and should avoid steps leading to government domination of unions.

He told a press conference that the CIO will support sympathetically the efforts of Greek workers to better their lot, and that upon his return to the U. S., he would advise labor organizations and the government of the problems facing them.

Pennsy Prosperous

Net income of the Pennsylvania Railroad was up more than $13 million in the first six months of this year compared with the same period a year ago. In 1951, the road reported a deficit for its first-half income.

Bus Drivers Get Pay Hikes

BUS DRIVERS for two Long Island transit companies, members of the CIO Transport Workers, have been awarded a five-day week and a 16c wage hike by a New York State Labor Dept. inquiry panel.

The changeover from the present six-day week will be made in three stages during the next year. Drivers for Bee Lines and the Rockville Center Bus Corp. also will get an actuarially sound pension plan.

In the first of the three conversion steps the drivers will get a 5c an hour increase in base pay and work five days a week, instead of six, in two out of every four weeks.

A third bus company, Utility Lines, gave its workers a straight 5c an hour increase without change of hours. The "precarious" financial state of the company was given as the reason for the lesser award.

Martin Ends MSA Service After 5 Years

ENDING five years of service overseas, Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild will return to this country Aug. 15.

Martin has been director of labor information for the old Economic Cooperation Administration and later for the Mutual Security Agency. He is the last survivor of a group of CIO leaders loaned to take top spots in the overseas aid program.

He is a member of the CIO executive board and the International Affairs Committee. His resignation from the overseas information post is effective this month.

Following his return he will campaign for re-election to his Guild post against Joseph F. Collis, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., ANG-CIO vice president at large.

EXPRESSING his appreciation of Martin's work overseas, Ambassador Fred L. Anderson wrote the ANG president:

"You are to be commended, for the important role you played in leading a large part of the world's organized journalists out of the Communist-dominated Intl. Organization of Journalists and into the new Intl. Federation of Journalists, which you helped found."

Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, extended to Martin "the gratitude and appreciation on behalf of myself and the large number of your European friends and colleagues for your personal contribution to our common efforts in Europe."

Martin expects to spend several weeks on vacation after his campaign for re-election as ANG president and then return to newspaper work.

CIO Contributes $3000 For Dutch Flood Relief Work

THE NATIONAL CIO, international and local CIO unions and individual members contributed a total of $3017.50 for the relief of sufferers in the disastrous floods in Holland, Leo Perlis, national director of the CIO Community Services Committee, reported last week.

On Feb. 10, he reported, the CIO-CSC purchased $1000 worth of blankets from CARE for distribution in Holland, On May 14, he continued, $857.50 was sent to Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, for transmittal to Pres. Hendrik Oosterhuis of the Netherlands Federation of Labor (NVV). A final check for $1160 was sent to Oosterhuis on July 2.

Free World Labor Fund Grows

STRIKES and demonstrations by workers behind the Iron Curtain have quickened interest in the CIO Free World Labor Fund, John Brophy, fund coordinator, reported last week.

"The desperate courage of the workers in East Germany, Poland, Hungary and the other countries who protested Communist tyranny so bravely touched the hearts of a lot of CIO members and union leaders," said Brophy.

"The use of armed troops to suppress them reminded a lot of our American union members of the days when the national guard was called out in strikes. The result has been a number of contributions to the fund from local unions."

The fund was set up by the CIO Executive Board under a mandate from the last National CIO convention to finance a CIO "Point Four program." The money raised will be used to help free trade unions grow where they are now struggling or do not exist.

The CIO Executive Board appropriated $25,000, and the CIO Auto Workers' convention voted $50,000.

SEVERAL thousand copies of a folder outlining how the fund will be spent have been distributed to international unions and CIO councils. In an endorsement on the pamphlet, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote:

"In the labor movement we are well aware that well-intentions resolutions are not enough . . . Practical financial assistance is needed—the kind of assistance that will help our friends organize, staff, build and extend their unions."

"Collective bargaining must be greatly expanded," said Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers in another endorsement, "the standard of living raised, and an adequate measure of social security achieved for all workers."

Typical of what such a fund can do is a new poster prepared by the CIO European office which is brightening factories and billboards in France and Italy with an appeal to join free unions in the metal industries of the two nations.

It promises recruits the support of seven million workers in the Intl. Metal Workers Federation, and identifies major metal unions of the world affiliated with the federation.

Samuel Gompers' Widow Succumbs

Funeral services were held Aug. 5 in New York City for Mrs. Gertrude Gompers, 71, widow of Samuel Gompers, AFL founder and long-time president. She died July 31 and was buried in Trenton, N. J. Those present at the funeral included CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann, who represented CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and Irving Abramson, CIO national representative.

Factory Worker Still Behind In Race With Cost Of Living

FACTORY workers' families are having a hard time making ends meet. And it's no wonder—according to the latest statistics on their earnings and the cost of living.

The average weekly pay of a factory production worker in mid-June was $10.17 short of the money needed to provide his wife and two children with a "modest but adequate" living.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that his mid-June earnings were $72.04 weekly. The Bureau of National Affairs estimated that at mid-June, a family of four needed $82.21 a week to arrive at a "modest but adequate" budget.

The highest paid workers—in petroleum and coal products—averaged but $74.37 weekly, $7.84 short of the modest budget. The lowest paid group — in tobacco manufacturing — was about $40 short of the requirements.

While the cost of living in the BLS' new Consumer's Price Index reached a new high in mid-June, the BLS last week reported that wages were just inching up. Average hourly wages for factory workers rose only 3c in the half-year since wage controls were ended last January.

In the seven months from the Korean outbreak in June 1950 to the imposition of controls, average hourly earnings rose 10c. In the following two years until the end of controls, the increase was 19c.

In Detroit, where thousands of workers are idle because of falling civilian auto sales and military order cutbacks, the cost of a four-person budget was $86.40 a week, the highest in the country, the BNA reported.

THE BNA, which studied 18 cities, found the budget topped $85 a week in San Francisco, Cincinnati, Atlanta and Los Angeles. It was lowest in Mobile, $76.48 a week.

Biggest advance percentage-wise in the adequate budget between mid-May and mid-June was 2.2% in Cincinnati. Other increases during the month were 1.9% in Detroit, 1.7% in Philadelphia, 1.6% in Pittsburgh, 1.3% in Chicago and .8% in Birmingham.

NAM And Sales Tax Are With Us Again

The National Association of Manufacturers, carrying the ball for the Administration, last week opened another campaign for a national sales tax—in the name of equity!

Charles R. Sligh, Jr., NAM president, urged the House Ways and Means Committee to approve a uniform tax of 4.25% to 5% on all manufactured goods except food and food products.

He said the retrogressive tax, which the CIO has opposed for several years, is an "improvement" on the present excise tax system.

CIOers Urged To Seek Posts On Welfare Boards

WIDER CIO representation on welfare agency boards was the goal set at the fourth annual Illinois CIO Community Services Institute at Ottawa, Ill.

Ellsworth M. Smith, secretary of the State CIO Community Services Committee and the Chicago CIO Council, called for greater efforts to obtain representation on agency boards.

"What's good for the community is good for the CIO," Smith said. "We don't intend to take over any agency, but we merely want to play our part because we help pay the freight through our voluntary contributions and our taxes."

MORE THAN 150 delegates to the institute, which was held at CIO Auto Workers' Union Center, adopted a resolution containing a four-point program.

The program declared that CIO groups should nominate the most qualified persons for an agency board; that the nominee should carry out CIO policy, should be instructed as to his responsibilities, and that CSC-trained counsellors would ably represent the CIO on such boards.

William Welsh, National CSC representative, said, "CSC stands on two legs—board representation and union counselling. Without these, we have no program."

Other speakers included: Pat Greathouse, UAW regional director and State CIO vice president in charge of community services; Maurice F. McElligott, State CIO secretary-treasurer; Frank Cronin, CIO regional director; Darrell Smith, National PAC; Samuel A. Guzzardo, State CIO staff, and Robert Bollard, editor of Illinois Labor.

FDA Inspection Rights Restored

Congress, with a piece of last-minute legislation, restored the right of Food & Drug Administration inspectors to enter plants without permission.

FDA agents, who had been making inspections without advance warning for years, have been locked out for the last few months by a court ruling that permission is necessary. Restoration of the right to drop in without notice means that chiseling on food and drug products, with their cheating of the consumer, will drop to old-time levels.

CIO Protests Liner Deal

PROPOSED SALE of the liner Mariposa might mean the loss of the ship as a transport in time of any national emergency, Exec. Sec. Hoyt S. Haddock of the CIO Maritime Committee, warned last week.

The Mariposa, used as a transport during World War II, is owned by the Matson Line. Matson has now requested permission to sell the vessel to the Home Lines for operation under the Panamanian flag. One condition of the sale imposed by the Maritime Administration is that the Mariposa shall be available to the U. S. for five years.

This move is supposed to insure that the ship will not fall into enemy hands in wartime. CIO objections hinge on the fact that the ship will be manned by Italian seamen sailing under the "runaway" flag of Panama.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

NOW THAT used cars have come down in price and many new car dealers are quietly giving discounts, maybe more wage-earners can afford to trade in their old jalopies in the year ahead. There are plenty of customers for cars if the prices come down.

Buying That Car

On the used cars you generally save most on cars two or three years old. The average car depreciates $500 or so for the first year and $300-$400 the second. In the third year, depreciation slows down to $150-$200. Also, some cars have higher resale value and consequently generally cost more in the used car market. If you're buying a car for a short period, it may be worth paying more for high resale value. But if you buy for a long haul, an initial saving may be worth more than future resale value.

Moderate-price cars having high resale value and consequently higher price tags in used condition include Ford, Chevrolet, Oldsmobile 88, Pontiac and Mercury, in order of descending resale value. In the medium bracket are Plymouth, Studebaker, Buick, Dodge, Nash, Hudson and Henry J. The Kaisers and Frazers have even lower resale value.

For the same amount of money it's generally better economy to buy a later-model small car then an older big one, which will require repairs sooner, and costlier repairs at that.

UNION LOCALS and other groups might well investigate the possibilities of arranging with a local dealer in new cars for discounts for their members.

Whether new or used, it's vital to select a make and model suited to your particular needs. A family that uses its cars mostly for city driving and only occasionally for long trips will find a heavy, high-powered car not only a large initial expense, but a continuing extra expense for gas, costlier tires, repairs and depreciation.

Some high-powered cars boast top speeds of over 100 miles an hour, and can accelerate into high in only 10 seconds. But if you don't need high speed and power there's no use buying it.

One question to decide is whether to get a six or eight. Six cylinder models consume less gas and are a little more economical to repair.

Advantages of the eights are smoother flow of power, better torque (thrust) and less strain on cylinders. Which you should choose depends chiefly on your local topography and driving conditions. If you use a car chiefly in flat country or for short-distance city and suburban driving, the six is more economical. If you live in hilly country or make many long trips, you might advantageously use an eight's greater and smoother power.

Before you decide on a particular model, ask other owners their experience with its economy on gas and repairs and its driving qualities. Also check to see what Consumer Reports, Consumer Research and other publications which test cars have had to say about this make and model.

A well-known test driver suggests observing these points as you try out a particular make:

TRAFFIC HANDLING: Can you maneuver, U-turn, and park this car easily? Can you "corner" it on a narrow street without coming in the opposite lane? Does it have sufficient acceleration for your needs? Is there good visibility front and rear, with no dangerous "blind" corners? In general is it maneuverable and compact?

Also note if you can depress all foot pedals without getting leg cramps, if the seat feels comfortable and getting in and out is easy, and if emergency brake, windshield wiper knob and cigarette lighter are all easily accessible.

LONG-DISTANCE HANDLING: These points are especially important if you use a car primarily for long trips. Does the car behave smoothly at high speeds? Does it have good roadability with no excessive sway on curves? Does it "track" properly without noticeable wander? Do the brakes stop the car smoothly and easily from 70 mph down to zero? Does it behave properly in cross-winds?

Big Steel Joins Doctors Lobby In Fighting Hospital Co-op

"ORGANIZED medicine" and a subsidiary of U. S. Steel Corp. are helping to keep the people of Two Harbors, Minn., from establishing their own co-op health plan and build a badly-needed hospital.

Details of the controversy are revealed in the Farmers Union Herald which reports that 70% of the residents of Two Harbors support the co-op plan. Two Harbors is in upper Minnesota near the famed Mesabi iron ore range.

Mayor Cyrus Magnuson, school teacher and a summertime employe of the Mesabi and Iron Range Railroad, is a friend of the cooperative health plan. The railroad is owned by U. S. Steel. He was fired from his summer job recently, the reason being his friendliness to the plan.

The present hospital and clinic is owned by the railroad. It has been operated for about 40 years as a prepayment affair with support checked off all employes' wages. Faced with the loss of the hospital with the retirement of the doctors operating it, a Community Health Association was formed and took it over on a voluntary, non-profit, member-controlled plan.

That was when organized medicine began its war on the people. Now a Big Steel subsidiary has stepped in to help the doctors lobby.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

(I'd like to take a moment for a personal note: The doctors had suggested I take some rest. My family and I are deeply grateful for all the expressions of good will. I expect to be back in the office very shortly. Thanks to all. It was very heartwarming.)

CONGRESS has gone home, leaving behind one of the most important pieces of legislation in your future, my future, and our children's. I'm speaking about the fine Social Security Bill introduced by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.), a close associate of our late Pres. Roosevelt, and one who carries on the humanitarian principles FDR wrote into the laws of our land. You've probably read many of the outstanding details of Lehman's bill in previous issues of CIO News.

Now, even with Congress out of Washington, is the time for some old-fashioned union action; for those same lawmakers are now back home, mending their political fences, seeing their constituents, and keeping a hard eye on the '54 elections.

This is the best chance you'll ever have to get to your representatives and talk to them, reason with them, convince them to act favorably on the Lehman bill. Call on them in their offices. Drop in at their homes. Remember that you of organized labor represents a genuine power in your community. The political leaders will give you their ear if you demand it.

THE ATTACKS on social security have increased. Its enemies have come out of their 20 years' hiding and are boldly talking about taking away the little bit we've been able to win.

We have to face the fact that our social security, now, is just a "little bit" of the real security American workers should have to keep them and theirs. While we would hope that Lehman's bill went even further, and give both increased coverage and benefits to all Americans who need it, we do feel it the best bill yet introduced. Pres. Eisenhower, too, has suggested that Congress bring more workers under social security coverage. This action on the part of an Administration which is not overly friendly to the principle of social security is a pretty good gauge of how great the problem has become.

The same principle that built CIO, that all workers are deserving of a union, should apply to the benefits derived from our democracy. All workers should be covered by social security.

Your congressman or senator is probably happy to get away from the famous Washington heat, but suppose all of us put a little special heat on these men. Show them straight out how we feel about the matter. It's vitally important.

★

A REPORT FROM Brother Oral Garrison indicates the committee named to look into the affiliation of local industrial unions has made consideraale progress. The LIUs have well served their purpose of enabling thousands of workers to organize who might otherwise have presented a problem in jurisdiction.

Often there just weren't the unions to care for them. But the situation has changed, as CIO has grown and expanded. The LIUs have grown up and there are many internationals which welcome them into their ranks with open arms. This, of course, will mean greater strength for the membership of all concerned.

While the committee has not yet reached the stage where it can make a final report, the matter has been placed in the hands of the CIO regional directors who are charged with working out the details of individual affiliations.

Referring again to social security, I wouldn't want to let the chance pass to pay a compliment to Brother Joe Curran, who took time from his duties as NMU president to head our CIO Social Security Committee. It was a fine job, and the measure of it is how many good features have been written into the Lehman Bill.

Local Fed Up On Teamsters Bolts To CIO After 15 Years

AFTER 15 years as an affiliate of the AFL Teamsters, a Chicago local has decided by a vote of better than three to one to join the CIO.

Members of the local, who are employed by the Transparent Package Co., cast 206 votes for the CIO Chemical Workers and 62 for the AFL union in a recent National Labor Relations Board election.

For 15 years, J. T. O'Brien, recently named by Teamsters Pres. Dave Beck as general organizer in an 11-state Midwest area, has been "servicing" the local.

Members of the local became so disgusted that they went to Joseph Bolattino and Sam Angelocci, UGCCW-CIO representatives in Chicago, to ask the CIO affiliate to represent them.

Bolattino and Angelocci refused to raid the AFL just to pick up another local union.

But the members were determined to get out of the Teamsters, and said that they would look around for another union if UGCCW-CIO turned them down.

Then the UGCCW agreed to petition the NLRB for an election. Contract talks with the Chicago firm will begin as soon as formal certification of the election results is received.

NLRB Tells Fugitive Firm To Reinstate 480 Workers

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board ruled last week that a textile mill abandoned its Massachusetts operations and located in the South to avoid bargaining with the CIO Textile Workers.

Hailed as a major victory for the union, the decision involves the Mt. Hope Finishing Co., which formerly maintained a plant in North Dighton, Mass., but moved to Butner, N. C., following a strike by TWUA-CIO.

Approximately 480 workers at the Massachusetts plant, the board ruled, are entitled to employment there, if the mill reopens, or at the Butner plant. If the workers choose the latter, they will get travel and moving pay for themselves and their families.

TWUA-CIO began organization at the Mt. Hope plant, a textile finishing shop, in July 1951. Within a few days, the mill laid off 185 workers. A union meeting was called Aug. 10, and a strike in protest against the layoffs began three days later.

The NLRB conducted an election Sept. 17 which was won by the union, 369-210. Two days later, the Mt. Hope directors announced they were abandoning the mill. An official told reporters that the plant would go out if the union came in. Unfair labor practice charges were filed by the union.

THE PLANT had maintained its move was dictated by economic reasons. This was discounted by the NLRB because negotiations for a site in the South did not begin until after the election.

All of the 185 workers discharged soon after organization began were not fired discriminatorily, the board said, since some would have been laid off because of business conditions. About 65 were held to have been discriminatorily discharged.

NLRB has ordered the company to cease discrimination against the union and its membership. All employes of the Massachusetts plant were ordered reinstated without prejudice when and if that mill reopens, or at the Butner plant.

The 65 workers whose discharge was accelerated before the strike must be paid their wages, less any earnings at other employment.

About 480 other workers must be paid wages, less earnings, from the date the mill closed to the date they are offered reinstatement.

"It's a letter from my Union — they want my correct address!"

Planning Group Report Hails TWUA Local In Velvet Mill

THE NATIONAL Planning Association has looked at another example of successful collective bargaining and has singled out a CIO union for high praise.

NPA's Committee on the Causes of Industrial Peace has acclaimed Local 110 of the CIO Textile Workers, for its democracy and "intelligent membership, guided by active and intelligent leadership."

The committee consists of experts in industrial relations from business, labor, universities and the professions, and is headed by Clinton S. Golden, formerly vice president of the CIO Steelworkers.

The committee had George S. Paul, director of the Labor-Management Institute of the Univ. of Connecticut, make an on-the-spot study of the local's relations with the American Velvet Co., Stonington, Conn.

Paul and the committee credit some of the good relations between the local and the company to a profit-sharing plan started at the suggestion of the company's owner and president, Clarence A. Wimpfheimer, in 1940. They add, however, neither party views profit sharing as a substitute for good wages and other benefits worked out by the company and the union.

"THE BASIC reason for success of the plan and of the whole collective bargaining relationship is the responsibility and the mutual respect which is demonstrated in everyday activities by management and the union," the committee says.

"This democratic union has intelligent leadership, guided by an active and interested membership. It has demonstrated to management an ability and willingness to carry its share of the load on a wide variety of problems.

"Management, led by its president, has convincingly proved to workers its sincerity in seeking ways to assure that workers have a security, well-being, and dignity in their jobs and community."

Sinclair Pact Gives OWIU 4% Pay Boost

COMPANYWIDE agreement on a new contract between the CIO Oil Workers and the Sinclair Oil Corp. was reached last week, topped by a 4% wage boost.

The pact virtually concludes 1953 negotiations for the OWIU-CIO. Almost all oil workers are now getting the 4% increase, or about 9c an hour.

Sinclair's contract directly covers 10,000 oil field, pipe line and refinery employes and indirectly affects several thousand other workers. The wage raise is retroactive to July 1.

SINCLAIR'S is the only companywide contract in the industry among major companies. Bargaining with other companies is on a plant-by-plant basis. The general wage increase in the industry, involving several hundred agreements, was gained without a single strike. A few small strikes were called in industrial oil plants this year, but not on wage issues.

Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer of OWIU-CIO, who directed the Sinclair negotiations, announced the basic contract had been extended to July 31, 1954, but may be opened on 30 days notice for wage discussions. Previously, the union had planned to let the contract run to the usual anniversary date, June 30, 1954.

Detroit To Hear HST Labor Day

Former Pres. Truman will be the principal speaker at the joint CIO-AFL Labor Day celebration in Detroit, Mich. It will be the fifth time that the former chief executive has visited the auto city to deliver a Labor Day address.

Economic Outlook Says—

Buying Power Key To Peacetime Economy

REDUCTION of defense spending will release important resources for civilian production, according to the current issue of the Economic Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

But unless the great mass of Americans have enough purchasing power to buy the goods that will be produced and the services that will be available, it continues, the country is headed toward unemployment at home, and the world toward despair.

"Economic expansion can be maintained only if spending in the civilian part of the economy rises to offset declining defense expenditures," the Outlook says.

"The continued growth of the national economy brings within range a total national output of $410 billion by 1956. Translated into individual terms, this would mean a real annual income of $1758 by 1956, a gain of nearly 18% over 1952 for every man, woman and child in the U. S."

The Outlook reports that continued expansion of the economy is both possible and necessary, but that "potential increases in total output and personal income will not occur automatically or inevitably."

Calling for recognition of the increased productivity of American workers, the Outlook points out that "if economy is to absorb the effects of rising man-hour output, markets must increase, total output must grow, and new employment opportunities must be created.

"CONTINUED man-hour output increases in the period ahead will make it necessary for the economy to create new employment opportunities for one to 1.75 million persons annually merely to maintain the present level of employment," it adds.

"To absorb the natural yearly increases in the civilian labor force . . . it is necessary for the economy to create an additional 700,000 new jobs each year.

"Full employment therefore in the period ahead requires the creation of about 1.75 to 2.5 million new jobs each year."

Defense expenditures are scheduled to taper off from an annual rate of over $53 billion in mid-1953 to $40 to $45 billion by 1956, the Outlook reports.

"A great share of the burden of sustaining full employment . . . will fall upon . . . private domestic investment and consumer expenditures," it goes on.

The Outlook points out that personal consumption expenditures have been pushed down from "an average 69% of total output of 1946-1949 to 62.7% in the first quarter of 1953," and urges expansion of this section of the economy.

"The buying power of wages and salaries must rise rapidly in the period ahead," it says. "Wages and salaries must make up for their lag behind rising productivity in the past few years.

"THE BUSINESS community generally must change its price and profit policies. Narrow unit profit margins are called for to bolster consumer buying power . . . Government policies likewise must be framed with the goal of an expanding economy based on rising consumer buying power."

1. Wage increases through collective bargaining. Raising exemptions for income tax above the present $600.

2. Improvement of state and federal legislation on social security, workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, minimum wage, etc.

3. Stepping up school, hospital and road construction, along with a new federal housing program for low-income families.

4. Improvement of the farm support program.

5. Formulation of fiscal, credit and monetary policies in keeping with the need for economic expansion.

6. Preparation for increased government spending at any time when expenditures by private groups appear to be insufficient to maintain full employment and economic growth.

The alternative economic road, the Outlook holds, is "failure to utilize our resources to their fullest extent."

"This would not only be a loss for the American people, but around the world its impact would be disastrous," it concludes.

Farm Buying Power Hits Post-War Low

The farmer's share of the American housewife's food dollar on June 30 was at its lowest since World War II, the Agriculture Dept. reported last week.

The man who grows what goes on the dinner table was getting only 44c out of every $1 Mrs. America was spending on it, the department said. The other 56% was going to processors, distributors and other middlemen. The farmer's most prosperous post-war year was 1946, when he got 52c of every food dollar.

Coalition 'Blocks' Civil Rights

SENATE Dixiecrats and Midwest Republicans were denounced for blocking civil rights legislation by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) at a meeting of the Civil Rights Committee of the CIO Electrical Workers.

Douglas spoke at a two-day session in Washington which was attended by some 50 delegates from the union's 10 districts and many of its locals.

"The most frustrating experience of my life has been in the field of civil rights in the Senate," he said. "The alliance between the Dixiecrats and the Midwest Republicans have effectively blocked any possibility of getting civil rights legislation passed whether it be an FEPC, an anti-lynching or an anti-poll tax bill."

The Illinois Senator told his audience that the Midwesterners do not vote against civil rights measures, but to keep Rule 22. The rule requires a two-thirds vote of all Senators —not just those present—to end a filibuster, and has been used to prevent the passage on civil rights legislation.

The CIO has long called for its repeal.

Douglas blamed the South-Midwest coalition with successfully blocking the passage of any major social legislation since 1938. He said the pressure of liberals in the Senate for civil rights legislation and the litigation to end segregation in the schools have caused some Southern states to improve their school facilities for Negroes.

Audience participation marked the meeting at which IUE-CIO Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett presided. He is chairman of the union's Civil Rights Committee.

Two impromtu skits depicting discriminatory situations brought comments from many delegates. Reports were given for civil rights committees of the 10 districts and many locals. IUE-CIO is working constantly to eliminate discrimination in plants where it has contracts and to advance the cause of civil rights nationally.

Delegates asked numerous questions of three Indonesian labor leaders who spoke and declared they were opposed to discrimination anywhere.

Other speakers included Dr. Carl Bauer, professor of psychology at Catholic Univ., Washington; Harry Fleischman, director of National Labor Service of the American Jewish Committee; Irving Ferman of the American Civil Liberties Union, and George L-P Weaver, director of the National CIO Civil Rights Committee.

Jobless Aid Asked For U. S. Workers

Rep. Forand (D., R.I.) has introduced a bill to make federal employes eligible for unemployment compensation.

Pointing to a 100,000 decline in federal employment in the past six months, Forand said benefits should be available to workers "to tide them over after the termination of their federal employment and until re-employment."

2 Of Ma Bell's Chicks Yield To CWA-CIO

SETTLEMENTS approximating 6.5c an hour have been won by the CIO Communications Workers with two units of the Bell system.

The agreements were reached in Wisconsin and Illinois and cover more than 18,000 employes.

The Wisconsin Bell Telephone Co. and CWA-CIO's 7000 members in that State agreed last week for an average of 7.3c an hour for plant workers and nearly 6c an hour for traffic employes.

In Chicago, agreement was reached with the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. An all-traffic unit of about 11,000 members, including 2100 long distance operators and the Chicago "toll area," received an average wage hike of just under 6c an hour.

EVERY unit of the Bell system under contract with CWA-CIO is now in negotiations for a new contract, just arrived at a settlement, or on strike as in the case of the Indiana Bell Telephone Co., where 7000 are out.

The Indiana strike was reported by CWA-CIO as "tight as a drum—and so is the company." In its third week, the walkout had tied up phone service in and out of many Indiana communities. The company has made no move from its original 4.9c an hour offer, well below the 6.5c settlement reached with other Bell affiliates earlier.

IWA Ends Peonage In Mississippi

PEONAGE practiced by a Jackson, Miss., employer ended abruptly when an international representative of the CIO Woodworkers got wind of it, Labor Press Associated reported last week.

The situation was disclosed when some employes of the Merrimac Veneer Co., members of the CIO affiliate, let IWA-CIO Intl. Rep. Claude Hill know they were getting empty pay envelopes.

They said they had received pay advances—which the company called loans — when they were hard pressed for cash, and were forced to pay interest at the rate of 20% a week.

THIS WAS so high that a few weeks after getting the money, the interest was eating up all their earnings. They were going deeper and deeper into debt to the employer, and in effect were bound to him in involuntary servitude for the rest of their working lives, as the debt grew so high they could never hope to repay it.

Hill arranged a meeting with the company at which the union also was represented by Pres. J. B. Hanna of IWA-CIO Dist. 4, and Intl. Rep. A. C. Hudson. At the session, the company attorney said he would look into the matter.

The following day he told the union its charges were true and that the injustice would be rectified. The day after that, the victims of the usury went to the company office with their union representatives and received their pay checks—with no deductions.

Now they are repaying the advances at the rate of $3 a week, with no interest.

Television Next—

CIO Radio Program Starts Labor Day

STARTING LABOR DAY, the CIO will launch a year-long series of daily radio news commentary broadcasts over some 150 stations of the American Broadcasting Co. network.

John W. Vandercook, noted radio commentator and author, has been signed to appear on the program.

The quarter-hour program will be heard over ABC network Mondays through Fridays at 7 p.m. local time in the east, and at 6 p.m. local time in the midwest, mountain and Pacific Coast time zones. In some few cities, the program will be transcribed for slightly later broadcast, where individual stations had existing commitments for the time the CIO show will go on the network.

In addition, plans are being made for a regularly appearing CIO television show, to appear in approximately 30 major cities throughout the country.

FULL DETAILS on the CIO radio and TV programs will be made public in the near future, together with a complete list of the stations which will carry the Vandercook commentary.

In announcing the CIO's enlarged public relations program, Pres. Walter P. Reuther stressed the fact that Vandercook will not act as a "propaganda agent" for the CIO.

He will view the news as he sees it, as a public service to the American people provided by the CIO.

Vandercook, whose family came to this country in the 17th century, is the son of one of the founding officials of the United Press. He has traveled extensively throughout the world; knows many of the leaders of world political and economic life; and has served many years as a news commentator on several of the major U. S. radio networks.

His comments will be heard in just about every major city and in a large proportion of the rural areas of the nation.

Commenting about the plans for the CIO public relations program, Reuther said:

"The CIO is sincerely pleased at the opportunity of bringing the nightly news commentary of John W. Vandercook to the American public over the radio facilities of the American Broadcasting Co.

"WE IN THE CIO look upon this program as an opportunity to serve the public, by keeping it acquainted with the fast-breaking news of the day and how it affects the daily lives of each and every one of us.

"We hope, through the commercial announcements on the broadcast, to better acquaint the public with the CIO and its role in the community. We have often pointed out that CIO members make progress only as the community progresses, and not at the community's expense; and this program will demonstrate that fact.

"This radio series, the latest step in the CIO's continuing program of public relations, will shortly be followed by a regular television program. It is our hope that we will be able to announce details on this TV series in the near future."

PLANS FOR the radio-television series, which will cost several hundred thousand dollars, have been under study for several months at the direction of Reuther. The initial study was carried out by a special committee of union public relations experts appointed by him and headed by Henry C. Fleisher, CIO publicity director.

Members of that group were Vin Sweeney, steel; Frank Winn, auto; Arthur Riordan, electrical; Richard Rohman, clothing; Al Herrington, communications; Kenneth Fiester, textile; Joseph Walsh, rubber; Ray Davidson, oil; Henry Zon, CIO-PAC; Al Zack, CIO assistant publicity director; and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

FOLLOWING general recommendations from that committee, the CIO Executive Committee and Executive Board decided last June to authorize the settling of final details.

Negotiations for the CIO were handled by the Henry J. Kaufman & Associates advertising agency of Washington, which handles the CIO account; Goldberg, Assistant Counsel Thomas Harris, Fleisher and Zack.

Plans for an intensive promotion and publicity campaign in support of both the radio and television series are being worked out by the Kaufman Agency and the CIO Publicity Dept.

Further details will be published in coming issues of the CIO News.

IUE-CIO Victorious In Bitter NLRB Vote

CIO ELECTRICAL Workers last week chalked up "the most significant organizing victory" in the South in recent years.

Workers at the Poinsett Lumber & Manufacturing Company, Anderson, S. C., ignoring a well-financed "Citizens' Committee" propaganda, voted for the IUE-CIO in a National Labor Relations Board election. More than 280 workers were involved.

Ed Geiger, who led the CIO campaign, called the "Citizens' Committee" resistance "the most perfectly organized type to be found."

A YEAR AGO, the same committee made use of the same expert propaganda, which ran the gutter-gamut from racial and religious prejudice to outright coercion of workers, to defeat a textile organizing campaign in Anderson.

At that time, the anti-union organization found widespread support from misguided elements in the community, frightened by the succession of false but gory libels fixed on CIO.

This year, Geiger and John Clark of the IUE-CIO said, the "Citizens' Committee" had lost most of its sting. Their 1952 "victory" had turned into defeat for the community, with hundreds of workers laid off and the rest "stretched out."

Where the "committee" had been able to command genuine volunteer manpower from local residents during the first anti-union campaign, the Poinsett drive found many townspeople would not be bullied or cajoled into working against themselves again.

Major CIO Meetings Scheduled This Week

On Tuesday, Aug. 18, the CIO-PAC Executive Board will meet at 10 a.m. in the Gallery of the Dupont Plaza Hotel.

On Wednesday, the CIO Finance Committee will meet at 10 a.m. in CIO headquarters. At the same time, a PAC rally will be held at the Washington Hotel.

The CIO Eexcutive Committee, composed of the executive officers and vice presidents, will meet at lunch, dinner and during the evening of Aug. 19.

On Thursday, Aug. 20, the CIO Executive Board will meet in the East Room of the Mayflower Hotel, Washington.

Policy Body Post Going To M'Donald

APPOINTMENT of Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers to the government's Commission on Foreign Economic Policy is expected shortly from Pres. Eisenhower.

The new commission was established in the trade agreement law enacted by the last Congress. A 17-man board, it will consist of five Senators, five House members and seven public members named by the President. It will report its findings on U. S. foreign policy and aims not later than Mar. 6, 1954.

Among the tasks assigned to the commission will be the investigation of tariff policies, reciprocal trade agreements and the broad aspects of all U. S. economic policies overseas.

Considerable investigative work has already been done for the commission.

Clarence B. Randall, board chairman of the Inland Steel Co., is reported slated to be chairman of the new commission. Randall was a leading figure in last year's steel strike, heading the fight against former Pres. Truman's seizure of the steel mills to halt a strike by the CIO Steelworkers.

Rubber Workers, IAM In No-Raid Agreement

A NO-RAIDING PACT between the CIO Rubber Workers and the AFL Int. Association of Machinists was signed last week.

Announcement of the agreement was made jointly by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the URW-CIO and Pres. Al Hayes of IAM-AFL. The pact is similar to one previously signed between the CIO Auto Workers and the Machinists.

THE TWO union heads said the compact reflects their conviction, "that labor unity must be attained in order to safeguard the advances that have been made by union members and to bring about greater results in the future."

An important provision calls for mutual cooperation between the unions to prevent employers from relocating factories in an attempt to escape union organization.

"The parties to this agreement recognize the danger from reactionary and recalcitrant employers who attempt to escape their collective bargaining responsibilities to either union by a relocation of their plant or business to another section of the country," the agreement says.

Where this circumstance arises, each party hereto will assist the union affected by such runaway in its efforts to reestablish itself as the bargaining agency in the new plant or property of said company."

Buckmaster and Hayes in a joint statement declared that the pact "established some common sense rules and orderly procedures which should work to the benefit of both memberships."

The IAM-AFL is the country's fourth largest union and one of the fastest growing. First result of the agreement with URW-CIO will be an end to disputes on jurisdiction over maintenance workers in the rubber, cork and linoleum fields.

AMONG the provisions is one banning aid or encouragement to other CIO or AFL unions that might attempt jurisdictional raids on plants where either party has established a bargaining relationship.

In organizing campaigns where both unions are competing for membership, the drive will be carried out in such a manner as to build trade union loyalty. Organizational advantages will not be sought by tactics detrimental to the overall best interests of the union movement.

AFL Executive Body Okehs No-Raid Pact; Conventions Act Next

THE AFL Executive Council last week approved the no-raiding agreement with the CIO, but almost immediately one of its largest affiliates, the Carpenters Union, withdrew.

AFL Pres. George Meany said that the action of the 822,000 member union would not interfere with the AFL plans for labor unity.

The no-raiding agreement will be submitted to the AFL convention in St. Louis next month and to the CIO convention in Cleveland next November. The CIO executive board last June approved the pact which had been drawn up by a six-man joint committee following a meeting of top leaders of the two big labor groups in Washington last April.

The CIO was represented on the committee by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald. AFL members were Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Pres. Matthew Woll.

The Carpenters' withdrawal made vacant the post of AFL first vice president, which had been filled by Pres. Emeritus William Hutcheson of the Carpenters. The remaining vice presidents were advanced a notch, with Matthew Woll moving into Hutcheson's spot. Teamsters Pres. Don Beck was elected thirteenth vice president.

The Carpenters are now headed by Maurice A. Hutcheson, son of William. He said the union's action was based on failure of the Executive Council to act on a plan submitted by the AFL Building Trades Council for an intra-AFL non-raiding pact.

THE COUNCIL, however, discussed possible machinery for ending jurisdictional disputes and raiding between sister unions. Meany told reporters something might develop on the issue by the time of the AFL convention.

The elder Hutchseon said his union objected to CIO-AFL unity because the Carpenters are trying to "organize" CIO Woodworkers at the Weyerhaeuser lumber firm in the Northwest.

When the CIO and the AFL conventions approve the no-raiding pact, it becomes effective Jan. 1, 1954, as far as the two major bodies are concerned.

CWA-CIO Sets Stage For Strike of 50,000 At Huge Bell Unit

THE CIO Communications Workers last week authorized a strike of its largest unit, won one agreement, and continued one walkout and negotiations with 13 other Bell System units.

Authority for a strike at Southwestern Bell, where CWA has its largest unit of 50,000 members, was granted by the international executive board. The board gave Dist. Dir. D. L. McCowen discretion for setting the walkout date.

Southwestern Bell operates in Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas and a portion of Illinois.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne called Southwestern Bell's 3.5c an hour wage increase offer "close to an insult."

"We have been negotiating with Southwestern since June 3," he said. "The contract terminated July 6, over a month ago. No agreement is in sight. There is no evidence that the company intends to bargain in good faith.

"We are getting set for strike action. A strike vote was completed two weeks ago. It ran 10-to-1 in favor of a walkout."

Membership unrest already has been demonstrated by sporadic walkouts in Southwest Bell territory—in San Antonio, Austin and Waco, Tex.

CONTINUOUS bargaining sessions over the weekend won an agreement early last week with Pacific Telephone & Telegraph in Northern California. The union won pay increases ranging from $1 to $2 a week, one week's vacation after six months' service if hired before Apr. 1, improved grievance procedure, reclassification of seven towns, and shortening of the progression schedule in the traffic department.

The Indiana Bell strike which began July 22 continued last week. The CWA has refused a company offer of 4.9c an hour for 7000 strikers.

Auto Pension Plan Bettered In New Pact

IMPROVEMENTS on the auto industry's pension plan are contained in an agreement ratified last week by Local 189, CIO Auto Workers, in Detroit.

Michael F. Lacey, co-director of UAW-CIO Region 1, said a pact with the Udylite Corp. and its Parker-Wolverine Division betters the usual pension plan in several respects. It provides for vested pension rights after ten years of service.

This means that rights and credits to pensions are maintained whether or not the worker remains in the employ of the firm until age 65. Another union objective is realized in the provision that there is no compulsory retirement at any age.

Reuther Hits 'Crepehangers'—

Chance For Free World Peace Leadership Role

CIO LEADERS, CIO CREW: Members of the ship's crew committee of the CIO Maritime Union aboard the S.S. America get together with CIO leaders returning from Eurpoe. In the photo, together with the crew members, are Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Guy Nunn, of the CIO Auto Workers.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

CIO PRES. WALTER P. REUTHER returned from Europe Aug. 11, convinced that the East German unrest gives America and the free world a "golden opportunity" to take leadership in the quest for peace and for economic and social justice.

Arriving on the S. S. America at New York after six weeks in Europe attending labor conferences and visiting union leaders in half a dozen countries, Reuther called the anti-Communist unrest in East Germany "the most significant development since the cold war."

"The uprisings in East Berlin and elsewhere behind the Iron Curtain indicate that workers are the core of the struggle against communist totalitarianism, just as they were the core of the struggle against fascism," the CIO president declared.

Reuther, looking rested and fit, arrived in New York after a storm-tossed voyage with Mrs. Reuther, their daughter Linda; CIO Sec.-Treas. and Mrs. James B. Carey; Michael Ross, director of international affairs for the CIO; and Guy Nunn, a radio broadcaster for the CIO Auto Workers.

THEY HAD attended the congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Stockholm early in July. After that, the Reuther family visited in Denmark, Germany, France, Italy, Switzerland and Austria.

Sec.-Treas. and Mrs. Carey and Ross had visited Finland for four days as guests of the Finnish trade unions, and Greece, where the unions also played host. The Careys had also gone to Israel as part of a CIO delegation to that country (See other story, Page 9).

DURING a shipboard interview, Reuther emphasized his belief that "the free labor movement is the most reliable ally of democracy."

"If we are to meet the threat of communism, we must make a greater effort to strengthen labor everywhere," he said.

He had high praise for the work of the ICFTU, in helping build unions in various parts of the world, and in promoting union educational efforts in the more undeveloped areas.

Results aren't always speedily forthcoming, despite the good work done, Reuther pointed out —"you can't press a button to get a strong free labor movement—it takes hard work."

Answering a question about relations with the AFL in the international field, Reuther stressed a "general agreement on fundamentals." The question led to several about the CIO's next step in unity matters, and about a rash of rumors, concerning the CIO's general state of health.

NOTING that he had had no unity talks with AFL leaders while in Europe, Reuther added:

"We're sincerely interested in working out unity. But it can't be done overnight, because of the many complex problems involved.

"The CIO-AFL no-raid agreement must be ratified as a first step. But the important thing to remember is that the unity talks so far have not come to grips with the really complex and difficult problems involved in organic unity.

"In the meantime, the CIO is going on about its business—and we're not going to trade basic principles for matters of expediency."

In reply to a query about the issue of craft vs. industrial unions, Reuther suggested that the craft union leaders are a good deal more "realistic" than they were 15 years ago, when the CIO was formed.

He repeated, on the other hand, that recent actions by the AFL teamsters union violate the spirit of the no-raid agreement and raise problems and obstacles to unity talks.

But the principal theme of his remarks was that the CIO is "actively in business" and intends to stay that way pending a resolution of the complex issues of organic unity.

REUTHER cited the CIO's contract for a year-long radio program on ABC, featuring Commentator John W. Vandercook, and plans for a series of network TV shows, as one indication of this determination.

The CIO president scoffed at the "sheer nonsense" which has been appearing in certain papers and magazines about CIO's alleged disintegration.

"I am positive that history will show that the crepehangers are wrong again, as they have been in the past," Reuther declared.

HE ADDED that the dopesters were wrong time and again in predicting CIO's downfall, and he noted they had also predicted the disruption of the Auto Workers when he was elected head of that union after the war.

Immediately after docking, the Reuther family set out by car for Wheeling, W. Va., the home of his parents, and was due in Detroit late last week. Reuther will preside at a series of CIO and PAC meetings in Washington this coming week.

CIO Donates $50,000 To Red Victims

VICTIMS of Soviet persecution in East Germany will be aided by a contribution of $50,000 from the CIO, it was announced last week.

The money will be distributed by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in cooperation with the West German Federation of Labor (DGD). CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther pledged the amount during recent meetings of the ICFTU in Stockholm.

A similar amount was given by the AFL. The United Mine Workers pledged $10,000. Reuther said the aid would go to workers in the eastern zone of Germany who have resisted Soviet tyranny.

The CIO On The Air

Facts are sometimes elusive things. They can be kept from the people in all sorts of ways—and sometimes are. Yet without them, it is impossible to reason to a logical conclusion.

The CIO believes firmly in the innate intelligence and common sense of the average American. It believes that with facts at his disposal he can solve his problems and act in the best interests of himself, his country and his union.

This, in the final analysis, is what decided the CIO to sponsor a nationwide radio program of news and commentary.

The program begins, fittingly enough, on Labor Day, Sept. 7. The broadcaster, John W. Vandercook, who has built up a splendid reputation as a radio newsman, will deal exclusively in facts.

The CIO program is another form of CIO public service to the whole American community. For as its spokesmen have often pointed out, CIO members are part of that community, and what's good for the community is good for CIO members.

In brief, it's good for the community to have the facts.

'Golden Opportunity'

When CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther returned from Europe last week, he said that the unrest in East Germany gives the free world—and especially the United States—a "golden opportunity" to take the ball away from the Communists in the search for peace and justice.

But before the free world and the United States can steal the ball from the Communists and head a march toward those goals, the leaders of democratic governments must revise a lot of their thinking.

As Reuther pointed out, the uprisings in East Berlin, and also those elsewhere behind the Iron Curtain, were stirred up by workers.

That fact alone should stir up a lot of presidents and prime ministers to the realization that the CIO leader was right when he said that the free labor movement has proved itself the most reliable ally of democracy.

This, in turn, might stir them to another realization: that if free labor is strengthened, the bulwarks against Communist aggression are strengthened.

Sweet Victory

The NLRB election at the Poinsett Manufacturing Co. in Anderson, S. C., was heart-warming to those who worked so hard and so long to convert what has been regarded as an anti-union community.

It indicates that the people who want to keep unions out of a town so they won't have to pay decent wages and provide decent working conditions can't fool all of the workers all of the time.

The employes of the Poinsett plant, a subsidiary of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., saw the flaws in the barrage of anti-CIO and anti-union propaganda that had been hurled at them.

The fact that they withstood the pressure and picked the CIO Electrical Workers as their bargaining agent is to their eternal credit. We welcome them into the CIO.

In Other Words—

'Religion' And Anti-Unionism

Excerpts from a speech inserted in the Congressional Record by Rep. Bailey (D. W. Va.), on "hate" sheets which pretend to be religious publications but are written with an anti-labor bias, are printed below.

REP. CLEVELAND M. BAILEY

THOSE WHO OPPOSE the unionization of workers are perfectly entitled to their views. But in the presentation of arguments for or against joining up with a union certain rules of fair play and ordinary decency should apply.

One tactic now being used to defeat unionization in the South is so manifestly improper and dangerous in its implication as to warrant thorough investigation by the appropriate committee of the Congress.

What I am referring to is the well documented allegations by responsible labor organizations that professional "hate merchants" are being hired at this very moment to foment racial and religious strife as a means of defeating the legal and legitimate aspirations of workers to form unions.

It must be made clear that the practices I am here discussing are not a relic of a former and distant era in American labor relations. These are things that are happening today and not too far from the Capitol of the U. S.

Although as a nation we have made great strides forward in eliminating racial and religious intolerance . . . we find that certain corporations are paying out money to foster racial and religious hatreds and create dangerous divisions and distrust among our people.

Appeal To Hate

The particular and most recent incident of this type which comes to our attention arises out of a normal and conservatively conducted unionization movement among a group of textile workers in Southern Virginia. The labor organization carrying on this campaign is the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO. The name of the town where the plant is located is Fries, in Grayson County, Va.

A few workers were signing union membership cards each week and the organizer in charge felt that the moment was approaching when he would be in a position to petition the National Labor Relations Board for an election.

It was just at that point that the hate propaganda began to circulate in the community.

The individual signing the particular diatribe which was distributed at this plant in Virginia calls himself Sherman A. Patterson. Both the Senate and House Labor committees and the NLRB have considerable files on Patterson.

For some years Patterson has published from his headquarters in Chattanooga, Tenn., a tabloid size paper called "Militant Truth." At first glance this sheet gives the appearance of a religious or revivalist publication. Closer perusal shows that its real purpose is to discredit legitimate trade unions by giving the impression that all trade-unionists are Jews or foreigners, and, therefore, Communists or racketeers or both. Running through every one of Patterson's publication is the appeal to race hatred.

Articles Reprinted

I have the original copies of the particular publications referred to here. Both are dated late in May 1953. The papers were actually circulated in June 1953. The articles authored by Patterson appear not only in the revivalist tabloid but were reprinted immediately in a regular weekly newspaper published in Galax, Va., which circulates among employes in the mill.

Repeatedly, Patterson refers to "alien born labor bosses." He has for years sedulously attempted to create the impression that all key trade-unionists are imbued with "hostile ideologies" as a result of foreign birth.

Unflaggingly Patterson has asserted that trade-unionism is synonymous with Communism. Patterson has printed articles attempting to prove that a loyal Christian cannot in good conscience join and be active in any labor union.

The Congress should carefully but promptly investigate the proper steps to be taken to offset the damage done by these "hate sheets" . . . Manifestly it is the duty of our law enforcement agencies to detect and punish slander and subversion and incitation which will lead to disorder.

By such declarations Congress would cut the ground from under these subsidized hate-mongers and poison pen-peddlers.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A WIDELY-EXHIBITED Republican television film, starring House Speaker Joe Martin but including a lot of shots of Pres. Ike, reveals that the New York advertising hucksters still have control of the Administration's public relations.

Martin is shown as telling his grateful countrymen about the terrible problems "inherited" by the GOP, including the Korean war as "problem No. 1." Then the film talks about Pres. Eisenhower's announcement that the U. S. 7th Fleet would "no longer be employed to shield Communist China" from Chiang Kai-shek's forces on Formosa.

Hucksters

The Madison Ave. boys still run the Administration's public relations. They're still peddling the same old phonies, too, with the same blithe disregard for the people's common sense.

Speaker Joe doesn't exactly claim that from this decision all blessings flow. But, by juxtaposition of subject matter, the decision is treated as the cause of an "amazing chain of events."

The "amazing" chain of events includes the agreement of Communists in Korean to exchange sick prisoners, the liberation of William Oatis, an American reporter jailed by the Czechs, the Berlin riots of June 17, finally the full truce in Korea.

Some of us were under the impression that the death of Stalin and troubles in the Kremlin had something to do with this "chain of events."

The 7th Fleet announcement could not, in fact, have had much to do with it—because the 7th Fleet had not acted, at any moment, as a "shield" for Red China.

Back in 1950 Mr. Truman, in order to prevent expansion of the Korean war, told the Reds that the 7th Fleet would halt any attempt by Chinese Communists to invade Formosa. He also ordered that it prevent provocative acts by Chiang against the Chinese mainland—again, to prevent expansion of the war rather than to "shield" the Communists.

As the Korean war went on and on, the latter part of these orders was eroded if not cancelled. The 7th Fleet closed its eyes and Chiang's guerillas made repeated raids on Red-held islands and the mainland.

Published and Denied

The fact has frequently been published and it is undeniable. So it's hard to accept the theory that Pres. Eisenhower's one phrase about the 7th Fleet changed anything so as to set in motion the "amazing chain of events."

The advertising whizbangs are extremely skillful at selling soap and cigarets. The question is whether—or perhaps how long—they can sell political ideas by use of their tested commercial techniques.

It is Axiom No. 1, in these techniques, that advertising claims need bear no more than a plausible resemblance to facts. They must simply keep the sponsor out of premature trouble with the Federal Trade Commission.

The 15-minute film in which Martin appeared nationally is so designed that each GOP congressman can cut himself into the show, as a substitute for Martin, and exhibit himself to voters in his own district, riding on Ike's televised coattails, complete with claims for the "amazing chain of events."

This observer has no idea whether the hucksters' Axiom No. 1 will work permanently in the political field. This is simply an acknowledgement that their technique is being given a thorough trial, with full cooperation of the Administration and various GOP committees.

More Give-Aways

Two little-noticed "give-away" bills that were blocked by liberal Democrats in the last-minute adjournment frenzy of Congress involved railroad rates and the renegotiation of defense contracts.

The railroad-rate bill would have allowed carriers to increase rates pending later hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission on their applications for higher rates. It would also have instructed the ICC to establish "new and broader standards" in rate cases, including the "right" of railroads "to maintain sound credit and attract equity capital."

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) stopped this one in the cloakrooms by threatening a Senate floor fight. The bill was practically a measure to guarantee profits.

The renegotiation bill was stopped on the floor by Douglas and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). Senate GOP leaders tried to push through the measure without committee hearings, without testimony from any executive agency.

In the guise of "extending" the power to cut down profits paid a defense manufacturer, the bill would actually have heavily amended existing law. It was pointed out by the liberals that one clause exempted from renegotiation sections of contracts involving "a standard commercial article" and that about 70% of an Army tank is composed of "standard commercial articles."

Both bills, of course, can be called up again next January by Senate GOP Leader Knowland. He was forced to abandon them only temporarily in the adjournment rush.

Washington Window—

Uncle Sam, Like The Rest Of Us, Is Having Trouble With His Bills

By Public Affairs Institute

WHEN PRES. EISENHOWER requested and Congress refused to authorize an increase in the ceiling on the national debt from $275 billion to $290 billion, a major issue was re-created.

The public debt, the budget and government spending will receive a lot of attention from the next session of the 83rd Congress. They will unquestionably be major issues in the 1954 congressional elections.

Even now politics cloud the issues. However, there are clear facts which every conscientious citizen should know. Here are some:

Present Debt—Now stands at $272 billion—only $3 billion below the $275 billion ceiling established by Congress in 1946. Last January, when the Eisenhower Administration took office, the debt was $267 billion.

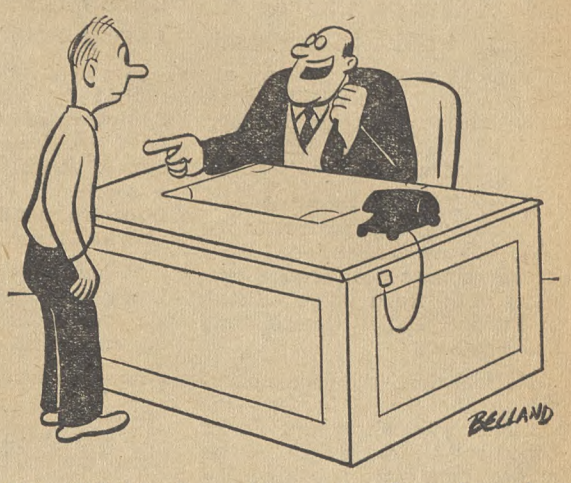
Is a Higher Ceiling Necessary?—Sen. Byrd (D. Va.), Senate fiscal expert, says that the government will have a $7.3 billion deficit from Aug. 1 to Jan. 1, 1954. There is a cash balance on hand of $9 billion. Byrd says this leaves a surplus until January—when heavier tax receipts come in—of $1.7 billion without using the $3 billion borrowing power still remaining under the present limit.

Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey largely agrees with Byrd's figures. Basic dispute is that Humphrey maintains that the Treasury must have a $6 billion cash balance on deposit in banks at all times. This would place the debt over the ceiling in December, at $277 billion.

Purpose of Debt Ceilings—Congress first set a debt ceiling early in World War II. Announced purpose was to keep spending and debt down. Real purpose was to keep fiscal control in Congress. Actually, Congress does have control through power to appropriate funds and to lay taxes.

Why a Growing Debt?—Public debts always grow during periods of military build-up and depression. Here is what happened for the fiscal year ending June 30:

Pres. Truman had estimated last January a $9 billion budget deficit. Eisenhower estimated slightly less. Expenditures were cut close to $3 billion but tax revenues were $3.5 billion below expectations. Final deficit for the year: $9.4 billion.



"Smith! You have been a loyal employe for 15 years, and to show our appreciation you will be known as Mr. Smith!"

Who is Responsible?—In politics the opposition is always blamed for the unpleasant, so:

Republicans: "We inherited the deficit from the Truman Administration."

Democrats: "Republican tight money policies with higher interest rates have started a trend which will depress our economy, reduce federal revenues and increase the debt."

How Will U. S. Pay Its Bills?—It can carry less cash balance or postpone payment until after January. Government assets, like mortgages of the Federal National Mortgage Association, could be sold to private financial houses. And, of course, Eisenhower can call a special session of Congress in the fall.

Outlook for Present Fiscal Year—Humphrey and Byrd both expect expenditures to be $74 billion for the fiscal year which began July 1. Humphrey expects receipts to be $68.5 billion, equal to the previous year.

Byrd says receipts will be $60 billion unless taxes scheduled to end in January and April are re-enacted. Then it will be $64 billion. He predicts either a $14 or $10 billion deficit. The taxes set to end are excess profits, 10% of income tax, and certain corporation and excise taxes.

Whichever figures you accept it appears evident that tax cuts, balanced budgets and a reduced public debt are easier to talk about than bring about.

Manila Paper Finds—

Philippine Free Trade Unions Also Harassed By Mudslingers

POLITICAL PROBLEMS besetting young free trade unions in the Philippines are similar to those of the older, more mature labor movement in the U. S., according to an editorial in the current issue of The (Manila) Free Worker.

The paper is the official publication of the Philippine Federation of Free Workers.

Free unions on the island helped to enact a good labor law much like the Wagner Act. For this they have been bitterly attacked, just as American unions have been for their opposition to the Taft-Hartley Law.

"The accusations that have been hurled at free labor for engaging in political action," the editorial says, "have been filled with mud precisely because they were based on well-nursed prejudice or gross misinformation.

"The mud-slingers have cried 'undemocratic' and 'subversive' at free labor for lobbying for a good labor law and for supporting the friends of labor in politics.

"These assaults on free labor unions unearth an attempt of vested interests and power-mad politicians to eliminate all obstacles that lie in their way.

"If ever there is any democratic right of labor in politics it is the right of labor to lobby for good labor laws and to back candidates who sympathize with labor.

"There is an inevitable marriage between the economic strength of a labor union and its political strength. It is our proposition that if an organization is to maintain its economic power it must also be able to exert political power.

"We definitely do not mean, however, that labor should take over established political parties or use them for personal ends, but merely to exert pressure on these groups in order that the legitimate interests of the workers will be best protected."

The editorial defends this practice as democratic by pointing out: "Pressure groups are as much a part of democracy as free speech and it is by pressure groups that public opinion is brought to the fore.

"Part of this public opinion is what the unions have to say on the workers' wages and working conditions. Unions are more prone to protect the workers' interests than parties just as businessmen's associations are more apt to think of their own interests. So when a trade union supports a candidate, it is expressing its political preference for an effective voice for the betterment of the laboring class."

'Pressure Politics'

The editorial states labor should play "pressure politics" and not "party politics."

"Labor's political activity, therefore, is not only democratic but highly important," it continues. "We will never be able to stress enough the tasks of labor in stimulating interest in the polls, thereby increasing the size of the total vote, and acquainting the union members with the records and platforms of the candidates.

"Labor's business in political action, in our considered opinion, is a matter of principle. By its political action, labor supports the philosophy of democracy by, of and for the people."

U. S. Plans Confuse Allies, Carey Finds

"THE freedom-loving peoples of Europe, who are our strongest allies in the battle against Communist tyranny are confused by the clouded picture of American foreign policy," said CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey last week.

Carey has just returned from a six-week European trip to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions conference and visits with trade union officials in Finland, Israel, Greece, Italy and England.

He said that "the people closest to the Soviet borders—the workers who know the Soviet Union and all its horrible policies at first hand—are not misled by its propagandists."

Pres. Eisenhower's appointment of James Byrnes as a United Nations delegate was especially criticized by Carey at a news conference. He asked:

"HOW CAN we expect Europeans to believe we are sincere in our protestations of democracy when he appoints a man who is clearly tied to the awful prejudice of the worst elements in the South and who is dedicated to keeping thousands of his fellow South Carolinians in a state of second-class citizenship?"

The chief problem in Greece, he said, is growing unemployment because the government has failed to meet increased productivity with a program to boost purchasing power.

Carey said he was particularly inspired by the growth and strength of the Finnish labor movement and hoped their organizations would soon be affiliated with the ICFTU.

The CIO delegation to Israel found tremendous progress being made, Carey reported, particularly in the area of housing.

Although no CIO delegates went to Iran, Carey met with Iranian trade unionists in Italy. He voiced concern over the fact that the Iranian labor movement has declined from 155,000 members, largely anti-Communist, to a present strength of 85,000 "many of whom are considering joining forces with the Communists."

Carey Can't Get Away From Job

Maybe it wasn't specially arranged by Vice Pres. Lemuel Boulware of General Electric, but Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers reported a suspicious disturbance across from his hotel room while he was in Greece.

"I had a hard time sleeping," Carey said, "because a big GE sign across the street kept flashing on and off all night long."

Union Help On Pay Order Ruled Legal

A UNION'S right to help its members enforce back pay orders has been buttressed by a Court of Appeals ruling in the case of a CIO Woodworker.

Broader latitude for the term "concerted activity" in the Taft-Hartley Act was hinted at by the court's ruling that a worker who operates through his union to get back pay ordered by the Wage-Hour Div. is protected by statute against discharge.

One section of the law guarantees the right of workers "to engage in other concerted activity for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection."

BACK in March, the National Labor Relations Board ordered the reinstatement with back pay of Lee A. Wynne, a member of the CIO Woodworkers, who was employed at the Moss Planing Mill, Washington, N. C.

Wynne, a cripple, had been brutally assaulted by Thompson D. Litchfield, an official of the mill, after he had asked the union's aid in processing a claim under the Wage-Hour Act. About $700 was due him.

Litchfield met Wynne in the mill boiler room and kicked him, inflicting injuries that sent Wynne to the hospital. While a patient there, Wynne was notified he was fired. Litchfield had blamed "the damned union" for the wage claim and used a gun to back up his demand that Wynne settle for $125.

A NLRB trial examiner ordered Wynne reinstated with full rights, and the company's appeal was taken to court. In its decision, just handed down, the appellate court ruled that "the giving of aid by a labor union to an employe in prosecution of a claim for back wages is clearly a concerted activity on the part of employes protected by the (Taft-Hartley) Act; and to discharge the employe because he has invoked and participated in such activity and is insisting upon the award thereby obtained is just as clearly an unfair labor practice which the Board is given power to redress."

Segal To Study Abroad Under Fulbright Award

BEN SEGAL, CIO associate director of education, has received a Senior Fulbright Award in worker's education.

Accompanied by his wife and infant daughter, he will leave in the fall for England, where he will study the education program and other activities of the British Trades Union Congress. He will remain abroad from nine months to a year.

BEN SEGAL
Will Study Abroad

Immediately before coming to the CIO Education and Research Dept., Segal was with the CIO Textile Workers Education Dept., working mostly in the South.

FOR a time he also was an organizer for the AFL Garment Workers. He served as executive director of the Council for Equal Job Opportunity and secretary of the CIO Anti-Discrimination Committee, both in Philadelphia.

He is president of Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, which consists of workers' educational personnel in unions and universities, and of the Washington Chapter of the Americans for Democratic Action. He also is a member of the national executive board of the National Religion and Labor Foundation.

Arbitrator Puts Brake On Oil Company 'Pinwheel Plot'

ARBITRATION has ended the on-again, off-again status of a member of the CIO Oil Workers, and the union has chalked up a victory in Calcasieu Parish, La.

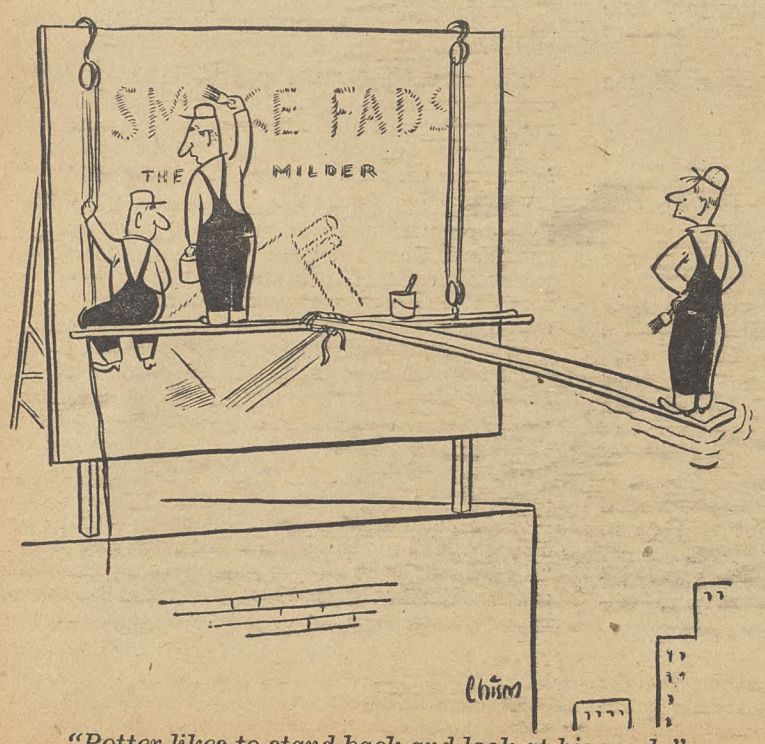
The worker, C. G. Broussard, and Local 500, OWIU-CIO, were fed up with the Cit-Con Oil Corp.'s handling of Broussard's status as a "temporary" employe.

He was hired and laid off eight times in two years. Cit-Con used the probationary clause in the contract to justify the layoffs.

The clause says an employe shall work 120 days before he qualifies as a permanent worker with seniority rights. The company would hire Broussard, work him as long as 114 days, lay him off for a few days, then take him back on probation again.

The arbitrator changed all that. Cit-Con was ordered to rehire Broussard, to establish his seniority as of July 23, 1951, and to give him a job he would have had if he had been permanently employed since then.

In addition, Broussard was given $762.22 in back pay, after deductions for taxes, social security and money earned on other jobs.



"Potter likes to stand back and look at his work."

'Unrealistic' Legal Wage Set By Board

AN INCREASE in the wage minimum for more than 600,000 workers in the retail trade industry has been recommended by a majority of the seven-man New York State wage board for that industry.

Zone rates have been set for three areas. A 75c an hour rate is recommended for New York City. Zone 2 would include cities of over 10,000 and Westchester and Nassau counties, and would have a 70c rate. The rest of the State would comprise Zone 3 and have a 65c minimum. The current wage, established in 1947, is 52.5c.

The two labor members of the panel, one of whom is Exec. Sec. Martin C. Kyne of the CIO Wholesale, Retail & Department Store Union, refused to sign the majority recommendation. They said the 75c rate was "unrealistically low."

Two Courts Asked To Rule On Runaway Plant Dispute

A LEGAL battle looms over a precedent-making decision given to the CIO Textile Workers against a "runaway" New England mill by the National Labor Relations Board.

The board ruled recently that the Mt. Hope Finishing Co. left its North Dighton, Mass., mill and moved to Butner, N. C., to escape bargaining with TWUA-CIO.

Former employes of the New England mill were ordered reinstated there if that mill reopens, or given a job at Butner with travel and moving expenses paid. Several million dollars are involved in the decision.

Anticipating a company move, TWUA-CIO filed a petition for review in the First Circuit of Appeals in Boston. On the same day, about two hours later, the company asked for a review in the Fourth Circuit Court in Richmond, Va. Such a situation is rare, NLRB officials said.

The board now must file in one of the two courts a request for enforcement of its order against the Mt. Hope concern. In the other court it will ask for a transfer of the petition for review. No indication has been given as to which court will be asked to enforce the decision.

Transport Service Union In New Home

CIO TRANSPORT Service Employees have completed moving operations to their new international headquarters at 444 East 63rd street, Chicago. Located on the city's South Side, the new home of the union includes offices and a meeting hall.

Button, Button, Who's—

You can, if you want. We don't on The CIO News.

The game, as unveiled in the "Labor Angle" column of the Aug. 8 issue of Business Week, is based on what the magazine likes to call, in a highbrow sort of way, "content analysis."

You go through each issue of The CIO News counting the number of times this paper prints the name of Pres. Reuther, Executive Vice-Pres. Riffe, Sec.-Treas. Carey and other union officials. After that, you count the individual references to each CIO union.

Then you draw "conclusions"—and, depending on which issue you read, you can get almost any "conclusion" you want.

Business Week found Reuther mentioned "only" eight times in the July 27 issue. (A CIO News check found that figure was right—if you include the president's name on our Page 4 masthead.)

"Ha, ha," said Business Week—this is mighty interesting. Is the editor "playing down" Reuther as part of a political plot? (Editor's Note: No.)

Has Reuther asked the editor to play down his name? (Editor's Note: No.)

Is there something here that doesn't meet the eye? (Editor's Note: No.)

As a matter of fact, during the week covered by Business Week's "content analysis" of The CIO News, Reuther was traveling through Europe at a fast clip. Many other CIO officers were either in Europe meeting with other union officials, or on vacation. Vacationing, also, was the editor of The CIO News. (Wishes he still was, too.)

We're sorry. Business Week, to disappoint your "scientific" analysis. We on The CIO News have too much to do to count the names of unions and union officers as they appear in these news columns.

If we ever get the time, which seems unlikely, to play Count 'Em, we'll see how many times Pres. Eisenhower's name appears in today's issue of the Denver Post, or the name of Ted Williams in the Boston Globe.

Won't prove much—but if the game of COUNT 'EM is getting popular, we want to be in the swim. —H.C.F.

Ernest Weaver Succumbs; Led CIO Phone Installers

ERNEST WEAVER, director of Dist. 10, CIO Communications Workers, died Aug. 13 in Greensboro, N. C., following a heart attack.

He had attended a local meeting the night before with Asst. Dir. James Massey of Dist. 10 and was in Massey's hotel room when stricken. He died a short time later despite medical attention.

Weaver headed one of CWA-CIO's largest districts, a nationwide unit of 17,000 Western Electric Co. installers. He had led that group from the beginning of unionism in the telephone industry in 1937. His association with the industry dated back to 1915, when he started working for the Southern Bell Telephone Co. in the plant and traffic department. Later he was employed by the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. and Western Electric.

HIS INSTALLER group pioneered in the formation of the National Federation of Telephone Workers in 1939. Weaver took a leading role in establishment of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee in 1947, and was its vice-chairman when it amalgamated with CWA in 1949.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said:

"We are deeply shocked at Ernie Weaver's death. CWA's loss is irreparable. I worked with him from the beginning. Together we helped build our union, fighting its battles shoulder to shoulder. I feel a deep sense of personal loss."

N. Jersey CIO Moves To Bar PAC Misuse

LEGAL STEPS to halt "piracy" of CIO Political Action Committee's prestige and good will were taken last week by the New Jersey CIO Council.

Council Pres. Carl Holderman charged the campaign committee for the Republican nominee for governor with a scheme to misuse the PAC label.

Robert B. Meyner, Democratic nominee, is backed by CIO-PAC in New Jersey, the only state which elects a governor this year. Holderman said that an anonymous group not connected with CIO has formed what it calls the "North Hudson Political Action Committee."

Exclusive right to the PAC label in New Jersey is vested in the State Council or its chartered affiliates.

Holderman warned that the label is registered as required by law, and that legal action would ensue unless the unauthorized use was stopped.

TWU Wins 25.5c In Columbus

A wage increase of 25.5c an hour was won by members of Local 208, CIO Trasnport Workers, not 2.5c as previously reported in The CIO News. The gain was made after an 11-day strike against the Columbus (O.) Transit Co.

Wage rates now are $1.90 for operators and $2.20 for top mechanics, the highest for all transit employes in the area.

And On Vacation

Problems, Bills Pile Up For Ike — Like The Rest Of The Folks

The President was wrestling with the huge pile of 208 bills left for his signature when Congress adjourned. Several appropriations measures were among them.

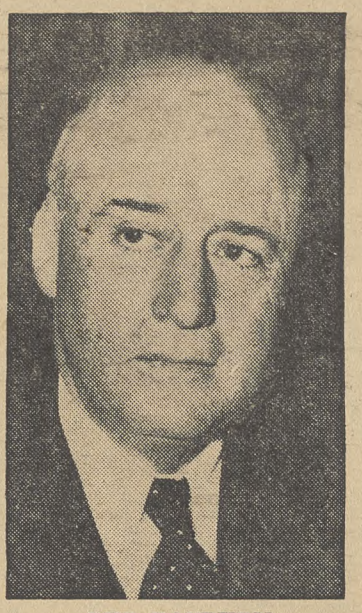
HIS BIGGEST headache, however, was on the other side of the ledger. It was the danger that the government would soon run out of funds because of Congress' failure to act on his request for a boost in the national debt limit from the present $275 billion to $290 billion.

In an effort to forestall bankruptcy and the need to call Congress back for a special session, the President wrote the heads of all federal agencies directing them to reduce expenditures even below their greatly trimmed appropriations.

He also said "substantial reductions" below current spending must be made in their budgets for next year.

REPUBLICAN congressional leaders are scheduled to meet with Eisenhower about Sept. 25 to decide whether the government's financial state makes necessary a special session before Congress' scheduled return Jan. 6. The government's third-quarter tax receipts are due Sept. 15, and their size will largely determine the decision.

The public debt now stands, however, at about $272.5 billion. Treasury Sec. George M. Humphrey has forecast that, despite September's tax revenues, it will reach $277 billion by the end of the year. That means the Administration will have to cut back spending about $2 billion to stay within the limit.



REP. RAYBURN

How the Administration meets this problem is certain to have far-reaching political consequences.

Meanwhile, House Minority Leader Rayburn (D. Tex.) said that in the last session Republicans succeeded primarily only in making "hard" money "harder to get."

"The Republicans latched onto the backs of individuals as well as the federal and local governments a new burden of higher interest rates for years to come," Rayburn said. "They raised interest rates on the little fellow, the home-buyer and the farmer. But the big bankers and financiers are doing well."

The Democratic leader added that Republican Congressmen "have my full sympathy because they return to face their constituents knowing that they have failed to keep their 1952 campaign pledges."

ALTHOUGH GOP leaders continued to express "pride of accomplishment" in the last session, discontent at their poor showing burst through the pose.

"What I want the Senate to realize," Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.) said just before adjournment, "is that we are going to have an authorized expenditure of $1.3 billion more this year than was spent last year; and if that be true, I want to extend my apologies to former Pres. Truman and Dean Acheson."

Ike Signs Measure To Let 214,000 Refugees Into U. S.

PRES. EISENHOWER has signed into law the emergency refugee bill which he said gives "a new chance in life to 214,000 human beings." The measure admits that many refugees to the U. S. over a three-year period.

Meanwhile, the American Jewish Congress said that although the measure is "unduly restrictive" and falls short of the President's original proposal, it must be regarded as "a tribute" to Eisenhower's leadership. It urged him to "exercise that leadership further to redeem his election pledge for the revision of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Law."

"While the emergency refugee measure may help to regain for our country some of the status we lost abroad through the enactment of the McCarran-Walter bill," the AJC said, "we shall never fully undo the harm wrought by that legislation until its discriminatory provisions, and particularly the racist national origins system on which it rests, are repealed."

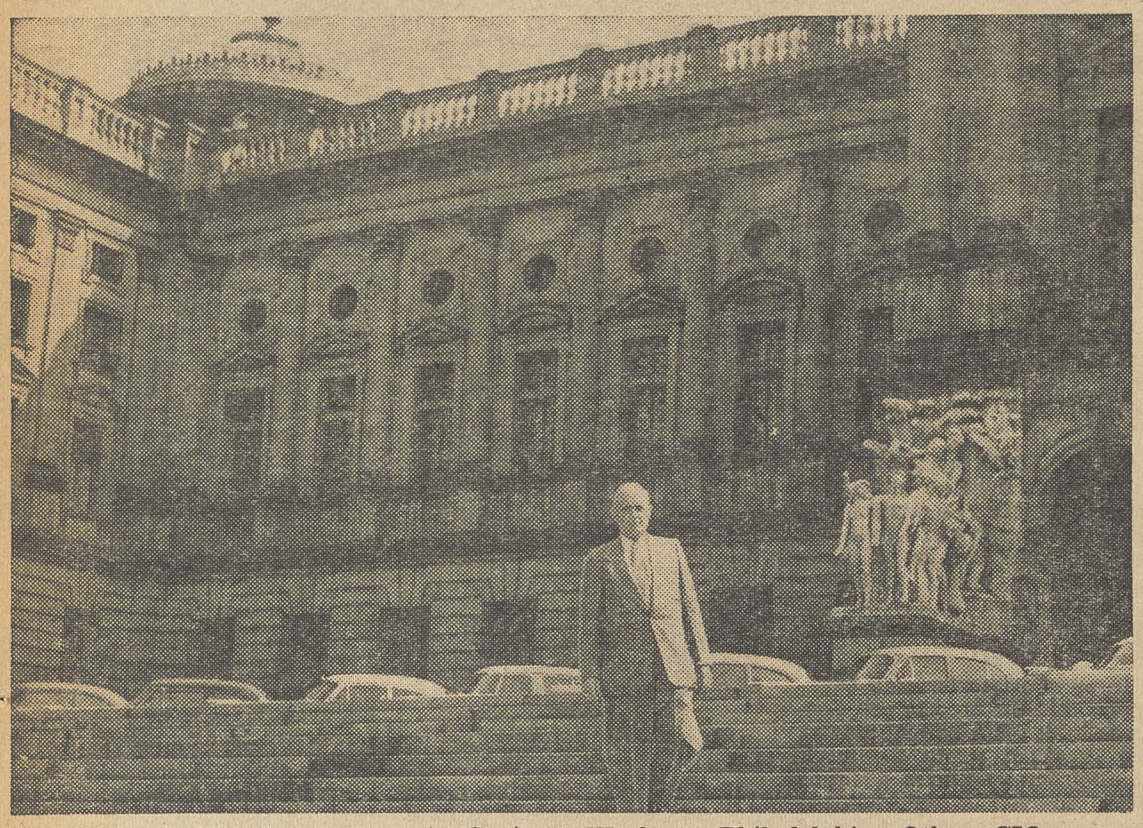
ADMISSION under the new refugee law may be made without reference to the McCarran-Walter Act. Eisenhower had asked Congress to admit 240,000 within two years, but Congress, after much wrangling, barred entrance to 26,000 victims of Communist tyranny included in the President's original request.

Admission is granted to 90,000 persons from Communist countries now in Western Germany, West Berlin and Allied sections of Austria. Another 10,000 from behind the Iron Curtain now living in countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization will be permitted to enter.

The remainder admitted under the bill include 2000 Poles living in England, 15,000 refugees in Greece and 2000 Greek relatives of Americans, 15,000 refugees in the Netherlands and 2000 Dutch relatives, 45,000 refugees from former Italian colonies and 15,000 Italian relatives of U. S. citizens; 7000 from the Far East, China, Japan and Formosa; 4000 orphans from various countries, and 5000 aliens who previously entered the U. S.

NO WORDS MINCED: Placard on "donkey" indicates CIO Textile Workers had strong feelings about anybody who attempted to cross their picket line at Guelph Yarns, Guelph, Ont., Can. They also convinced the firm it should raise wages 4c an hour instead of cutting them 8.5c.

No Bed Of Roses For CIO State Legislator

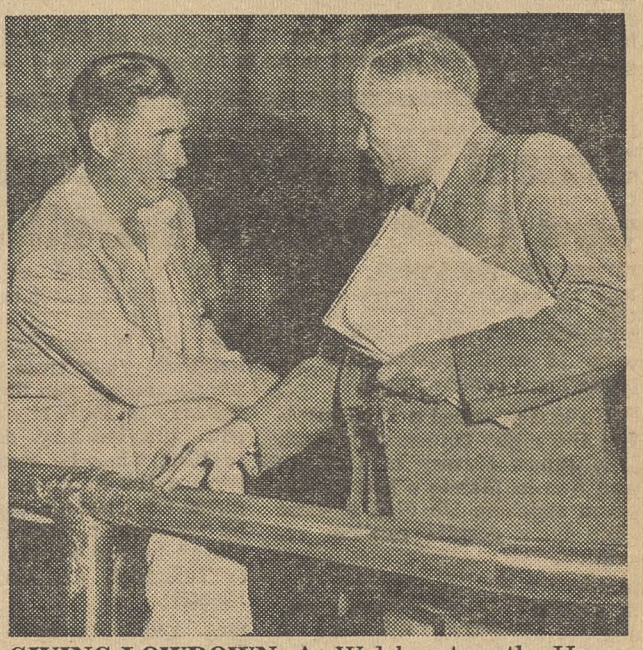


ON THE STEPS of Pennsylvania Capitol at Harrisburg, ready for a busy day is John J. Welsh, House member, who is treasurer of Local 113, CIO Electrical Workers, Philadelphia. Other CIO members in the House are Morris Rosen and Thomas Peta, ACW-CIO, Philadelphia; R. E. McDermit, Steelworkers, Pittsburgh.

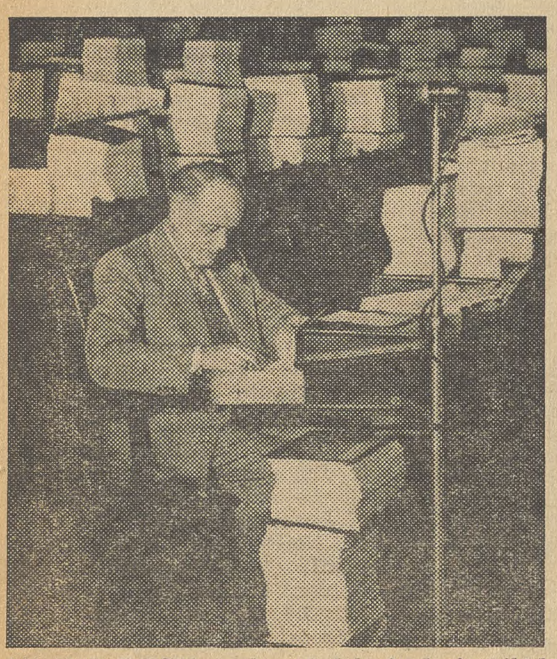
"GOOD MORNING," says the guard as Welsh steps into the Capitol to begin a long day's work. Welsh is serving his third term as Representative of the people of the 24th District in the city of Philadelphia.

WHAT'S UP: Welsh's first stop is at the door of the document room, where he receives the calendar of the day, a booklet of all bills the Legislature will consider during the day.

NEXT STOP is the mail box, where Welsh finds what communications he has received as a member of the State Legislature. Letters from constituents are important to legislator.

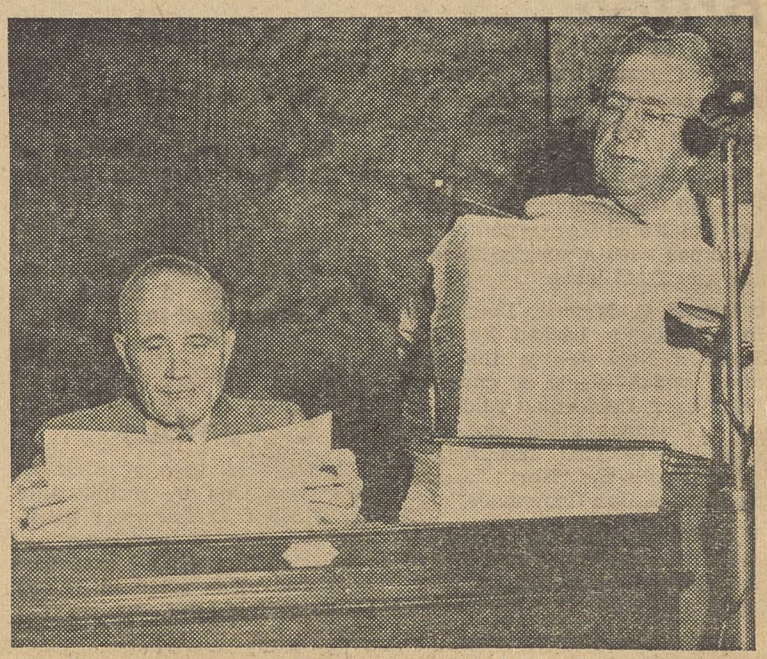


GIVING LOWDOWN: As Welsh enters the House chamber, he meets Charles Ferguson of the Pennsylvania CIO Council, whom he tells what may happen to bills in which CIO is interested.

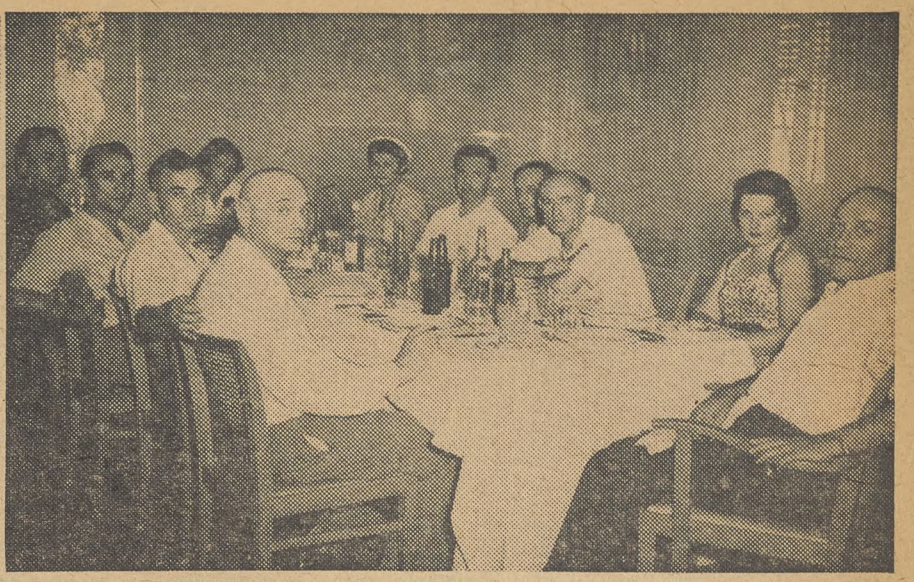


AT HIS DESK early, Welsh finds it piled with bills that have come up so far during legislative session. Note the bills on desks of the other legislators.

MAYBE he will find time for a cup of coffee at the Capitol cafeteria. Legislature starts at 11 o'clock in the morning and never adjourns for lunch.



MORE WORK: As Welsh looks at a bill scheduled to be debated, a clerk (right) fastens additional bills on the tremendous loose-leaf file of the legislative docket. It's all part of a day's work for Welsh.



CIO VISITS ISRAEL: CIO delegation, which has just returned from Israel, spent an intensive 10 days there and concluded that Histadrut, its half-million member trade union organization, is the only one in the Middle East that is genuinely free and democratic. At left: A visit to Sec. of Labor Goldie Meyerson, who lived for many years in the U. S. Left to right, Vice Pres. Michael Quill, Mrs. Meyerson, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, General Counsel Arthur J. World Of Labor—

3 Million Workers Walk Out In France

MORE THAN three million French workers were on strike last week in what amounted to a challenge to the right wing government to enforce its proposed economy program.

There was a possibility that four million workers may be involved in the strike which was started by Socialist and Christian unions, with the Communists falling into line. Premier Joseph Laniel, one of France's richest men, stood defiantly against strikers' demands to retreat from his economy drive. The unions countered with new walkout calls that have paralyzed nearly all government services, nationalized industries and many private enterprises.

Tourists, including 10,000 Americans, left stranded by the strike tried every method to get out of the country. Gas and electricity were cut off, water supplies were low, mail was undelivered and the railroad, buses and subway systems were virtually at a halt.

Laniel proposed "drafting" strikers and threatened legal penalties for those who refused to obey the recall order. He refused to call the National Assembly back from its vacation to discuss the issue—and perhaps vote him out of office.

Germany

Top red leaders in East Germany have been fired for permitting the recent riots that followed Communist refusals to allow hungry Germans to go to West Berlin for free American food parcels. At least 40 of the Soviet puppets were ousted.

West Berlin officials said 2.5 million American food packages were distributed when the first program ended last week. A second program will begin Aug. 27 after a 12-day interim for restocking and reorganization.

Communist police armed with machine pistols held a tight blockade 50 miles from Berlin to halt Germans with food parcels.

CIO Visitors Impressed By Role Of Histadrut in Life Of Israel

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A CIO delegation to the State of Israel has returned home deeply impressed with that little country's progress and with the tremendous role played by Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor.

They were also impressed with the tremendous spirit of welcome and friendship shown to the CIO visitors by the Israeli people, both in public office and in private life.

The CIO committee consisted of Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Vice-Pres. Michael Quill and General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg. Also in the party were Mrs. Carey and Mrs. Goldberg. They went to Israel following the July meeting of the ICFTU in Stockholm, Sweden.

IT WAS the second visit by a CIO group to Israel—two years ago Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers and Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union had paid a similar visit.

During their 10-day stay, the group visited virtually every section of the country, and was able to make a thorough study of its government, its labor movement and its institutions.

Histadrut Reflects Spectacular Growth

Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor, has increased its membership from 175,000 in 1948 to more than half a million —and with its members' dependents, it includes about half of Israel's population.

In addition to controlling a large number of cooperatives functioning in every aspect of the country's economic life, Histadrut has played a major role in helping to absorb the tremendous immigration into Israel during recent years.

The CIO delegation, whose report will be submitted to the CIO convention next November, found a healthy and growing democratic society; a labor organization that is "the only genuine free trade union movement in the Middle East;" and great social and economic problems that remain to be solved.

Goldberg, now back in Washington, said that the Histadrut officials "made no attempt to conceal these problems from us."

"ON THE contrary, they emphasized that both the country and Histadrut are passing through a difficult and anxious period," he said.

"Our delegation concluded that it is most important to continue our traditional friendship with Histadrut, since this organization typifies the democratic spirit which is essential for the economic and social development of the entire Middle East area."

The CIO group was warmly welcomed at Histadrut's bright new headquarters in Tel Aviv by Mordehai Namir, general secretary and its ranking official. He payed tribute to the help given by CIO to the Israeli people, and he voiced the deep sense of loss felt by Israeli workers at the death of the late Philip Murray.

During the 10-day stay, the CIO officials were invited to participate in a meeting of Histadrut's Executive Board.

The delegation visited several immigration camps. It saw at first hand the hardships experienced by the new arrivals—many from backward sections of North Africa and the Middle East. It also saw the housing, feeding and social projects designed to make them an integral part of the Israeli community.

In Rehobeth, serving the Negev area, now being reclaimed from the desert, the CIO group attended the dedication ceremonies at the big new Eliezer Kaplan Hospital, run by Histadrut and built in large part with funds raised by the American Committee for Labor Israel.

Carey, Quill and Goldberg all were invited to speak at these ceremonies, and they expressed the friendship of the CIO for Israel and its working people.

IN ADDITION, they were guests of Israeli government "top brass"—the Speaker of the Knesset, Israel's parliament; Sec. of Labor Goldie Meyerson; Moshe Sharet, the foreign minister; and Acting Sec. of Defense Pinchas Lavon.

They also paid a visit to the Amal Trade School, sponsored by the CIO Clothing Workers; to electrical plants, hydro-electrical power operations and the Port of Haifa. The CIO people reported a very favorable impression of efficiency of operations and union functioning.

The visit to Israel was arranged by Moshe Bitan, member of the Histadrut Executive Board, who has been in the United States for several months. Travel throughout Israel was handled by Histadrut's international department, headed by Nathan Jackson.

The Welcome Sign—

Briton Thinks Americans Have A Funny Way Of Greeting Guests

AMERICANS are a strange and sometimes fascinating people, it seems, to the folks in the rest of the world, who sometimes find equally strange and fascinating ways to tell us things about ourselves.

Take, for instance, this imaginary conversion between an American immigration official and a Britisher who might possibly visit the United States, as dreamed up by the National News-Letter of London.

American Official: Have you ever been to Russia?

British Visitor: Yes.

A. O.: For what purpose?

B. V.: To see Mr. Stalin.

A. O.: Was it a social or political visit?

B. V.: Political.

A. O.: Were you then engaged in a joint activity with Stalin?

B. V.: Yes, I was giving him all the help in my power.

A. O.: Did he need this help?

B. V.: Most urgently.

A. O.: Do you consider that if you had refused to give him assistance his government might have collapsed?

B. V.: Most probably. Have a cigar?

A. O.: Not till this inquiry is over. Have you ever been a radical?

B. V.: Yes, in the early years of the 20th century. Later on, I changed my mind.

A. O.: Do you support any form of government repugnant to the principles of the American way of life?

B. V.: Yes.

A. O.: What form?

B. V.: I am a strong believer in the monarchial principle. I believe in kings and especially queens.

A. O.: You seem to be a very dubious character and you will have to go to Ellis Island while we check your file with MI-5 in London. What is your name and address?

B. V.: Winston Churchill, 10 Downing Street, London.

Canadians Keep Liberal Commons

CANADIAN voters retained the Liberal Party as a majority in the House of Commons in last week's national elections.

With 265 seats at stake, the Liberals won 171, just short of the record majority they held in 1949. The vote insures continuance of the policies of Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent for a minimum of four years. The Canadian Congress of Labor has usually opposed them.

CIO Chemical Workers Win Rent Control At Oak Ridge

THE LONG CAMPAIGN of the CIO Chemical Workers to save rent controls at the atomic energy community of Oak Ridge, Tenn., ended in victory last week with the area's designation as a "critical housing area."

Blocked by the move were plans of the Atomic Energy Commission to hike rents there an average of 28%. While some increase is still possible under the "critical" designation, AEC must first petition under rent control regulations. Any large hike is unlikely.

THE designation of Oak Ridge by the Critical Areas Advisory Committee became necessary to save rent controls after House-Senate conferees in the closing days of the session knocked out a Senate-approved amendment sponsored by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) that would have denied funds to the AEC if rents were hiked.

Earlier, the House, at the urging of Rep. Baker (R. Tenn.), had also made clear it wanted rent controls maintained in the area. Both the AEC and the Critical Areas Committee simply ignored these directives.

Baker, however, refused to accept defeat. Cooperating with CIO Chemical Worker delegates from Oak Ridge Local 288, he carried the fight directly to the White House. As a result, Glenwood Sherrard, head of the critical areas committee, made a hurried trip to Oak Ridge and returned recommending the designation.

Sherrard attached one string to his action: The designation will be in effect only until 500 new houses are built in the area. Exactly 16 are now under construction, however, so that the ending of controls is not imminent.

Meanwhile the effects of Congress' knifing of rent control, which ended July 31, began to be felt throughout the country. Emergency sessions had to be authorized for Chicago's courts to cope with the increase in evictions, which one judge estimated at 1000 cases a day.

Government rent officials predicted that the first round of hikes throughout the country would average at least 10%. But they based this figure on surveys in Detroit, New Orleans, and other cities which have been free of rent control for some time and already suffered earlier boosts.

SOME landlords have handed out 200% increases.

New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Kansas have state laws providing some form of rent protection, mostly on a local option basis. In Pennsylvania, the State CIO Council called on all affiliated unions to notify it how much rents have been increased in their communities.

The San Francisco CIO Council also called on all locals to set up local union rent committees to help tenants present their case before the Mayor's Fair Rent Committee. The latter was established to place evicted families in comparable housing.

Power Growth Seen Booming Both Public, Private Utilities

MANY MODERN homes have electric stoves, are heated and air-conditioned by electricity—and the number so equipped will increase.

For that reason the pamphlet, "More Power At Lower Cost," issued by the America Public Power Association, is timely. The booklet says:

"When we note that the average home used only 2004 kilowatt hours in 1951, we have an indication of the spectacular growth of residential demand that can be anticipated in the future if the standard home of tomorrow is to have the use of 24,000 kilowatt hours.

"The tremendous demands for electric service which can be expected in the future indicate that there is an important role for both the publicly and privately owned utilities in achieving these goals which are so vital to the happiness and prosperity of the American people."

BASED on Federal Power Commission statistics, APPA's pamphlet concludes that publicly owned power companies are superior to privately owned ones in three respects:

1. The average consumer of the publicly owned utility uses more power and pays less for it than the consumer of the privately-owned system.

2. Item for item in transmission, distribution, and purely business operations, publicly-owned utilities operate at a lower per unit cost than privately owned utilities.

3. Far from not paying any taxes, publicly-owned utilities—even though exempt from federal taxation—make substantial tax payments, both directly and in lieu payments.

"This is not to imply, however, that the privately-owned utilities are doing a poor job of providing service for their customers," the pamphlet adds.

"On the contrary, we believe that the private companies, by and large, are rendering an excellent service, and are being managed by honest, conscientious men who generally have the interest of their consumers at heart.

"The facts show, however, that this record of the private utilities—excellent though it be—is surpassed by the publicly-owned utilities."

Top Health Aide Named

DR. CHESTER Scott Keefer, Brookline, Mass., last week took the oath of office as special assistant to Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, Secretary of Health and Welfare.

Dr. Keefer will be the top staff policy adviser for health and medical affairs. Created at the urging of the American Medical Association, the post was embodied in Pres. Eisenhower's No. 1 Reorganization Plan.

The plan states that the holder of the position "shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate from among persons who are recognized leaders in the medical field with wide non-governmental experience."

Dr. Keefer is on leave as physician-in-chief at the Massachusetts Memorial Hospital and as Wade Professor of Medicine at the Boston Univ. School of Medicine. He holds important posts with the National Research Council, but no high position with AMA.

Atom Plant Give-Away Hit By Olds

A FORMER chairman of the Federal Power Commission last week entered the controversy over the ownership of atomic energy production, now held by the government.

Leland Olds, one-time FPC chieftain, attacked the proposal to turn over government atomic facilities to private industry. which CIO earlier had characterized as a "multi-billion dollar give-away of atomic know-how."

OLDS SAID atomic energy should remain "a resource of the people, a part of the public domain."

He made the statement in reply to Rep. Cole (R. N.Y.), chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, who had requested his views on federal policy on industrial atomic power development.

He said public utilities and rural electric cooperatives should be given preference in marketing atomic-generated electricity.

OLDS URGED that there be no surrender to private industry of the present federal control of electric energy created through atomic power. He suggested that A-power be treated in conformity with the federal laws which govern water power. These laws, wrote Olds, furnish "a modern implementation of the acknowledged legal rights of communities to public or cooperative electrical services."

The present Atomic Energy Act, he said, "appears to safeguard the public interest, while leaving the Atomic Energy Commission free to encourage desirable progress in the field of atomic energy."

Give A Buck To PAC

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

YOU CAN SAVE by timing your buying for cut-price sales and clearances, if you know how and when to shop them.

Despite many cases of misrepresentation and exaggeration, a knowing shopper normally can find reductions ranging from 10 to 40% at sales, and an average of 20. I always remember a certain reporter who was working on a paper with me. He paid 60 bucks for an overcoat one day and walked past the store a week later and saw the same coat on sale at $45. He vowed he would thereafter always wait for the sales.

Sales and SALES

This department has compiled a "Sales Calendar" which you'll find with this article. You can clip it as an aid to timing your own buying. Besides the regular sales, it pays to watch for special ones which can occur at any time as a store or manufacturer finds itself overstocked on an item.

You do have to shop sales carefully. For one thing, some installment furniture stores and appliance retailers (especially in the sewing-machine and vacuum-cleaner businesses) have a tendency to advertise "bait bargains." When a salesman deprecates the advertised special and tries to get you to buy a much costlier item, that's the tip-off on such phony sales.

Watch For Phonies

As previously reported here, another type of spurious sale is often found in "special reductions" on jewelry, watches and silverware which carry exaggerated list prices. "Sales" of toiletries are sometimes also based on exaggerated "regular prices." One cosmetics manufacturer prices a lotion at $2 for two or three months and the rest of the year sells it as a "half-price special" at $1.

In one revealing incident, two department stores in the same city advertised in the same newspaper the sale of a silk print dress, identical in every detail. One store offered it at $16.95 with no claim of reduction. The other store headlined its ad: "Sale! . . . $16.95. Regularly $24.95."

Television sets have also been the center of some phony sales. Some stores advertised popular brands at reduced prices, only to inform people who came to buy that there weren't any more.

It's always wise to be skeptical of sales which advertise like this: "Men's Suits, formerly up to $65, now $40. Technically there's nothing wrong with that statement. But from the experience of the Better Business Bureaus, who police retail advertising, you might well ask, "How many actually were $65?"

But the thing to watch out most of all, is the temptation to buy poorly-designed goods because they're advertised at a sharply reduced price, or to buy stuff you have no use for, or clothes that don't go with other things in your wardrobe, or that even don't fit well or may require costly alterations.

Types Of Sales

Generally speaking, there are three types of sales:

Clearances occur at the end of a season. They offer the sharpest reductions but require careful shopping to avoid merchandise a store couldn't sell because of poor design or construction. Also beware of buying "high fashion" items at the end of a season; next year they may look out of style. Best buys in clearances are simple, classic styles.

Special purchases offer lesser savings, but have the advantage of being available earlier in the season. These are often manufacturers' remainders or closeouts. In this type of sale, make sure that the manufacturer didn't skimp on vital details such as the seams of a dress or the cut of a shirt.

Annual sales offer smallest reductions but are sometimes the most reliable. Such sales occur at the same time each year, like the semi-annual shoe sales. Stores throughout the country reduce prices 10 to 20% on staple styles and brands.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

TWO WEEKS AGO, when I mentioned the great work done by our CIO representatives in the field, there came to mind the story of Anderson, S. C. Great news has just come from Anderson.

Our CIO Brother Ed Geiger reports victory at the Poinsett Lumber & Manufacturing Co., a subsidiary of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., where some 280 workers will now be represented by the CIO Electrical Workers.

All of us who have worked in the South came to think of Anderson as a symbol of bitter, anti-union propaganda, organized and led by a so-called "Citzens' Committee," financed in silence, but dedicated to the loudest and ugliest kind of treachery.

It was this "Citzens' Committee" which helped deny the right to self-organization to hundreds of workers at the Fiberglas plant in that town, only a year ago. In the Poinsett campaign they tried the same tactics. Yet Brother Geiger, assisted by Brother John Clark of IUE-CIO, successfully led the workers to trade union organization.

How was it done? It was done by patience. It was done by careful education. It was done by our representatives setting an example of decent living and fighting for a high moral standard in a hostile community. Every kind of prejudice was leveled against our people. Newspaper advertisements tried to rouse racial and religious bigotry. But the fact that those workers took their stand with CIO is a tribute to their intelligence, and our representatives' perseverance.

A wonderful job!

A GOOD FRIEND to all the men who worked in Anderson is the director of community relations for the CIO Organizing Committee, John Ramsay, of the Steelworkers union. Brother Ramsay has given many years to the task of bringing the trade labor message to community leaders.

If he has one pet "peeve" it's the way, he claims, we union fellows hide our light under a bushel, that we don't let our good works be known. That's one reason I was pleased to hear from Dir. of Councils Carl McPeak about an area far away from South Carolina. Brother McPeak has just received a final report on the good works done by the CIO Councils of Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont when tragedy struck at Worcester, Mass.

You all recall the tornado that crushed that community. Not only did the councils and local CIO unions contribute money, but immediately after the disaster, CIO council officials, who had been meeting in Boston, rushed to the spot to give personal aid, including their own blood.

North and South, or East and West, it's good to learn the people of our land are getting to know our representatives, our purposes and our practices at their best.

Auto Union Asks Wilson For Meeting On K-F Jobs

CIO AUTO WORKERS have asked Sec. of Defense Charles E. Wilson for a meeting at "the earliest possible date" to discuss the problems of workers laid off at the Willow Run plant of the Kaiser-Frazer Corp.

Some 12,000 workers have been furloughed at Willow Run since late in June, when the Air Force cancelled a contract for C-119s, flying boxcars and C-123s, a new type of assault plane.

When a delegation of union officials headed by UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey came to Washington July 9 to protest the cancellation, it became known that the Army was interested in having C-123s made.

IN A LETTER to Wilson, who formerly was General Motors president, Mazey said:

"The human considerations involved in the placement of the contract for the C-123 are obvious. Thousands of workers have been made jobless by cancellation of contracts for plane production at Willow Run. While some of them may be able to find jobs at this time, their new employment will, in most cases, be of short duration.

"Employment in the Detroit area, and in Michigan generally will soon turn down sharply as auto production is curtailed. Some auto producers, as you doubtless know, have already shut down or laid off workers. Others will follow.

"Thus, the laid-off Willow Run workers, who were recruited to perform an essential national defense function and, who, in many cases uprooted themselves from homes and families in distant communities to do so, will be left stranded in an area of job scarcity and unemployment.

"The plight of these workers, for whose welfare the Defense Dept. assumed a moral responsibility, would justify our asking that the Willow Run plant be given preferred consideration in meeting the department's procurement requirements.

"We are not asking for preference, however, but merely for a determination on an objective basis whether the C-123 can be produced at Willow Run at less cost to the government than it can be produced elsewhere.

"IF IT SHOULD be decided not to produce the C-123, the responsibility of the Defense Dept. for the welfare of the Willow Run workers will not be ended.

"These workers, and the plant in which they worked, should be given the fullest consideration for the production of other defense items which they can handle at reasonable cost to the government."

Wilson was reminded by Mazey that Air Force Sec. Harold E. Talbott, at the July 9 meeting, said that if it should be decided to produce the C-123s, Kaiser-Frazer would be given equal consideration with other manufacturers.

Some Auto Makers Cancel Steel Orders

The falling sales of civilian cars and the cutback in military orders are beginning to hit the steel industry. Steel, the industry trade journal, last week reported:

"Reductions in automotive demand for steel are appearing as outright cancellations of orders by the auto makers for steel and parts and the postponement of ordering steel and parts for the last two months of the year."

The auto industry, which is steel's largest customer, has been using about a fifth of the mills' outputs.

Auto Worker Slain In Battle Honored

A UNION fighter for democracy, Capt. John Kranz, has been honored in Detroit by having one of the city's parks named in his honor. Kranz lost his life in the Philippines and was decorated posthumously. Before going into service he was a member of Dodge Local 3 of the CIO Auto Workers.

UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey was the principal speaker when the local dedicated a flagpole to Kranz' memory. He recalled that Kranz was a veteran of the famous Dodge sitdown strike that won industrial democracy at the plant, and later died in battle overseas to preserve democracy for the world.

Steel Union Pact Provides United Crusade Donations

MEMBERS OF THE CIO Steelworkers Local 1798 will give one and half days' pay to the East Bay United Crusade under the terms of a new contract with the Western Die Casting Co., Emeryville, Calif.

Ray Haeckel, Steelworkers international representative, said that it is the first time in the East Bay that a United Crusade donation has been included in a union contract.

Employes who work on Armistice Day will receive a regular day's pay instead of the usual two-and-half times the regular daily rate paid on the holiday.

The firm will give the rest of the holiday pay, one and half days' pay for each worker, to the agency for its health and welfare services.

Furniture Workers To Seek Higher Wages, Welfare Plans

SUBSTANTIAL increases in wages and improved working conditions will be sought by the CIO Furniture Workers. Pres. Morris Pizer told the union executive board last week.

He promised that these objections and more adequate welfare programs and pensions will be pushed in negotiations now in progress or forthcoming. The union's Research Dept. told the executive committee session held in Atlantic City, N. J., that furniture manufacturers' shipments this year will reach $2.5 billion this year.

Pizer called the industry "generally prosperous." Profits for 1953 will amount to $265 million as against $227 million last year, an increase of 17%, the board was told.

"Studies made for the Federal Reserve Board indicate that consumer demand for furniture and bedding products will be strong throughout all of 1953, despite high prices and the growing burden of installment debt," said the Research Dept. report.

"There has not been a serious overstocking of inventory. The relatively poor results of the summer furniture shows were largely due to business jitters about possible developments in the Korean truce, and not to an inventory glut, such as existed two years ago."

No Loss For Words

Shop committeemen of CIO Auto Workers Local 1011 in Chicago can present their grievances in six languages. So there won't be any misunderstanding, probably. All can speak English, but in addition union "beefs" can be delivered in Slovenian, Polish, Croatian, Italian and German.

Two CIO Unions Ask Major Revisions In Excise Legislation

NEW LEGISLATION on federal excise taxes was urged on the House Ways and Means Committee last week by the CIO Brewery Workers and Communications Workers.

A reduction in present levies on malt and distilled beverages was sought by the Brewery Workers. Repeal of taxes on local and long distance phone calls was asked by the Communications Workers.

Pres. Karl F. Feller of the BW-CIO warned that "the sky-high tax" on beer and other alcoholic beverages is leading to a return of the moonshining days of the Prohibition era.

"The bootlegger starts off with a price advantage of $10.50 a gallon because he pays no tax," Feller said.

The union asked for a cut in excise levies to pre-war levels. The present tax of $9 per barrel on beer should be set at $7, Feller urged, and the whisky tax slashed to $6 a gallon.

"We are disturbed over the loss of jobs already reflected in the legal plants," Feller said.

Joseph E. Brady, councils coordinator for the BW-CIO, read a statement on behalf of Pres. Harry Sayre of the CIO Paperworkers. Statements were also given the committee by executive secretaries of several BW-CIO state councils including Roland Hiddie, Wisconsin; James O'Neill, Michigan; Lou Boch, Pennsylvania, and Ray Koth, Ohio and Kentucky.

SPEAKING for 300,000 workers in the telephone industry, Sylvia Gottlieb, CWA-CIO research director, told the committee the tax was "becoming unwarranted and (an) economically unsound deterrent to telephone use."

"We are concerned about present and future effects of these taxes on the use of telephone facilities and hence upon employment opportunities in the industry," Mrs. Gottlieb said.

Taxes, as high as 25% on toll calls, date back to 1932 and taxes on local calls to 1941. It is the first time CWA-CIO has sought elimination of the excise taxes on phone calls.

Phone service is taxed at a luxury rate despite the fact that nearly everyone considers it a necessity, Mrs. Gottlieb added.

She said there is no federal tax on other public utilities such as electricity, water, and gas and local transportation. Also, phone taxes are higher than on less essential items.

Social Security Bills Compared

Two bills to liberalize the Social Security Act have been introduced in Congress. One was sponsored by Sen. Lehman (D.N.Y.), and has the co-sponsorship of 10 other senators and 17 representatives. The other was sponsored by the Eisenhower Administration and was introduced just before adjournment by Reps. Reed (R. N.Y.) and Kean (R. N.J.). This comparision was prepared by the CIO Legislative Dept.

	Lehman Bill (S. 2260)	Eisenhower Bill (H.R. 6812)
Summary	Provides substantial benefit improvements, adds temporary and permanent disability insurance, provides money for rehabilitation, liberalizes the retirement test, and extends coverage.	Deals only with extension of coverage, and, as a by-product, makes possible higher benefits within present maximum limits.
Benefits	Increased substantially for everyone. Maximum limit for family raised to $200 a month (from $169.50); for individual to $135 (from $85). More generous method of calculating all benefits, with increases of $5 to $14 a month for individuals now entitled to benefits.*	Some persons would be aided greatly, many slightly, and some not at all by dropping the three years of lowest earnings in calculating the average monthly wage. No increase provided persons now on benefit rolls.
Long-Term Disability Insurance	New type of protection added to provide similar benefits to individuals and families when breadwinner before sixty-five has been unable to work for over six months.	Nothing
Rehabilitation Services	Increased funds to help disabled workers to again become gainfully employed.	Nothing
Cash Sickness Benefits	New program to replace part of lost wages for 26 weeks when employe is temporarily sick or disabled.	Nothing
Retirement Test	Higher earnings permitted while receiving benefits—$100 a month instead of $75.	Nothing
Coverage	Extended broadly. Main groups added: farmers, many more farm and domestic workers, certain self-employed professional workers; ministers, on a voluntary basis.	Extended broadly. Main groups added are same, plus doctors, and state and local employes under retirement systems on a voluntary group basis.
Financing	Payroll taxes would be collected on $6000 of earnings a year (instead of $3600). The tax would rise more quickly than under present law, and to a slightly higher level (in steps to 4% in 1961).	No change.

* Higher benefits under the Lehman Bill would result from:

Basing the individual's "average monthly wage" on earnings in the 10 best consecutive years (instead of all years) since starting date.

Permitting a new start for everyone in 1954.

Raising the ceiling on earnings credited to $6,000 a year (from $3,600).

Having benefits replace 20% (instead of 15%) of the amount by which the average monthly wage exceeds $100. (55% of the first $100 would be replaced, as at present.)

Adding ½% to benefit for every year of coverage.

Lowdown on Sen. McCarthy Is Given By URW Booklet

"LABOR LOOKS at Joe McCarthy." And it doesn't like what it sees. A new booklet reviewing the activities of Wisconsin's junior Senator has just been issued by the CIO Rubber Workers Education Dept.

Starting with CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther's comment that McCarthyism is ugly, un-American and immoral," the booklet scans the Senator's labor record (bad), his financial dealings (worse) and his policies (worst).

The booklet is a fact sheet of the McCarthy history. It covers the period from his election to a Wisconsin judgeship to the recent book-burning episode that has cost the U. S. so much prestige overseas.

Even the McCarthy war record comes in for scrutiny and criticism because he left the Marines while war was still in progress to advance his political fortunes.

The bald truth that McCarthy hasn't exposed a single Communist or has caused the conviction of one Communist is brought home.

There are quotes on the subject of McCarthy and McCarthyism from leaders in the field of labor, religion, politics and education.

Copies of the booklet are available by writing to the Rubber Workers Education Dept., URW-CIO Building, Akron 8, O.

USA Students' Win Diplomas

DIPLOMAS were presented to 156 CIO Steelworkers who attended the fifth annual education conference at Ohio State Univ.

Graduates were urged to take back to their locals the knowledge gained and put it to practical use. USA-CIO Dist. Dir. William F. Donovan and Prof. Edison L. Bowers of the OSU Economics Dept. awarded the diplomas.

"This occasion to speak at Ohio State certainly gives me a lot of pleasure," Donovan said, "because only a few years ago the suggestion of a union leader being invited to speak on the college campus would have astounded and amazed practically everyone."

Bowers said the university "grew a lot stronger" through the Steelworkers' stay.

"We are making plans for bigger and better programs of this nature for the future—we have enjoyed having you here—and you have given us far more than we have given you," he added.

CIO Aids Columbus

The Columbus (Ohio) CIO Council is represented on the new Better Columbus Committee. Among the new group's aims are slum clearance, urban redevelopment and expressways with a proper consideration for the role of low-income housing in the picture.

Four Firms Get Big Chunk In Write-Offs

FOUR FIRMS got nearly a third of the almost $181 million in rapid tax write-offs handed out by the Office of Defense Mobilization during the last two weeks in July.

South Carolina Generating Co. got a certificate for $17 million worth of new facilities; and Union Carbide and Carbon, Tyler, W. Va., Sinclair Refining, Trainer, Pa., and Potomac Electric Power Co., Alexandria, Va., each got one for $14 million.

Others on the latest list include Bethlehem Steel, General Electric, Public Service Electric & Gas, Pennsylvania Railroad, International Nickel, Sante Fe, Missouri Pacific, Rohm & Haas, Bendix, and Pacific Gas and Electric.

The new list brings the total granted so far to 17,757 certificates, for $27.6 billion. The certificates give firms juicy savings by permitting them to write off depreciation on new facilities in five years instead of over the usual 20 to 25 years.

President Urges Congress To Restudy Resource Plans

CONSERVATION and improvement of the U. S. land and water resources will be studied by the next session of Congress—if it listens to Pres. Eisenhower.

He has called for a "re-examination" of federal policies dealing with western watersheds in a special message to Congress.

"Don't expect these non-union men to stand for you — They can't stand themselves!"

"A better balanced program" is the Chief Executive's aim. He said that water problems are undergoing a change because of increases in urban population, and expansion of mining and industrial activities.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) warned that a bi-partisan "watchdog committee" was necessary to develop sound conservation policies and safeguard the public interest.

"WE HAVE long ago learned the dangers of exploiting and wasting these valuable resources," Humphrey said. "We know they are not unlimited. We know that they must be carefully safeguarded from exhaustion . . ."

A revival of the crusading spirit is needed, he added, "for our vast forests; for protection and proper development of our water resources; for protection of our soil fertility on the farms of America; for the safeguarding of our petroleum and mineral resources."

CIO Board Okehs No-Raid Pact; PAC Begins Twin Election Drives

—See Pages 2 & 3

CIO Strikers Get Full Backing

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE CIO Executive Board last week voiced unanimous approval of a proposed no-raid agreement with the AFL, and recommended that the Cleveland convention, opening Nov. 16, formally ratify the pact.

Language of the no-raid pact was worked out late last spring by a joint CIO-AFL unity committee, headed by Presidents Walter P. Reuther and George Meany.

In a number of recent speeches, Reuther has hailed the move as a long stride toward elimination of jurisdictional disputes, and as a step toward eventual organic unity.

CIO'S action came at an all-day meeting at the Hotel Mayflower in Washington. The session was marked by a high degree of harmony on the no-raid agreement and on other points on the day's agenda.

During the day, Pres. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers talked with newspaper reporters and denied recent speculation that the powerful steel union might be preparing to leave the CIO, or to enter a third labor federation with such unaffiliated unions as the miners and the carpenters, and the AFL teamsters.

McDonald reiterated sentiments he had expressed last April at the Auto Workers convention in Atlantic City, where he had voiced support for the CIO, its principles and its future.

The no-raid agreement approved by the Executive Board received similar approval from the AFL Executive Council a week ago. It will be acted upon by the AFL convention at St. Louis late next month, and then by the CIO.

With both executive groups approving, ratifications seem almost certain—and the historic agreement will then take effect on Jan. 1, 1954.

In other actions throughout the day, the Executive Board also:

1. Gave strong approval to the strikes of telephone workers employed by the Indiana Bell and Southwestern Bell Telephone firms.

The Board urged working people in Indiana "to aid in the fight against unfair treatment and the marshalling of industry and tax-supported troops against the working men and women of the Communications Workers of America."

2. Voiced support for 225 members of the Seattle-Tacoma (Wash.) Newspaper Guild, who have been on strike since July 22 at the Seattle Times. Such support, from CIO unions and their members, the Board said, would help the Guildsmen to obtain "an equitable contract in the shortest time possible."

3. Urged full support for a strike of several hundred department store workers employed at Hearn's in New York.

The strike, called by the CIO-affiliated Distributive, Processing & Office Workers, is being conducted in the face of strict injunctions by a number of New York judges.

The Board approved the action of the New York State CIO Council in accepting "full responsibility" for the prosecution of the strike to a victorous end.

4. Endorsed the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions as the voice of labor in the free world, and promised to continue full support to the international organization.

Referring to the recent anti-Communist demonstrations in East Germany, the Board said "the spontaneous demonstration of the German workers against their Soviet-Communist taskmasters and stooges has revealed forever the hollowness and hypocrisy of the Communist claim to identify themselves with the workers."

5. Received detailed reports on current problems from CIO committees in the fields of legislation, housing and safety.

The Executive Board meeting was the last in a series of official get-togethers in the nation's capital. Earlier in the week, the CIO-PAC Executive Board, the CIO Finance Committee and the CIO Executive Comittee had met. On Aug. 19, the CIO-PAC staged an all-day political rally. (See Page 3.)

Reuther Talks On Radio, TV Over Labor Day

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on both radio and television over the Labor Day weekend.

Reuther, who will address a Labor Day rally in Akron, O., will make a special Labor Day broadcast over the American Broadcasting Co.'s radio network. Time for this broadcast will be 2:45 to 3:00 p.m., EDT.

On Sunday, Sept. 6, Reuther will be the guest on the Columbia Broadcasting System's television show, "Man of the Week." This telecast, which will originate in Detroit, will be seen from 5:30 to 6 p.m., EDT, on CBS-TV stations.

Third Federation Rumors Repudiated By McDonald

THE CIO Steelworkers have no intention of bolting the CIO and joining with other unions to form a third labor federation, USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald said last week.

The steel union leader was quoted in the New York Times following the National CIO Executive Board meeting in Washington. The Times story quoted him as saying he told the Executive Board:

"The United Steelworkers of America are not engaged in negotiations with anybody to establish a third labor movement in America.

"Yes, we want unity with the American Federation of Labor, and I repeat that such unity must be honorable—thoroughly honorable. To the leaders of the smaller unions in this room I guarantee the continued friendship of the United Steelworkers.

"We will do all in our power when this unity comes about to aid you and make you strong. We must lead from strength, and we are going to help everybody in this room lead from more strength."

The Times article, by Joseph A. Loftus, said McDonald "acknowledged that he was taking cognizance of speculation that he was getting ready to walk out of the CIO and make an alliance with other unions."

One of the unions with which the USA-CIO reportedly has been going to "merge" has been the Mine Workers. The Times story said McDonald was asked about his meeting two months ago with UMW Pres. John L. Lewis.

"IN THE WORDS of Chick Federoff (McDonald aide and former CIO regional director in Pittsburgh), we reminisced about the coal mines," it quoted him as replying.

McDonald's statement recalled to many his speech at the convention of the CIO Auto Workers—headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther—last March. At that time he said flatly the USA-CIO fully intended to remain in the CIO.

CIO Urges Help For Phone Union

DECLARING that there is an "obvious" pattern in the strike-breaking activities of the Bell telephone system, the CIO Executive Board last week called on all working people in Indiana to aid the CIO Communications Workers.

Workers were asked to assist in the fight against "unfair treatment and the marshalling of industry and tax-supported troops" against CWA-CIO members. (Detailed Story, Page 12.)

The contract expired June 2 but the union "accepted the hardship of working without a contract in the interests of obtaining a satisfactory agreement by peaceful methods." Since the strike began on July 22 there have been fruitless efforts by the union to reach agreement.

THE RESOLUTION charged that Indiana Bell, a wholly-owned subsidiary of the gigantic Bell System monopoly, "has used every conceivable trick to destroy good faith collective bargaining."

The Chamber of Commerce in Indiana entered the dispute, declearing in effect, said the resolution, that the phone company must "bust the strike and the striker. This is a public invitation for union-busting." Gov. Craig was also charged with using state police and alerting the National Guard to break the strike.

The Bell System appears intent on extending their union-busting tactics in other places, including the area served by Southwestern Bell, where 50,000 CWA-CIO members went on strike on the day the CIO Board met. (Guild story, Page 11.)

Give A Buck To PAC

No-Raid Pact Is Recommended

Here is the text of the statement recommending approval of the no-raiding agreement between the CIO and the AFL which was adopted at the CIO Executive Board meeting:

DURING the past year, a joint unity committee was created by the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor to explore the possibility of achieving organic unity between the CIO and the AFL.

The committee held several meetings. They gave particular consideration to the problem of raiding between the organizations—that is, attempts by unions affiliated with one of the organizations to intrude into established collective bargaining relationships between employers and unions affiliated with the other organization.

The committee concluded that such activities were destructive of the best interests of the unions involved and of the entire trade union movement. The committee unanimously agreed that the elimination of raiding constitutes a necessary first condition to the achievement of unity.

THE COMMITTEE has recommended both to the CIO and to the AFL, and to the national and international unions affiliated with the two organizations, that they conclude a no-raiding agreement in the form drafted by the committee.

The CIO Executive Board commends the Joint Committee on Labor Unity for its report.

We believe that raids between unions endanger the welfare of the workers as well as the public interest. Most raids fail, creating only a residue of unrest, dissatisfaction and disunity among the workers involved. Where raids are successful, they involve a drain of time and money far disproportionate to the number of employes involved; they create unnecessary industrial strain and conflict; and they do nothing to add to the strength and capabilities of the trade union movement as a whole.

THE CIO believes that the interests of the millions of working men and women of America who are organized into unions are best served by the extension of the benefits of such organization and collective bargaining to the other millions of working men and women who are as yet unorganized.

The CIO believes that all unions, whether affiliated with the CIO or the AFL, would benefit if the energies devoted to raiding were instead devoted to the task of organizing those yet unorganized. The CIO further believes that the elimination of raiding between unions affiliated with the CIO and AFL would materially benefit the entire nation by eliminating a potent source of industrial unrest and conflict.

The CIO Executive Board therefore fully accepts the recommendations of the Joint AFL-CIO Unity Committee.

It recommends to the forthcoming convention of the CIO, opening in Cleveland, Nov. 16, that it authorizes the officers of the Congress of Industrial Organizations to execute, on behalf of the CIO, the No-Raiding Agreement with the American Federation of Labor.

CIO Renews Hearn Strike Backing

THE NATIONAL CIO last week reaffirmed its support of the strike against Hearn's department store in New York as direction of the walkout, now in its fourth month, was taken over by the New York State CIO Council.

The strike was called May 14 by Dist. 65, CIO Distributive, Processing & Office Workers. About 800 employes are affected.

The National CIO Executive Board, in a resolution adopted at last week's meeting, denounced the management for its "calculated campaign to destroy the union" and its "lying campaign to brand the union as Communist."

It also endorsed the State CIO Council's move in taking on responsibility for the strike, stressing that the sole issue is collective bargaining; condemned the AFL Retail Clerks union for "open strike breaking;" asked the National Labor Relations Board to issue a complaint charging the firm with unfair labor practices, and called on all CIO affiliates to support the strike.

The dispute began after wholesale layoffs of workers followed introduction of a self-service system at the two stores in Manhattan and the Bronx. The union said it did not object to self-service but it insisted that seniority be considered in layoffs.

Acting Pres. Jack Paley of Dist. 65, said he welcomed the intervention of the State Council and its pledge to throw its full strength behind the strike.

Pres. Louis Hollander of the State Council appointed a committee of five, representing major CIO unions in the area, to run the walkout until a settlement is reached.

Named to direct the strike activities were Reg. Dir. Charles E. Kerrigan, Auto Workers; Dir. Jack Rubenstein, Textile; Sec.-Treas. Gustave Faber, Transport Workers; Pres. John Lotz, Local 1150, Communications Workers; Vice Pres. Vincent LaCapria, CIO Clothing Workers.

PAC Begins Twin Election Drives

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CIO Political Action Committee kicked off twin political campaigns at a rally in Washington last week attended by active CIO leaders from all parts of the country.

The rally started the ball rolling for next November, when 600 local community and state elections will be held. And with an eye on southern primary elections, which begin in January, it got a head start on the 1954 congressional elections.

The delegates heard CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who also is CIO-PAC chairman, discuss the international situation and the drab role Congress has played in foreign affairs legislation.

They heard CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey detail the failure of Congress to measure up to acceptable standards in domestic legislation on a nationwide scale.

Then they heard David J. McDonald, president of the CIO Steelworkers and CIO-PAC secretary-treasurer, call for a grass roots approach to a better America by more vigorous political action at the community and state levels.

Plans For Action

Leaders of political action in 32 states reported briefly on recent developments in their legislatures and on plans for future action. Some complained about Republican opposition to better laws on such things as workmen's and unemployment compensation, others about Democratic opposition.

Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC national director, who presided, pointed out that their reports showed a widespread pattern—that CIO state political activity had to be concentrated on defense, and that little time was left to work for better laws.

"The most important thing they said," he added, "is that it isn't Democrats we have to fight, and it isn't Republicans. It's just plain reactionaries."

Reuther and Carey both blasted Congress for its legislative record and Pres. Eisenhower for failure to exercise his leadership.

"Too often the executive branch of the government has backed up and compromised under pressure," said Reuther, citing the book burning episode.

"I still feel Pres. Eisenhower is a decent person whose instincts are good. But he is surrounded by people who just don't understand the forces at work in this world."

The CIO president, outlining some of the things he learned during his recent trip abroad, reported that even American embassy people concede the U. S. position in Europe has deteriorated, and that our prestige "is at an all-time low."

European business men and government officials as well as workers, he said, expressed two major fears—that the U. S. economy will collapse without a huge defense program to sustain it, as the Communists claim; and that Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) will take over the government.

'We Need More, Not Less'

"I found no one, including American embassy people," he said, "who was not willing to admit privately that McCarthy has more to help the Communists in Europe than any other force in history. Further, he demoralizes, divides and confuses our friends."

In Europe, he said, he found "more respect for the CIO than for any American organization."

After touching briefly on congressional failures in the domestic field, Reuther called for still more vigorous political action.

"The results of the last election mean we need more, not less," he said. "Where the most work was done, the candidates we favored did reasonably well.

"We're going to keep on organizing the unorganized, unionizing the organized, and expanding our political action."

Carey declared that the Administration's program and the record of Congress thus far "have made it clear beyond a fraction of a doubt that we are now witnessing government of big business, by big business and for big business."

He expressed certainty that the Republicans "have set out, blindly and arrogantly, to do the job for us that we failed to do" in convincing the people that the GOP opposes everything the workers want or need.

If the CIO is to continue its support of the Democrats, he said he personally feels the party "must stop taking the liberal movement and the labor movement for granted."

"I am convinced that there must be a realignment—preferably within the Democratic Party," he said. "And if the realignment can't come within the Democratic Party, then perhaps there must be a realignment outside that party."

Work In States

McDonald described the USA-CIO legislative program in the states, with the suggestion that it might be used by other CIO groups as a model.

"We don't want to do it alone," he explained. "We want to work with all CIO unions and with all organized labor in each state—and I see nothing wrong in working with other organized groups for the benefit of all workers."

As an example of grass roots action, he compared failure to win FEPC legislation in Congress with a successful fight for a comparable ordinance in Pittsburgh, where the Steelworkers have their headquarters.

"I'd like to see us all work for local ordinances on FEPC," he said. "If we succeed, we will bring about a norm of thinking that will lead to FEPC in the states. And if we get enough state FEPC laws enacted—and of course it will take some years—it will be a pushover to get a national FEPC."

Drive For PAC Bucks

He urged PAC dollar drive collectors to emphasize, in their approaches, the necessity of raising funds to elect good legislators, governors, councilmen and mayors.

The rally approved two statements. One deplored the record of Congress and the Administration to date, but reaffirmed support of Eisenhower on policies the CIO believes are the best for the country. The other emphasized the importance of state political action and urged widespread participation in this year's elections.

DEPRESSION-MONGERS in business press were denounced by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther at PAC rally. He holds Business Week story titled "Everybody Expects A Recession."

"GRASS-ROOTS" drives in city and state elections this fall were urged by CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald in preparation for the congressional campaign next year.

GOP Or Dixiecrats, They're Both Giving Us Trouble—

Some of the comment from a few of the 32 CIO state spokesmen who reported on legislation during the PAC rally follows:

Reg. Dir. Gus Scholle, Michigan: "With Congress cutting appropriations for unemployment compensation, state offices must cut staffs and close field offices; this means some workers will have to travel a long distance at their own expense to file a claim."

Pres. Harry Boyer, Pennsylvania CIO Council: "The Legislature had two bills, one good and one bad. The House passed both, the Senate passed only the bad one."

Sec.-Treas. John J. Driscoll, Connecticut CIO Council: "The Republicans gave us a phony deal on unemployment compensation, pretending to give something but taking away more."

Pres. Cecil A. Robertson, Alabama CIO Council: "I hear complaints here about Republicans blocking our bills. We have one in the House and none in the Senate, and we still have our troubles."

CIO Rep. John Alesia, Illinois: "I'm happy to report we picked up a few crumbs, and lost nothing, with GOP majorities in both houses."

Sec.-Treas. Charles Canton, Arkansas CIO Council: "Republicans? Oh, we've got two or three of them, but we don't count 'em. We've a lot of Dixiecrats, though, and they give us trouble."

Reuther Named By Ike To Anti-Bias Contracts Board

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther has been named by Pres. Eisenhower to membership on the new 15-man committee to prevent discriminatory employment practices by companies with federal contracts.

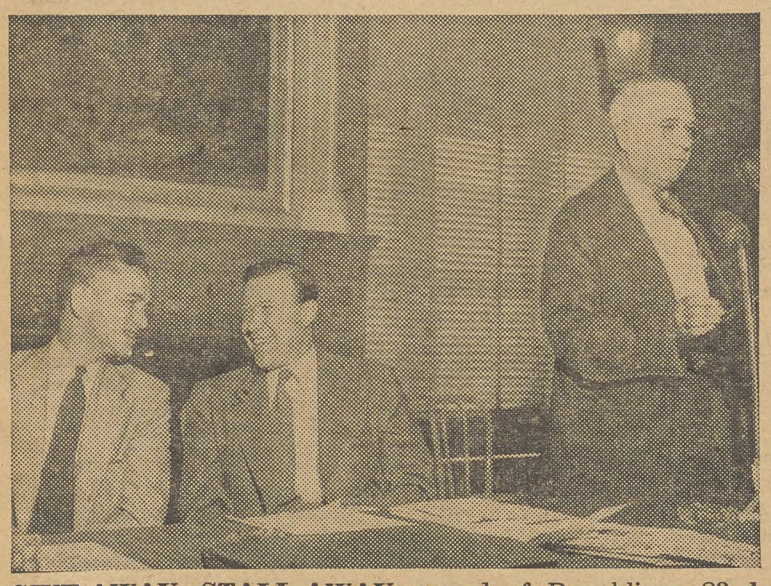
The new group supplants former Pres. Truman's committee on government contract compliance, on which CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey served.

Membership on the new Government Contract Committee includes nine public members and six from government agencies—one each from the Atomic Energy Commission, General Services Administration and Labor, Justice, Defense and Commerce Depts.

Vice Pres. Nixon was designated as chairman of the committee. J. Ernest Wilkins, a Chicago lawyer and the only Negro on the panel, was named vice chairman.

After some members of the committee met with the President in New York last week, Nixon said the first formal meeting of the group will be held Sept. 14 in Washington.

Also appointed by the President were AFL Pres. George Meany; John Roosevelt, son of the former president; Mrs. Helen Rogers Reid of the New York Herald Tribune; Fred Lazarus, Jr., Cincinnati, O., department store executive; John Lawrence McCaffrey, head of Intl. Harvester Co; and Atty. John Minor Wisdom, GOP national committeeman from Louisiana.



GIVE-AWAY, STALL-AWAY record of Republican 83rd Congress was detailed by CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll at rally in preparation for '53 and '54 elections. At left: CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

REACTIONARIES in both Democratic and Republican parties were lambasted by James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer.

Looking Ahead

". . . A record of doing too little for the little people and too much for the big boys."

That's how the CIO Executive Board last week summarized the first session of the 83rd Congress.

And it's a summary that applies as well to some developments in the collective bargaining field.

The dismal record of give-away, take-away, stall-away of the GOP Congress was pretty thoroughly worked over by CIO's board and the one-day national rally of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Now ahead for all CIO unionists are twin political action tasks: first, the more than 600 state, county and city elections this fall, and, second, the 1954 congressional election campaign which actually begins with primaries early in the New Year.

"We need more, not less" work for PAC, as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the rally. Now is the time to start.

In What Place?

After the votes were counted last year, a lot of big businessmen and a lot of daily newspaper editors with scarcely-concealed glee boasted that "now we'll put labor in its place."

Judging from recent developments in the strike of CIO Communications Workers in Indiana and by the protracted walkout of CIO Distributive Workers at Hearn's stores in New York City, the effort to put us in what some businessmen think is in our place is getting under way.

The pattern is clearest in Indiana. There 7000 CWA members, in the second month of a bitter walkout, find Indiana Bell Telephone, the State Chamber of Commerce, the Republican governor and state police, and the Republican mayor of Indianapolis and city police combining forces in an effort to defeat their fair and just demands.

The pattern of police attacks on picket lines has not been repeated, as yet, in the CWA strike against Southwestern Bell, at Hearn's, or in the Newspaper Guild strike at the Seattle Times. But in all of these, and in many other bargaining situations, there is a pattern of adamant managements—of "too little for the little people and too much for the big boys."

With this in mind, CIO's Executive Board pledged fullest possible assistance to CWA, ANG and DPO in their strike situations.

And the Republican governors and mayors, the telephone company executives and the newspaper editors might remember that American labor—CIO, AFL and independent—knows its "place" full well, an honorable place in our nation, and we shall keep it.

The Strikes In France

"Too little for the little people and too much for the big boys" in a nutshell also describes what's been developing ever since World War II in France.

Now the economic pressures have exploded in a general strike in which the Workers' Force (FO) federation has taken the lead. While U. S. labor differs with European federations over the general strike tactic, we sympathize with the French workers.

"When repressed workers cannot get relief from economic injustice at the bargaining table," as Pres. Reuther noted, "that pressure from below is going to boil over into political strikes . . . That's what happened in France."

In Other Words—

A Story Of CIOers On The Job

The following article, "Railroad Redcaps—Investment in Good Will," is reprinted from the Christian Science Monitor. It is one of a series on "People At Work" by Ed Townsend.

By ED TOWNSEND

Redcap No. 70, John A. Bowers, was carrying her bags. He called to another redcap, who helped revive the woman. A third redcap, able to speak Spanish fluently, questioned her. He found that the woman had a brother in New York. The redcaps located him, and Bowers—once a valet for America's elder statesman Bernard Baruch—stayed with the woman until the brother arrived to take her home.

All this was in an ordinary day's work for the redcaps, a group of workers—about 12,000 nationally—due far more attention than they usually get in the bustle of a big-city depot.

Among railroad redcaps, members of CIO's United Transport Service Employees, are many who have medical or law degrees, are ordained ministers, hold teaching certificates, or are college graduates or students.

Robert Lewin, labor writer for the Chicago Daily News, recently toured the city's nine major railroad stations. He reported afterward that he had found in them redcaps able to help those who need a doctor, the advice of a lawyer, the comfort of a minister, or a quick answer to a scholarly question.

And he commented that he had found that Chicago's redcaps quite obviously are among "the nation's most educated" laborites.

It's More Than A Job

Take Emerson C. Watts, president of the Chicago CIO redcaps' local union, as an example: Seventeen years a redcap, Watts is a graduate of Fisk Univ. at Nashville, where he was a star football fullback.

He later took graduate work at Northwestern Univ. Why is he a redcap, with such a background? To Watts, and to many like him in the nation's terminal, the work of a redcap is not just a job; it's a profession, one that pays reasonably well ($75 to $90 a week, on the average, with many earning considerable more) and that gives a satisfying sense of service.

The situation in Chicago is typical of that throughout the country; redcap jobs are filled substantially from the ranks of graduates of colleges or of students in colleges and professional schools.

The president of the United Transport Service Employees, Willard Saxby Townsend, Sr., of Chicago, is unquestionably one of the best educated union leaders. He studied in a premedical school at the Univ. of Toronto for two years; received a degree in chemistry at the Royal Academy of Science in Canada; and has an honorary doctor of laws degree from Wilberforce Univ.

Townsend likes to cite "alumni" of the redcaps' union, among them: Dr. Joseph Walker, a Winston-Salem, N. C., surgeon who lugged bags in Chicago while studying; James Nabrit, secretary of Howard Univ. in Washington, and an honor graduate (Order of Coif) of Northwestern's Law School; Lester B. Granger, New York, executive secretary of the National Urban League, president of the National Conference of Social Work, and a Dartmouth graduate; Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., a New York Democrat; and Dr. James Wilson, now head of a sanitarium in New York's Harlem.

'The Preaching Porter'

Townsend is equally proud of his working redcaps, and likes to tell stories about them. About the "preaching porter of track 13" in New York's Grand Central Terminal, for instance.

Ralston Crosby Young, Redcap No. 42, leads a prayer meeting in a coach inside Gate 13 at noon every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. At first intended only for other railroad employes during their lunch hour, the services now draw bankers, businessmen, stenographers, clerks, and many others.

"There's lots of people you can't get into a church that will slip into a darkened railroad car," Mr. Young says.

The New York Central Railroad long ago took official notice of the redcap's prayer service by setting aside a coach for him.

Railroads say they lose money on redcap service, but they add that it is worth-while loss—a sound investment in good will.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THIS IS A PRETTY DULL town just now, what with congressmen either junketing abroad or mending political fences back home and with Pres. Eisenhower playing his golf in Denver instead of at Burning Tree Country Club. Still the political cauldron is beginning to bubble now that Adlai E. Stevenson is back from his world tour.

The first major Democratic counter-offensive against Ike will be unlimbered when Harry S. Truman and Stevenson—the big guns of the "loyal opposition"—start shooting in September.

Truman will speak in Detroit on Labor Day under joint auspices of the CIO and AFL. Stevenson, backed up by Truman, will fire for the Democrats on Sept. 15 in Chicago.

A Contradictory Situation

A remarkable political situation shaped up during Mr. Eisenhower's first eight months in the White House. Within this Capital city there was disillusion about the President's "leadership."

To the professionals he seemed confused, ill-informed, overwhelmed by unanticipated problems, and utterly dependent on his advisers. There was evidence—previously reported by this correspondent—to support this viewpoint.

There was plenty of evidence that the country outside Washington felt that Ike was "doing just fine."

A good test group, the half-Dixiecrats from Texas—Democrats who voted for Mr. Eisenhower last November—maintained their enthusiasm for him. Letters to their congressmen denounced the Republican regime for slackness on drouth relief, confusion and delay on a new farm program, but almost unanimously said that Ike was "doing even better than we expected."

Prepare Their Shots

Democratic members of Congress launched many attacks on Ike's subordinates but cautiously refrained from assaults on the hero-general himself. Now Truman and Stevenson are preparing their sighting shots.

Mr. Truman, it can be safely predicted, will say nothing that would make direction of foreign policy more difficult for the President. He is intensely patriotic and he despises the tactics of oppositionists who inject partisanship into our worldwide problems.

He is, however, a hard-hitting political warrior. He can smash with devastating effect against a "do-nothing" Congress and a "give-away" GOP regime in domestic affairs.

Gov. Stevenson's gift of wit promises another threat. One does not attack the hero-general—but one may blow the house down on gusts and gales of ridicule. The self-righteous, unregenerated "new team" of pro-business, anti-consumer, anti-labor Republican subordinates has invited it.

Mr. Eisenhower it is reliably reported, has had healing experiences in Denver now that Congress is out of his hair and he can fish and golf far from this city's inferno of heat and humidity—weatherwise as well as in the realm of politics. His tensions have relaxed.

Politics, however, takes only brief holidays. The Truman-Stevenson speeches are a double-barreled threat to the Republican party's peace of mind.

A Policy Against Power

The "new team" in the Interior Dept. finally announced its public power policy: against public power.

Neither Sec. McKay nor Under-Sec. Ralph Tudor would baldly admit this, of course. All Tudor did was to announce, in the absence of McKay, a complete reversal of the Roosevelt-Truman power policies.

The "primary responsibility" for supplying an area's power needs, said Tudor, "rests with the people locally." Also, the Interior Dept. will be cautious hereafter in selling public power direct to big industries. McKay and Tudor prefer to sell to an intermediate private utility and let the private utility make a profit by reselling to big industries. This, they seem to think, is "free enterprise."

The McKay-Tudor doctrine would never have built the Tennessee Valley Authority or the great dams and power grids now in the Bonneville Power Administration. The McKay-Tudor doctrine would have prevented the development of the tremendous Northwestern aluminum industry, dependent on cheap public power sold direct at the lowest possible rates.

McKay and Tudor despise public power, if the truth is to be stated, but they don't like to confess it. They prefer to kill public power expansion without leaving fingerprints.

Brownell Makes A Discovery

Atty. Gen. Brownell flew out to Denver to confer with Pres. Eisenhower on a suddenly discovered "new problem"—the problem of Mexican "wetbacks."

The "problem," of course, has existed for many years. Labor and liberal groups for years have urged that Congress increase appropriations for the Labor Dept. program to bring Mexican "contract" labor into the Southwest and Far West under proper minimum conditions.

The 200,000 annual "contract" workers have protections in guarantees of decent play, decent food and lodging. The "wetbacks"—Mexican workers who swarm across our borders illegally at the rate of more than a million a year—have no protections.

They are victimized by ranchers who use them to undercut the wages of American farm laborers. They have no safeguards against illness, such as tuberculosis and venereal diseases. They get deported back to Mexico each year at the rate of more than half a million—and international relations are strained.

'Flesh, Blood, Muscle'—

U. S. Labor Has Bigger Task In Building Free World's Strength

AMERICAN LABOR can no longer entrust the survival and growth of democracy in Europe solely to government agencies, diplomatic relationships and professional organizations, according to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Carey's views, based on his recent trip to Europe, were given on the Mutual Broadcasting System's Newsreel of the Air.

"American labor must take a more active interest and play a more active role," he said, "in the struggle of European workers for political and economic democracy and against totalitarianism.

"American labor has already undertaken an active role in the development of a democratic European labor movement. My trip through Europe, however, emphasized to me that trade unionism in the United States must do still more—for the sake not only of European democracy, but also of American democracy."

Carey said he found democratic labor in Europe distrustful or uncertain of U. S. foreign policy.

What The Commies Claim

"On one hand," he continued, "they are told we are turning isolationist. On the other, the Communists tell them that 'Wall Street imperialism' is striving to provoke another world war. These workers and their leaders are puzzled and hurt by the McCarran Immigration Act, excluding as it does many of Europe's greatest fighters against totalitarianism.

"Here is where American labor has a second major job to do. We must help put our own house in order so that the doubts and distrust we find in Europe can be dissolved."

The stakes in the fight between democracy and totalitarianism are the greatest in human history, he declared.

"We are fighting maybe the beginning of a final battle for freedom, decency and human dignity," he explained. "We cannot win that fight unless we have as our allies the working men and women of Europe—and, of course, of Asia, too."

Carey expressed the wish that "every American concerned about his country's future" could have attended meetings of the Intl. Confederation of Free Labor in Stockholm, where he was a CIO delegate.

"We shaped a program which we are determined will strengthen democracy in countries around the world where it now has a chance to flourish," he said, "and revitalize democracy in countries where it is now weakened or in danger.

"We will do this by moral support, by direct financial and organizational help, by working through the United Nations and through our own governments in every land.

"The serious demonstrations of unrest in France, the fall of the Italian government, point to problems that can only be solved in these and other countries by economic advances.

ICFTU Program Hailed

"If living standards and economic security are not improved, unrest must inevitably continue, governments will fall, and millions of workers in Europe and Asia may not have either the capacity or the will to resist a new tide of communism.

"There is where the ICFTU, American labor and trade unionism in every free country can play a huge part. Probably more than any other section of the world's population, the democratic labor movement—the ICFTU—knows the real menace of communism, because communism has never and can never come to power without first destroying democratic labor.

"We must not only fight communism with every weapon we can devise in every country where communism threatens. We must also put flesh, blood and muscle into political and economic democracy throughout the world."

Book Review—

A Handbook For CIO-CSC Work

By GENE KELLEY

"THE TWENTIETH CENTURY has seen the genius of industrial America take the great discoveries of physical science and apply them to the creation of amazing material products to be enjoyed by all.

"Now on the threshold of the humanitarian genius of America is the opportunity to apply the discoveries of psychiatric, medical and social science in the progressive diminution of age-long causes and community-wide manifestations of human suffering."

This challenging proposition occurs in the foreword to "Let's Work Together in Community Service," which is No. 194 in the series of Public Affairs Pamphlets. It is a study by Eloise Walton of the materials in "Community Planning for Human Services" by Bradley Buell, a work that turned the searchlight of scrutiny on the many-problem families of St. Paul, Minn., and which suggested remedies, mainly the integration of effort by social agencies rather than separate piecemeal action.

The Basic Causes

Buell's monumental work spelled out a developing trend in welfare thinking—that social agencies must focus their concern more sharply on the basic causes of family difficulties rather than the alleviation of the ills of individual members and in so doing must make more effort to pool their resources.

Much of the pamphlet is given over to a case study of the Cummings family, a group that individually and collectively has more problems than any to be heard on a radio soap opera and, incidentally, problems of a type never mentioned even by inference on radio.

Sixteen agencies knew about and served the Cummings family. The study makes the point that if these agencies had a way of getting together at the earliest contact in a family-focused attack on the sources of the family's difficulties, they probably could have helped the parents of this unhappy brood to prevent, understand and control their situation.

10 Million Families

"Each special agency has knowledge and skills which the others cannot duplicate," Miss Walton says. "But in the search for better ways of treatment of the particular ills that threaten an estimated 10 million families today, the fields of service, the agencies within them . . . have tended to proceed separately and piecemeal. Here, perhaps, without united effort, all the King's horses and all the King's men will be unable to make Humpty Dumpty whole again."

The pamphlet rates a place on the reading list of CIO people concerned with community relations. Some of the case studies will be familiar to those who have become union counsellors through CIO-Community Services Committee courses because they are so typical. Perhaps through the growing influence of these people in communities where they are active they may bring about some of the aims the pamphlet makes so desirable.

'Mystic Order Of The Itching Stitch'—

The City Of Hope Gives Faith To Workers

MEET Louise Thorpe, a cheerful, bright-eyed patient in the medical service section of the famed City of Hope medical center near Los Angeles, Calif.

Louise is a member of Local 44, CIO Rubber Workers. She also holds a lifetime certificate in the "Mystic Order of the Itching Stitch." For Louise, hospitalized four years, has won a dramatic victory over tuberculosis.

Several months ago she underwent surgery. A lobe was removed from her left lung. With its excision went the disease.

Louise is a "union maid" with a union man for a mate. Her husband, Frank Thorpe, is a member of Local 519 of the CIO Oil Workers. Their home is in Montebello, Calif.

Louise Dilbeck Thorpe was born in Shawnee, Okla., July 3, 1922, and lived there until 1941 when she moved to California. She found work as a splicer for a tire builder at a U. S. Rubber Co. plant while Frank was in the service.

A Famous Name

The Thorpe name is famous all over the world but in Oklahoma it is spoken with the reverence accorded that of Will Rogers, another famous son. For it was in Oklahoma that Jim Thorpe, characterized as the world's greatest all-around athlete, was born and raised and it was here only a few weeks ago that he was buried.

The exploits of Jim Thorpe are well known to Frank and Louise Thorpe. Frank Thorpe is a member of the Sac and Fox tribe and was a nephew of the great Indian athlete and the apple of his uncle's eye.

Louise knows of the disappointment Jim felt when Frank told him he was getting married, for he sensed this might be the end of Frank's promising athletic career. Jim Thorpe hoped that the Olympic medals he won years before, and which were so rightfully his, might yet go to a Thorpe. But when war came, Jim became reconciled to the marriage of his nephew. Louise last saw Jim in October 1952, when he came to her bedside at the City of Hope.

ADMIRING the pussy-cat dolls made by Jasper Sanders, center, CIO Steelworker from Oklahoma City, as occupational therapy project are O'Dell Clayton and Bob Goss, officials of Local 584, CIO Oil Workers, who visited him.

In 1949 Louise was home on a visit to Shawnee and was persuaded by her sister-in-law to accompany her to the Shawnee Indian Sanatorium. There she was talked into having a chest X-ray. The diagnosis — tuberculosis. It was hard for her to believe, she'd never been sick—why, she was the most active member of her family. But she returned at once to Los Angeles and entered a sanatorium there.

Bills Mount Up

It was costing the Thorpes $200 a month, plus doctor's bills. Her union health benefits took care of $160 of this but the Thorpes, being average working people, found that medical bills can mount up fast and savings can melt like ice under the midsummer sun.

After three months, Louise was discharged from this sanatorium. She took things easy at home, cared for by her mother, but she caught a cold. Get back to a hospital at once, the doctors advised.

City of Hope Has CIO Backing

Commendation for the City of Hope "for its free and non-sectarian program of specialized medical service" was contained in a resolution adopted at the National CIO convention. Affiliates of the CIO were urged to give moral and material support to the institution.

Medical service at the City of Hope, the resolution said, "is rendered not on a charity basis but rather in a spirit of brotherhood and humanity in which the dignity of the individual is maintained."

Through the secretary of her husband's Oil Workers local, arrangements were made for Louise to be interviewed for admission to the City of Hope. Her application was accepted. In February 1951, a bed was available and Louise entered the last stage of her battle to regain her health.

The operation a few months ago was the climax. Surgeons worked over her for more than six hours during which she was given 15 blood transfusions. Frank's fellow union members in Local 519 gave the blood for those transfusions. The operation was a complete success.

As part of her occupational therapy, Louise knits. Before she entered the City of Hope she admits she didn't know one end of the needle from another. Now Frank has argyle socks to prove she's an expert knitter and she has made things for other members of her family.

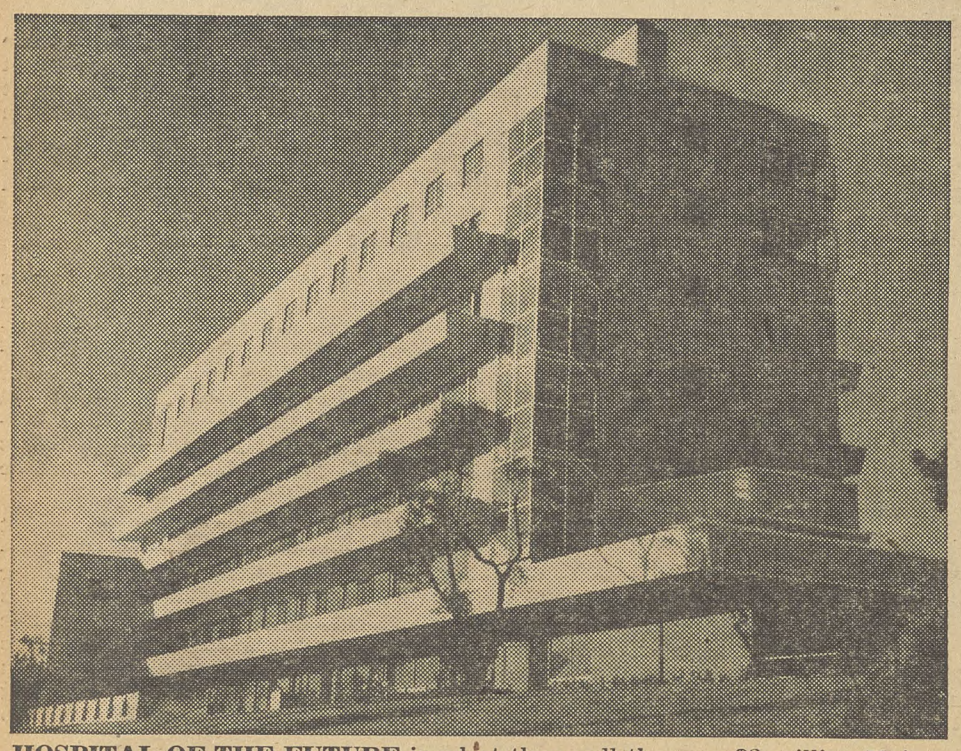
Almost everyone in the family, incidentally, have been union members since they started working. With her husband in the Oil Workers are her brother, L. Z. Dilbeck, a mechanic, and Morris Bud Thorpe who is in the pipeline department with Frank. All work at General Petroleum. Louise's father has been a member of a railroad brotherhood for 32 years.

Louise feels that "more union people should visit the City of Hope because it's hard to believe that such a wonderful place is available to union members unless you see it. Of course," she continues, "you really can't tell just how great the City of Hope is unless you've been a patient—and I don't wish that on anyone."

'Can't Help But Love It'

She is quick to remind her visitors that the City of Hope is a national medical center, not just for chest patients, but also for victims of cancer, leukemia and heart cases amenable to surgery. Louise will tell you of the medical research being carried on there.

"Once you know the work that is being done, you can't help but love the City of Hope," she says. "And knowing that it's free, nonsectarian and national, to me means that the City of Hope is a true follower of American democracy."



HOSPITAL OF THE FUTURE is what they call the new $3 million Kaiser Foundation Medical Center in Los Angeles. CIO Steel and Auto Workers are among the unions which use the ample facilities of the 224-bed institution, a model of its kind.

HOTEL-STYLE LIVING is featured at the Kaiser Foundation Medical Center. The top floors are reserved for convalescents who finish out their stay in cheery surroundings like this, away from the atmosphere of illness. Patients can even sleep late in the morning.

Douglas Urges 'Constructive' Labor Law, 10 Basic Changes

CALLING FOR "a constructive program of labor-management relations," Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) last week listed seven major legislative goals, including 10 major revisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, on which the 83rd Congress failed to act.

His summary was made in letters to Maurice F. McElligott, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois CIO Council, and to the Illinois AFL.

Douglas, who is one of the ranking minority members of the Senate Labor Committee, said the Taft-Hartley revisions deserve "prompt consideration." He listed the amendments he regards "among the most important" as follows:

- Speeding up the procedures of the NLRB so that "justice delayed" does not become "justice denied."
- Restoring to economic strikers the right to vote in NLRB elections, "in order to remove a serious union-busting power."
- Reestablishing the priority of federal provisions governing union security, "to eliminate discriminatory and varying state restrictions."
- "Modifying the unworkable union security provisions generally," and allowing security clauses in prehiring agreements in industries with intermittent employment, such as maritime or building trades.
- Removing the "one-sided character" of the non-Communist affidavit requirement and authorizing more effective steps to combat communism.
- Reducing and simplifying "the costly and time-consuming" filing requirements involving union finances and constitutional data.
- Removing the mandatory requirement that the government seek injunctions against secondary boycotts and permitting such boycotts against struck work moved to the plant of another employer.
- Extending protection to supervisory employes who have no real power to hire, fire, promote or discipline.
- Limiting the definition of union "agents" to those with actual union authorization, and clarifying the "free speech" guarantee so that it cannot be used as "a cover for coercion and intimidation."
- Providing a "more effective procedure" than the present 80-day injunction to encourage settlement of national emergency disputes.

Douglas also listed in his "positive" program for the next session the revision and extension of social security, expansion of rehabilitation services for the handicapped, increased appropriations for enforcement of the wage and hour and child labor laws, enactment of fair employment practices legislation, and establishment of a Federal Committee on Migratory Labor.

He added that "labor and the whole country need a rejection of the give-away tendency and a more forthright projection and administration of our programs for better housing, maximum resource development, fair taxation, and a balanced economy, maintaining jobs and production at their high levels and evening out some of the low points—for instance for the farmers."

Harvey O'Connor Gets Oil Workers' Backing

SUPPORT for Harvey O'Connor, author and former CIO Oil Workers publicity director, in his refusal to testify on his political beliefs before Sen. McCarthy's investigating subcommittee was voiced editorially in the latest issue of the Intl. Oil Worker, the union's official publication.

O'Connor invoked the First Amendment to the Constitution rather than the fifth in refusing to answer McCarthy. The First Amendment guarantees free speech, while the fifth protects the individual against giving self-incriminating testimony.

The editorial called McCarthy's questioning "impudent and impertinent" and said that "we believe more citizens should boldly oppose, as O'Connor has, the McCarthy witchhunt and smear campaign."

O'Connor, who was cited for contempt of the Senate when he refused to tell McCarthy if he were a Communist, was subpoenaed by the committee because some of his books have been placed in overseas information libraries by the U. S. State Dept.

Although he refused to answer McCarthy, O'Connor freely answered questions about his political views by Providence, R. I., reporters who met the train when he was en route home from the hearing.

He told the local newspapermen:

"I am not a Communist.

"I have never been a Communist.

"I am perfectly willing to tell anyone how I stand except on demand from such a legislative group. They have no right to inquire into my politics.

"I'm interested in their politics, as a voter. It's they who are running for office. I'm not."

It was not made clear which of O'Connor's books were involved in what the Oil Worker publication called "McCarthy's latest book-burning effort." Apparently one of them was the official "History of the Oil Workers Intl. Union," written under a commission granted by the OWIU executive council in 1948 and published by the union in 1950.

THE UNION has supplied copies of the book without charge at various times in answer to requests from a number of government agencies for overseas distribution.

O'Connor has also written "Mellon's Millions," a biography of Pittsburgh financier Andrew J. Mellon; biographies of the Guggenheim and Astor families and "Steel Dictator," a study of the steel industry.

The specific question asked by McCarthy was this:

"At the time you wrote the books. . . were you a member of the Communist conspiracy?"

O'Connor's answer was that under the First Amendment to the Constitution "my writings, my books, and my political opinions are of no legitimate concern to this committee." His second objection was that under constitutional limitations of congressional powers the committee had no right to make such an inquiry.

"In the third place," Mr. O'Connor told the committee, "I would object to the authority of the committee (to make such an inquiry) under the statute by which it was created by Congress."

THE CONTEMPT citation came after this refusal and, according to the Oil Worker, the Congressional Record account of the passage of the resolution "shows that there was no debate on the question and no vote."

The editorial in the union paper said "Harvey O'Connor did a good thing in refusing to answer Joe McCarthy. We believe that McCarthy served no good purpose by asking the question. We believe that he had no legal right to do it.

"We hope that when O'Connor stands trial the jury sees fit to endorse his stand. We are on Harvey O'Connor's side of this argument every inch of the way."

Jersey CIO Asks Night Registration

NEW JERSEY CIO Pres. Carl Holderman called on public officials to increase night registration facilities to take care of the 700,000 eligible citizens not yet registered to vote in the Nov. 3 gubernatorial election.

Disclosing the results of a CIO county-by-county survey, Holderman charged that "public officeholders—from Gov. Alfred Driscoll and Sec. of State Lloyd Marsh down to the Republican county election board members—apparently are concerned with increasing registration only in those years when, like 1952, it would benefit Republican candidates."

With the Sept. 24 deadline for registration only a few weeks away and one out of five persons over 21 years of age in New Jersey not yet registered, Holderman said "only the opening of additional facilities and evening hours will make it possible for these people to register."

IUE Wins RCA Office Staff

The CIO Electrical Workers have been recognized as the bargaining agent for salaried office employes of the Radio Corp. of America at its plants in Camden and Elizabeth, N. J.

Recognition came after a two-year organizing drive. The large force of workers are members of IUE-CIO Local 110. About 12,000 RCA employes are members of IUE-CIO.

Detroit CIO Supports 7 In City Council Contest

SEVEN candidates have received backing by the Wayne County CIO Council for election to the Detroit Common Council, Pres. Mike Novak of the CIO body announced.

They are: Mary V. Beck, Edward Connor, Louis C. Miriani and Eugene I. Van Antwerp, incumbents; and Charles C. Diggs, Jr., Dr. Orville Linck and Stanley Novak.

Diggs is a Democratic state senator who has compiled what the CIO Council called "an outstanding liberal record in the Michigan Legislature.'" Dr. Linck is a former chairman of Americans for Democratic Action and is active in the Detroit Federation of Teachers, AFL. Novak, who is serving his third term in the Legislature, has been a supporter of the policies of Democratic Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

The Wayne County Council also issued a statement calling for a "liberal-labor political coalition that will challenge the inertia and do-nothing attitude of those who would disregard the community's needs."

The CIO in Detroit made no endorsement in the mayoralty race, but made it clear that such atcion "did not mean backhanded support of incumbent Albert E. Cobo."

J. E. Dillon Gets Civil Defense Post

John E. Dillon, chairman of the White Collar and Salaried Workers Conference of the CIO Electrical Workers, has been named CIO representative in the Federal Civil Defense Administration.

A former president of IUE-CIO Local 425, at the Ford Instrument Co. in New York, Dillon was also a long-time leader in the anti-Communist fight within the United Electrical Workers. For the past two years, he has been a labor specialist in the Electronics Div. of the National Production Authority.

Sorry, Name Was Wrong On Drive To Curb Severance Pay

THE CIO News was wrong with a name but correct with the facts on attempts of Hearst newspaper management to curb the unemployment insurance rights of CIO Newspaper Guildsmen in California.

The bill, which would have denied jobless or disability benefits to union members for any period in which they received severance pay, was pocket vetoed by Gov. Earl Warren after the recent session of the California Legislature.

In reporting the veto, The CIO News on Aug. 3 mistakenly identified Robert Bassett, Hearst labor relations counsel, as promoting the bill along with John B. Long, general manager of the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

The Hearst newspaper lobbyist who helped push the bill, according to the Bay Guildsman, San Francisco-Oakland Guild local paper, was Ross Marshall.

Bassett, in correspondence requesting a correction, made emphatic his own support of efforts to deny unemployment benefits to discharged Guildsmen because of benefits they receive under their union contract.

The California case originated with suspension of a Hearst newspaper, the Oakland Post-Enquirer, almost three years ago. After a state agency denied benefits to Guildsmen, the ANG won a lower court decision reversing the order. That decision was appealed by Hearst Corp. attorneys and it is still pending. Then the newspaper publishers tried to get the Legislature to change the law in their favor.

THE BILL was cited at the recent ANG convention and by Sam Eubanks, SFONG executive secretary, in the latest Guild Reporter, as an example of how political action by employers is aimed at labor's gains through economic bargaining.

The jobless pay curb, Eubanks pointed out, "is essentially a means test and should be followed logically by disqualification of those who have savings accounts, automobiles or houses." He predicted renewed efforts to enact the bill in the next Legislature.

GCEOC Protests, Stassen Stands Pat On Firing Tests

VIGOROUS protests against "intelligence" tests for the 1700 Washington employes of the Foreign Operations Administration got nowhere last week with Harold E. Stassen, head of the agency formerly known as Mutual Security Agency.

Appeals by committees from Local 1 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee to delay the tests were flatly refused.

Stassen, once governor of Minnesota, told GCEOC-CIO leaders that the "aptitude examinations" were necessary to weed out 300 to 400 employes of FOA. He declined to poll employes on their attitude to the test, arbitrate the issue or delay the exams for discussion later.

THE CIO government workers' union claimed the tests are unwarranted and unprecedented. Stassen has absolute authority under the law to determine who shall be laid off. Legal experts say this authority is broad enough to set aside civil service and veterans' preference requirements.

Budget cuts by Congress are blamed for the necessity of dismissing FOA employes. Stassen says results of the tests he has ordered will be only one of the factors in determing who is fired and who will be retained.

Representatives of GCEOC-CIO have termed the tests "degrading in every sense of the word."

They contend that any worker laid off after the test will "never be able to erase the stigma from his name." Stassen said results of the test would not become part of a worker's civil service record.

How Times Have Changed—

Republican Campaign Platform, 1952: "Federal employes shall be selected under a strengthened and extended merit system."

The Washington Post, Aug. 19, 1953: "Civil Service Commission yesterday removed eight additional Interior jobs from the career system and invited political appointments to them. The jobs are:

"The director and three assistant directors of the National Park Service; the administrator and assistant director of the Southwestern Power Administration; the program director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the secretary of Bonneville Power."

Bishop McConnell Is Dead At 82

Francis J. McConnell, retired Methodist Bishop, writer and educator died Aug. 18th at his home at Lucasville, O., on his eighty-second birthday.

Bishop McConnell, a life-long liberal, had continued to preach and write until quite recently on behalf of those causes he felt to be just. During the early Twenties, Bishop McConnell led an interdenominational investigation of the 1919 steel strike and won improvements in working conditions for the then unorganized steelworkers.

GOP Announces New Power Policy 'Reversing' Fair Deal

THE EISENHOWER Administration last week announced a sweeping new Republican policy on public power development.

An Interior Dept. spokesman said the new program is designed to "reverse the trend" of the low-rate policies of the New Deal and Fair Deal eras.

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) branded the new policy as "entirely unsatisfactory." He predicted a return to the "power trust" days of 1933 and higher electric rates.

Kefauver said the policy was "a restatement of a program that would be destructive of the Tennessee Valley Authority, The Rural Electrification Administration and other public power operations in the nation."

One high Interior Dept. official said the policy is aimed at "stopping the government invasion of the private utilities power field.

"He added that if local communities want and need power and are unable to get it from private business or their own government they then can get it from the federal government.

THE SAME official said the federal government was not abandoning the program of building multi-purpose dams. He said the new program was part of Pres. Eisenhower's campaign pledge to take the government out of business wherever he could.

In response to a question whether the new policy would provide the country with more and cheaper power, an official stated: "The federal government isn't big enough to get all the power needed in the country today, so that this policy will encourage other bodies to help.

"On cheaper power, we can't continue to get power as cheap as in the past, nor can anyone else. The cost of construction, among other things, has gone up and that has to be recognized."

The new policy provides that preference in the sale of public power shall be given to public bodies, such as municipalities, and cooperatives, such as rural cooperatives.

The spokesman could not see this policy as "shutting the door" on any large industrial users planning to use federal power. Policy under previous administrations, he added, tended to put industrial users higher on the preferred list of consumers.

The Interior Dept. says the new policy is based on the "partnership principles" stressed by the President during his campaign last fall. It said primary responsibility for supplying the power needs of any area will rest with "the people locally." The government will be a "partner" with state and local communities and private enterprise.

In Denver, where he was vacationing, Eisenhower endorsed the policy and claimed "it will serve the best interests of all the people."

HENCEFORTH, electric power and energy will be sold "at the lowest possible rates to consumers consistent with sound business principles." No rate controls for power resale will be imposed by the government in contracts with public agencies or cooperatives. In other contracts, resale will be prohibited unless the purchaser is a public utility concerned with serving domestic and rural customers.

No mention was made in the policy statement of possible plans to sell to private interests, or otherwise interfere with, the Tennessee Valley Authority which the President has critized as an evidence of "creeping socialism."

McKay Refuses To Meet With CIOer

Sec. of the Interior McKay flatly refused to go through with a recent meeting with a committee from the National Hells Canyon Association so long as Sec.-Treas. Harold Slater of the Washington State CIO Council was a member.

Slater is an active member of the association fighting to stop the give-away of the Hells Canyon dam site in the Snake River to the Idaho Power Co. He assisted in arranging the meeting, during McKay's recent visit to Seattle, Wash.

PAC Helps CCF Gain In Canada

By HENRY E. WEISBACH
Executive Secretary
Political Action Committee
Canadian Congress of Labor

CANADA'S federal election, held on Aug. 10, returned the Liberal Party, the party of big business, again to power.

The new Canadian Parliament will be as one-sided as the last and a strong opposition will still be missing.

The most promising aspect of the election was the gain made by the Cooperative Commonweath Federation (CCF). the "political-arm" of the CCL. Political action was greater than ever, and the successes of the CCF in industrial areas of Western Canada can largely be attributed to the efforts of organized labor.

The Conservative Party, also favored by big business, went into the campaign confident of unseating the Liberal government. Like the Republicans in the United States, George Drew, the Conservative leader, campaigned under the slogan "It's time for a change." Canadian voters, however, thought otherwise.

CCF representation increased from 13 to 23 seats, mostly from Western Canada. In the East, the CCF held what they had before. In the past House of Commons the CCF led the fight for labor's rights against a combination of big business blocks.

Political action work of the CCL was considerably increased over previous years, and thousands of trade unionists were active in the campaign. The CCF was the only party which had a large number of candidates from the ranks of the union movement, thereby indicating that the CCF is labor's party in Canada.

The most encouraging sign was the fact that so many PAC people took an active part in the campaign. Political action has increased steadily because union members realize that many problems cannot be solved across the bargaining table but must be fought for in legislative chambers.

The CCL Political Action Committee has already worked out plans for further activities and will concentrate their efforts on all levels of government—municipal, provincial, as well as federal.

While the Liberal government is taking orders from big business, the CCF, which is the workers' and farmers' party, will press for better social legislation and will carry the fight for labor's program to the floor of the House of Commons.

French Staff Of CIO's Paris Office Gives Pay To Strikers

FRENCH employes of the CIO European Office in Paris stayed on the job last week when they were called out to support French labor's general strike—but they did it with the consent of their leaders.

All office workers were called out for 24 hours by their Force Ouviere (FO) union to show their solidarity with workers staging one of the most widespread general strikes ever to hit any country.

THE CIO office staff suggested working when they were supposed to be picketing, and contributing their wages to the strikers. FO leaders agreed—and now the FO strike fund is 25,000 franc richer.

The FO, which is affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, called the walkout — really a series of strikes—in opposition to government economy decrees raising the retirement age for government employes and threatening firings. The Christian unions promptly joined in. The Communists climbed on the bandwagon, but have failed in efforts to control the movement.

More than two million workers were on strike at times. Practically every phase of French life was affected.

13c Pay Hike Won By N.Y. Oil Local

WAGE increases far in excess of the industrywide pattern of 4%, or about 9c, were won by Local 511 of the CIO Oil Workers in negotiations with the Paragon Oil Products Co. of New York.

The union bargaining committee, armed with a strike vote taken after the members had rejected a 4% pattern offer, emerged with a general increase of 13c an hour retroactive to July 1, although the contract did not expire until Aug. 1.

In addition, the company agreed to increase its 4c an hour payment into a welfare fund to 6c, and for the first time consented to joint union-management administration of the fund. The union also won the upgrading of some jobs, an improvement in the fatigue time clause, and a shortened grievance procedure.

2 CIOers Receive Ruskin Awards

Two CIO union members are among four recipients of scholarships providing for a year in Great Britain studying labor problems. They are Milferd Lieberthal, a member of Local 6, CIO Auto Workers in Chicago, and Miss Marjorie Ann Rucker, member of Local 2300, CIO Communications Workers, in Washington, D. C.

Both will study at Ruskin College of Oxford Univ. in England.

It's All In The Family!—

North American Puts On Show But UAW Gets The Applause

THE UNION stole the show when the makers of the Air Force's favorite fighting plane tried to lock it out of a plant Family Day celebration.

The company is North American Aviation, Inc., which pays its employes an average of 22c an hour less to make F-86 Sabre Jets than other aircraft workers get in plane plants owned by auto companies.

The union is Local 887, CIO Auto Workers, which represents 15,000 members at the North American plant in Los Angeles. Other UAW-CIO locals represent employes at Fresno, Calif., and Columbus, O.

The company put on a good Family Day exhibit inside the plant—but without any role for its organized workers, whom enlightened managements regard as part of the plant family.

Local 887 was perfectly willing to work with management to make the day more of a success than it was, but management chose to go it alone.

So the union made ITS contribution to the festivities OUTSIDE the plant—right in front of the main gate through which 66,528 employes, their families and their friends entered during the day.

There was a hillbilly band that pounded out gay tunes which set the tempo for the occasion—thoughtfully toned down so as not to interfere with company announcements inside the gates.

First Class Planes, Second Class Pay

A special edition of the Propeller, the Local 887 newspaper, welcoming visitors to North American was distributed.

"Welcome to NAA employes, friends and families," it said, "from the 15,000 members of North American Local 887 UAW-CIO in Los Angeles and Downey, builders of first-class airplanes for second-class pay.

"For the USAF and the U. S. Navy, North American's ships are top-ranked. For the company's 51,000 employes at Los Angeles, Fresno and Columbus, it means 22c an hour less than aircraft workers employed in auto plants."

And to top it off there were balloons, distributed by clowns, for the kids who swarmed in with their parents—not just ordinary balloons, but balloons decorated for the occasion.

"Severance Pay Pensions in '53 Local 887 UAW-CIO," read the slogan on one.

"First class pay," another said.

These and simlar hints to the company were carried right inside the plant in the chubby little fists of the youngsters—to management's horror and dismay.

HOSTILE North American Aviation management at Los Angeles couldn't quite keep UAW-CIO Local 887 out of its Family Day celebration. Union staged a welcome at gate, with clowns distributing balloons, some carrying union slogans, to children.

A Real Family Day

Company supervisory employes tried to break up the union's Family Day program on the ground that it hadn't been cleared by management. Objections were followed by threats, but there were so many union members around no effort was made to carry them out. Wrote Propellor Editor Al Haener in the next issue of the paper:

"Despite the futile efforts of the company to break up our Family Day program we believe everyone had a good time. We enjoyed our part—including the aches, the sunburn, the blistered fingers from tying 16,000 balloons. It was fun.

"Our one hope is that in the future, North American management will plan a 'real' family day with proper consideration to interests of the 'whole' North American Family."

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

SEPTEMBER is a poor month to find bargains anyway, but this September moderate income families who expect to fix up their homes are in for a jolt. Prices of scores of household appliances and equipment have been raised during the summer and the stores will be displaying the higher price tags after Labor Day, Too, boys' fall suits will cost 5 to 7% more as the result of price hikes. Men's suits and topcoats have also been raised. Cut-price sales on men's and boys' clothing usually occur in late fall and early winter.

Best Buys

This is the season to switch from large eggs to pullets, as the latter now cost less per pound. Pork has come down in price, and in many areas fish is seasonally cheap.

But three important types of merchandise have been reduced and represent better value now. Prices on denim work clothes have been cut (see below). One of the largest manufacturers has cut nylon stockings, which will be good news to husbands harried by big stocking bills because their wives buy the fragile 51-15's instead of the more durable 45-30's or 51-30's.

Sheets have also been reduced; you can buy full-size heavyweight muslin (140-thread count) for less than $2.50. Curtains, bedspreads and other household textiles are cheaper, too. But after cut-price sales this summer, carpeting is going up again. Families seeking rugs may still find the tag-end of summer sales, but otherwise, be wary of paying higher prices this fall.

ONE BY ONE manufacturers have raised list prices of household equipment in recent weeks. Some of the boosts are small but others range up to 30% more. List prices are now higher on some of the best-known makes of refrigerators, gas and electric ranges, carpet sweepers, mixers, plumbing fixtures and other household goods.

Many of these price hikes are being blamed by the manufacturers on the recent increase in the cost of steel. This seems like a weak excuse, when actually the steel price boost adds only 69c to the cost of the steel in a range, for example, about one-fifth of 1% of its selling price. In the case of a small appliance like an electric iron, the steel price rise added only 2.5c to its cost.

But while manufacturers are raising list prices, retailers are still price-cutting. Even some of the big appliance chains like Vim in the East are openly chopping prices, especially on refrigerators and freezers.

If you need household equipment at this time, this department recommends double comparison-shopping. Compare both list prices (since some manufacturers have not raised their tags as much as others) and the actual prices offered by different retail dealers.

Prices on small appliances usually stay up until Christmas. Then price-cutting starts all over again.

TELEVISION SETS: In the face of the price rises, as at least one manufacturer has come out with a good reduction. Emerson offers a 17-inch table-model television set at a list price of $150, the lowest price this department knows of for a full-quality set. It has a wood cabinet, which is superior for sound reception to plastic. It has the same chassis as the more expensive Emerson sets. If you can get a discount from the retail price, which many dealers give, the price would come down to about $125, or even less.

WORK CLOTHES: You can now buy union-made nine-ounce denim garments for under $3.50 for overalls or jackets (including the popular Hickory stripes), and denim pants for under $2.75.

In buying denims, compare prices on the basis of the weight of the cloth. Some cheaper denims are only eight-ounce quality, which doesn't give as long wear. Look for double stitching at the seams. The best-made work pants have triple-stitching at the rear seat seam.

TIRES: If your tires are getting worn, this is the time to look for price cuts. Usually dealers put on price-cutting sales about Labor Day, but this year inventories are very big and price reductions have started early.

CIO National Safety Parley Proposed In Quill's Report

A NATIONAL CIO safety conference early next year was proposed last week by Chairman Michael Quill of the CIO Safety and Occupational Health Committee in his report to the CIO Executive Board.

A survey by his committee found rank and file interest in safety very high, reported Quill, who is president of the CIO Transport Workers.

The safety committee unanimously approved calling of a conference early in 1954 to coordinate CIO efforts and those of its affiliates in the field of industrial safety.

Quill said his committee investigated rehabilitation of the physically handicapped and workmen's compensation measures as well as occupational health and safety. He reported they found 95,000 deaths and 10 million crippling accidents incurred each year by the people of the U. S.

He pointed out that the 10 million accident figure did not include those accidents that needed only first aid treatment. The figure cited, he said, was for accidents which caused lost time from work or from normal activities.

"To deal with these problems," Quill told the board, "we find proper legislative and cooperative effort sadly lacking. We are saddled with a crazy quilt of something like 50 different sets of laws, ranging from one state to another and through the territories, with no sense of uniformity as to enforcement, regulation or relief."

FEDERAL legislation is necessary, Quill insisted. CIO conventions in recent years have come out for federal enforcement of safety and occupation health standards and concerted action in related fields.

"We have tried in vain over the years to solve these problems without conflict with so-called state's rights," Quill went on.

"Time and time again we have had representatives of business, of the insurance interests and of the medical and legal professions agree to join us in improving legal and other procedures in the various states. The very same people who have reached these agreements with us have then gone back to their various states and violently opposed any and every proposed improvement in laws, regualtion and voluntary procedure.

"That is why the CIO has now turned to its only source of relief in an orderly society, and that is the Congress of the U. S."

Joint Labor Group In Linden Backs Civic Projects

WITH ITS CHIEF aims the representation of labor on municipal boards and joint aid in community projects, the Linden, N. J., Labor Council has been formed by representatives of CIO, AFL and independent unions.

In an unusual step, the organization voted to elect annually three chairmen, each of whom will serve four months. First chairman is Alfred A. Fontana of the CIO Distillery Workers who will serve until November.

Independent unions represented are the Oil Workers and the General Aniline Employees Organization.

More Action On Housing Urged By CIO Group

GREATER activity in the housing field by state and local councils will be encouraged, the CIO Executive Board was told last week.

James G. Thimmes, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, reported to the board that providing every family with good housing within its financial means is one of the most important parts of CIO's program.

Thimmes, who is also vice president of the CIO Steelworkers, pointed out that "not only does each family have the right to adequate housing but the nation's economy needs a high level of sound housing activity. Our efforts are guided by these dual considerations—the people need good housing and the economy needs a high level of new housing construction."

Thimmes reminded the board that the Republican-controlled Congress had substantially killed rent control, axed the public housing program and weakened the chances for housing co-ops to get help and service.

Rental housing is not being built in significant quantity, the report continued, and where it is being constructed, in most cases the rents put it in the luxury class.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

AT ABOUT THIS TIME of year, many hundreds of our brothers and sisters in CIO go to school. All over the country in schools set up by our international unions, or by our national organization, our CIO people learn the ways and means of doing a better job for their people back home, and a better job for labor as a whole.

Many of these schools are held on the campuses of famous universities. What a wonderful thing that is! The workers from the shop and plant and mill should be able to go to the finest halls of learning to gain the knowledge to improve themselves and their brothers—all of this done through their union.

We of CIO have taken up leadership in many things in the labor movement. Such benefits as pensions and hospitalization plans were first written into contracts for industrial workers by CIO.

Yet perhaps as great an achievement is what CIO has done for the education of its membership. Because we have earnestly believed in democracy and in the ability of the worker to decide his own course and make his own way in the world, we have put that faith into being by training these workers in the methods and responsibilities of leadership.

IT SEEMS TO ME that a part of our success, and a very great part, comes from the fact that we have always held up more than mere economic standards for men. It is true enough that our economic gains for our workers are amazing, considering that CIO is so young an organization. But we have also held up the dignity of man as a standard and a goal.

We have shown the whole world that the collective strength of working men and women has won not only fatter pay envelopes, but also has won for millions of men and women the opportunity to lead a decent and dignified way of life as God intended they should do.

A few weeks ago, a prominent American clergyman, one whose name has long been known in support of liberal causes, stopped in my office for a brief visit. We talked about the great need in all men, whatever their walk of life, for a spiritual base on which to set up their efforts.

Here was the great CIO with its six million members, men and women, young and old, representing every kind of religious background that goes into the makeup of our nation. It was clear, of course, that CIO could not, and would not want to place any belief, or code or creed before any other. Yet what we were able to do was draw from all the spiritual teachings of our nation one belief that is common to every decent person, and that is a deep belief in the brotherhood of man.

WE OF LABOR can say that we have established a spiritual standard to which all men can look with hope. We have made the brotherhood of man work for the advancement of our entire nation.

The more I learn about the trade labor movement, the more convinced I become that our spiritual strength is our real strength, and that all our economic blessings flow out of it.

In a way, our people are more teachers than they are students. The whole world can learn from us. We can teach people how to join together, stand together and fight together. Our progress is the living proof of the power of brotherhood, the power of a greater organization and its officers and members working and always seeking what is right. This can be a powerful weapon when used in a dispute between labor unions or with management or politicians.

CIO Rep. W. B. Taylor of Louisville, Ky., informs us of a significant victory scored by the CIO Electrical Workers at the General Electric plant at Appliance Park, Buechel, Ky. The results: IUE-CIO, 1035; no union, 439; AFL "Council of 13," 267; UE, 147. This plant will eventually employ 16,000 to 18,000 workers. Special credit goes to CIO Rep. Carl E. Beck, Publicity Rep. Bob Christofferson and IUE Reps. Larry William sand Richard Hurst.

2 Mills Won By TWUA

A SIGNIFICANT organizing campaign in the New England worsted industry has just been won by CIO Textile Workers.

By a decisive 639 to 398 margin, the TWUA won a combined vote covering the Collins & Aikman Corp. mills at Bristol and West Barrington, R. I.

In the election TWUA defeated an independent organization which included management personnel in its membership.

J. William Belanger, New England TWUA director, reported that with the Collins & Aikman victory, the Textile Workers have gained more than 8200 new members since May.

TWUA joint boards from Rhode Island and Massachusetts, with the help of a CIO Rubber Workers local, joined in the successful campaign.

Among standard textile company maneuvers which failed were rumors—in company letters and foremen's remarks—that the 100-year-old firm would close down if the TWUA won.

Michael Botelho, the union's assistant regional director, reported that "workers told me that while the independent committee showed them the value of organization, it also showed them the uselessness of anything less than a strong international union."

The Rhode Island mills are the first Collins & Aikman plants organized by TWUA. The chain has other plants in Pennsylvania, North Carolina and Canada.

Workers At Big New GE Plant Pick IUE-CIO In NLRB Vote

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week rang up their second major triumph in two weeks in the South, scoring a decisive victory in an election at the General Electric Co. Appliance Park plant at Buechel, Ky., near Louisville.

This followed by one week the win at the Poinsett Lumber & Manufacturing Co., a subsidiary of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., at Anderson, S. C.

CIO Rep. W. B. Taylor hailed the Appliance Park victory as "the most significant in GE history." The plant will employ 18,000 within the next few months turning out heavier appliances, such as dishwashers and disposal units.

With 2043 eligible to vote last week, 93% marked ballots in the National Labor Relations Board election. IUE-CIO was given 1035 votes. There were 439 for no union, 267 for the AFL "Council of 13" and 147 for the United Electrical Workers.

According to the Louisville Courier-Journal, the company had asked for a no-union vote. I. H. Means, manager of employe and plant community relations, was reported to have signed many letters stating no union was necessary. After the vote he said the company would "respect the democratic election."

Taylor directed the organizing campaign, assisted by IUE Reps. Larry Williams and Richard Hurst, and CIO Reps. Carl E. Beck and Bob Chistofferson. Pres. William Snoots of IUE-CIO Dist. 7 worked on the drive as did presidents of a number of GE locals.

IUE-CIO now represents 77,000 GE workers and will have nearly 100,000 under contract when the Buechel plant reaches capacity production. At the same time, CIO membership in the Louisville area will be doubled by the election victory.

THE VICIOUS anti-union campaign conducted at Anderson by the "Citizens' Committee" continued despite the IUE-CIO election victory.

The company has appealed the results, contending that workers were threatened by the union. Union officials replied that the only threats were those made by the committee in the propaganda barrage before the vote and since.

The threats of the committee were thinly disguised in leaflets distributed after the election. Workers were advised to keep their names clear of union affiliation and were told that no other firms would hire union help.

The leaflet also said merchants and business firms would hesitate to extend credit to union members. This charge was promptly exposed by the union as a fake.

QUEEN FOR A DAY—She's Delores Klein, 19-year-old member of Cadillac Local 22 of the CIO Auto Workers and she'll reign as Miss CIO for Detroit's joint Labor Day parade. Wayne County CIO Council sponsored the queen contest.

10c Gained By IUE In DuMont Pact

A GENERAL wage increase of 10c an hour for 3000 employes of Allen B. DuMont Laboratories, Inc., in three North Jersey cities was won by CIO Electrical Workers Local 420 in the first contract negotiated since it replaced an independent union.

The agreement covers production and maintenance workers at three plants in East Peterson and one each in Clifton and Passaic. The firm makes television and electronics equipment.

Pres. Charles Cave of Local 420 said 2.5c of the increase is retroactive to Mar. 4, and an additional 2.5c to July 4. A further pay boost of 5c an hour will become effective Mar. 4, 1954.

The contract also provides for eight paid holidays, a three-day paid leave in case of a death in the worker's immediate family, and an increase of $500 in each employe's life insurance. The company's rate before the IUE-CIO contract was negotiated was $1.53 an hour.

Office Workers In L. A. Elect

Sylvia Yuster was installed recently as president of CIO Office Workers Local Industrial Union 1729 in Los Angeles at a ceremony presided over by CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler.

Most of the local's members work in offices of CIO unions in the Los Angeles area. Other officers installed were Leah Scott, vice president; Anna Dumas, treasurer; Catherine Prendergast, Goldy Frank and Hildegard Goforth, trustees; Geri Stone and Geraldine Leshin, executive board members, and Luther Finch, sergeant-at-arms.

8.5c Gained On Ore Boats

ORE FLEET sailors, members of Local 5000, CIO Steelworkers, have won an 8.5c wage increase retroactive to June 12.

The seamen work on vessels hauling ore on the Great Lakes for the Inland Steel Co. Their new pact also calls for three weeks vacation after 15 years' service plus 1c an hour to correct certain job relationships.

Great Lakes seamen work seven days a week during a sailing season of 37 weeks. They are paid at time and one-half for all hours in excess of 40. Previous average weekly earnings of $90 now have been boosted to $96.80.

200 Vote To Join Insurance Union

Approximately 200 clerical employes of the National Farmers Union Life Insurance Co., Denver, Colo., have voted to affiliate with the CIO Insurance Workers.

The Farmers Union workers have been affiliated with CIO as a local industrial union for the past few years, and voted to move to the Insurance Workers shortly after the union's recent founding convention. They formerly belonged to the now defunct Office & Professional Workers, but have been outside any international union since the UOPWA was expelled from the the CIO in 1950 for Communist domination.

Board Backs Guild Strike In Seattle

THE SIX-WEEK strike of the CIO Newspaper Guild against the Seattle Times received a strong resolution of support this week from the CIO Executive Board.

The Board unanimously endorsed the strike, called upon the Seattle Times to "bargain in fact as well as name" and urged all CIO unions and all members of organized labor to support the strikers "with all their energies and resources."

The resolution pointed out that bad faith was evidenced by the newspaper when the publisher made no offer until three months after the start of negotiations. Management has made only one offer since the strike, and it was inferior to its last pre-strike offer.

The newspaper plant is closed down with mechanical unions respecting Guild picket lines and also generously contributing cash aid.

Management was accused by the 250 strikers of publicizing an offer to arbitrate the issues "to divert attention from its refusal to bargain in good faith." The members of the local also ordered reinstatement of the Guild's own pre-strike demands, cancelling concessions which had been made in the hope of a quick settlement.

The Guild struck for a straight 7.85% wage increase added to minimum figures, full retroactivity to the Mar. 20th contract expiration, and severance payable on death.

The proposal would have raised the top minimum for reporters to from $102 to $110. Management's best offer would have set the top reporter minimum at $108.

'Police State' In Indiana—

50,000 Join Telephone Strike In Southwest

MORE THAN 50,000 CIO Communications Workers began a strike in a six-state area last week to enforce demands for a new contract while an additional 7000 CWA-CIO members in Indiana entered the second month of a strike highlighted by repeated attacks and intimidation by police against picketing telephone workers.

CWA's largest unit, employes of Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., struck when negotiations collapsed despite efforts of federal and state conciliators. The walkout was immediately reflected in long distance and manually-operated exchanges in Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas and parts of Illinois.

FULL support of the CIO to the striking telephone workers was pledged in a resolution adopted by the Executive Board at its meeting in Washington.

The strike against the Indiana Bell Telephone Co. went into its second month with a hint that other CIO affiliates may join with telephone workers in protesting police "discrimination" against strikers.

Indiana's Gov. George N. Craig was charged by local CWA officials with fostering a "police state" and a campaign of "union-busting" after he mobilized state police for duty at picket lines in several cities. The Republican Governor also admitted that he had alerted National Guard troops for action in the strike at key communication centers. Numerous strikers have been arrested.

Sec.-Treas. George Colwell of the Indiana CIO Council, in a special message to unions in that State, asked for help on the CWA picket lines. He charged that the anti-union attitude in Indiana proved that Big Business was fulfilling one of its election campaign promises to put labor "in its place."

The Indiana affiliate of the Bell System offered 4.9c an hour and was turned down by the CWA negotiators.

The Southwestern Co. first offer of 3.5c an hour, termed insulting by the union, was upped one cent during a 20-hour negotiating session that ended when the dawn strike deadline arrived. CWA officials held firm to a demand for an average increase of 7.5c an hour. Southwestern wages now range from $40 a week for beginner operators to $95 for top repairmen.

WHEN 50,000 walked out they joined 3000 others who had "jumped the gun" a day earlier in Kansas City.

On another Bell front, CWA members in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the District of Columbia voted overwhelmingly to strike if their demands for a new contract were not met. This would bring another 20,000 telephone workers onto picket lines across the nation.

The union seeks increases of $2-$3 a week and the best counter offer from Chesapeake & Potomac Co. officials has been a top of $1.50 weekly.

Reuther Asks Full Support For CWA

The following statement was issued by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in support of the CIO Communications Workers strikes during the CIO Executive Board meeting:

"I URGE every CIO member, and the public as a whole, to lend support to the strike of the Communications Workers of America at the Indiana Bell Telephone Co. and the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

"These strikes are a direct product of the irresponsibility of the telephone monopoly—irresponsibility to the community, to the stockholders, to the employes.

"This strike was not desired by the workers—it was forced by the Bell System.

"The workers have a right to economic justice. The Bell telephone monopoly has a responsibility to negotiate in good faith, and through collective bargaining to achieve speedy settlement.

"Until Bell does this, the CIO will support the strikers—as will every American who believes in fair play and decent wages and working conditions."

N. Y. Shop Won After 20 Years By Textile Union

IT TOOK 20 YEARS to do it, but the CIO Textile Workers have finally organized the 225 dye workers at the Antispyros Co. in New York City.

The employes voted to disband their company union, established in 1938, and then the firm signed a standard contract with TWUA-CIO.

First efforts were made to organize at Antispyros in 1933. That attempt failed after an unsuccessful strike.

As part of the new agreement the workers are enrolled in TWUA's industry retirement plan which recently started paying pensions. The firm turned over to the union's dyers' and printers' pension fund, covering dye workers in the New York-New Jersey area, funds that had been raised under the old company union. (LPA)

FIRE KNIFES AUTO JOBS—This scene of wreckage and devastation, with only a water tower left standing, shows General Motors' big automatic transmission plant in Livonia, Mich., after fire estimated at $50 million damage. Some 9000 workers were laid off. UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said 60,000 more face the same fate.

UAW Asks Jobless Pay Boosts As Big GM Plant Fire Forces Layoffs

A SPECIAL session of the Michigan Legislature to increase unemployment benefits was asked last week by the CIO Auto Workers after a devastating auto plant fire which may force layoffs for as many as 60,000 auto workers.

The fire, estimated to have caused $50 million damage, swept through General Motors big automatic transmission plant in Livonia, near Detroit.

Three workers were killed in the fire, and two others were electrocuted last week during salvage operations.

There were these developments:

1. UAW and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther asked Gov. G. Mennen Williams to call a special legislative session "for the purpose of amending the unemployment compensation law to provide substantial increases in benefit rates and duration of benefit payments."

2. Reuther also asked GM Pres. Harlow Curtice to "use your influence to achieve an immediate increase in the level of benefits . . . in order to minimize the economic hardships of GM workers and their families."

3. Some 9000 UAW members were laid off immediately by the Livonia fire. The plant supplied automatic transmissions not only for GM but also for Ford, Hudson, Kaiser and Nash.

4. GM production divisions began sharp cuts in operations, with Cadillac laying off 8000. Already there are 63,000 unemployed workers in Michigan, and daily press estimates were that as many more may be fired as result of the Livonia fire. Reuther predicted the figure would be higher.

5. GM announed that it has negotiated with Kaiser Motors for use of part of the Willow Run plant to build transmissions. The Air Force recently cancelled a Kaiser cargo plane operation at Willow Run, wiping out 12,000 jobs.

With a warning that additional layoffs caused by the Livonia fire may total 60,000 or more, Reuther pointed out to Gov. Williams:

"The brunt of this unemployment will be borne by Michigan workers. Detroit, Pontiac and Lansing will be particularly hard hit.

"It is imperative that effective action be taken without delay to minimize hardships to the laid-off workers, to protect small businesses dependent on purchases by these workers, and to avoid a substantial increase in the public welfare burdens of the communities in which these workers live."

Then he pointed out that "the economic effects of the Livonia fire will be just as serious" as the recent midwest tornadoes.

THE UAW president said layoffs resulting from the fire climax a developing auto job problem which he blamed on "management's refusal to plan production schedules in order to stabilize employment over the full year."

While GM was fully insured for the Livonia damage, Reuther noted, "GM workers and their families are inadequately and partially covered by insurance through unemployment compensation."

"Perhaps the shock of the Livonia fire will help to remove some of the obstacles which your efforts have hitherto encountered," Reuther wrote the Governor.

"I find it difficult to believe that even those who have long opposed improvement in unemployment compensation will be able to maintain their attitude toward workers dependent on unemployment compensation in the face of the widespread suffering that will result from the Livonia fire if the law is not drastically improved."

Falling Behind

Shortcomings of state unemployment insurance benefits in the present period of record living costs were cited by CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther in asking a special session of the Michigan Legislature to increase weekly payments.

Reuther quoted this recent report of the Michigan Employment Security Commission:

"The weekly benefit rate of $31 payable to a worker with two children is $9.31 less than the cost of housing and food for such a family in Detroit, October, 1951."

Optical Workers Solid As Strike Enters Fifth Month

CIO OPTICAL Workers in Roslindale, Mass., a Boston suburb, have entered the fifth month of their strike against the Marine Optical Co. with the same determination they showed when the walkout began.

The firm's management has refused to arbitrate the issues which include a proposed wage cut, changes in seniority provisions and elimination of fringe benefits.

New work standards were established just before the strike and management reserved the right to discharge those who failed to meet them.

More than 100 workers, whose average wage is 92c an hour, are involved in the strike. They are members of Local 208, CIO Optical Workers, of New York, N. Y.

In recent contract talks with management the union made several compromise offers, including a return to work pending arbitration, but all were rejected.

Why Jack Kelly Won't Come Home To Homestead

Jack gave his life in Korea and his name to a hill in that unhappy land. But his memory will continue bright among his friends in CIO Steelworkers Local 1397 at Homestead where he played three years on the local's champion basketball team in the USA-CIO league. (Photo on left.)

And his name is engraved on the roster of heroes who have won the Congressional Medal of Honor, highest decoration this country can give its fighting men.

Jack voluntarily charged an enemy position, killing two Chinese Reds with his pistol and throwing grenades when he went down under Chinese rifle fire. His commanding officer wrote his widowed mother: "His example inspired his comrades to sweep the enemy from the hill."

The sign on Kelly Hill (right) says in Chinese: "Soldier of God."

Congress Spends Pretty Penny As Investigations Gather Steam

By MILTON PLUMB

WHEN THE first session of the 83rd Congress ended, so many investigations had already been voted that the United Press called its record "possibly the investigatingest one ever."

With Congress now in recess, investigations are still going on all over the place.

Last week no one—including even Congress' own officials responsible for keeping tab—could say exactly just how many probes have been authorized, how many are going on, or even approximately what they're costing taxpayers.

The only thing certain is that the total in each instance is something terrific.

IN VIEW of the great stress Republicans have placed on what they call "better budgeting methods," it's surprising that apparently not a single member of the 83rd Congress has made an effort to find out the totals. Neither the Coordinator of Information nor the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, which would make such a study if a congressman asked, has done so.

Democratic committee chairmen in past years customarily filed public reports summing up investigations expenditures at the close of each session. Such an accounting wasn't made this year.

BUT FROM a minority member of the House Administration Committee, The CIO News learned that the total authorized for House probes in the first session alone was $1,797,050. That is only $90,000 less than the new record for an entire Congress which the Republican 80th Congress ran up over a two-year period.

Expenditures for the Senate, which generally spends at least as much on probes of its own, are still unaccounted for. A spokesman for the Senate Rules Committee, which is supposed to check on such matters, said no total has been made but that anyone could find it out by adding the amounts reported approved in the 17,000 pages of the Congressional Record.

He gave some idea of the extent of the job by adding that there are "only about 200" bills dealing with investigations that would have to be totalled.

Congressional Quarterly, a private research agency which is now making such a survey, hasn't yet completed its Senate totals. Through its own independent addition of House figures, however, it arrived at the $1,797,050 total for that body.

Biggest spender of funds in the House, CQ found, was the Government Operations Committee headed by Rep. Hoffman (R. Mich.), whose members recently took the almost unprecedented step of voting to curb their chairman's powers. The action came after he had launched a number of "quickie" probes into what he called labor racketeering in a number of industrial centers.

PROBES now going on, or due to be launched during the recess, deal with such subjects as juvenile delinquency, newsprint sources, oil tax rebates, the Post Office Dept., mail rate increases, social security, alleged "labor racketeering" in Kansas City and Detroit, Communists in labor unions, mines in South Africa, foreign shipyards, and many others.

Leading the race for newspaper headlines is Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), whose Senate Permanent Investigating subcommittee is skipping all over the place. The Democratic members of the group have all resigned and the Senate voted that he can't issue reports during the recess, but that hasn't kept McCarthy since Congress adjourned from:

1. Disputing with Atomic Energy Commissioners as to whether or not an alleged Communist had access to A-bomb secrets.

2. Quarreling with the State Dept.'s right to issue a passport to an official of the Central Intelligence Agency he wanted to question.

3. Ripping into the security setup of the Government Printing Office.

4. Announcing in San Diego last week that he is considering an inquiry into "fantastic" stockpiling of strategic materials.

Another big show looms as Congress and the Ford Foundation begin shaping up their plans to investigate each other.

Rep. Case (R. N.J.), who resigned from Congress this month to head the $15 million foundation inquiry into American freedoms and civil rights, announced that $50,000 of that amount has been set aside to study congressional investigations.

Congress, not to be outdone, promptly voted a special House Committee under Rep. Reece (R. Tenn.) $100,000 to investigate foundations.

Reece's group will hold its first meeting about the middle of September.

Ring Around The Rosy . . .

One congressman who tried last week to find out how many investigations had been approved in the recent session called the Coordinator of Information, who is supposed to be able to provide answers to congressional inquiries. He was told no study of the subject had been made and referred to the staff of the Daily Digest, another congressionally-run research outfit.

The Daily Digest first referred him back to the Coordinator and then, upon being told that he had already been tried, gave this helpful suggestion:

"The only place I can think of where you might get it is the House or Senate Press Gallery."

Boss Tosses A Fast Ball But UFW Bats It Over The Fence

THE BOSS tossed a fast curve, but striking CIO Furniture Workers hit a homer over the fence.

Sixty employes of the T. M. Miller Casket Co. in Scranton, Pa., had been picketing the plant for a week when Henry J. Butler, Jr., president of the firm, remembered he had tickets for the workers to attend an Eastern League game between Scranton and Reading.

Strikers held a curbstone meeting and voted "why not?" Union officials went in to the plant to convey the word to Butler. Then, according to the Associated Press, "one word led to another and by the time the officials emerged the strike had been settled."

The final score which most papers didn't mention: 11.5c an hour increase for the furniture workers—0 for the boss. (LPA)

New Westinghouse Pact—

IUE Gains On Wages, Pensions For 50,000

WAGE RAISES of 3c to 11c an hour and higher pension benefits will be paid to 50,000 Westinghouse Corp. employes under a new contract signed last week by the CIO Electrical Workers.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey said the union's Westinghouse Conference Board approved the contract provisions on the recommendation of the negotiating committee.

All increases are retroactive to July 1. The contract extends to July 1, 1954, replacing one due to expire Oct. 1, 1953.

CAREY said that Westinghouse workers under IUE have received more than 40c an hour in wage increases in the past three years plus an additional 10c in fringe benefits. The average weekly wage now is $2.07 an hour.

Less than 40 workers are affected by the 3c an hour basic increase. Employes earning $1.21 and over, and those with higher skills, will get increases ranging from 4c to a top of 11c for those making over $2.15 an hour.

CLERICAL salaried employes represented by IUE will get equivalent pay raises ranging from $5.20 to $19 a month.

Pension increases of as high as $23 a month in employer payments were won by the Electrical Workers after they rejected an earlier Westinghouse proposal. The minimum pension now will be $125 a month, including Social Security benefits.

The new agreement also protects the right of locals to negotiate separate supplements where such bargaining has been in progress.

Discussions on the salaried help problem and on disciplinary action measures will be carried out. The company at first declined to arrange such meetings.

The new agreement affects 12,000 IUE members in Pittsburgh, 5000 in Sharon, Pa., 4500 in Buffalo, N. Y., 4000 in Springfield, Mass., 3200 in Bloomfield, N. J., 6500 in Mansfield, O., and others in cities where Westinghouse has smaller plant units.

Ike Appoints McDonald To Trade Study

APPOINTMENT of Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers to the government's Commission on Foreign Economic Policy was announced last week by Pres. Eisenhower.

McDonald was one of seven public members and the only labor representative on the 17-member panel appointed by the President. Ten members of Congress serve on the commission which will study U. S. foreign policy and aims and report its findings before next Mar. 6.

Clarence B. Randall, board chairman of the Inland Steel Co., is the commission's chairman.

First item on the new commission's agenda is a study of a report by Lewis W. Douglas, former U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain, sharply criticizing U. S. foreign trade policies. The report was referred to it by the President.

Douglas said bluntly that U. S. policy blocks international economic stability and may threaten the unity of the free world. As the world's greatest creditor nation, he maintained, the U. S. can "no longer pursue the protectionist policies of a debtor nation and hope to escape . . . discrimination against American products" in world markets.

CWA Gains For 50,000 In South; Strikes Extended To Capital Area

CIO COMMUNICATIONS WORKERS won wage increases ranging from $1 to $3 a week for 50,000 members in the South last week while another 72,000 members were on strike against units of the Bell System. The agreement signed with Southern Bell Telephone Co. was the twentieth settlement with Bell units employing almost 200,000. Eleven contracts covering 125,000 phone workers are still under negotiation.

This was the picture across the country at the end of the week:

Southern Bell: Basic wage increases in the contract signed by CWA-CIO called for $2 to $3 jumps for plant workers, $1 to $2 in the traffic department.

Service assistant differentials were upped and there was upgrading of linemen and several other jobs. A total of 43 towns in the company's area were reclassified.

Schedules were shortened to six years. The wage increases in the commercial department for men will follow the pattern of plant increases generally. Traffic and other women clerical employes will get the same general raises given to traffic operators.

Settlement came after four months of negotiations. The contract will run for one year, covering CWA members in Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Florida, Mississippi, North and South Carolina and Tennessee.

Chesapeake & Potomac: Some 12,000 CWA members struck units in the District of Columbia, Maryland and West Virginia after negotiators rejected a $1.50 to $2 offer as inadequate. Negotiations were still in progress in Virginia.

Southwestern Bell: Now in its second week, the strike of 53,000 CWA members against Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. in a six-state area was close to settlement except for a "no-strike" agreement which the union refused to sign.

Basic wage increases ranged from $2 to $3 for plant workers, $1 to $2.50 in traffic. A number of cities were re-classified. Town reclassifications combined with basic increases will yield as much as $6.50.

The "no strike" clause was injected into negotiations by the company after agreement had been reached on most other items. The union rejected the clause, claiming that under the Taft-Hartley Act it would "place the union at the company's mercy, making it responsible for the individual acts of members and stewards."

LEARNING early about unionism is 14-months-old Irita Williams as she walks with her mother, Mrs. Grover Williams, on the CWA-CIO picket line outside the phone exchange at Overland, Mo.

The strike has affected phone service in Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas and parts of Missouri.

Indiana Bell: Indiana CWA officals are enthusiastic about the help they have been getting from other branches of organized labor in supoprt of their strike, now in its second month, against the Indiana Bell Telephone Co.

"It's not just one group," Mae Mann, CWA State director said, "everybody in the CIO, the AFL and the Miners—all have helped us immensely."

Long Lines: CWA officals said that machinery was set up for a strike of 22,000 long distance and overseas operators but said there would be no unauthorized walkout without international union sanction while negotiations were in progress.

25,000 URW Members Out At Firestone

APPROXIMATELY 25,000 members of the CIO Rubber Workers went on strike in eight cities last week when negotiations for a new wage agreement with the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. failed to yield a settlement before the old contract expired.

The walkout was voted overwhelmingly by each of the eight locals and approved by the URW-CIO international executive board.

Negotiators, meeting in Cleveland, continued bargaining sessions past the midnight deadline on Aug. 26, when the old agreement expired, but were unable to agree on new rates. The sessions were resumed the following day and were continuing.

THE STRIKE closed Firestone plants in Akron, O., the firm's headquarters; Los Angeles, Des Moines, Ia.; Fall River, Mass.; Pottstown, Pa.; Memphis, Tenn., and Noblesville and Newcastle, Ind. Picket lines were established by the strikers as they left the factories.

Only wages are involved in the negotiations, which began June 23 and have continued steadily.

The union also is negotiating for pay boosts with the other members of the industry's Big Four.

The agreement covering 18,000 members employed by the B. F. Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co. expires at midnight Aug. 31, with union negotiators empowered by the members to call a strike if there is no settlement.

Contracts with the U. S. Rubber Co. and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. expire at midnight Sept. 8.

Reuther Warns Of Reactionary GOP Drive

THE MEN and women who make up American trade unions can take pride in the strength, responsibility and patriotism of their organizations, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said in his Labor Day statement.

The CIO chieftain used the occasion both to glance back briefly and to look into the future.

The past year has not been easy for American unions or for the country, he said.

"Great leaders, like Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood and William Green—whose toil and sacrifice helped build our labor movement—have gone to their great reward," he said.

"Our young men have continued to sacrifice their promising lives on the battlefields of Korea.

"At home, following the election of a distinguished general to the presidency, a host of special interest groups have moved into Washington with a bitter zeal to reverse a 20-year trend of government FOR the people."

A digest of the statement follows:

POLITICS: "The turn of political fortunes has unleashed powerful reactionary forces represented by men of restricted vision and small faith who have gained access to high places in political counsels. They would reshape our future in the image of an outlived and discredited past.

"They hold out false promises of easy security and isolated prosperity within our borders in order to separate us from the worldwide struggle for human freedom . . ."

ECONOMICS: "On this labor Day, American labor draws inspiration from the struggles and achievements of the past and we rededicate ourselves to the ideals of service to the working people of our nation and to a continuing program of progress for all the people.

"We renew our belief in the proposition that the common good and the well-being of all the people transcends the question of special privileges for the few.

"In full recognition that all basic human and democratic values are indivisible, we shall join with people of good will from all groups to preserve our common civil liberties and rights.

"American labor is determined that there shall be no peacetime depression, for we have the technical know-how and the economic resources to provide full and continuous employment for every citizen able and willing to work . . .

"We, of labor, are determined to win a guaranteed annual wage that will help remove the fear of insecurity from the life of every worker's family. This is more than a matter of economic justice; it is a matter of economic necessity if we are to provide the democratic tools for the achievement and maintenance of full employment and full production in peacetime.

"We, of labor, shall strive to make a better America—an America with better schools, better homes, better health, greater security, greater happiness, and greater dignity for all.

"Through such a program, we can best fight communism in our land."

WORLD SCENE: "American labor salutes the workers in East Berlin and other satellite nations for their historic resistance to Communist oppression. Their courage and determination —despite all the brutality of Communist dictatorship — prove that the quest for freedom and justice burns strong and bright even behind the Iron Curtain . . .

"An intelligent and realistic evaluation of the world situation should compel us to abandon the false idea that peace and freedom can be made secure by a program of negative anti-communism.

"The free world must develop its strategy based upon a positive program. We must build and fight for the positive values we believe in as hard as we fight against those things we oppose."

Reuther On Air, TV Labor Day Week End

Appearances on both television and radio have been scheduled by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther for the Labor Day week end.

He will address a Labor Day rally in Akron, O., and will make a special broadcast over the American Broadcasting Co., radio network from 2:45 to 3 p.m. (EDT).

The day before, on Sunday, Sept. 6, he will appear on the "Man of the Week" show on the Columbia Broadcasting Co. television network from 5:30 to 6 p.m. (EDT).

The "Man of the Week" show also will be heard on CBS Radio at 10:30 p.m. (EST) on Sept. 6.

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and CIO Electrical Workers president, will be heard on the NBC Radio "Viewpoint USA" program at 11:15 a.m. EDT on Sunday, Sept. 6.

Truman Labor Day Speech On Air, TV

Former Pres. Truman, who will be chief speaker at a joint CIO-AFL Labor Day rally in Detroit, will also be heard on both radio and television on Labor Day.

ABC radio will carry the ex-President's speech over its radio network from 3:30 to 4 p.m. (EDT).

NBC television will carry the Truman speech on its television network from 1:30 to 2 p.m. (EDT). The Mutual Radio network will air it from 1:30 to 2 p.m. (EDT).

NBC radio will carry a delayed broadcast of the Detroit talk from 10 to 10:30 p.m. (EDT).

Mid-Summer Madness

Harold Stassen, the head of the Foreign Operations Administration—formerly Mutual Security—has been giving "intelligence tests" to the staff of that government agency.

In effect, Stassen has been inquiring whether his employes are smart enough to do their job. It might be well to ask Mr. Stassen how stupid you can get.

The tests, we learn from the papers, have shown that many employes got far better scores on the I.Q. test than Stassen himself. This surprised almost no one.

The papers also report that Stassen and C. D. Jackson, the Administration's psychological warfare boss, made a 2c bet as to which would get the higher score.

It seems poor psychology for our psychological warfare man to be making cheap bets on a test like this. It seems poor administration for a top government administrator like Stassen to subject his staff to tests like this.

And it makes no sense at all to down-grade or fire FOA employes who got far better marks than boss Stassen himself. The only result can be demoralization of the personnel of an agency that is vital to America and the free world.

Whispering Voice

Almost every ship and plane returning from Europe and the Far East brings travelers with a common impression: never since World War II has America's moral and spiritual status been so low among our friends in the free world.

And never, apparently, have the Republicans in Congress cared less.

The Voice of America, for instance, had its appropriation cut by nearly one-third. The cuts show up in the lowered effectiveness of the Voice programs. Our programs are being broadcast in 34 languages—as compared to 45 a few months ago.

Suggestion: Ask your congressman if we can afford that sort of economy.

A Dull, Dull Summer

Some of them whiled away the time predicting that the CIO would be falling apart right in front of your eyes, folks, while you wait. Hasn't happened, and no prospect that it will.

Others have been lamenting that "working folks don't want unions no more—and that unions have lost their zip, anyway."

We'd suggest that if you're ready to fall for that line, you scan these recent issues of The CIO News. Some pretty interesting stories about strikes to protect old advances and register new gains—in department stores, the phone company, Firestone Rubber, and others. And some pretty sensational Labor Board election victories—in textiles, in electrical, in furniture, in some of the tough parts of the South.

As the summer draws toward a close, it looks to us, as it did to Mark Twain, that the news of our decease was greatly exaggerated, indeed.

In Other Words—

The Rape Of The People's Resources

The proposed give-away of the power rights at Niagara Falls to five private power companies was denounced recently by Rep. Roosevelt (D-Lib. N.Y.) at a picnic of CIO Chemical Workers at Niagara Falls.

By REP. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, JR.

NIAGARA FALLS is the peoples' resource. It does not belong to any private power companies and it should not be given to any monopolistic combination of five power companies.

The private power monopoly has been trying to take this great natural asset away from the people for many years. They claim it would be socialism for the Congress not to give away Niagara Falls.

I am against this monopolistic rape of the peoples' resource, and if this is socialism, then I am glad to say that I am allied with such eminent "socialists" as Charles Evans Hughes, Theodore Roosevelt and Tom Dewey.

Each of these "socialists" in their capacity as governor of the State of New York, as well as Governors Smith, Roosevelt and Lehman, have at one time or another asserted the right of the people to develop the hydro-electric potential of Niagara Falls, and each of them has fought the attempts of the private-utility monopoly to make Niagara Falls their own private preserve for personal profit.

A 50-Year Program

Public ownership and development of Niagara Falls has been part of the program of every governor of our State for the last 50 years, with the exception of one Republican governor (Miller), whose opposition to this concept resulted in his crushing defeat at the polls by Al Smith after he was in office only two years. It has been an essential part of the platform of the Democratic party of this State since 1900 and a part of the Republican platform for the last 30 years.

Congressman Miller's (R. N.Y.) sponsorship of legislation to turn over Niagara Falls to the private utility companies brings to mind a speech that my revered great-uncle Theodore Roosevelt, made when he was governor of this State when he said at Watertown, N. Y.:

'You have elected too many men in the past who have taken what belongs to the nation. Coal and oil barons cannot compare to water power barons. Do not let them get a monopoly on what belongs to this State. . . . Do not give up your water power for a promise of quick development. We are poor citizens if we allow the things worth most to get into the hands of the few.'

Cong. Miller and his power monopoly cohorts have flooded this area as they have the Congress with propaganda which tries to convince you of the advantages of private development of Niagara. But it isn't what they tell you that counts, it's what they don't tell you.

They don't tell you that you and I in New York pay more for electricity than do the citizens of almost every other state in this Union. They don't tell you that the monthly electric bill for a family living in the Tennessee Valley is almost half the amount of the electric bill which you and I pay as residents of New York.

What Utilities Don't Say

They don't tell you that the northwestern, the southwestern and the southeastern parts of the U. S. each have public power projects which you and I as taxpayers helped pay for while the northeastern region in which we live has no public power project.

They don't tell you that in each of the public power areas a family cannot only have electric light and small electric appliances but can heat their homes and heat their hot water electrically the year around and still pay no more by way of monthly electric charges than we in New York pay only for lighting our homes, heating our electric irons and operating our toaster for breakfast.

Because across the river in Niagara Falls, Canada, the Canadian government is developing its share of the hydro-electric potential of Niagara's waters, electricity on the Canadian side of the Falls will cost only one-third of what it would cost on the American side of the Falls if the Miller plan for the private utility grab goes through.

The attempt of the Republican cabinet in the Harding Administration to grab the oil resources of Teapot Dome begins to look like mere child's play when compared with the steal which these utility companies contemplate.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THIS REPORTER cannot join the general rejoicing over the alleged "surrender" of Commerce Sec. Weeks in agreeing that Dr. Allen V. Astin can remain as head of the Bureau of Standards.

Weeks "surrendered," all right, so far as Astin himself was concerned. A distinguished committee of scientists was all prepared to blast the Commerce chief, to sustain Astin as a highly competent professional, and to give the Bureau of Standards top marks as a scientific research agency of national importance.

But Weeks successfully engineered a "deal." His original complaint was that the Bureau of Standards had reported that a battery additive, AD-X2, was practically worthless, and that the company marketing it was trying to sell to consumers for a high price ingredients that cost a few pennies.

Weeks doesn't think the federal government should protect consumers against products that don't actually harm them; the Bureau of Standards, he muttered, didn't give sufficient emphasis to "the play of the market place."

The "deal" was this: Astin, fired, can now remain as chief of the Bureau of Standards. But the bureau can no longer be used by government agencies to handle "non-technical policy and procedural matters on commercial product evaluation." This power will be reserved to the Secretary of Commerce.

Consequences

The GOP and Ike promised in the campaign to "restore" the badly-battered Labor Dept. and to enlarge its functions.

Actuality: The 83rd Congress slashed appropriations so sharply that the staff of inspectors to visit factories and report wage-hour violations was cut 20%. The Office of the Solicitor's staff, which handles wage questions on government contracts and and court cases on wage-hour violations, was cut 25%.

Sec. Durkin says he hopes to get more work from each inspector but admits the staff can no longer handle the previous workload of 6% of all "covered" factory operations.

So Weeks will be fully equipped to protect the operations of the business community under the old law of caveat emptor—"let the buyer beware.

A product may be no good, but if it doesn't poison you, or really harm you or your possessions (except your pocketbook), he can tell the Bureau of Standards to mind its own affairs and let the sale of the product be left to "the play of the market place."

A GOP Inaction Pattern

One of the action patterns of this Administration is now pretty clear. The technique is to appoint separate commissions on a large variety of separate issues—but then, if some commission fails to bring in the "right" answers, appoint a new one to give you the verdict you want.

Three successive secret committees reported that we needed a major national effort—psychological and financial—to build our defenses against Soviet air striking power. But these reports didn't fit the campaign promises of lower taxes and a balanced budget. So a fourth secret study was planned.

The White House is deeply disturbed by the wheat farmers' 87% vote in favor of 90% (of parity) price loans. Benson has had an "interim" advisory committee powerfully influenced by Allen B. Kline, head of the Farm Bureau Federation, who despises "high, rigid" price supports. Give the farmers "freedom," Kline argued, and Benson, who felt that way himself, gratefully accepted the advice.

But the nation's wheat farmers, faced with a threatened drop in prices, voted almost nine to one in favor of "high, rigid" government supports—and willingly accepted the penalty of acreage controls and marketing quotas.

Mr. Kline may speak for the big wheat farmers, the White House now thinks, but he obviously doesn't speak for the majority of little farmers.

The new advisory commission has been planned for some time, but it is now unlikely that Kline will be as influential as in the past. More dirt farmers will be members.

The Verdict On Tariffs

On American trade policy (this means tariffs) Mr. Eisenhower is moving to get the verdict he wants even before the jury has met.

There is a brand new 17-member Commission on Foreign Economic Policy headed by Clarence B. Randall of Inland Steel. Some of its members, appointed by Vice-Pres. Nixon and Speaker Martin, are old-line high-tariff Republicans. Others, appointed by Ike, are practically free-trade men.

The President promptly sent Randall—and enthusiastically endorsed—a special report by Lewis W. Douglas arguing for lower tariffs. Unless we "import more," said Douglas, by removing tariff barriers, the British pound sterling will never recover its health and the "dollar gap" troubling Western Europe will never be closed.

Ike may have a lot of trouble peddling this idea next year to cannibalistic high-tariff GOP members of Congress. But he has taken the elemental precaution of telling the Randall commission the ideas he would like it to endorse.

Willard Shelton is on vacation. "It's Your Washington" will be resumed in The CIO News on Sept. 21.

Book Review—

A Look At Labor's Beginnings And A Report On U. S. Union Gains

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

SUCH VAST CHANGES in the position of organized labor have taken place in recent years that theory has fallen far behind practice, and writers in the field of labor often are either out of date in their general philosophy of labor or else avoid the subject altogether.

"The gaps and inadequacies of the older theories," as a result, "have remained largely unchallenged," says the introduction to a series of studies published by the Industrial Relations Research Association under the title "Interpreting the Labor Movement."

The IRRA is a learned organization formed several years ago to encourage impartial research in all aspects of the field of labor. The 10 essays in the 207-page volume, all by different authors—some of them well known in CIO ranks—are a step toward filling the gaps in theories about labor as it is today.

Helpful To Union People

Few trade unionists have much time or inclination to think about the philosophy or theories of the labor movement. Labor leaders may act in accordance with certain basic ideas that they feel to be true or workable, but seldom stop to think what went into making their ideas or where they came from.

Yet it is interesting and sometimes important to know about the ideas and theories that labor economists and historians have evolved and often squabbled about, for they can throw light on labor's problems today.

The IRRA hopes that the discussions in its recent publication, which are presented with emphasis on theory and analysis, will be helpful to union people and others interested with labor problems.

In the opening essay, Prof. Philip Taft of Brown Univ. examines theories on the origin and behavior of the labor movement and concludes with a discussion of the various views in the light of today's developments. In brief, he discusses the ideas of:

• Lujo Brentano, a German economist and historian writing in the 1870's, was one of the first non-Socialist writers to take up the question of the origin of the labor movement. Brentano believed that trade unions were the successors of the old guilds, and arose to protect the customary rights of workers threatened by the break-up of the old system. His idea was that they were formed as a defense against the aggression of the rising manufacturing class.

The Conservative Aspect

His view that the guild was the forebear of the trade union has been challenged, but his notion that "the trade union arose because of the disturbance of an established custom shows that Brentano well understood one of the essential causes of the origin of trade unions," says Taft. His emphasis upon "the conservative traditional nature of unions," Taft writes, "caught a significant aspect of early trade unionism."

• Sidney and Beatrice Webb, the famous British laborite economists whose classic History of Trade Unionism and other writings have long been heavily used as source material by later writers, disagreed with Brentano's idea that trade unions were an outgrowth of the old guilds. They held that the basic cause for their rise lay "in the separation of classes, or in the separation of the worker from the means of production," which took place with the rise of the factory system.

Taft believes that the Webbs were right in considering this a basic cause, but thinks that they failed to explain why the first unions were formed, not by low-paid, unskilled workers, but by skilled journeymen. "It was not the propertyless proletariat of Marx," Taft says, "but the labor aristocrat who was the pioneer of trade unionism."

• Catholic clergymen and writers on trade unionism early had an important influence in the United States. The question before Roman Catholic students of labor, Taft says, "was whether the unions arose to defend the workers against superior economic force or were a section of a movement challenging religion and existing governments."

As early as the 1880's during a controversy over the Knights of Labor, James Cardinal Gibbons—then ranking Catholic prelate of the United States—defended the right of workers to organize to protect themselves from the oppression of their employers. Then in 1891, Pope Leo XIII gave full endorsement to trade unions seeking to protect the worker in industry and declared that unions arose to redress the advantage held by the employer and to form voluntary associations, as was the natural right of man. This view was later reiterated by Pope Pius XI in Quadragesimo Anno, the Encyclical Letter issued in 1931.

"It's her own fault. Her new boy friend swallows all that NAM propaganda, then feeds it to her."

"The Catholic doctrine of trade unionism," Taft says in summing up Catholic views, "regards the organization of labor as a natural right, and the unions as the means for defending the just claims of the individual . . . "

• Robert Hoxie, whose "Trade Unionism in the United States" is widely used, believed that no one cause was responsible for the origin of trade unions, but that they arose out of group need. He thought, says Taft, that "union organization was the resultant of many variables, and the combination they took in any instance was dependent upon the weight exercised by each in a particular situation."

The Intellectual Approach

• John R. Commons, one of the pioneer investigators of labor in the U. S., Taft says, "attributed the rise of labor organizations to the differentation of classes, which was in turn due to the expansion of the market." He maintained that unions arose "to overcome the workers' inferior bargaining position. Moreover, he saw in labor organization the culmination of an age-long process of extending freedom."

The dispute which has long gone on in the labor movement between the approach of the intellectual and the practical man of labor is touched upon by Taft in his discussion of Prof. Selig Perlman's book, "A Theory of the Labor Movement." Perlman "attempts to deduce a philosophy of labor from the conduct of the worker and from the nature of the institutions labor has created," writes Taft.

Perlman believes that the rank and file worker of everyday life differs from labor as an abstract entity as treated by the intellectual. He argues that an understanding of labor and unionism must come from the study of its institutions and practices rather than from historical theorizing.

"Interpreting The Labor Movement," a symposium; Industrial Relations Research Association, Madison 5, Wis.

U. S. Unions Called 'Tolerant And Flexible'

The absence of a "beautiful intellectual system" has helped make the American labor movement "democratic, tolerant and flexible," Prof. Philip Taft of Brown Univ. maintains.

"Trade unionism in the United States is a means of protecting the individual against arbitrary rule and raising his standard of living," he writes. "While it may not rank high for philosophy, it deserves high score on the latter count."

Those who criticize American labor because it "lacks a philosophy" are "unduly disturbed," he adds, stating it has done "quite well, both absolutely and comparatively," in defending the interests of members, giving them protection and winning concessions from employers.

CIO Commentator Has Long Experience As Writer, Traveler

JOHN W. VANDERCOOK, whose daily 15-minute ABC radio news program goes on the air under CIO sponsorship on Labor Day, started traveling when he was three weeks old and has been to 81 countries in his 51 years.

Although he was born in London where his father, a founding official of the United Press, was on assignment, Vandercook's family has been living in this country for more than 150 years.

The family home is in Delhi, N. Y., about 120 miles northwest of New York City, where Vandercook still lives with his wife and two children in a house his great grandfather built in 1823.

He attended a number of public and private schools before spending a year at Yale Univ., where he left to try his hand at an acting career.

After two lean years during which he managed to get a few parts he described as "microscopically small," Vandercook decided it was important to eat regularly and got a job on the Columbus, O. Citizen. Later he held down a variety of newspaper jobs in Washington, Baltimore and New York, doing editorials, features and straight reporting.

It was in 1939 at the start of World War II, while he was in Germany, that Vandercook joined the NBC news staff. He was later transferred to New York where until 1946, he wrote and broadcast more than 2000 news programs which were highlighted by his personal recollections of places unfamiliar to most Americans.

Most of Vandercook's books—which now number 10, including the tremendously successful "Black Majesty" published in 1928—have been based on his extensive travels.

In 1925, Vandercook and his wife began a 12-year series of trips with a jungle exploration in Dutch Guiana. Along with other travels to Haiti, Liberia, the French Cameroons and various islands of the South Pacific, these journeys provided material for books, magazine articles, lecture tours, news reporting and comment.

In addition, Vandercook was able to advise military authorities on conditions to be found in unfamiliar spots in the South Pacific which were to become scenes of important campaigns in the war. As NBC staff commentator his broadcasts describing the places in the news after Pearl Harbor were both exclusive and authentic.

In 1944, he served as a war correspondent in North Africa, Italy and France, witnessing the Anzio and Cassino operations as well as getting in on the Normandy offensive three days after D-Day.

Vandercook resigned from NBC in 1946 to resume his writing and lecturing career. His latest book, "Great Sailor," a life of the 18th century explorer Capt. Cook, was published in 1950.

IWA-CIO Pickets Plod Pioneer Trails In California Foothills

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

Everywhere you go, you find the CIO.

Back into the tall-tree country of the "foothills" of the high Sierras in northern California, back into the historical Gold Rush mountains, where modern-day "gold" is in lumbering, we found the CIO—on the picket line.

It was CIO Woodworkers Local 1386. In the small, isolated, pine-tree covered community of Forest Hill, reached by a winding mountain road which may once have been a covered wagon trail for pioneers, IWA-CIO Local 1386 was manning its picket line, going into the fourth week.

INSIDE the logging mill grounds, large buildings were silent, deserted. A line of huge trucks, used to haul newly-fallen logs out of the forest, stood unmanned, motors dead.

"Cats" and other idled pieces of equipment were spotted here and there. Nowhere across the broad expanse of the mill grounds was there movement. The mill was closed. But good.

At two ends of the mill property, alongside the only road, sat the pickets. And from them, we heard the story.

"We went out on July 29," said John DeMaria, head powderman. "We're asking 12.5c an hour, and travelling time for the boys in the woods, who spend about three hours a day going back and forth from the mill to where they work."

And what's the company's offer?

"Nothing."

At the other picket-post, we ran into John Laird, financial secretary of the local. A little later, Cass Kolasinsky, president, came up. From them we got some more of the background.

"WE'VE GOT about 130 men out," Laird said, "and they're out solid. Morale is high, and staying there. The company here is the American River Pine and Forest Hill Logging Co. Practically all the logging they do is in the National Forest—they're buying timber from the government."

Two other IWA-CIO locals are also out, said Kolasinsky. One is in Anderson, where about 650 men struck the Ralph L. Smith Co. about one week before Local 1386 went out, and the other in Portola, where about 150 members closed down the Tarter-Webster & Johnson Co. about a week after the Forest Hill local struck.

Much of IWA-CIO Dist. 6, in Southeast Oregon, has reached contract settlements for 5c an hour and fringe benefits, Laird explained, but no move by the company in Forest Hill to meet the pattern has been made.

Kolasinsky, former member of CIO Auto Workers Local 174, Detroit—home local of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther—charged the company was refusing to negotiate in good faith.

"THEY'LL sit down with us, but they won't make any offer at all," he said. "A top company official told our negotiating committee in so many words that the company can afford to pay, but won't."

And what's the result?

"It's making our union tougher, more united, and more determined. Our men put it this way—as long as they (he motioned toward the mill) sit in there, we'll sit out here."

IWA Gains In Canada

WITH NEARLY 30,000 members of the CIO Woodworkers affected, more than 125 employers in the coastal fir area of British Columbia have agreed to abide by the British Columbia Conciliation Board's unanimous recommendation of a pay boost of 5c an hour.

This is atop their present 9c cost of living bonus and brings the base rate to $1.49 an hour. (LPA)

Kids Show The Way—

L. A. Unions Support No-Prejudice Day Camp

KIDS HAVE more fun than anybody, when given the chance. And kids are more democratic than anybody—when given the chance.

Some 140 children from all races, creeds and cultures exuberantly demonstrated this at the prejudice-free Friendship Day Camp in Los Angeles this summer.

Operating this year for the first time, the camp bulged with a capacity enrollment of 70 six-to-12 year olds at each of two four-week sessions. The kids gleefully enjoyed swimming, hiking, boating, horseback riding, folk-dancing, singing, learning handicrafts — and genuine democracy.

ORGANIZATION of the camp began only last February, when several community, labor and civic leaders became interested in the project. Among the founder-supporters of it were several CIO unions in the Los Angeles area. Cost of the camp is from one-half to one-third average charges made by other day camps.

Primary emphasis of the camp is to give the children camping experience and provide them with a joyful summer time. But underlying objective is the learning of democracy in action.

The kids learn how democracy runs by organizing their own camp. From among their group they elect a mayor and representatives to a camp "council." The council makes camp rules, but they don't become "law" until they are "ratified" by a democratic vote of all the young campers.

ZESTFULLY — sometimes uproariously—the children learn songs, dances, stories, games and skits of various cultures—Negro, Mexican, South American, Jewish, Japanese, and others—that form their history-rich backgrounds.

"The children are encouraged to develop pride in their own cultures, and learn about others," said Ezra Weintraub, the camp's youthful director. "When they have a feeling of security about their own culture, they can better understand and respect that of other persons."

Gil Anaya, human relations director of CIO Steelworkers Dist. 38, is a member of the seven-man executive board, while serving on the over-all board are Anaya, Rep. John H. Dial, Jr., of the CIO Clothing Workers; E. J. Franklin, CIO Auto Workers Region 6 fair practices chairman; Tony Rios, chairman of the Community Services Organization, and CIO Electrical Workers representative; and Balt Yanez, former USA-CIO local union officer.

DEMOCRACY in action is learned by these youngsters at Friendship Day Camp in Los Angeles which gets support from several CIO unions in the area. Costs are less than at similar camps and the counselors are trained in a variety of fields and cultures.

Local FEPC Backed At Steel Parley

PASSAGE of fair employment practice measures on a municipal and state level was set as one of the goals of a recent CIO Steelworkers District 29 conference in Detroit.

Dist. Dir. Thomas Shane, who is chairman of USA-CIO's committee on civil rights, urged that delegates press for adoption of FEPC laws on the city level in view of the failure of the Michigan Legislature to establish such legislation.

He quoted USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald's statement that diligent efforts in areas where the union has substantial membership should help in establishing fair employment practices.

A ROUNDUP by the CIO-PAC on the state legislatures showed that FEP faired badly. Kansas passed a so-called "educational bill" that sets up a five-man commission and stresses education rather than compulsion to curb racial or religious discrimination in employment. Indiana passed a watered-down bill that somewhat strengthened its FEPC law.

Bills proposing new or stronger FEPC laws were rejected by the legislatures of 16 states: Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

ENACTMENT of the Kansas law brought to 12 the number of states with some form of fair employment practices statutes. Five of these lack enforcement provisions or machinery.

A survey made by the American Jewish Congress found that only 23 laws pertaining to civil rights were enacted by state legislatures during the 1953 sessions just ended.

Point Four, UN Aid Helps Haiti's Economy And Growth Of Unions

The following article on trade unionism in an underdeveloped area was prepared by Ruth J. Hoffman, who has been active in the labor education field, after an extended stay in Haiti.

By RUTH J. HOFFMAN

IT IS SAID that the strength of free trade unions is a measure of the development of a country. This is certainly true of Haiti, whose economic advancement began at the same time as the birth of the labor movement. Both are in infancy. Both, like infants, are growing by leaps and bounds.

Economically, Point Four funds are helping to develop irrigation and electrification. The United Nations is eradicating illiteracy, disease and soil erosion. New industries are being developed, aided by better ports and highways, new equipment and more skilled and healthier workers. Vitality resulting from these changes is naturally diverted into the development of unions.

Unions were first organized in 1949 with the encouragement of labor legislation by a new regime. Most are located in the capital, Port-au-Prince, since little industry exists elsewhere. In less than four years, over 15% of the potential membership is organized. Unions are divided into five confederations:

1. The General Confederation of Haitian Workers, with 1200 members in the Customs House, Construction and General Workers Unions. Closely tied to government employment, it is considered less independent than might be desired.

2. The Confederation of Haitian Workers, a very small union of artists affiliated with Peron's Latin American Trade Union Unity Committee and more concerned with Argentine labor politics than legitimate trade unionism. Its inroads have been negligible.

3. The Union of Christian Workers, with 90 members chiefly employed in a sisal plant. It is affiliated with the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions.

4. The Taxi Drivers Union, one of the most militant. It remains independent since the president is persona non grata with the present regime.

5. The National Union of Haitian Workers (UNOH) has about 3000 members in 11 industrial unions. It is associated with ORIT, Western Hemisphere branch of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and is by far the best organized and strongest. It does not enter into politics.

Unions have difficult problems in an underdeveloped country like Haiti.

FIRST, 80% of the people are agricultural. Second, the population is largely illiterate, particularly workers and peasants. Third, poverty and disease so enervate them that there is little vitality to expend on trade union activities. Last, but not least, is the very strong economic power of the employers, which has traditionally dominated and intimidated the working class.

The government has provided some help and encouragement, though it falls far short of needs. Yet a minimum wage and maximum hours law, a new accident and health plan, low-cost housing, mediation and arbitration services and a workers education program are steps in the right direction.

Since 1949, minimum wages in industry have risen from 40c to 70c a day, and though not always enforced, do set a new standard. In agriculture, however, day or piece work earnings are often as low as 60c a week.

MEDIATION and arbitration services have been successful in settling disputes and enforcing work standards. Unfortunately, labor leaders tend to rely too heavily on them, thus weakening internal union strength.

Union leaders generally support the government and its programs, but without enthusiasm. They feel that while it does not fight labor, it does not give any significant help.

The present regime is basically a benevolent military dictatorship whose paternalism is not always in the best interests of trade unions. Ostensibly it permits freedom of speech and the right to strike, but these privileges are rarely exercised.

'Hard Money' Policies Hit Farmers, CIO Learns At Fairs

ADMINISTRATION "hard money" policies are giving the nation's farmers such a beating that last November's election results would be reversed if the presidential election were held today.

That's the opinion of two Michigan CIO representatives after a week of observation at the Ionia Free Fair in charge of the State CIO Council's farm-labor relations program.

Bob Dingwell and Dick Kendziorski reported that farmers are unhappy because the Eisenhower policies have cut their share of the dollars paid by consumers for farm goods.

While farm income has slumped, the same Republican policies have helped push the cost of living to the highest point in history.

The Michigan CIO display is slated for eight county and regional fairs this season, stressing that city workers get pinched in the pocketbook whenever farm income takes a nosedive.

At Ionia, Pres. Bernard Sible of the Ionia-Montcalm CIO Council and Bernard Griffin of Local 420, CIO Furniture Workers, helped to man the display. The Council purchased the space for the tent and made Sible available. Griffin gave up his vacation to help. Also assisting was Mickey Meltzer of the State Committee for Human Rights.

Food Processors Are Making Hay

Here's why the farmers are burning:

The National Dairy Products Corp. has reported a substantial increase in its profits for the first six months of 1953. Profits rose to more than $15.2 million after ample deductions to cover taxes.

Plans For Scandinavia School Told

THE SECOND CIO-Scandinavian Labor Education Workshop, which will take a group of CIO members to Denmark and Norway for two weeks of study, will be held in October, the CIO Depts. of Intl. Affairs and Education & Research announced last week.

Nominations are restricted to full-time workers in shops, offices and mines, and are to be made by international unions and state and local councils. They should be made promptly, so as to give a selection committee of education directors of international unions and the National CIO time to make choices.

THE students selected will meet in New York on Oct. 4 for briefing sessions with CIO officers and staff members. The week of Oct. 7 will be spent in Denmark, where they will be guests of the Danish Federation of Trade Unions. The following week they will go to Norway as guests of the Norwegian Federation of Trade Unions.

The two host federations will provide for living and travel expenses abroad. The sponsoring union or council must arrange for travel from New York to Denmark and return at a cost of $450, plus travel expenses between New York and the student's home, as well as New York and incidental expenses.

As was the case last year, the journey will be a "life-seeing" trip, the Scandinavian way of saying that the CIO students will see how people live, rather than just go sightseeing, and exchange ideas and opinions with them.

FTC Polishes Up Import Label On Sewing Machine

FAILURE TO disclose that their sewing machines are made in Japan has brought a complaint by the Federal Trade Commission against a Chicago concern.

The Nation-Wide Sewing Machine & Supply Co. also was charged with quoting a fictitious price on its electric portable machine. When the sewing machines are received by the respondents, the FTC charges, the words "Japan" or "Made In Japan" appear on the back of the vertical arm but are covered when the motor is attached.

Mazey Asks FCC Hearing On Extending TV Licenses

EMIL MAZEY, CIO Auto Workers secretary-treasurer, called for public hearings on the proposed Federal Communication Commission ruling extending television licenses from one to three years.

Mazey asked that individuals and organizations be given an opportunity to present testimony both on the time extension and on the responsibility of the Commission to assess program quality of television stations. He charged that the FCC's unilateral action on a matter of such great public importance was "undemocratic."

Mazey said that the UAW "would oppose government censorship of television programs," but asserted that periodic review of television programming "helps insure that all types of programs are available to the television audience."

"There are times," Mazey pointed out, "when labor organizations are unable even to buy time and when Commission intercession has been necessary in order that the views of labor can be made known to the inhabitants of a given area.

"The interchange of ideas at a public hearing should help the Commission arrive at policies on program review which will be in the public interest."

Private Power Lobby Is Top Spender This Year

THE POWER lobby was the biggest spender in Washington during the first half of 1953, according to its own figures filed with the clerk of the House.

The private-power lobbyists spent more that a quarter of a million dollars to win friends and influence people in the right places.

The National Association of Electric Companies, heaviest spender among the 500 registered lobbyists reporting, laid out $268,937 during the first six months of this year. In the same period last year the group reported spending $232,877. The power lobbyists oppose public ownership of generating and transmission facilities.

(Recently the Eisenhower Administration announced a sweeping new policy on public power development "reversing the trend" of the low-rate policies of the New Deal and Fair Deal eras.)

The Association of American Railroads was the runner-up in total expenditures for both years. It has spent $119,338 so far this year, as against $129,843 during the first six months of 1952.

THE DOCTORS did some fancy lobbying too, according to the expense sheet filed by the American Medical Association. The AMA reported it spent $88,765 this year, a big drop from the $134,560 it spent for 1952.

Big outlays like these made labor lobbyists look like small potatoes indeed. The CIO reported expenditures of $18,340 for the first half of 1953, compared to $20,680 for the same period a year ago.

The AFL said it spent $48,558 this year against $51,800 in 1952.

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce reported lobbying outlays of $67,257 during the first six months, and $69,018 in the same period a year ago.

Other organizations and the amounts they spent in the first six months of both years included: American Farm Bureau Federation, $48,558 this year, $43,100 last; American Dental Association, $16,303 this year, no report for 1952; American Hospital Association, $22,182 and $21,277; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association, $41,929 this year, nothing last year; National St. Lawrence Project Conference, $25,328 and $34,615; National Milk Producers Federation, $90,402 and $86,018; National Housing Conference, $35,189 and $34,833.

Here's Where That Old Mink Went

Evidence of how the new Republican economy is being geared to the average American's needs is reported by union leaders in Palmyra, N. J. They say that a liquor store in that community advertised "Ice buckets for champagne, trimmed with white mink—$100 and up!" (LPA)

Penny-Pinchers Slap Workers—

CIO Maritime Unit Hits Drive To End Seamen's Medical Care

MERCHANT seamen may be denied the medical care they have received for 155 years as the result of slashes in next year's budget now being considered by the Administration.

Officials of the Health, Education & Welfare Dept., which administers marine hospitals through the U. S. Public Health Service, have been told by the Bureau of the Budget to consider eliminating the program from their appropriations request for the next fiscal year.

Ways of blocking the proposed cut were discussed last week at an emergency meeting of the CIO Maritime Committee.

IF THE omission is finally approved, Congress presumably would have to repeal the law providing free care for seamen, which dates back to 1798. The Public Health Service itself was founded at that time to care for seamen and to prevent the introduction of plagues and other communicable diseases.

Special care for seamen was found necessary as a public health measure. Seafarers brought in cholera, smallpox and other contagious diseases, yet had no regular residences where authorities would be responsible for their quarantine.

Since responsibility for medical care was recognized, Congress in 1906 repealed the tax on tonnage which had been levied to pay for the service and made it free to the seamen. The program thus became an indirect subsidy to the shipping industry, which has long had government financial support as part of the national policy to develop a strong merchant marine.

TEN out of 25 merchant marine hospitals have been closed during the last four years, chiefly because the Budget Bureau denied the Veterans Administration funds to keep some of its patients in them. Only two of the 10 did not have a sufficient patient load to warrant their continued operation.

Hospitals are now located at Baltimore, Boston, Brooklyn, Carville, La., Chicago, Detroit, Fort Worth, Galveston, Lexington, Ky., Memphis, New Orleans, Norfolk, San Francisco, Savannah, Seattle and Staten Island, N. Y.

All have been subject to the general cut in hospital funds which the "economy" bloc in Congress has imposed on the Public Health Service in recent years.

A USPHS official said that if the government discontinued its care of merchant seamen, nearly all the hospitals would have to be closed, since about half of the patients are seafarers. During the early days of the last war, these hospitals provided the bulk of doctors qualified to deal with rare tropical and oriental diseases.

Should they be closed, the nation in time might find itself without even a basic medical staff equipped to deal with the plagues and epidemics troops encounter on overseas assignments.

Closing of the marine hospitals would also be a severe blow to USPHS operations in general, since they form an important part of the government's medical research program.

Congress Started Hospitals In 1798

Marine hospitals, latest target in the Administration's "economy" moves, are known today officially as U. S. Public Health Service Hospitals.

They were originally set up under a law passed in 1798 to provide free care for merchant seamen. Today, however, seamen account for only about half of their patients.

They are also being used for hospitalization of injured federal employes in compensation cases, as well as for the care of Coast Guard personnel.

Murray's Widow, Sister Hurt In Auto Accident

MRS. ELIZABETH Murray, widow of the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray, and Mrs. Mary Thompson, his sister, were injured along with a woman friend when their car crashed and burned near Washington, Pa., last week.

Mrs. Murray, in serious condition, was taken to Mercy Hospital, Pittsburgh. She was suffering from fractures of both arms, a broken ankle, a deep cut on the forehead and severe cuts and bruises. She was reported improved later in the week.

Mrs. Thompson was in Washington Hospital, Washington, in fair condition with internal injuries and a possible broken hip. Her home is in Canonsburg, Pa.

The third woman, Mrs. Marie Block, a neighbor of Mrs. Murray in Pittsburgh, was in Washington Hospital in undetermined condition with internal injuries.

The car went out of control while rounding a curve on U. S. 30, plunged over a 10-ft. embankment, hit a tree and burst into flames. A passing motorist pulled one of the women from the wreckage, and with the aid of other drivers removed the remaining two just as it was swept by fire.

Contract Aid Is Proposed

A DEMAND that the Office of Defense Mobilization reinstate its policy of giving preferential contract treatment to firms in areas of heavy unemployment has been voiced by Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.).

A similar request was made by Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.).

Kennedy wrote ODM Dir. Arthur S. Flemming that he was "shocked" at suspension of the policy. He said the preference policy which allowed companies in surplus labor areas to match lower bids on defense contracts "can mean the difference between economic life and death for many firms and communities."

The Senator demanded an explanation of the ODM move, saying it was "in complete contradiction to the pledges made by Pres. Eisenhower in his campaign speeches at Lawrence, Mass., and elsewhere."

ODM suspended the policy Aug. 13 while revisions are considered. Meanwhile, an ODM spokesman indicated, it was unlikely that the bid-matching feature would be restored.

'For Adults Only'— And This New Booklet Is Not About Kinsey

"FOR ADULTS ONLY" is the title of a booklet published last week by the New Jersey CIO Political Action Committee. Although publication was coincident with appearance of the Kinsey report, the PAC booklet has nothing to do with sex education, despite its title.

About 90,000 copies are being mailed to CIO members in the State's 21 counties.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the State CIO Council says "For Adults Only" tells people over 21 in frank terms the why, what, who, where and when of registration so they can vote in the November election. New Jersey is the only State to elect a governor this year.

"The future of our children depends on what kind of an education they receive, on what kind of a home they're brought up in, and the loving care and hard work of their parents," the booklet says.

Then it points out that a governor, 60 assemblymen and eleven State senators will be elected Nov. 3 and that these officials will decide "what kind of schools, homes and jobs we have in New Jersey—and the future of our children."

The booklet stresses that only those registered before the Sept. 24 deadline can vote.

"Even if you're already properly registered, you can help yourself . . . by making sure that every adult citizen in your family, your place of employment and your neighborhood is also registered," the booklet says."

Warning From PAC—

It's Your Money, But Not If The Sales Tax Boys Have Their Way

DIRECTIONS for a saving of up to $228 a year for an average family are spelled out in a new pamphlet just issued by the CIO Political Action Committee.

Here they are:

"Give a buck to PAC to help fight the sales tax! To help elect a Congress that will vote fair tax laws!"

The pamphlet shows what an average family in each of six cities would find added to its cost of living if the sales tax proposals of the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and a lot of Administration bigwigs from the top drawer of big business have their way.

IN NEW YORK, it points out, the average family consists of 3.2 persons and spends $4282 a year. A 2% sales tax would cost it $84.96, a 5% levy $212.40.

The average Chicago family of 3.3 persons spends $4575 a year. A 2% sales tax would add $91.50 to its cost of living, a 5% sales tax would boost it by $228.75.

If you live in Los Angeles, where the average family of 3.2 persons spends $4452 a year, a sales tax would cost you $89.04 on the 2% basis, or $222.60 at the rate of 5%.

Other average family cost of living increases listed in the pamphlet were: Minneapolis, $80.58 under a 2% sales tax, $201.45 at 5%; Kansas City, Mo., $75.94 at 2%, or $189.85 at 5%; and Portland, Ore., $81.94 with a 2% tax or $205.85 with a 5% levy.

THE PAMPHLET also quotes newspaper articles, etc., showing that big business' big push for the sales tax—which will hurt bitterly those families least able to afford it—is gathering momentum.

It lists an excerpt from the Associated Press file for Aug. 3 telling about the NAM serving notice on Congress that it wants such an impost.

It cites a sentence called from testimony of a C. of C. spokesman before the House Ways & Means Committee making the same demand. (And last week Treasury Sec. Humphrey voiced another hint that the GOP Administration may ask for a national sales tax.)

Other quotes all point to the same big business-GOP goal: a federal sales tax, preferably sugar-coated so the people won't know what hit their pocketbooks, so the income tax on corporations can be killed and a flat ceiling put on personal income tax rates.

The CIO-PAC pamphlet, with an eye on that dollar, concludes:

"See your shop steward NOW."

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

IT'S COSTING MORE to borrow money or buy on installments (one of New York's largest chain banks has just boosted its rates for small loans from a yearly 7% to 9%). At the same time, Federal Reserve Board figures show that family debts have increased 20% in just one year.

Money paid out in interest fees brings home no new furniture.

Not long ago I interviewed a "typical" wage-earner picked by his union local because his pay hits the U. S. average right on the nose, he has the average family of two children, etc. In fact, he's a flesh-and-blood statistic. His name is John, he's a husky, friendly guy and an active union man who has worked in the same big hardware factory in Stamford, Conn., for the past 12 years.

Can You Hear This?

Dictograph Products has promised the Federal Trade Commission to stop advertising that its hearing aid, Acousticon, has government approval that is withheld from any other brand or that booklets published by the company are put out by the government.

Frances, John's wife, told me that every payday, John deposits $10 in the credit union at the factory. And every Wednesday, just as regularly, he has to draw it out to help pay the bills for the rest of the week. Like many other industrial workers, John has a terrific urge to save a little money. But that 10 bucks won't stick to his account more than a few days.

For one thing he got into debt with a series of medical bills. Frances was pretty sick a while back, and only repeated doses of penicillin pulled her through. At that time penicillin cost the murderous price of $7 for each little box. A "typical" wage-earner's envelope simply isn't built to stand that kind of assault.

Having gotten into debt, John and Frances continue to pay a toll of interest which drains their funds so they can't get on a cash basis. They are paying for their furniture and refrigerator on the installment plan. They pay for their insurance that way too; 25 or 50c a week or month on a lot of little policies. They're not unique; still being typical.

ONE OF THE COUNTRY's leading family-budget authorities, Sylvia Shiras, says she finds the chief reason wage-earning families get into debt is because they fail to anticipate inevitable large replacements—the big purchases that can't be met out of one paycheck.

To get on a cash basis you need a system for anticipating large replacement needs like refrigerators and cars, and for paying your insurance on an annual basis so you save 11% of its cost.

Here is a simple system to use:

WEEKLY CASH which the wife handles for food, dry cleaning, drugs, etc., goes into envelopes or a budget box.

WEEKLY CASH which the children get for carfare, lunches, spending, etc., goes into an envelope for each one.

ALLOTMENTS for medical reserve, car, vacation, insurance, fuel, are deposited in a special savings account, or broken up into additional accounts if desired.

LONG-RANGE FUNDS for education, emergencies, special goals, go into another savings account.

RETIREMENT FUNDS can go into another account, or as they accumulate, part may be invested in government or other safe bonds or securities.

But don't try to budget through installment buying, even though merchants call it the "budget plan." Very often you will find an auto or furniture salesman suggests that you use the dealer's "budget plan" rather than draw out your own funds, and take the chance of not replacing them.

This is an accepted selling technique in the merchandising trades. It simply means that the dealer wants to make an additional profit on the financing as well as on the goods itself.

Wild Blue Yonder Is Just Where Price Index Is Going

THE COST OF LIVING, soaring into the wild blue yonder on its Republican wings, in mid-July hit the second all-time high in as many months, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The bureau's Consumer Price Index jumped two-tenths of 1% between mid-June and mid-July, from 114.5 to 114.7. The increase raised the index level to 1.1% more than it was in February, just after the new Administration took over and when the upward spiral began.

The jump means that about one million members of the CIO Auto Workers will get a cost of living pay increase of 1c an hour beginning with the first payday after Sept. 1.

Raises in housing and medical care costs were the main contributors to the over-all increase, the BLS said, jumping three-tenths of 1%. Transportation costs, reflecting general price increases in gasoline, went up two-tenths of 1%, food costs one-tenth of 1% despite the continued decline in prices at the farm.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index:

Free Labor Grants Asked By Reuther

A SPECIAL Labor Day appeal for CIO members to support the CIO Free World Labor Fund and its "Trade Union Point Four Program" was issued last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The fund is being used to help build free, democratic labor unions in countries where they are fighting against Communist domination, and in underdeveloped nations on the threshold of the industrial age.

Part of the money is being spent on CARE equipment kits aimed at helping the free unions in countries like France, Italy and Germany. Each kit contains a typewriter, a mimeograph machine with paper and stencils, a stapler and other equipment.

Lack of just such articles and lack of the means to buy them has often kept local unions in other countries from organizing and propagandizing as effectively as they might, Reuther found on his recent European trip.

Contributions to the fund, which may be earmarked for the purchase of CARE kits if desired, may be sent to John Brophy, Coordinator, CIO Free World Labor Fund, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

FTC Cracks Down On Rubber Firms

The Federal Trade Commission has won consent agreements from four rubber companies promising not to discriminate in price in the sale of rubber heels, soles and other products used in shoe repairing.

The four are B. F. Goodrich, Goodyear Tire & Rubber, American Mitrite Rubber, and O'Sullivan Rubber. They all refrained from either admitting or denying they had violated the law.

20 Tons Of Filthy Foods Seized By U. S. In Month

TWENTY-FOUR seizures of products alleged to be in violation of the pure food laws were made in July by the Food and Drug Administration.

More than 20 tons of the food seized consisted of filthy or decomposed cereals and cereal products, eggs, seafood, poultry and berries.

Eight actions were brought against firms for foods misbranded as to quality or vitamin content. Drugs and devices said to be substandard or with misleading health claims brought five actions.

Every section of the country was represented in the violations. There were several cases where "enriched" bread was found to be deficient in enrichment. Dairy products containing filth were reported and owners of the businesses drew heavy fines and court costs.

The items inspected and condemned by FDA agents included cocoa to which flour had been added, short-weight stuffed olives and butter and oleomargarine sold as butter.

A number of druggists were fined for selling drugs without physicians' prescriptions or refilling prescriptions without a doctor's okeh.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

Here's another personal note: It's good to be able to tell all of my friends who have inquired that I am feeling fit and chipper and expect to get back to my desk shortly.

BROTHER R. J. THOMAS, who recently did me a service by sitting in on the Executive Committee meeting in my stead, has returned from a brief visit to the West Coast.

While he was there, he talked to a North American Conference on the problems of apprenticeship, held in San Diego, Calif. For some time now, R. J. has acted for CIO on the National Advisory Committee of the Bureau of Apprenticeship, a division of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, where he has been able to contribute out of the vast experience he has gained in such matters in the sheet metal trades, under the jurisdiction of the CIO Auto Workers.

The title of R. J.'s address was Safety, which most of us think of in personal terms—how to keep from having accidents. The major point that he made was a larger interpretation of the word "safety." He spoke of safety to the entire nation, the safety of having a sound apprentice program which would help keep American industry strong and powerful against the threat of totalitarian aggression.

Brother Thomas pointed out that the great bulk of our supply of highly skilled labor has come through immigration from Western Europe, and that these workers set up the patterns of high skills which have enabled us to exceed the world with our industrial plant.

He told the assembled industry and labor representatives that our national safety depends in large part on our ability to supply the demand for more and more skilled trades workers.

R. J. ALSO EXPRESSED the CIO viewpoint on this vital matter. Industry tends to take a short-sighted look at the picture. All too often it is willing to "dilute" the skilled trades. Where we know of our certain experience that it takes from four to five years to turn out a journeyman, industry is willing to set up programs which push workers into skilled capacities in one to two years. It is a case where trying to turn a quick profit, an old habit of American industry, can hurt our long-range planning for keeping our nation at its height of strength.

R. J. pointed out that some things can't be hurried. The safety of the nation demands that we keep on developing the best craftsmen in the world.

It is also a task, as he commented, which calls for close cooperation between labor and management.

CIO has certainly taken its stand. We favor the development of genuine journeymen in the skilled trades. We are told, almost every day, by representatives of management that they, too, want to do the things that will build America. Here is a chance for them to show it, by getting behind a realistic program to develop, increase, and improve our supply of top-notch skilled trades workingmen and women.

BROTHER ORAL GARRISON reports a sidelight to the recent meetings of our Executive Board, where he and Brother Carl McPeak, director of councils, had a luncheon meeting with our CIO regional directors to talk over mutual problems.

We have carried through a great reorganization in CIO. One of the best things that can be said of it is that it was accomplished with so little fuss and strain. In an organization as vast as ours, we can well be proud that we have men competent and willing to take up new ideas and put them into effective action.

Speaking of the new set-up, Brother Walter Carson of the CIO Furniture Workers, reports on the first election held after the reorganization. This was at the American Furniture Co., Martinsville, Va., where 1000 workers voted three-to-one for the CIO.

The next day he reported another victory at the Little Rock Furniture Co. Little Rock, Ark., where with 216 eligible, a five-to-one vote was cast for CIO. Cheering news.

Jersey CIO Praises, Damns Governor For Veto Actions

NEW JERSEY'S Gov. Alfred Driscoll has drawn mixed reactions from the State CIO Council for his handling of legislative matters.

He got cheers for his veto of three measures opposed by the CIO. These bills would have allowed bus companies to get fare increases on the basis of their own cost figures, reduced the size of "skimmed" milk labels on containers and transferred $50 million in working contributions from the State temporary disability benefit fund to the unemployment compensation fund.

On the other hand, State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman handed the Governor a rap on the knuckles for his "phony" conditional veto of a bill to permit retroactive payment for the waiting week in temporary disability benefits to those disabled four weeks or more in a row.

Amendments suggested to the Legislature by the Governor would postpone the measure's effectiveness from July 1, 1953 to Jan. 1, 1954, and would change "four weeks" to "28 days."

Holderman said if the bill had been signed by the Governor promptly after it was passed in June "it could have been effective July 1, thereby increasing benefits about 10% to the sick and disabled."

Auto Union, IAM Prepare For Joint Aircraft Wage Drive

THE CIO Auto Workers and the AFL Machinists took steps this week to coordinate wage demands and bargaining activities in the aircraft industry, where they together represent some 95% of all workers.

The meetings, which took place in the office of IAM Pres. Al Hayes in Washington, were the first step toward carrying out the terms of a new and expanded no-raiding and mutual assistance agreement signed by the unions in June. UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther was represented by Vice Pres. John W. Livingston.

Chief item on the agenda, according to Hayes, was "substandard wages and working conditions" at United Aircraft. The two unions represent all workers at the company's four major divisions—Pratt & Whitney at Hartford, Southington and New Haven, Conn.; Sikorsky, Bridgeport, Conn.; Chance Vought, Dallas, Tex., and Hamilton Standard Propeller, Windsor Locks, Conn.

UAW and IAM will seek a thorough overhauling of Pratt & Whitney's labor policies, and at the same time will launch simultaneous membership campaigns to increase bargaining strength of union members.

Details of the Pratt & Whitney drive will be mapped at a special called meeting in New York Sept. 3.

Attending the meeting of the Joint Aircraft Coordinating Committee were: for the UAW—Livingston, who is director of the union's national aircraft department; Regional Directors C. V. O'Halloran, Los Angeles; Russell Letner, St. Louis, and Charles Kerrigan, New York, and Assistant Dir. Paul M. Russo, Detroit. For the IAM—General Vice Presidents P. L. (Roy) Siemiller, Chicago; Jesse McGlon, Atlanta, and Fred Coonley, New York, and Grand Lodge Rep. Charles F. West, Washington.

UFW Wins Big Plant In Virginia

THE CIO has scored another decisive election victory in the South. This time it's the CIO Furniture Workers who are taking the bows for their organizing gain at Martinsville, Va.

Close on the heels of two significant victories by the CIO Electrical Workers was an election at the American Furniture Co. plant in Martinsville. UFW-CIO triumphed in the poll, 719 to 255.

UFW Pres. Morris Pizer commented that "this victory for the United Furniture Workers, CIO, is additional proof that the furniture workers of the South want a union. And we shall see to it that everything possible is done to help them get it, in the Martinsville, Va., area and in all other areas of the South in which there are unorganized furniture workers."

The organizing drive at American Furniture was directed by Intl. Vice Pres. Walter Carson, southern regional director, and UFW Dist. Dir. Floyd Buckner.

Recently, IUE-CIO scored major victories in elections at a General Electric plant at Buechel, Ky., near Louisville, and at a Singer Sewing Machine Co. subsidiary in Anderson, S. C., to roll on the impressive string of CIO voting wins.

Strike Closes Big Gold Mine

About 1600 members of the CIO Steelworkers went on strike last week at the fabuously rich Noranda Mine in the gold fields of northwestern Quebec. Other mines in the area were expected to close, as Noranda processes their ore.

The strikers joined 750 USA-CIO members who walked out of three gold mines at Timmins, Ont., about 150 miles away, several weeks ago. Both strikes followed the breakdown of union efforts to negotiate a cut in the work week from 48 to 44 hours with no loss in pay, a general wage increase, and the checkoff.

Lloyd Vaughan Named CIO Panama Director

APPOINTMENT of Lloyd P. Vaughan as CIO director in the Panama Canal Zone was announced last week by CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

Vaughan, who is a member of the CIO Textile Workers, organized the first CIO local union south of the Mason and Dixon Line in 1937 at the Richmond Piece Dye Works in Richmond, Va.

He recently was assistant to Lorne H. Nelles, CIO Southern director. Vaughan's previous assignments have been as South Carolina director for the Southern Organizing Committee and as assistant to Virginia CIO Dir. Ernest B. Pugh.

Vaughan, who will leave for his new assignment Labor Day week end, replaces CIO Rep. Ed Welsh who is returning for a new assignment.

He will assist the large Government & Civic Employees Local 900 which has Panama Canal employes as members. Vaughan's headquarters will be in Panama City.

10,000 Mourn DPO Picket Line Victim

DEATH on the picket line was described as a "bitter and unnecessary tragedy" as an estimated 10,000 CIO members viewed the body of one of their number killed by a runaway car in New York.

Josef Monk, member of District 65, CIO Distributive, Processing & Office Workers, was walking the picket line outside Hearn's department store in the Bronx when a passing car went out of control, climbed the sidewalk and killed Monk.

A thousand CIO members attended Monk's funeral in St. Anthony of Padua church, among them 800 of his fellow strikers from Hearn's two New York stores.

Acting Pres. Jack Paley of Dist. 65 pointed out that Monk's death was "unnecessary" and said picket lines would have been removed long since if Hearn's management had accepted union proposals to settle the strike by impartial arbitration or public mediation.

UWUA Gets 5.5% Hike At Ohio Edison

CIO UTILITY Workers have won a 5.5% wage increase in a new contract with Ohio Edison Co.

Agreement was reached just before the zero hour set for a strike deadline. Marathon negotiations several days after the old contract expired brought the settlement which averages 10.5c an hour. The company's previous top offer was 6c an hour.

UWUA-CIO members in Connecticut struck against the Greenwich Gas Co. when negotiations broke down after four months. A four-weeks strike brought a 12c across the board increase, a $5 per month raise in salesmen's car allowances, hospitalization and surgical costs to be paid up to 60% by the company and other fringe benefits.

A GENERAL wage increase of 10c an hour and extension of insurance benefits was gained by the UWUA members in contracts with 11 water companies in Western Pennsylvania.

More gains were registered in contracts signed by UWUA with water companies in Greenwich and Portchester, N. Y. A 12.5c wage boost and elimination of some job inequities feature the pact which runs until Dec. 1, 1954.

CIO Urges U. S. To Ease Rules On Home Loans

MORE liberal financing of home purchases "where mortgages are underwritten by the Federal Housing Administration and do not exceed $12,000" was urged on Pres. Eisenhower last week by the CIO.

The President's attention was called to the "broad discretionary power" Congress gave him by CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, who also is chairman of the CIO Housing Committee.

Power to liberalize financing terms on mortgages up to $12,000 "was specifically granted to you to be used when conditions warranted," by Congress during its last session, Thimmes wrote the President.

THE CIO official recommended that Eisenhower "direct that such liberalized loans be guaranteed by FHA only if a finding is made that the price of the home is lower or at least no greater than the price level existing before the liberalization of the mortgage terms."

CIO recommended this procedure, Thimmes said, "to assure that such liberalization (of financing terms) will not lose its benefit to the consumer and the national welfare."

In explaining the CIO's views, he wrote:

"The building industry needs added impetus in the moderate-price field. A disproportionate amount of new housing is in the high-period field. This condition is not in the interests of the consumer and builds an unsound economic structure. Luxury homes tend to most rapidly lose value in the face of economic adversity.

"With some signs of the softening in the over-all economic picture and specifically in the real estate and home building fields, action to encourage sound growth of sound activity in the housing field can prove useful and involves no danger to any interest."

UNDERSCORING the CIO's recommendation that the liberalization of loans be qualified by a finding that the home value has not been inflated, "because such price increases would defeat and distort the purposes of the mortgage liberalization," Thimmes said:

"If the consumer cannot benefit by lower amounts of required down payment and by significantly lower monthly payments, the demand for housing will not increase.

"The ability of moderate-income families to become home owners or to purchase more desirable homes will not be enhanced. The shortage of homes for middle-income families will not be alleviated."

'Don't Buy Cudahy' Drive Launched

CIO Packinghouse Workers have launched a nation-wide "Don't Buy Cudahy" campaign with distribution of 500,000 leaflets, posters and stickers. Union members have been asked to refuse to buy meat and other products of the Cudahy Packing Co.

The UPWA-CIO drive was initiated as the answer to a union-busting campaign by the company, one of the Big Four packers. Union officials claimed that since last year's national elections, Cudahy has been refusing to settle legitimate grievances,

Jacoby Named As Economic Aide

Neil H. Jacoby, dean of the Univ. of California business administration school in Los Angeles, was named last week by Pres. Eisenhower as a member of his three-man Council of Economic Advisers.

By ARNOLD BEICHMAN

CHANGES in Soviet foreign policy, if any, have as yet shown little significance so far as free labor is concerned, according to Arthur Deakin, secretary of England's largest trade union, the Transport & General Workers, and vice president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Deakin visited the United States for consultations with American labor leaders on his way back to England after serving as a fraternal delegate to the convention of the Canadian Trades & Labor Congress.

"THE POLICY of international communism to use trade unions, to infiltrate and to secure the influence and control of the trade union movement appears unchanged," said the leader of 1.3 million British transport workers when he stopped in New York.

"If there have been any significant changes in Soviet policy, their purpose is still unclear."

As chairman of the British Trade Union Congress Intl. Committee, Deakin declared that his visit to the U. S. was "of great value because it had been possible to discuss some of the problems of the ICFTU at this time."

"Such contacts," he said, "are always helpful and prevent any possibility of misunderstanding. At all times, we are ready to discuss mutual problems with the American trade union movement."

Commenting on the uprisings in East Germany since June 17, Deakin declared that "the Trades Union Congress had admired the action of the East German people in attempting to free themselves from oppression by Soviet communism."

"However, we must be certain that whatever the ICFTU does that it will contribute to the maximum benefit of the German people," he added.

Asked about reports of differences between American and British labor, Deakin asserted that "we are only concerned in cooperating with the American unions."

"IF THERE appear to be differences of opinion," he said, "it is our job to create a common understanding so that we can do all the things that we believe to be in the interests of the free trade union world."

"I believe the ICFTU is progressing in harmony and with full unity of purpose in the general interests of workers throughout the world whom it represents."

British labor is now in the throes of a debate, among other issues, over the question of nationalization—which will come to a head at the coming TUC convention.

"Before we proceed to extend the principle of nationalization, we must assure the success of those industries already nationalized," Deakin maintained.

HE POINTED out that his union was convinced that re-nationalization of truck transport, denationalized by the Churchill government, must be supported if the Labor Party is returned to power "because it is in the interests of the economy of the country."

Turning to the ICFTU of which Deakin, a former TUC president, was one of the founders, the British labor spokesman asserted that "in its short life, the ICFTU has accomplished much more than those of us responsible for its foundation believed possible."

"Its main and immediate responsibility," he said, "is to bring assistance to the people in the less developed areas of the world, to help them build good and free trade union organizations and to give practical help through educational work and material aid, all this through the medium of the regional organizations of the ICFTU.

BACK TO SCHOOL—The nation's youngsters now are trekking down the school path that shapes America's future. For millions of youngsters—full of hope and enthusiasm like those above—schooling will come from the 1953 equivalent of the little red schoolhouse: Unsafe buildings (which will cost thousands of lives); overcrowded, inadequate school plants; lack of classrooms; and a critical teacher shortage. Steel Union Expands Drive To Sign Office Workers

SWEEPING WAGE gains of more than $200 a month since the CIO Steelworkers signed its first contract covering white collar workers in the steel industry and an intensified drive to organize this group were announced last week by USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald.

There now are 30,000 white-collar people in the steel union's total membership of approximately 1.2 million.

McDonald said the survey revealed that USA-CIO office and clerical membership comprised the largest organized group of its kind in a single industry, except for railroad workers and teachers. A strong effort will be made to swell the figure for the group.

THE $200 figure cited by the survey represents wage gains only, McDonald said, and does not include "a substantial but unestimated amount of money" that went to pay for fringe benefits such as pensions, insurance, improved vacations, shift premiums, overtime and holidays.

The Steelworkers signed their first contract covering a white-collar group with National Tube in August 1941. This firm and other subsidiaries of U. S. Steel formed the basis for the USA-CIO survey. The resulting picture, McDonald reported, is typical of most of basic steel and much of the fabricating industry.

USA-CIO points to establishment of 17 salary classifications covering all jobs in the steel industry's white-collar field, and bi-weekly guarantees for workers in each classification, as one of the major achievements it has won.

THIS SALARY classification setup parallels one covering production and maintenance workers employed by every basic steel company under contract to USA and under which every job in the mills is listed under one of 32 job classes.

The survey pointed out that the monthly salary of messengers, a typical job at the lower end of the job class schedule, is now $241. That's an increase of $183 over the $58 messengers were paid in 1941.

In the next classification are such jobs as file clerks with a monthly salary of $261 compared to the $63 paid in 1941. Typists in Class 2 are listed at $281; stenographers in Class 3 at $301; payroll clerks, Class 4, $312, and so on up through machine operators, cost clerks, engineers and design draftsmen with a top guarantee of $562.

White-collar workers got higher wages and better conditions because they joined the union, the survey said.

"Those who were in the steel offices before 1940 will recall the raises won by the men in the mills while white collar workers collected not one penny," it stated.

SINCE THEN, wages and fringe benefits enjoyed by office and clerical personnel have kept pace with provisions written into production and maintenance contracts. These include a $100 minimum monthly pension for 25 years' service at age 65; social insurance for employes and dependents; paid vacations (three weeks for 15 years' service); overtime pay; extra pay plus time off for holidays worked and premium pay for afternoon and night shift work.

On the non-economic side, the survey said, "of utmost importance to people who had worked . . . with no job security has been the five-step grievance procedure set up in union contracts to settle all types of disputes. "No longer is the risk of unfair discharge one of the prices to be paid for wearing a white shirt to work."

USA Office Contracts Cover 120 Firms

More than 120 companies have agreements with the CIO Steelworkers covering white collar workers. Many others deal with office locals through special sections written into producton and maintenance contracts.

USA-CIO bargains for its 30,000 white collar membership employed by virtually every basic steel firm in the nation including U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Crucible, Wheeling, Pittsburgh Steel, Colorado Fuel & Iron and Kaiser Steel.

Included in the 120 are such fabricators and related firms as American Can, Continental Can, American Radiator, Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton, Walworth, Blawnox Steel, Thew Shovel, American Locomotive and Elliott Co.

As Mr. Dooley Said—

For Sure, They're For Unions... But Hardly Iny Wages

Famous for years in the American labor movement are the observations of "Mr. Dooley on the Closed Shop," by Finley Peter Dunne. On this Labor Day, they're worth recalling.

By FINLEY PETER DUNNE

"WHAT'S ALL THIS that's in the papers about the open shop?" asked Mr. Hennessey.

"Why, don't ye know?" said Mr. Dooley. "Really, I'm surprised at yer ignorance, Hinnissey. What is the open shop? Sure, 'tis where they kape the doors open to accommodate th' constant stream av min comin' in t' take jobs cheaper than th' min that has th' jobs.

"'Tis like this, Hinnissey: Supposed wan av these free-born citizens is workin' in an open shop f'r the princely wage ave wan large iron dollar a day av tin hours. Along come anither son-av-a-gun and he sez t' th' boss. 'Oi think Oi could handle th' job nicely f'r ninety cints.'"

"Sure," sez th' boss, "and th' wan dollar man gets out into the' crool worruld t'exercise his inalienable roights as a free-born American citizen an' scab on some other poor devil. An' so it goes on, Hinnissey. An' who gets th' benefit? Thrue, is saves th' boss money, but he don't care no more f'r money than he does f'r his right eye.

"It's all principle wid him. He hate t' see min robbed av their indipindence. They must have their indipindence, regardless av anything else."

"But," said Mr. Hennessey, "these open-shop min ye menshun say they are f'r unions if properly conducted."

"Shure," said Mr. Dooley, "if properly conducted. An' there we are: an' how would they have thim conducted? No strikes, no rules, no contracts, no scales, hardly iny wages an' damn few members."

Wage, PAC Goals Set In Labor Day Statements

Statements calling on organized labor in the U. S. and Canada to continue its fights to improve the lot of members and organize the unorganize were issued on Labor Day by union leaders, while government spokesmen extended their greetings. Excerpts from several follow:

"We, of labor, shall strive to make a better America—an America with better schools, better homes, better health, greater security, greater happiness and greater dignity for all. Through such a program, we can best fight Communism in our land."

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers:

"Unions brought the workers of this continent out of economic slavery into a land of hope and decency . . .

"Unions have accomplished a lot, but there are millions still unorganized in this country. They can and must be organized for their own sakes, and for the same of those already organized . . . There is a lot to be done.

"Wages are still out of line in many places. Some areas are economically still back in the McKinley days . . . The runaway shop must be organized . . . There must be improvements in pensions and health plans and holidays and vacations, and all the other good things that make up a union contract. There must be an end to discrimination."

Nat. Dir. Jack Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee:

"There are four major tasks that confront us as we celebrate Labor Day. They are:

"The launching of the most intensive registration and poll tax payment drive in the history of labor's political activities.

"The start of an equally intensive and productive campaign to produce the voluntary dollars which we in the CIO need to finance our political activities.

"To continue our campaign of education among CIO members and their families on the importance of the issues which confront us as Americans.

"To perfect further our political organization on the ward and precinct level."

Pres. Eisenhower: "The workers of America are witnesses, before the world, of the strength, the pride and the prosperity that alone can be won by free labor. They are strong in their independent unions. They are proud beyond the temptation of political subservience. They are an indestructible bulwark of free government.

". . . They mock the false insinuation that economic well-being can be purchased only at the cost of political freedom. They are the final answer to those who prate freedom and practice slavery."

Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin: "American free labor has grown along with the American nation and its people, and it has used its strength to help the cause of freedom around the world.

"On this first Monday in September, 1953's Labor Day, it is fitting and proper that American working people, those in white collars as well as those in overalls, extend again their thoughts and their greetings and well-wishes to their brother workers in foreign lands."

Sec. George Middleton, Scottish Trades Union Congress: "Warm fraternal greetings to CIO on the occasion of Labor Day celebrations. The trade union movement in Scotland feels a strong affinity with CIO, belonging as they do to the country which gave birth to your late and much revered president, Philip Murray.

"American Labor Day 1953 is another signpost in the march of freedom and democracy throughout the world and the spread of free trade unionism in all countries."

Carey Suggests Big Business Celebrate Thanksgiving Early

AFTER 20 years of government for the people, the country has now turned to "government for profit," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey declared in an appearance on the National Broadcasting Co., "Viewpoint USA" radio program set for Sept. 6.

"Perhaps if we belonged to that small, very special, very select group of wealthy Americans who run our giant industries, our viewpoint would be different," he added.

"In fact, I am sure, that if we belonged to that group we would spend this Labor Day weekend in wild rejoicing."

Carey bitterly attacked the Republican Administration for the give-away program it has initiated for the benefit of the wealthy and for its utter lack of concern for the average American worker, farmer or consumer.

He put on the give-away program the offshore oil lands given to Texas, California and Louisiana so wealthy oil companies can obtain them more readily, and the 28 synthetic rubber plants sold to the rubber industry at a fraction of their cost.

Coming up, he predicted, are give-aways of Niagara Falls power rights, atomic energy, the national parks, public grazing lands and other natural resources.

"Is it any wonder, then, that we in the CIO suggest big business have a private 'Thanksgiving Day' to demonstrate properly its appreciation for all that it has been given by the 83d Congress?" he asked.

"Maybe the rest of us could spend the day in mourning—or more effectively in making sure we are registered so we can vote on Election Day 1954."

Oldenbroek Calls For War On Poverty And Disease

THE END of hostilities in Korea presents a summons to free labor to attack "the hereditary enemies of suffering mankind—poverty, hunger, disease and ignorance," Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions declared in a Labor Day message.

"We owe it to the memory of those who have fallen in defense of peace and freedom," he said in greetings to the ICFTU's North American affiliates.

"This is the task which beckons us and which will only be fulfilled if the democratic labor movement provides the will and the driving power to make all the peoples and the governments of the free world face up to their responsibilities.

"The call which went out from the founding congress of the ICFTU has now acquired new meaning and new urgency:

"'To mobilize the tools of abundance possessed by the industrially advanced nations of the world to assure full employment, security against want, old-age and sickness and to provide ever-rising standards of living and a richer and fuller life for the peoples everywhere.'"

The claims of dictators who offered to provide these things in exchange for workers' hard-won political and union rights, Oldenbroek continued, have been exposed "as a hollow mockery by the courageous uprisings of the workers of Eastern Germany, Czechoslovakia and elsewhere against intolerable conditions."

HANDSHAKES are exchanged as federal and state mediators helped settle the 11-day strike by CIO Communication Workers against Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. At right are CWA-CIO Reps. Carl Majors and Albert Bowles.

CWA Gains For 95,000 In New Wage Pacts

STRIKEBREAKING aid by the National Guard for one operational subsidiary of the giant Bell System was vigorously denounced last week by CIO and CIO Communications Workers, as the telephone workers won important contract gains in new settlements in several sections of the country.

CWA signed contracts with four more units of the Bell System, one ending a 12-day strike in six southwestern states and the others terminating extended negotiations. All settlements, which cover 95,000 workers, are consistent with the $2 to $3 weekly wage increase pattern set in earlier negotiations.

Contract settlements with Bell units now total 25 affecting more than a quarter of a million workers. Yet to be signed are seven agreements covering over 35,000 workers.

THE DENUNCIATION of use of the National Guard "as the armed servant of tight-fisted employers" came from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne during a one-day pressure strike by CWA members in Maryland and the District of Columbia.

During the walkout, the Maryland National Guard turned over 300 U. S. Army cots and blankets to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for use by scabs in Maryland exchanges.

The deal was arranged by J. P. Cooper, C. & P. general plant manager who also is a guard colonel, and Brig. Gen. Harry C. Ruhl, executive officer of the Maryland Military Dept.

REUTHER sent telegrams to Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.) and Rep. Short (R. Mo.) of the Senate and House armed services committee saying:

"The National Guard for many years gained an odorous reputation as a strike-breaking agency. It had been assumed that that unhappy phase of the National Guard's history was over. The Maryland incident suggests that that National Guard is reverting to its former status as the armed servant of tight-fisted employers."

Beirne called on Defense Sec. Wilson to see that a similar incident did not occur again.

Saltonstall replied to Reuther that he had requested the Defense Dept. to investigate the question of whether a State governor has full control over federal property turned over to National Guard units.

This was the CWA bargaining picture last week:

SOUTHWESTERN BELL: A 12-day strike was ended with wage gains of $2 to $3 weekly for an average of 7c an hour for 53,000 workers in Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas and parts of Missouri. Differential increases, upgrading of some towns and job reclassifications were worked out in addition to a compromise "no-strike" clause.

LONG LINES: Marathon negotiations averted a possible strike of 22,000 long distance and overseas operators in 40 States, winning increases of $1.50 to $3 weekly. Settlement terms also include shortening the period to reach maximum pay and grants increased vacations.

PACIFIC TEL. & TEL.: Settlement was reached with this company in the Southern California area covering over 11,300 workers. In the Washington-Idaho area served by the same Bell unit affecting 6700 workers a new contract has been signed.

INDIANA BELL: A strike that began against the company July 22 was on its way to establishing a CWA record for length and militancy.

Judge Cites CWA Officer For Contempt

Vice Pres. A. T. Jones of the CIO Communications Workers faces charges of "indirect contempt" of the Indiana courts for a statement made during the strike against the Indiana Bell Telephone Co.

Jones had told newspapermen that Bell had "given the citizens . . . more than one glimpse of its weight and power with the courts."

Clothing Organizer Beaten In South

AN ORGANIZER for the CIO Clothing Workers was brutally beaten with a pistol last week by a gang of strong-arm thugs who kidnapped him from a prospective union member's home in Ashland, Miss.

The victim, James Jackson, 26, of Hattiesburg, Miss., was taken in an auto some four miles from Ashland and dragged into a cornfield. There he was pistol-whipped and kicked so viciously that one ear was deafened, an arm broken and his body left a mass of cuts and bruises.

Fellow organizers took him to a hospital in Columbus, Miss., where he was treated before being transferred to a Hattiesburg hospital.

GOV. HUGH WHITE was immediately informed of the beating by the union and promptly directed the State Highway Patrol to investigate. The union also began an investigation.

ACWA-CIO Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky conferred in Washington with Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel. They were following the two investigations carefully to determine if the attack on Jackson involved a violation of the federal civil rights statutes.

Potofsky denounced the cowardly assault as only the latest in a series of outbreaks of terror and lawlessness directed against both CIO and AFL organizers in parts of the South.

Ed Blair, an ACWA national representative, blamed "a professional goon squad of seven hired thugs" for the attack. Union officials said the attacked climaxed a "week of terrorism" against organizers.

UNION OFFICALS said Jackson was in Ashland as the result of requests from more than 100 employes of the Ashland-Benton Corp., a manufacturer of U. S. Army shirts, for the services of an organizer.

The ACWA-CIO has already organized several thousand shirt and clothing workers in Mississippi communities without strikes or work stoppages.

Jackson was explaining the union program to an Ashland-Benton employe in the latter's home when the house was surrounded by men who had driven up in four autos. He was forced at pistol point into a car with seven of the men.

He said his assailants demanded that he reveal the whereabouts of other ACWA-CIO organizers in that part of the State, and the names of members of the union organizing committee at the Ashland-Benton plant.

They warned him, he said, that his beating constituted a notice to other union organizers to get out and stay out, and they threatened to kill him if he reported the beating to police.

The Benton-Ashland firm has been operating about three months. Its plant was built under the State's "Balance-Agriculture-With-Industry" (BAWI) program, under which factories have been constructed for long-term lease at low rents to industrial employers who also are given tax advantages.

Keep Enforcing Civil Rights Laws, CIO Tells Brownell

HOPE that the Dept. of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation will continue to investigate violations of U. S. civil rights laws regardless of how some governors feel was expressed last week by the CIO.

Some state executives, notably Gov. John S. Fine (R.) of Pennsylvania and Gov. John S. Battle (D.) of Virginia, complained at the recent Governors' Conference in Seattle that such activities are an invasion of states' rights. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey (R.) of New York apparently agreed.

In a letter to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr., setting forth the CIO's views, CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg accused the governors of "in effect urging that the Justice Dept. should, by non-enforcement, destroy parts of our Constitution and the legislation designed to implement it."

"THESE GENTLEMEN," he wrote, "do not seem to realize that the Civil Rights Acts, which have been on the statute books for almost three-quarters of a century, affirmatively place on the federal government the responsibility for implementing, specifically as against state and local officials, the constitutional guarantees set forth in the 13th, 14th and 15 Amendments.

"I am sure that you, as Attorney General, will . . . vigorously investigate and prosecute state and local officials, and all others acting under color of law, who deliberately infringe upon the basic constitutional rights of citizens of the United States."

(In a copyrighted interview with the magazine U. S. News & World Report, Brownell pledged that there will be no let-up in the enforcement of civil rights laws.)

ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG
Asks civil rights enforcement

Goldberg pointed out that Brownell would be remiss in his duty if he failed to continue to enforce civil rights legislation, "since the Civil Rights Acts are part of the law of the land."

"The trouble in the past has not been excessive enforcement, but a lack of adequate enforcement," he noted.

"As you know, the CIO has always taken a strong position with respect to the protection of civil rights. We have urged legislation which would expand and strengthen the function of the federal government in protecting civil rights.

"AS RECENTLY as May 1, 1953, the CIO, together with representatives of numerous other organizations interested in the protection of civil rights, met with you to urge more vigorous enforcement of existing legislation and of the non-discrimination provisions in government contracts.

"We welcome the creation by Pres. Eisenhower of a committee to coordinate and supervise the enforcement of the latter provisions.

"We hope you will urge legislation which will strengthen our existing civil rights laws."

CIO Gives $2500 For Court Fight Against School Bias

A CONTRIBUTION of $2500 has been made by CIO to help finance the legal fight to outlaw racial segregation in public schools.

The check for $2500 was presented by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, also civil rights committee chairman, to Thurgood Marshall of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Marshall, NAACP counsel, has taken a leading role in the lengthy court arguments on school segregation. The U. S. Supreme Court has put the cases over for further argument during the coming session.

Carey also said the "fullest cooperation and assistance" of the CIO Legal Dept., headed by General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, will be available in the case.

Contributions for the NAACP's "Fighting Fund for Freedom" were asked, meantime, by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Reuther said he "could not think of an organization in America which has put its limited supply of dollars to better use than has the NAACP.

"Too often the NAACP's battles for the right have been fought without sufficient ammunition. It will do America good if we fill NAACP's ammunition chests to overflowing."

Old South And The New

Two aspects of the South that's passing—naked physical attacks upon the efforts of Southern workers to form their own unions, and indirect legal efforts to hamstring labor—were revealed in parallel news stories the last few days.

In Ashland, Miss., the old, old story of vigilante attacks was repeated again. A "professional goon squad" cowardly attacked and pistol-whipped James Jackson, a young Mississippian and an organizer for the CIO Clothing Workers.

And in neighboring Alabama, Gov. Gordon Persons signed into law the only so-called "right-to-work" bill voted by any of the recent state legislative sessions. This is the measure which outlaws any form of union security, and again seeks to reduce the free American labor movement to the status of a "conspiracy."

Neither pistol-whipping in Mississippi nor "right-to-work" laws in Alabama, we're ready to predict, will stop the New South of decent wages and better living which Southern workers in CIO unions are building with ever-increasing success.

School Headaches

Each year about this time, The CIO News examines the situation in our schools, a situation which, as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has said, "has deteriorated from a national scandal to a national tragedy."

The latest report (see Page 12) is even grimmer than before. For example, our schools lack 345,000 classrooms to do their job. They are short 72,000 teachers. And one-fifth of our youngsters will go to class in buildings so old that there is a daily danger of fires.

Congress has demonstrated a myopic lack of foresight on our growing school needs. For example, the Hill "oil-for-the-lamps-of-learning" bill—to channel some federal oil-lands revenue to school purposes—was knifed in the House. The last session whacked federal grants-in-aid for schools in defense areas. More cuts may be ahead.

This is a good time for parents, for CIO unions, for all Americans interested in our youngsters to tell the congressmen and senators to think again, reverse their votes and build up our schools.

Bishop Haas

There are few men outside the union movement whose passing would bring more genuine sorrow to the organized workers of the United States than that of Most Rev. Francis J. Haas, bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Bishop Haas was a firm friend of the working man and the minority group member. The warmth of his great spirit embraced all who needed help, and his deep sense of compassion moved him to give that help. As the CIO executive officers said in their statement mourning his death, he was "not content merely to preach God's word as he saw it, but to practice it in the harsh and sometimes brutal industrial arena."

The CIO and the rest of the nation's workers, organized and unorganized, as well as all who suffer because of their race or color, have lost one of their best friends. The country has lost one of its most able and inspiring citizens.

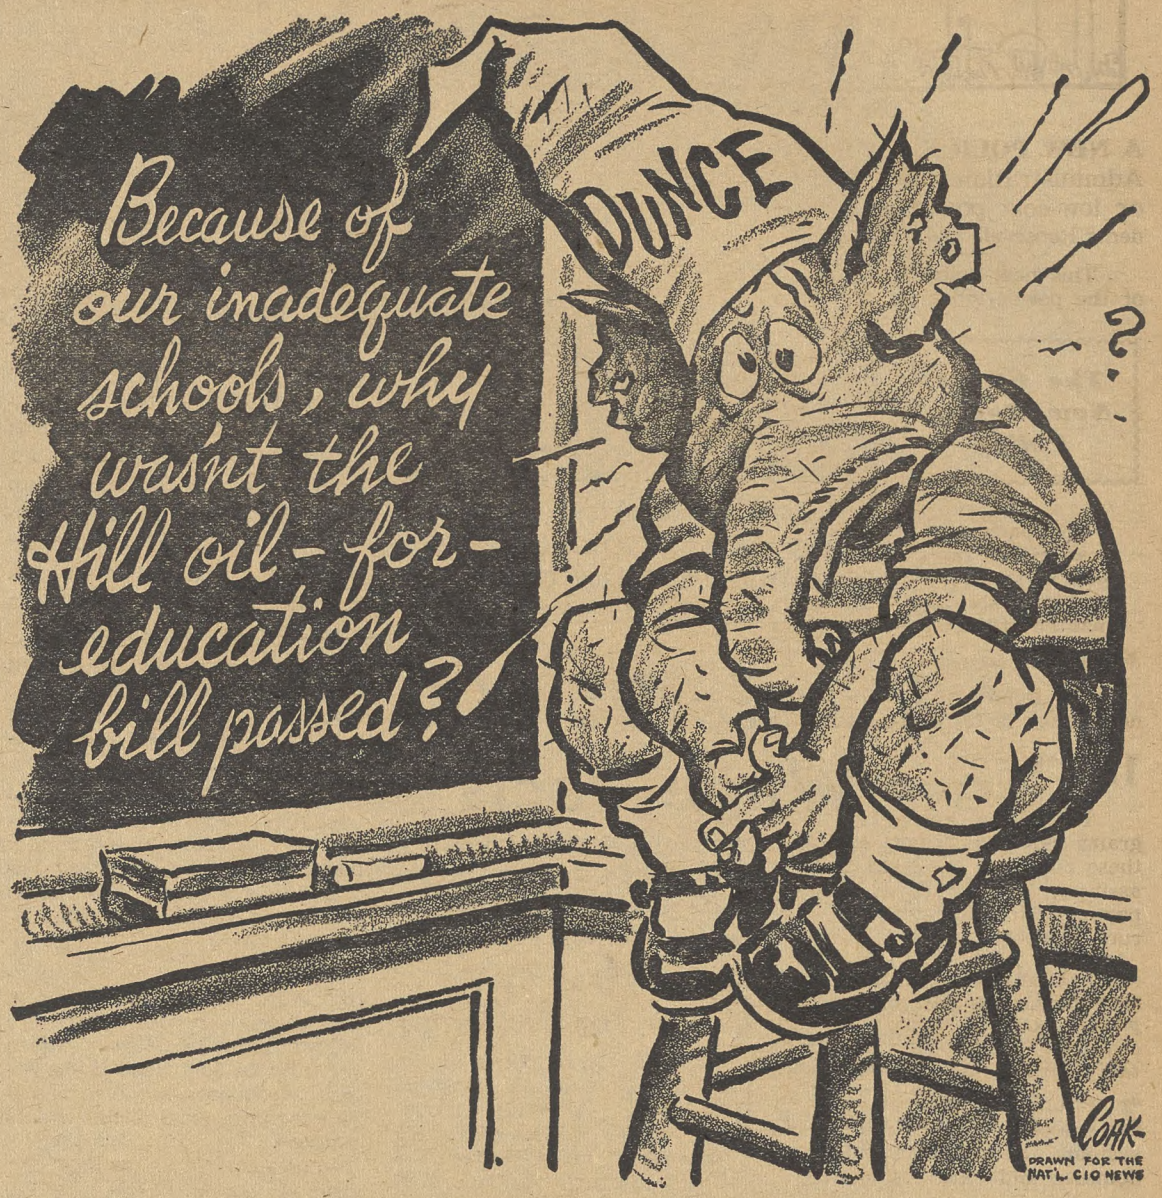
School Daze!



In Other Words—

Labor Is A Big Giver

The generous contributions of members of organized labor to community fund drives is analyzed by CIO Community Services Director Leo Perlis in the current issue of Philanthropy, the magazine of public service.

By LEO PERLIS

THERE IS NO QUESTION that organized labor during the past ten years, has become a big giver. Labor's voluntary contributions extend beyond our communities, beyond state lines, beyond our national boundaries—to the world as a whole.

The recent American Newspaper Guild campaign to help needy journalists in Europe, the Auto Workers' campaign to assist labor schools in Germany, the sizable contributions by the CIO, AFL and the United Mine Workers to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and its several departments are only a few of labor's generous gifts abroad.

At home, where labor contributions are recorded—and many community chests and united funds do record them—it is often surprising to find out how much union members do give.

For example, in Akron, Ohio, employes in CIO organized plants pledged $764,061 to the 1952 United Foundation campaign. Here the percentage of participation was 82.6%.

$500 Million By CIOers

In Detroit, CIO members contributed more than $2 million to their United Foundation last year. In Los Angeles and Chester, in Springfield and Denver, in Boston and Atlanta and in hundreds of industrial communities union men and women are contributing millions of dollars to voluntary health and welfare agencies.

It has been estimated by the CIO Community Services Committee that more than $500 million have been contributed by CIO members alone from 1942 through 1952 to such agencies as the National War Fund, Red Cross, Community Chests, USO and others. At least an equal amount has been contributed by members of the AFL, the UMW and the independent railroad brotherhoods.

Immediately following the war, the CIO and AFL loaned jointly $150,000 (the largest single sum) to provide capital for the Cooperative for American Remittances to Everywhere (CARE) Inc., which they helped to organize.

For a time both labor groups were CARE's single largest purchaser of packages which they distributed, through trade union channels, to the needy in Europe and Asia.

CIO's Amalgamated Clothing Workers estimates that its members contribute "nearly a million dollars annually . . . to charitable causes."

Unions have responded with sizable contributions to meet some of the needs created by the tornado last year in Arkansas, by the floods in the Mississippi Valley, by the flood early this year in Holland and by the tornadoes in June of this year in Flint, Mich., and Worcester, Mass.

Quick Work In Flint

In Flint, where 90% of the residents hit were members of the CIO, both the CIO Auto Workers and the CIO Steelworkers made available more than $1 million. The UAW-CIO international turned over $50,000 to the Flint Red Feather Disaster Fund a few days after disaster struck.

It has always been my feeling—in directing the major part of this activity for CIO—that we are not buying gratitude with our gifts, that they are simply an expression of our fundamental conviction that we are our brother's keeper.

Just as the labor movement itself was founded on humanitarian grounds, so is its giving attuned to the needs of humanity—and nothing else. As practical people we know that the intangible things are often the real things—real as love, real as compassion, real as cooperation and real as democracy.

The CIO alone has 18,000 trained union counsellors in 90 communities, and both the CIO and AFL have at least 30,000 of their members serving on the boards and committees of voluntary agencies.

Labor believes that the free association of men and women in organizations designed to promote the common good is a bulwark of our democratic society.

Since we, in the CIO at least, are concerned with the allocation of funds on the basis of relative need and the elimination of waste and inefficiency in both fund-raising and services, we have been vigorously promoting our long-established policy in favor of united appeals, federated giving and national and community-wide budgeting.

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

A NEW POLICY has been announced by the Eisenhower Administration which will substantially reverse the "cheap" or low-cost power program which prevailed under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman.

This new policy, according to Electrical World, trade journal of the power industry, marks "a radical departure from the pro-public emphasis of the New and Fair Deals."

The GOP's New Power Policy

The new policy will limit, or possibly rule out, the comprehensive multi-purpose (navigation, irrigation, flood control, power) river basin programs of the past by having the government step aside where local interests, usually private power companies, are ready to undertake power developments.

Supporters of public power charge that the new policy will mean higher rates and slower expansion of power supply. They point to the fact that the old policy has the support of the real local interests and that its opponents have been mainly nationally financed utilities and their associates.

Major Changes Told

The Public Affairs Institute has analyzed the meaning of the new policy in terms of these principal changes:

1. Primary responsibility for supplying the power needs of an area will be left to local interests.

This is a departure from the principle applied in river basin programs since the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933. Under these programs the Federal Government took the responsibility for assuring low-cost power supply from multipurpose projects with particular consideration for the needs of public and cooperative rural systems.

Modern power supply, making the best use of available resources, is regional rather than local in scope. Therefore, large private power systems or groups of systems which are regional in character, rather than truly local interests, will tend to displace the federal government as developers of such resources.

2. Priority for federally-generated power will be offered only for present needs of existing public and cooperative rural electric systems; the balance will be sold to privately owned utilities serving domestic and rural customers.

This means that federally-generated power will no longer be available to meet the growing demands of existing public and co-op systems or the new demands of communities undertaking their power supply on a public or cooperative basis for the first time.

To meet such needs these local systems will have to purchase higher cost power from neighboring private utilities. Thus a brake will be put on expansion of public and co-op power undertakings.

3. Use of low-cost federal power to supply large industrial consumers beyond the requirements of existing contracts, or renewals or expansions of such contracts, will be generally discontinued.

This means the government will no longer develop low-cost hydroelectric power as a means of encouraging regional industrial development with its by-products which include expanded business, higher per capita income and improved standards of living. Dynamic federal power programs will henceforth be restricted.

4. Where irrigation and power are associated in federal programs and reclamation costs are assigned to power, power rates will be made high enough to cover the additional costs in a reasonable time.

This change may seriously restrict future reclamation development by superseding the long-established practice under which, without increasing power rates, the interest collected through such rates has assisted in paying the investment in irrigation. Power rates cannot be raised beyond a certain point to cover excess irrigation. The regional gains from lower power rates will therefore be lost.

(The privately-owned power companies, which have been screaming so loudly about "socialistic" spending of the people's money on public power projects, were not above grabbing some of the money for themselves in the form of speedy federal tax write-offs on $3.9 billion in construction projects over the last three years.)

Willard Shelton is on vacation. "It's Your Washington" will be resumed in The CIO News on Sept. 21.

Labor's Gains Hailed, Serious Problems Ahead, Churches Say

The interest and encouragement of America's Protestant, Catholic and Jewish clergymen in the development of free trade unions and fair collective bargaining is reflected by the 1953 Labor Day statements of the religious bodies. The statements have been digested by John G. Ramsay, community relations director with the CIO Organizing Committee in the South.

By JOHN G. RAMSAY

RELIGION is not unmindful of Labor Day. For years it has been the practice of the three great faiths of America to commemorate this day of American Labor.

In its "Labor Sunday Message of 1953" the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America expresses the following:

"It is not a luxury but a Christian and practical necessity to help the sick and crippled, assist the needy, aged, and care for the young.

"As productive efficiency increases, there are more goods and services to share. As workers' purchasing power expands, management finds larger markets. And we all, as consumers, benefit by this cooperation.

"Thousands of labor contracts are negotiated by union and management representatives each year without bitterness or strikes, and with regard for the public interest.

"We join in mourning the loss of William Green and Philip Murray, outstanding Christian laymen in organized labor. Leadership in the labor movement should be increasingly appreciated by the people of our churches as an important Christian vocation."

Catholic Statement

The "1953 Labor Day Statement" of the Social Action Department, National Catholic Welfare Conference, says in part:

"More people are gainfully employed than at any other time in the history of the United States. More employees than ever before are now organized into bona fide trade unions. Significant progress has been made in recent years in the field of race relations.

"For these and other recent advances in the field of social justice we can be very thankful. Nevertheless, we are still faced with a number of serious problems.

"The first and by far the most serious of these problems has to do with our ability to avoid the chaos and disaster of another major depression.

"Neither can we afford to be complacent about the fact that so many families live so poorly in the wealthiest country in the history of the human race . . . or that we attach too much importance, relatively to armaments and too little to economic assistance (to less favored nations).

"We owe it to ourselves and to the rest of the world to be as generous as possible in administering the abundant riches which Almighty God has temporarily placed in our trust as stewards of his possessions and almoners of his gracious bounty.

"Individual members of unions are called upon to assume their full share of responsibility for union policies and programs and, particularly, for the maintenance of union democracy. Regular attendance at union meetings is the very minimum to be expected of every worker who holds a union card."

The Commission on Justice and Peace of the Central Conference of American Rabbis closed "A Message for Labor Day" with this prayer from the Union Prayer Book:

"Our forefathers have always been deeply concerned about the hardships of those that toil. In this solemn hour we pray Thee that we may stand by the side of the men of vision; and may we in our daily pursuits, through generous sympathy and personal sacrifice, help to build the better world."

Ministers Work In Chicago's Steel Mills

Steel mills and factories in Chicago were the summer training grounds for 43 ministerial students who completed the 1953 ministers-in-industry project recently.

The project was conducted by the Presbyterian Institute of Industrial Relations and comprised students from 10 theological seminaries representing 13 religious denominations.

For three months all worked in industry as ordinary laborers without being identified as "preachers." They worked in 20 plants, ranging in size from less than 20 employes to one of 15,000.

The Arma Story—

A New Pattern Of Labor Unity

A defensive alliance of white-collar engineers and production workers is effective at plants of the Arma Corp. in New York where CIO Electrical Workers have been on strike for several weeks. Herbert Orrell, himself an engineer, discusses the novel compact in The Nation.

By HERBERT ORRELL

IN PICTURESQUE Nassau County, home of the Belmont race track and Old Guard Republicans, a new kind of strike is taking place which could have profound implications for the American labor movement.

For the first time in this country, white-collar engineers—as a group traditionally anti-union and isolated from the mainstream of American labor—have pooled forces with shop workers to resist a bitter onslaught against unions by the Arma Corp., designer and manufacturer of secret electronic equipment for the armed forces.

A month ago about 4000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers walked out of the Arma plant in protest against the corporation's disregard of seniority rights in firing 158 workers. Within 72 hours the Arma Engineers' Association, representing 760 engineers, scientists and other white-collar technicians, voted almost unanimously to respect the picket lines.

Not a single professional worker has since crossed the line, and the engineers' group—which has its own grievances against the company—has agreed with the IUE that neither will sign a new contract with management unless the other does also.

This concerted effort is the more remarkable in that it represents a healing of old wounds. In 1951 the Arma engineers were given the choice, at an NLRB election, to join the CIO or to form an independent union. They chose the latter course.

Although not officially on strike, the engineers realize that the CIO's battle is their battle, too. Wage rates are involved, but seniority rights are the crux of the strike and settlement, when it comes, will probably revolve about the issue of "bumping."

Under bumping, a basic tenet of CIO unionism, a man slated for discharge is permitted to replace a worker with less seniority provided he has the necessary skills. The justification for bumping is that a man with a lot of seniority has usually progressed through various labor grades and is therefore qualified to do the work of lesser grades.

Management, however, usually maintains that bumping is disruptive and costs money. Arma wants to calculate a worker's seniority by his occupation in his department, which is tantamount to eliminating seniority.

Union-Breaking Effort

While seniority is the key issue, there are others nearly as important. Altogether they add up to a determined effort on the part of the company to break the unions or reduce them to impotence.

The CIO union and the engineers have been subjected to the same kind of treatment. Not only is plant-wide seniority to be eliminated, but the CIO has been presented with demands that all employes be reclassified and that all jobs be rerated unilaterally by the company.

The engineers have been confronted by two proposals which take away merit increases and institute wage cuts.

In the opinion of everyone familiar with the strike and the issues, the action of the Arma Corp. represents a brutal attack on union security. It becomes clearer every day that the company's master-plan has been worked out to the last detail. If the company wins, it is a safe bet that labor relations in the defense industries—and perhaps elsewhere—will take a turn for the worse. The engineers and the CIO are in the battle for survival. So far, morale is high.

Lithographers Cheer Reuther And Morse

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

PERHAPS it should be said at the start, lest it add another morsel for labor columnists, that there was no significance whatever in the fact that the CIO Lithographers and the AFL Engravers held their international conventions in Toronto, Canada, at the same hotel and at the same time.

"We got the surprise of our lives," said ALA Pres. John Blackburn, "when we learned that the hotel in Toronto proposed to reserve space for the convention of the Intl. Photo Engravers Union the same time we were to meet there."

Other top ALA officials agreed that it was "pure coincidence."

It was a big and lively convention. The roll call by Sec.-Treas. Donald W. Stone showed that nearly 200 delegates and officers, representing a membership of more than 28,300 in the United States and Canada, were present at the ALA's 12th biennial convention in the Royal York Hotel.

Reuther Applauded

The lithographers made plain the cordial relationship between the ALA and CIO by the warm reception and big ovation which they gave to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, a star convention speaker.

It was the first time a CIO president addressed the Lithographers since their affiliation with CIO in 1946, and the delegates were pleased.

Delegates were also gratified to have Wayne Morse, Oregon's fighting senator, come to Canada to address them. He, too, was given a rousing standing ovation.

The ALA is not one of the biggest unions in the CIO, but it is the oldest. (The union traces its history back to 1882, when a secret union of lithographers known as the Romar Fishing Club was formed in New York. A short time later, the organization changed its name to the Hudson Lithographic Association and joined the Knights of Labor.)

A tremendous burst of applause greeted Reuther when, speaking of labor unity, he assured the lithographers that the CIO would fully protect the rights of the smaller unions, as well as the big, in any peace negotiations with the AFL.

Top Officers Unopposed

PRES. John Blackburn and Sec.-Treas. Donald W. Stone were nominated unanimously for reelection on the closing day of the CIO Lithographers convention.

Four of the five regionals vice-presidents were also nominated without opposition. They are Francis P. Slater, Pacific region; Arthur W. Brown, Canada; Oliver Martz, Central region; and Martin Grayson, Mountain region. Candidates for the vice-presidency of the Atlantic region, Edward N. Stone, incumbent, and Martin Liberatore.

The convention nominated a slate of 10 international councillors from the union's five regions. Together these officers make up the 17-member Intl. Council, the ALA's top executive board.

Nominations of all officers are sent to referendum election of the membership through the affiliated locals. All resolutions and constitutional amendments passed at the convention are also submitted to referendum.

Small Unions And Unity

"Labor unity is not a matter of the big fellows getting together and working out an arrangement," he said.

"I am not interested in that kind of labor unity. Labor unity must make it possible for all of the CIO affiliates and all affiliates of other groups to take their places in that united labor movement with their heads erect and enjoy the same full protection that all the big unions enjoy."

On another subject of deep concern to the lithographers—technological unemployment—Reuther said that a new labor-saving machine "is wonderful if it is geared to the needs of the people. It is wonderful if it will lighten the burden of workers, if it will give them greater wealth to enjoy in higher living standards, if it will give them shorter working hours and more leisure time to grow intellectually and culturally to be better human beings."

Speaking of the struggle against Communist tyranny, Reuther said "the single most reliable democratic force, the bulwark of freedom, is the free labor movement of the world."

Danger Of Depression

If we are not able to prevent a depression in the United States and Canada, Reuther said, "we will be playing right into the hands of the Communists, and they will take most of the world by default."

The reason we got in trouble in 1929, he said, was the "simple reason that millions and millions of American families didn't have the purchasing power to buy the things that we need and the things we had produced."

"We've got to gear the future to freedom and peace and security in the world to the economics of abundance and not to the economics of scarcity," the CIO president said.

Morse said that its is important to talk "about problems of freedom in a world where freedom is threatened."

Speaking of bills both he and Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) introduced to guarantee the rights of an individual called before a congressional committee, Morse said "I shall continue to fight to preserve the rights of individuals as long as I have a voice."

He warned there is greater need for unity among workers of America today than ever before in our history.

"Anti-labor forces are on the rampage today," he said. As for the Administration's proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley, they were but "weak diluted tea," he said.

"You'd better face the fact that if you don't proceed now for drastic revision of the Taft-Hartley Law, it will be used to break the back of organized labor."

The best way to handle the problem, Morse added, is to wipe out the law "and start over with a new law." No luke-warm amendments, he said, will remedy the injustices of Taft-Hartley.

A report that unions affiliated with the Canadian Congress of Labor have done an excellent job in mass production industries but still have a big organizing task in the white collar field was voiced by CCL Pres. A. R. Mosher.

Political Situation

"We have not been able to even scratch the surface" in the white collar field, said Mosher.

George Burt, Canadian director of the CIO Auto Workers and president of the 200,000-member Ontario Federation of Labor, told delegates from the U. S. something of the political situation in Canada.

"There is no difference between the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party," he said. "Their policy is the same, and their labor relations law shows that they are the same." That's why, he explained, that the CCL supports the Canadian Cooperative Federation.

Arthur W. Brown, ALA vice president for Canada, speaking for the 1900 Canadian members, said that the union "claims 95% organization of all lithographic workers with members from Vancouver on the west coast to Halifax on the east coast."

Women Voters Pack A Punch

Women voters "are political powerhouses," the CIO Lithographers were reminded by Mrs. Esther Murray, National CIO-PAC representative.

Urging ALA delegates to persuade their wives to take an active interest in politics, Mrs. Murray said there are 1.5 million more eligible women voters than men voters in the U. S. And in Canada, the men outnumber the women voters by only a few hundred thousand.

The Story Of 50 Years A Union Man

ONE OF THE most interested observers at the CIO Lithographer's convention was a small, thin white-haired man with a fresh, clear complexion who peered intently at speakers through gold-rimmed glasses.

He was Emil Nurnberger, going on 81, and the oldest working member of ALA's Toronto Local 12.

Born in Hamburg, Germany, where his father was also a lithographer, Nurnberger came to the U. S. when he was 12 years old. He has been in the industry for 63 years, most of the time working in the same plant, Rolph, Clark, Stone—the largest lithographic firm in Canada—where he is still employed as a hand transferrer.

He joined the union in 1903 in Toronto. When he first started to work at 17, Nurnberger recalled he was paid $2 for a 60-hour week. Today his pay averages $90 a week for 40 hours. He gets four week's paid vacation for his 50 years service, and was taking part of it when he attended the convention.

Nurnberger said he did not want to retire, because he would not know what to do with himself. His wife died last spring,

Reuther Rides In Style—After They Got It Started

CIO Pres. Walter Reuther told delegates to the CIO Lithographers convention this story about his trip from the Toronto airport to the hotel.

A member of the reception committee that met him gave him a warm smile of welcome and said: "I've got a big General Motors job I'm going to take you down to the hotel in. We'll ride in style."

And so Reuther was escorted out to a big, beautiful red Buick. "We all got in," Reuther related, "and got snugly seated. And the brother didn't know how to start the car. He explained that he had borrowed it.

"How did you get out here?" asked Reuther. "Well, when they loaned it to me, the motor was running," replied the brother.

"Now he was embarrassed," said Reuther, "but he didn't realize how embarrassed I was. Here I am, supposed to be the president of the Auto Workers' Union, and I didn't know how to start it either. But we finally worked it out, all of us together, and managed to get it started. That's why we're here."

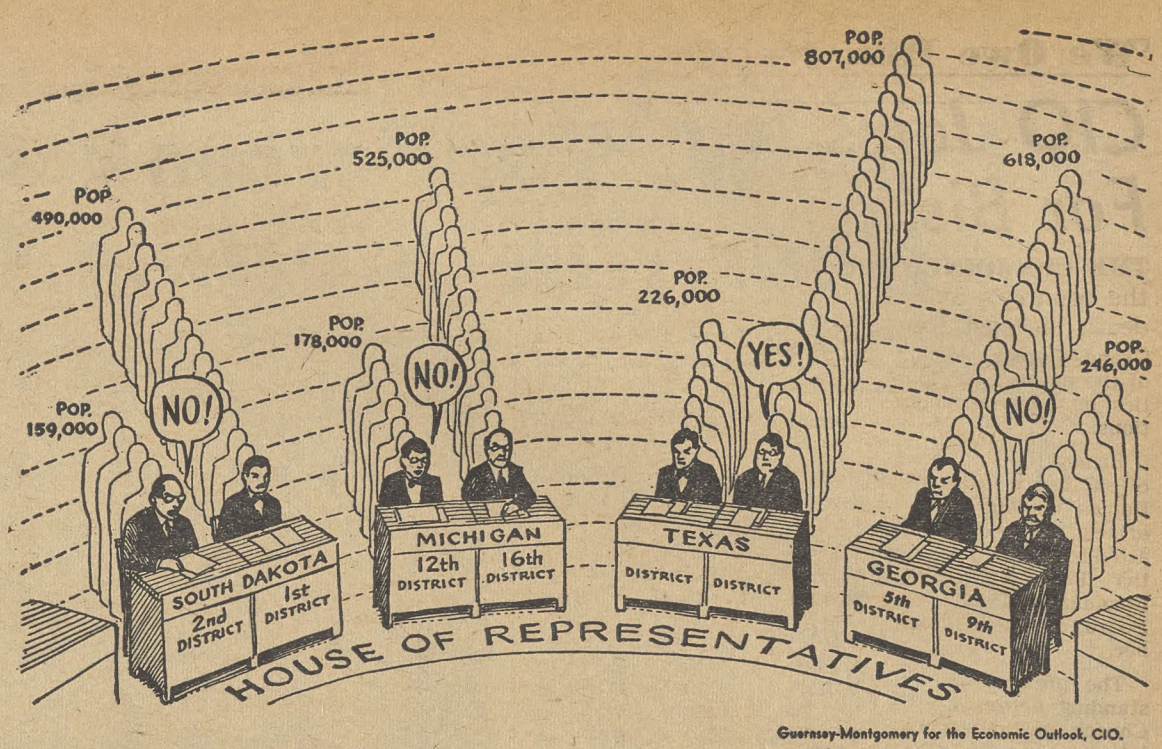
PRETTY BAD ARITHMETIC.—U. S. has shifted to an urban majority, but the one-third population living on farms has 75% of the say in what state legislatures do.



UNEQUAL VOTES.—Chopping up of congressional districts shows how representatives from small population, rural districts have the edge over lawmakers representing big population, urban districts. Practice is followed all over the nation.

CIO Economic Outlook Says—

Unfair Districting Hits At Urban Voters

"NO TAXATION without representation" is an old fighting phrase for Americans—but millions of us are getting plenty of taxation with very little representation and not much in the way of legislation we want.

That's what the July and August issues of CIO's Economic Outlook report on the representation picture in the states and in Congress.

Because of the systems in effect, the publications say, "the votes of millions of citizens are worth only one-half, one-quarter and even one one-hundredth of the value of the votes of others."

The July Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, is titled "Our Unrepresentative Federal Congress." The August issue deals with the often unfair composition of state legislative bodies under the title of "How the Minority Rules in the States."

Over the years, the Outlook says, America has moved steadily toward elimination of restrictions on the franchise. But, it points out, "the right to vote does not in itself insure equal voice in the affairs of government."

Charges of inequities are documented. The Outlook cites the range in population of congressional seats from 159,000 for the second district of South Dakota to 807,000 for the eighth district of Texas.

Legislatures Worse

In state legislatures, the Outlook finds, the situation is even worse. Some 36% of the people live in rural areas and have 75% of the representation, while 64% of the people live in cities and have only 25% of the representation in enacting state laws.

The kind of abuse possible under this system is demonstrated by the Outlook in the 172-167 House vote in the 82nd Congress which lopped off $145 million from foreign military aid.

"If each congressman had cast his vote in proportion to the population in his district, this action would have been defeated. Those favoring the cut represented 62.5 million people, those opposing it, over 65 million," Outlook says.

Shame Of The States

At the state level, the August issue of Outlook reports, "the worst shame of the states is the refusal of the legislatures to reapportion seats according to population changes, even when the state constitutions requires that they do so."

The need for legislative reapportionment is even greater at the state level, according to Outlook. In California and Connecticut, for examples, the vote of a citizen of the smallest legislative district is worth 300 times the vote of a citizen who lives in the largest.

Congress is required by the Constitution to allot representatives to the states according to the changes in their "respective numbers" every 10 years on the basis of the federal census. But the trouble is, the Outlook goes on, that "most of the state legislatures do not reapportion their own congressional districts according to the 'respective numbers' within their own states."

Michigan's 12th District with 178,000 people and the 16th District with 525,000.

Texas' 17th District with 226,000 people and the 8th District with 807,000.

Georgia's 9th District with 246,000 and the 5th District with 618,000.

The situation in the state legislatures is as bad, Outlook says, citing these examples:

The New Jersey Senate has eight senators from urban centers with four-fifths of the population "outvoted time after time by 13 rural senators representing one-fifth of the population."

Some Inequities

Polk County in Iowa has one senator for 226,010 people and Mahaska County has one senator for 24,672 people.

In California, Los Angeles County with 40% of the State's entire population, has just one state senator.

And only 17 states, the Outlook reports, have reapportioned their legislatures since 1933. The worst example is Connecticut, which hasn't reapportioned its State Senate since 1903 and its House since, believe it or not, 1818 when James Monroe resided in the White House.

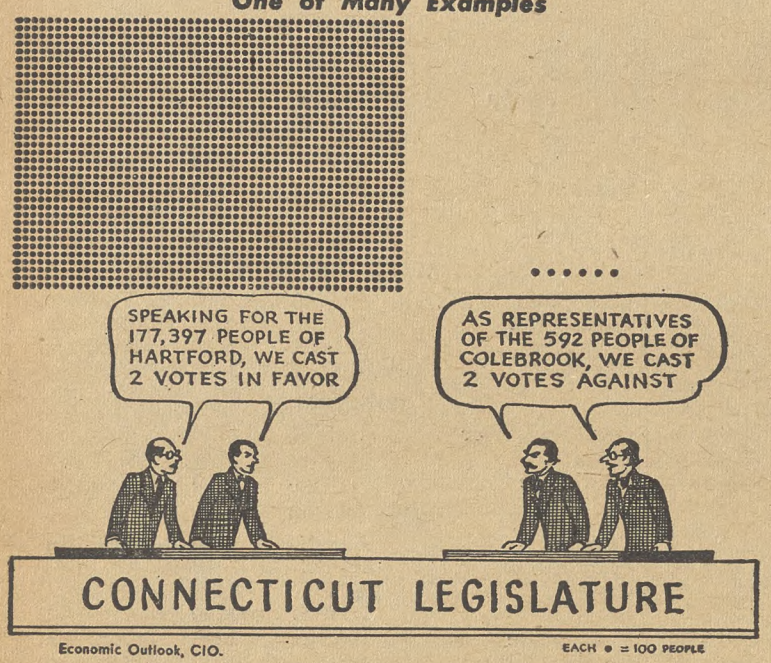
"The fact that a reapportionment was carried out recently by no means indicates it necessarily was carried out equitably," the Outlook remarks.

Celler's Bill Gains Backing

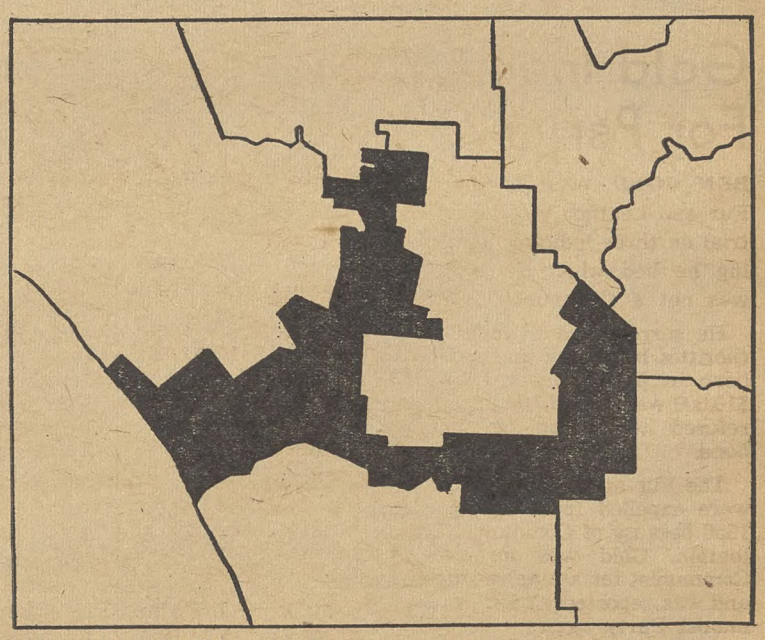
The July issue of Economic Outlook makes an appeal for support of H.R. 6428 introduced in the last session of Congress by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) to correct federal representation inequities.

To restrain the gerrymanderers, Celler's bill would require the states to set up congressional districts which shall not vary more than 15% above or below the average which would exist if the population of all congressional districts in the State were divided equally. The new districts would have to be "contiguous" (in actual contact) and "compact" (closely united or packed).

One of Many Examples



JUST AN EXAMPLE.—Each dot represents 100 people. In Connecticut, less than 600 people in Colebrook have as much power as 177,000 in Hartford, State's largest city.



GERRYMANDER.—In black on the map is 26th Congressional District in Los Angeles, carved up this way so that Republicans could be more secure in other districts.

'We Owe Him Much'—

CIO Joins In Mourning For Bishop F. J. Haas

THE CIO JOINED with the rest of organized labor and the country's minority groups last week in mourning the death of Most Rev. Francis J. Haas, Catholic bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich., and one of the nation's foremost authorities on labor-management relations.

BISHOP HAAS

Bishop Haas, who was 64, died of a heart attack in Grand Rapids on Aug. 29. A previous attack had prevented him from attending the June meeting of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation Public Advisory Board, of which he was a member.

The prelate, one of the outstanding figures in the Catholic Church in this country was an intimate friend of the late president of the CIO and the Steelworkers. When Murray died last November, he left a meeting of the American hierarchy in Washington to preach his funeral sermon and to give the final blessing.

A STATEMENT expressing the deep regret of the CIO at Bishop Haas' passing was issued by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

"We knew him well," they said, "we admired him tremendously; we loved him as a brother, and we owe him much.

"Bishop Haas had a deep and abiding faith in the little fellow, a sincere trust of his fellow man and a perfect appreciation of the dignity of the individual. Bishop Haas was a great philosopher who was not content merely to preach God's word as he saw it, but to practice it in the harsh and sometimes brutal industrial arena.

"He served well his God, his nation and his state. But most of all, he served his fellow man, as every worker and every member of a minority group knows."

A NATIVE of Racine, Wis., Bishop Haas was ordained a priest in 1913. He became active in labor and social work while doing postgraduate work at Catholic Univ., Washington, and Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md., a few years later.

He served on the Catholic Univ. faculty from 1919 to 1922 and was director of the National Catholic School of Social Service there from 1931 to 1935.

In 1925, while in Milwaukee, he became impartial chairman of the Milwaukee Newspaper Industry. Before he died, he helped settle more than 1500 labor-management disputes, describing each successful mediation effort as a "triumph for democracy."

AFTER his return to Washington, he served as a member of the old National Labor Board, predecessor of the National Labor Relations Board, in 1933-34. The following year he was a member of the Labor Advisory Board to the National Recovery Administration (NRA).

He advised the late Pres. Roosevelt on many labor questions over the next few years and was a special federal conciliator. He became dean of the Catholic Univ. School of Social Science in 1937, and in 1943 was named chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee by Roosevelt.

HE GAVE UP that post and also the Catholic Univ. deanship the same year, when he was appointed bishop of Grand Rapids—the first Catholic U. faculty member to be so honored. He later served as a member of Pres. Truman's Civil Rights Commission.

Bishop Haas was a vigorous proponent of the rights of union organization.

"If American employers would frankly concede to their employes the right to organize," he once said, "more than half of all strikes would be avoided."

He just as vigorously opposed the Taft-Hartley Act and declared it should be "written off the statute books at the earliest opportunity."

"This country is too big for discrimination," he said repeatedly.

Shoe Union Mourns Death Of Bishop

The CIO Shoe Workers called the death of Bishop Francis J. Haas a loss to all the labor movement—and in particular to their union.

Bishop Haas aided the union at many times during its organizing drives and resistance to employer opposition. "He was a beloved friend of the Shoe Workers," said Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell.

Gold Indicted For Perjury

BEN GOLD, head of the Intl. Fur and Leather Workers, faces trial on three indictments charging he lied when he swore he was not a Communist.

He surrendered to federal authorities last week and spent an hour in jail before a bond for $10,000 was posted. A court clerk refused to accept his union's bond.

The Fur and Leather Workers were expelled from the CIO in 1950 because of Communist domination. Gold was an avowed Communist for a number of years and was reportedly high in Communist Party circles.

The government charges Gold lied in Aug. 1950 when he signed a Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavit for the National Labor Relations Board.

Signed Cards Outweigh Election When Boss Chisels, NLRB Rules

SIGNED union authorization cards rate higher with the National Labor Relations Board than a representation election lost because of an employer's unfair labor practices, it appeared last week.

The board certified the CIO Rubber Workers, which had the signed authorization cards, as the bargaining agent at the Southeastern Rubber Manufacturing Co., Athens, Ga.,—which indulged in the unfair labor practices—and ordered the company to bargain on a contract.

The union had cards signed by 10 of the 14 employes, but six weeks later it lost the election by a vote of 6 to 13. A board majority held that the company's conduct between the time the union asked recognition and the date of the election was illegal, and set aside the result of the vote.

IN ANOTHER case, the board ruled that the Brown Truck & Trailer Manufacturing Co., Charlotte, N. C., and its subsidiary, the Newell Manufacturing Co., Monroe, N. C., violated the Taft-Hartley Act by not telling the CIO Auto Workers that it was moving its ammunition box plant from Charlotte to Monroe.

The board held the move was for economic purposes and not to escape the union, but that failure to inform the union deprived it of the chance to negotiate for possible transfer of employes it represented to the new plant.

The board reaffirmed its jurisdiction over automobile retailers in a decision involving the AFL Auto Workers and Klinka's Garage, West Bend, Wisc.

IT FOUND John A. Klinka, the proprietor, interfered with his employes' right to organize by firing two workers and questioning and threatening others. The board ordered him to obey the law, and to reimburse the discharged workers for lost pay.

Neither a union nor an employer can withhold vacation pay from a worker in order to force him to join a union, the board ruled in a decision involving a union shop clause in a contract between the Krambo Food Stores, Milwaukee, and the Allied Independent Unions, affiliated with the Confederated Unions of America.

The clause provided for discharge of workers who decline to join the union. Three employes refused to pay back dues to join, and the company and the union agreed to withhold their vacation pay until they did. A board majority said they could have been discharged for refusing to affiliate, but that holding back their vacation pay was "unlawful added discrimination."

Use of a sound truck in a representation election area which could not have substantially affected the voting is not sufficient justification for setting aside the results, the board decided in another case.

The complaint was filed by Higgins, Inc., New Orleans, La., after the AFL Boilermakers had won an election. The board upheld the ban on the sound truck —the union halted its use at the request of the NLRB agent in charge of the election—but refused to order another vote.

All His Eggs In One Basket—

GM Fire Knocks Props From Under Wilson's Arms Plan

THE BIG BUSINESS-aiding production policies of Defense Sec. Wilson are drawing increased press criticism in the wake of the disastrous General Motors fire at Livonia, Mich.

The $50 million fire wiped out GM's major automatic transmission plant near Detroit, idling thousands of auto workers.

Government and business itself were taking a look at the fire-taught lesson and wondering about the effect of an aerial attack on plants in case of war.

Business Week magazine and Columnist Drew Pearson were critical of Wilson's policy of concentrating defense production in a handful of giant companies. Too many eggs in one basket, they contend, menaces national safety.

THE MAGAZINE reported GM's fire has Pentagon defense officials worried.

"As some of them see the catastrophe," Business Week said, "it points up a fallacy of Wilson's idea of a war-ready base—whereby only a few big, efficient manufacturers get peacetime defense contracts.

"If only a few manufacturers are doing defense work, some Pentagon officials argue, a sudden air strike could cripple the military's source of supply. Far better, they suggest, to go back to the old 'broad base' under which government contracts were spread thin among many manufacturers," Business Week said.

PEARSON suggested that the Livonia fire may cause Wilson's "single source" ideas to be scrapped. Wilson has said that what was good for GM was good for the country.

Pearson quotes Wilson as saying small companies are a nuisance and should be used only at sub-contractors. GM grosses $11 billion a year and has had a major share of defense contracts.

Just 'Like A Kremlin Court,' Brewers Give Blatz The Boot

REPRISAL has hit the Blatz brewery for breaking the united front of Milwaukee brewers and ending the 76-day strike by CIO Brewery Workers.

Blatz was ousted from the Milwaukee Brewers' Association and will not be permitted in the future to negotiate jointly with other Milwaukee breweries in labor matters.

The Wisconsin CIO News charged that the "giants and dwarfs of the Milwaukee brewing industry have started a war on Blatz brewery. All indications are that it is going to be a vicious, dirty war with no holds barred."

The paper said that the other breweries are "sore because Blatz brought the strike to an end."

"The association consists of all six Milwaukee breweries: Schlitz, Pabst, Miller, Gettelman, Independent and Blatz. The association does the bargaining for all six breweries with the unions, and in other ways promotes their joint interest," the editorial continues.

"AT NO time were detailed, factual or substantiated charges made against Blatz. Like a Kremlin court, the five breweries decided that the ouster would take place—and take place it did, save for Blatz's promises to fight it in the courts."

Reg. Dir. Theodore Kurtz of the CIO Brewery Workers said there "could be no doubt that the ouster of Blatz was in reprisal because Blatz broke ranks and negotiated separately with the union to end the strike."

Union Shop Outlawed In Alabama

THE ONLY bill outlawing the union shop passed by a state legislature during the sessions just ended was signed into law in Alabama last week by Gov. Gordon Persons.

In 11 other states where so-called "right to work" bills were introduced, this year organized labor—with the CIO often the spearhead—either killed them in committee or beat them on the floor.

The Alabama act bans all forms of union security. It was introduced by Rep. Vernon Summerlin, of rural Crenshaw County (only 13 of Alabama's 67 counties are smaller), and according to James Bamford, southern administrative director for the CIO Textile Workers, it was pushed through both houses by legislators from farm districts.

"ALABAMA is a state with many liberal tendencies." he added, "but the manufacturers feel that they have a go-ahead signal from Washington for legislation like this. Action of this type in the states has to be laid to the lack of a fundamental policy in Washington in support of workers' rights."

The bill squeezed through the House by a 27-24 vote, but won a 23-9 vote in the Senate.

The measure bans as an "illegal combination or conspiracy" any agreement between a union and an employer "whereby persons not members of such union or organization shall be denied the right to work for said employer."

You And Your Money—

Dentists Take Dim View Of The Latest Hoopla On Toothpastes

By IRVING FAGAN

For Labor Press Associated

REMEMBER WHEN the "miracle" preparation was "ammoniated" toothpaste? That was four years ago, and you were hopelessly old-fashioned if you used a paste that was not "ammoniated."

The hopped-up, big league promotion kept sales soaring for a long time. But finally it became evident that the rosy claims were something less than forthright. Another jolt was needed. So last year along came the new "miracle" preparation—chlorophyll.

That was touted as the answer to everything from housemaid's knee to social success and a happy marriage.

The chlorophyll business is still going strong, especially in the dentifrice business, but it's time for an ad-writers' change.

So, the manufacturers have come up with their new, terrific, unprecedented, earth-shaking discovery—anti-enzyme chemicals.

The idea is that the enzymes in your mouth form acids that damage your teeth. Anti-enzymes will neutralize the enzymes, they will tell you.

The cruder ballyhoo will shout that all you need to end tooth worries forever, guarantee that there will be no visits to the dentist, and that your teeth will last until you are 118 years old, is to buy the new "fortified" toothpaste, or tooth-powder, with this wonderful, miracle, super-duper anti-enzyme element.

'Sea Of Superlatives'

The American Dental Association Journal, unimpressed by advertising claims that "anti-enzyme" tooth pastes will prevent tooth decay, says bluntly in its current issue that no dentifrice ever put on the market has done anything more than help the toothbrush clean tooth surfaces.

"In view of the long and unhappy history of miracle dentifrices," it says in an editorial on the anti-enzyme jobs, "it is predicted that the current nationwide promotional campaign will cause little more than a ripple on the sea of superlatives."

The American Dental Association, which was severely pained by the "ammoniated" craze, and even more by the "chlorophyll" frenzy, looks on the latest hoopla with a jaundiced eye.

"In the first place," says Dr. Roy Doty, secretary of the association's Council on Dental Therapeutics, "this material has not been subjected to any direct trial of its abilities. Claims for it are based on laboratory studies that are suggestive (but are no sure demonstration) of its effectiveness for preventing dental decay. Most of the men connected with this association believe any actual claims that this compound will reduce the amount of dental decay are premature at this time."

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

(MANY QUESTIONS and arguments still come in to this department about food freezer plans, some of which raise problems of food buying of importance beyond that of whether or not to buy a freezer. Because of evident concern readers are showing about food budgets, this week's column is devoted to some of these problems.)

Food Plans Pro And Con

FOOD COST BREAKDOWN: "We noticed this ad (enclosed) for a food freezer plan and it sounds like a good offer. We are a family of two adults and three children with an income of $80 a week. We now spend about $110 a month for groceries, including milk, soaps, and everything."

Answer: The ad for the food plan says that a family of five (three small children), spending $120 a month for food, would pay $22.12 on the freezer, and $43.83 for the meat and frozen produce supplied by the plan, leaving $53.96 for "bread, milk, etc." But Mrs. M. doesn't spend $120 for her family of five, but only $110, including soaps at that. That itself should show that the freezer plan, rather than saving the family money, would raise its eating bill. On top of the $120 a month the food-plan promoters estimate, she would have to pay additional electricity bills and any cost of servicing and repairing the freezer.

Nor would the $53.96 a month which the promoters would leave for "bread, milk, etc.", cover the "etc." by a long shot. Of that $53.96, the M. family needs about $22 a month just for milk for three kids and two adults, and $10 a month for eggs.

Embarking on a plan of this sort would cause this family to spend an inordinate amount for meat and frozen fruits and vegetables. It would be spending over 50% of its food money just for these categories, and this expenditure wouldn't even include potatoes, lettuce and some other produce which can only be bought fresh rather than frozen.

Generally, home-economics authorities say, you'll get most nutrition for your food dollar if you allot it something like this:

Fruits and vegetables, 23%; milk and milk products, 28; eggs, meat fish and other proteins, 27; flour and cereals, 9; fats and oils, 7; sugar, beverages, miscellaneous, 6.

When a family overspends for food, budget consultants find, it's generally because of overspending for meat and baked goods. One survey found that the average family spends about 30% of its food money for meat, poultry and fish, and for that gets only ten per cent of its calories. It spends only about 20c of its food dollar for milk and its products, but from them get more calories, and almost the same amount of protein.

FOOD PLAN ARGUMENT: "Your article on food freezer buying plans contains many statements which while applicable to many such plans now in existence, are not true of all plans . . . The Rich Plan is the first to admit that convenience is the principal factor.

"Savings, although quite possible, are only secondary . . . Food plans are not a wise investment for some families, as you state. But to add 'especially city dwellers' is misleading. The vast majority of Rich Plan sales have been made to urban dwellers whose aim is convenience first, savings second. In the rural areas, as you state, greater savings are possible and overshadow convenience."—Ben Butterfield, The Rich Plan.

ANSWER: This is a fair statement, One survey reported by the U. S. Agriculture Dept. found owning a freezer reduces by about 12% the time required for shopping and for preparing food for cooking. However, while working people don't have much time, they still do have more time than money.

Reuther Hits Drive For Sales Tax

THE GOP-big business drive for a national sales tax came under CIO and congressional attack, as record-setting living costs cut into the real wages of U. S. workers.

Strong condemnation of Administration economic policies was voiced by CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

His comments came as the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Price Index—climbing for the past five months—set a new record of 114.7. The climb resulted in a 1c hourly escalator increase for most UAW members.

"It is significant," Reuther commented, "that at the very time the failure of the party in power to fulfill its campaign pledge to control inflation is so evident, the Chamber of Commerce and National Association of Manufacturers are gaining friendly ears in Congress to secure a national sales tax which would further increase day-to-day living costs of the average American family."

Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Exploring the Depths

Pointing to the danger of "snowballing deflation" as military expenditures are cut, Reuther said "we need a substantial increase in consumer buying power in the pockets of millions of families who have unfilled needs if we are to absorb the growing output of rapidly expanding productive capacity."

TREASURY Sec. Humphrey got his knuckles rapped by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) for the latest of his several hints that the Administration has a national sales tax high on its list of possible new tax proposals.

"I am surprised," Hill said of Humphrey, "to hear him say they may request an increase in taxes when the Republicans solemnly promised the American people last fall that they would balance the budget and reduce taxes."

A report by the Bureau of National Affairs said "the slow but steady rise in the cost of living is beginning to cut into real take-home pay of production workers in manufacturing industries."

WHILE the BLS reported average earnings of factory workers were at a record $1.77 hourly in mid-July, BNA reported that at the same time "real spendable wages" reached "the lowest point so far this year."

In the month from mid-June to mid-July, take home earnings (after tax and social security deductions) of the average single factory worker dropped from $51.08 to $50.92. Wages of the average married worker with a family of four dropped from $58.10 to $57.92.

(A "modest but adequate" budget for a family of four is estimated to be $82.21 weekly, more than $10 above the mid-July average weekly earnings of $71.51.)

Close Loopholes Instead Of Adding Sales Tax—Stokes

THE GOP Administration should plug the present tax loopholes that benefit the wealthy instead of seeking a national sales tax.

That's what Thomas L. Stokes, syndicated newspaper columnist, suggested last week after Treasury Sec. Humphrey again hinted at a national sales tax.

"The caliber of economic interests that are pushing the sales tax campaign," Stokes reported, "is exemplified in two of its chief promoters, the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce."

Stokes said it was hard to take Humphrey's proposals seriously.

"He has a reputation as a perceptive man," the columnist said, "who should know from long experience something about the economic facts of life faced by the overwhelming majority of our people.

"They know from the simple arithmetic by which they try to make their homes go round, especially at this time when the cost of living has reached an all-time peak, how unfair and discriminatory would be a sales tax. as it would take for the necessities of life a much larger proportion of their income than it would from the well-fixed."

Pointing out that Pres. Truman tried to correct some of the abuses in the tax structure, Stokes suggested Humphrey try this course.

"Perhaps most glaring of them (abuses) is the 27.5% depletion allowance for oil companies, a flat deduction before taxes, in addition to which the oil interests also get other exemptions."

CIO Gives Over $100,000 For Tornado Relief Work

CONTRIBUTIONS of more than $110,000 have been made by the CIO in Massachusetts in recent weeks to speed disaster relief, rebuild a college and aid religious work.

Pres. J. William Belanger of the State CIO Council reported that $105,000 had been given by CIO groups to the Central Massachusetts Disaster Relief Fund set up in June the day after a tornado struck the Worcester area.

"Our members have been generous in their response to appeals for money contributions," Belanger said, "and they were quick to answer the need for blood donors and direct assistance to the tornado victims."

As an example of neighboring CIO aid, the Connecticut CIO Council helped raise some $3000 to help tornado victims at Worcester.

One of the institutions demolished by the twister was Assumption College in Worcester. A drive for funds to rebuild the ruined school facilities was launched Aug. 15, feast of the Assumption in the Catholic church and titular feast of the Assumptionist Order which staffs the college.

Just before a pontifical high Mass which launched the fund drive, Belanger presented a $4000 check from the State CIO to the college president.

Two other checks, for $1000 each, were given to the Greater Worcester Council of Churches and the Catholic Charities Center in that city. (Read "Labor Is A Big Giver," by Leo Perlis, Page 4.)

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

WE ARE SADDENED by the passing of the great American and friend of all labor people, the Most Rev. Francis J. Haas, Bishop of Grand Rapids, who always raised his voice to fight for what was right no matter what the cost to him personally. Bishop Haas was always doing the work of his God among the men and women of American labor.

As we pause to take stock of our position on Labor Day 1953 and compare it with the past year, just what do we find?

We have organized many workers into CIO and have negotiated higher wages for millions of members of CIO unions and brought many changes for the better in working conditions on the production line in the factory and plants.

SOME EMPLOYERS are putting up a stiff fight against these higher wages and this is causing many unnecessary strikes. What I believe is that they should sit down and settle these matters on an unselfish basis. They must recognize certain facts: that we are living in a time when prices range at the highest point in the history of our country.

Now think a moment! Is this the fault of the worker? He and his family must find the money to match the cost of living. We feel that, perhaps soon, unless these employers change we are going back to the same battle again that has marked the past. We often wonder if the people who control prices ever take stock of this condition.

Looking at the profits of the corporations we see that they are at their highest point. These men who control prices have a moral obligation, not only to organized workers but to all the people of America.

DO WE OF LABOR as well as the manufacturers and the people who establish prices, have any moral obligation to our community and to this country of ours? I believe we do—the labor movement has a great moral obligation.

We are proud of the role we have played in serving the nation as well as our membership. We have produced the things which have made our country materially strong. We have shown ourselves ready to defend our material gains, in the same spirit our sons, like other sons, have been ready to march to defend our country.

We must ask ourselves, do we love this country with a deep enough conviction and faith—not only to defend it but to lay aside our selfishness and challenge employers and politicians to match our moral convictions and the kind of life we lead with theirs. We have it in our power to make this the kind of a country our fathers dreamed of in the beginning.

I have deep faith in the officers and members of our union, in that they do love America that much. I believe also there are many employers who would join with us in the achievement of these goals.

Ford Pensioners Win Better Medical, Health Benefits

RETIRED employes of the Ford Motor Co. with more than 10 years of service will receive additional hospitalization and medical insurance benefits under a revision of Blue Cross-Blue Shield programs negotiated by the CIO Auto Workers.

Dir. Ken Bannon, of the UAW-CIO Ford Dept., explained that the retired workers will pay approximately 10% less for their group hospital and medical coverage than they have in the past. In addition, they will be entitled to a maximum of 120 days of hospital care instead of the previous 30 days.

The retired employes in the past have been paying for their hospital and medical coverage on an individual plan basis. Bannon said that under the improved plan, first deductions will be made from the November pensions of those who authorize them, and that the new schedule of benefits will become effective on Dec. 1.

Bannon said that retired employes with from one to 10 years' service will be covered by the revision beginning Feb. 1 or Mar. 1, 1954.

Retail Union President Dies

IRVING M. Simon, president of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, died of a heart attack Sept. 2 in Mt. Sinai Hospital, New York City. He was 60.

He had been president of the union since 1948. He had suffered from a heart condition for some time, and became ill on July 20, shortly after he returned to New York after representing the CIO at the 40th anniversary celebration of the City of Hope in Los Angeles.

Funeral services were held at 11 a.m. Sept. 4 in the Park West Memorial Chapel, New York. R. J. Thomas, assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, represented the National CIO at the last rites. CIO unions in the New York area also were represented.

12c Package Ends URW Tieup At Firestone; Sign At Goodrich

THE CIO Rubber Workers ended one strike and barely averted another last week by concluding agreements on wage reopeners with two Big Four companies within 24 hours.

The first settlement ended a four-day walkout by 25,000 URW-CIO members at eight plants of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. The second came just in time to keep 18,000 employes of the B. F. Goodrich Co. on the job in nine factories.

Both settlements yielded packages of slightly more than 12c an hour, of which 5c was in the form of a general wage increase; two weeks' vacations after three years instead of five, and improved insurance programs. The Goodrich pact also increased night differentials.

THE FIRESTONE agreement wiped out certain inter-plant wage inequities at mills in Fall River, Mass., and New Castle and Noblesville, Ind. In addition it provided for extension of the two-year contract by one month to July 10, 1954.

Firestone wage increases were made retroactive to Aug. 24, while at Goodrich they became effective Aug. 31. Other phases of both settlements become effective Oct. 1.

In a reopening of the Firestone pension program, benefits were increased by $25 a month to $125 a month for workers with 25 years of service who retire at 65. The increase will go to all pensioners who have retired since the program was inaugurated on June 5, 1950.

The new insurance provisions give employes and their dependents up to 120 days of hospitalization, full payment of all hospital services, in-hospital medical payments of $3 daily, surgical benefits ranging up to $250, and out-patient X-ray service for diagnostic purposes. The company bears the full cost.

Negotiations began June 23, with George Bass heading the union committee. Firestone plants covered by the contract, in addition to those at Fall River, New Castle and Noblesville, are at Akron, O.; Des Moines, Ia.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Memphis, Tenn., and Pottstown, Pa.

THE GOODRICH settlement was negotiated by a union committee headed by Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs, with sessions starting June 29.

The improved insurance program provides complete hospitalization and surgical coverage for all employes and their families. In addition, it increased life, sickness and accident insurance coverage. Retired workers, including those who have gone on pension since the program was started on Apr. 1, 1950, will get hospital benefits up to $310 a year.

The contract was extended by two months to Oct. 15, 1954. Goodrich plants covered are at Akron, Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Cadillac, Mich.; Riverside, N. J.; Marion O.; Clarksville, Tenn.; Oaks, Pa.; Miami, Okla., and Los Angeles.

CIO Raps Cudahy Action, Puts Goods On 'Unfair' List

CUDAHY Packing Co.'s union-busting campaign drew the condemnation of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week and placing of the company's products on the "unfair" list.

In a letter to all CIO affiliates, Reuther said the Cudahy Packing Co. was unfair to its employes represented by the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

The Cudahy firm's headquarters are in Omaha. It is not to be confused with the much smaller Cudahy Bros. Co., located at Cudahy, Wisc., with which the union has no dispute.

He said the union "is engaged in a fight of major proportions against the Cudahy Packing Co., resulting from a deliberate attempt by the company to destroy the union."

Reuther charged the firm with instituting a speedup, denying rights established over the years and discharging eight local union leaders who have led the fight against the company's unfair practices. He also said a $1.5 million suit against the union by Cudahy was an effort to "frighten and intimidate its employes."

"We in the CIO cannot ignore this vicious attempt . . . to return to the law of the jungle in the meat packing industry," Reuther said.

He urged support of the Packinghouse Workers by all CIO members and listed the following Cudahy products as "unfair" with the admonition not to buy them: Puritan brand ham, bacon and sausage, Sunlight brand butter, eggs, cheese and poultry, Delrich margarine, Clix shortening, Rex lard, Cudahy canned meats and Old Dutch cleanser.

N.Y. CIO Hits Medics' Drive

ACTION of the Kings County (N. Y.) Medical Society in moving for four changes in medical ethics that would kill non-profit health insurance plans was bitterly assailed last week by the New York City CIO Council.

The Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York, which protects many CIO members, would be among the groups destroyed if the Kings County medicos' proposals to the New York State Medical Society are accepted.

"We can only regard your attack on HIP as an attempt to destroy the only organization that provides complete and comprehensive medical care through groups of physicians," the council told the Kings County society in a telegram describing the proposals as an attack on organized labor.

"You may be certain that the council will do all in its power to fight against the reactionary policy you are proposing."

AFL Clerks Drop Hearn's Election Move

WITHDRAWAL of the AFL Retail Clerks from intervention in the strike against Hearn's two department stores in New York City may speed settlement of the 14-week-old dispute involving 800 CIO Distributive, Processing and Office Workers.

Direction of the strike has been taken over by the New York State and City CIO Councils. Soon after the strike was called on May 14 the AFL union intervened and the store management refused to bargain with the DPO-CIO.

Withdrawal last week by the AFL affiliate "in the interests of good trade unionism" removes this obstacle to negotiations.

Sec.-Treas. David Livingston of DPO hailed the development which he said had been taken "in the spirit of labor unity" and which now "clears the way for genuine collective bargaining between the Hearn company and the CIO."

'A National Tragedy'—

Our Youngsters Pay For School Crisis

By MILTON PLUMB

NEARLY ONE out of every four Americans this year is going to get shortchanged.

They are the 36,949,700 students—23.1% of our population—which this fall make up the biggest school enrollment in our history. Relatively few of them will be getting the kind of education which they have a right to expect.

Consider these U. S. Office of Education findings:

- Three out of every five school rooms will be overcrowded. Public grade and high schools alone lack 345,000 classrooms.
- Grade schools alone lack 72,000 teachers. This means "doubling up" of already overcrowded classes, and permitting persons not qualified to teach.
- One out of every five children will attend school in a building which is so old that it fails to meet minimum fire and safety standards.

Before the year is over, an unknown number of young Americans being sent to school to prepare for the future will have their lives ruined or even snuffed out. Some will die from fires; others will meet with crippling illnesses resulting from overcrowding and improper sanitation.

L-6

And millions of others will be "educated" in make-shift "schools," consisting chiefly of quonset-type huts, fire halls or basement storage rooms.

These are some of the things that CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther had in mind when he told the American Association of School Administrators earlier this year that "the plight of our schools has deteriorated from a national scandal to a national tragedy."

Since that warning, conditions have only grown worse. And leading educators say that, unless there is an unexpected reversal in policies of the present Administration, a continued worsening is the only prospect in sight.

Increased enrollments due to a rising birth rate, building deterioration and obsolescence mean that some 425,000 additional classrooms will be needed by 1960 just to hold the line. Today only 36,000 are in some stage of construction.

10 Million More Pupils

But seven years from now, whether these facilities are built or not, there will be 10 million more pupils in school than there are this fall. Elementary school enrollments are due to rise by a million students each year through 1957.

And some 60,000 teachers, who now draw an average salary of only $3400 a year, leave the profession every 12 months. This year, when 160,000 new teachers were needed, only 45,700 came out of colleges and teacher institutes.

Instead of working positively to correct this situation, the Republican Administration and Congress this year moved in the other direction. The budget of the Office of Education was cut so severely that Commissioner of Education Earl McGrath resigned in protest. Educators generally backed his stand.

Fund Cuts Ahead

And then the Eisenhower Administration recommended a 25% slice in federal grants to the states for education. This was too much even for Congress, which finally voted to restore the cut despite Health, Education and Welfare Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby's support for the hatchet job.

Congress also gave Administration plans to cut education funds a set-back when it voted a $127 million program for school construction in defense-crowded areas although the Eisenhower Administration had asked that it be held down to $94 million. However, Congress wrote a gimmick into the measure that limited payments of federal obligations on schools already built to 70c on the dollar.

THE NEED—Construction of new, adequate school buildings is a major economic need. But Republican 83rd Congress cut funds for federal school aid in defense-swollen areas and rejected the Hill "oil-for-the-lamps-of-learning" bill.

U. S. Illiteracy Problem Adds To Need For School Grants

THE REPORT of a three-year research project which Pres. Eisenhower began when he was head of Columbia Univ. reveals that 2.5 million Americans are so poorly educated they can't even read or write.

The study, headed by Dr. Eli Ginzberg, noted economist, found that illiteracy was concentrated mainly in the South among Negroes, Indians and migratory workers. It warns, however, that increased migration northward, plus national defense needs, make illiteracy a problem for all of the states.

Illiterates rejected during World War II would have made more than 40 divisions of the Army.

Pointing out that the country spends more money caring for the young of migratory birds than it does to help educate the children of migrant workers, the Columbia Univ. report recommends a more liberal program of federal grants-in-aid to the states for educational purposes.

This recommendation, however, is in direct conflict with the policies of the Eisenhower Administration. Budget Director Joseph M. Dodge has made it clear that he wants the government to get out of the grants-in-aid program, and has directed Sec. Oveta Hobby of the Health, Education and Welfare Dept. to make cuts in this area.

Defense Dept. Move Rapped

INDIGNATION was growing last week among the nation's leading educational organizations over a move by the Defense Dept. to obtain virtual veto powers over the faculties of American colleges.

The American Council on Education lined itself solidly behind the 15 universities which have refused to renew contracts with the government to provide correspondence courses for members of the armed forces.

The colleges acted after the Defense Dept. insisted that they agree to a clause requiring them to fire any of their employes disapproved by the government.

Meanwhile, the executive committee of the Association of Land Grant Colleges last week was known to be considering asking the 31 colleges which renewed the contract to withdraw from the program.

Lose Their Rights

An official of the ACE said that, because of the threat to civil liberties involved in the government's insistence that privately run colleges abdicate their right to hire and fire, "it wouldn't be surprising if an unanimous boycott of the program develops."

Many of the schools which renewed the contracts didn't realize the implications of the new clause when they signed, he added.

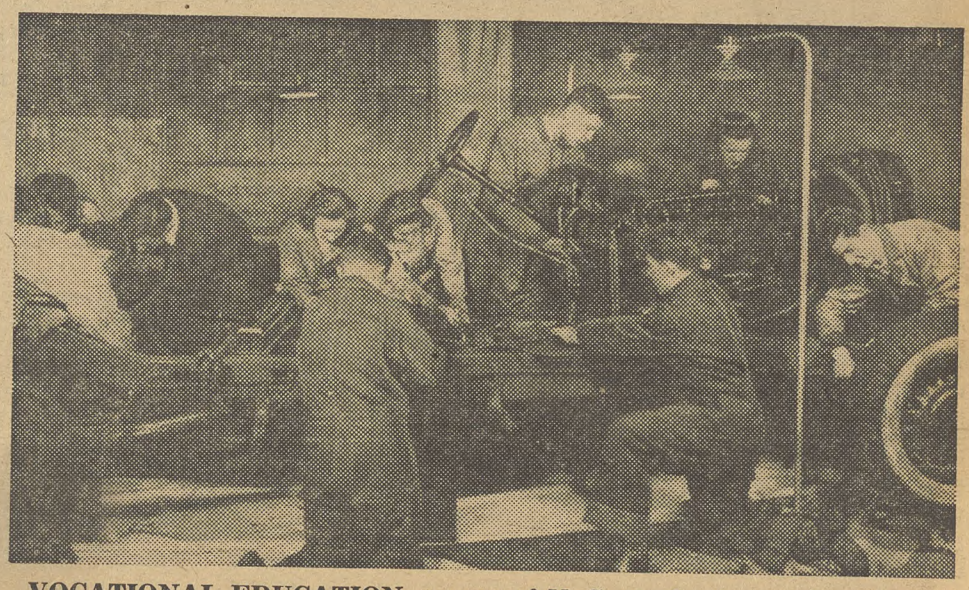
In defending the new clause, Administration officials have tried to make it appear that they are concerned only that no Communists should teach courses given to the armed services. This isn't the issue at all, a spokesman for the dissenting colleges points out, since all of the schools would accept a clause stating that specifically.

Other Programs

What concerns the educators is that the Defense Dept. would require them to fire all "persons as are disapproved by the government."

Moreover, although the clause has been inserted only in the contracts for correspondence courses, college officials fear that it may also be applied to all other programs involving federal funds.

"HORSE AND BUGGY" methods can't meet present educational needs. The school bus shown here symbolizes the kind of equipment schools need for their job.



VOCATIONAL EDUCATION, source of U. S. mechanical and production schools, long has been fostered by federal grants. But GOP Administration plans deep cuts.

Kings Of Swat Get Some Union Pointers On How To Get Along With The Boss

By GERVASE N. LOVE

AN UNREGNERATE sandlot second-baseman, now on the involuntarily retired list, offered a few words of sage advice to big league baseball players last week on how to get along with their bosses.

It was simple enough—to study the experience of the CIO Newspaper Guild and the union principles set forth in its contracts.

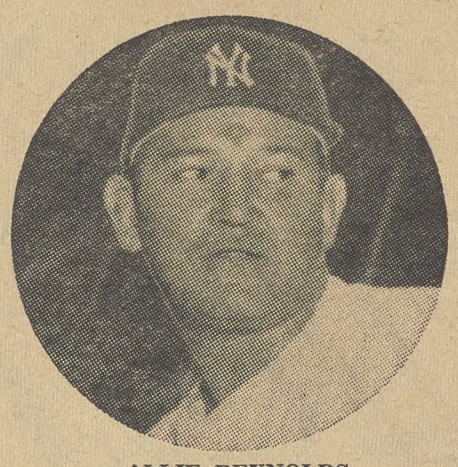
The ex-infielder who gave the advice and offered help at the same time was ANG-CIO Sec.-Treas. Ralph Novak.

He was prompted by the runaround the players got when they hired a lawyer, J. Norman Lewis, of New York, to represent them before Commissioner Ford Frick. Frick, baseball's czar and a former newspaperman, refused to deal with him.

Major league players today face problems of a "remarkable similarity" to many of those confronting newspapermen when they set about organizing the ANG-CIO 20 years ago, Novak wrote in letters to Lewis; Ralph Kiner, of the Chicago Cubs, National League players' representative, and Allie Reynolds, of the New York Yankees, American League players' spokesman.

"Like baseball players," he wrote, "newspapermen are highly individualistic and intensely competitive. And as in baseball, the determination of relative competency, and compensation, is complicated by factors difficult to measure: intangibles like experience and energy, judgment and initiative, team play and aggressiveness, etc.



ALLIE REYNOLDS
ANG-CIO contracts cited

"Newspapermen solved their problems by organizing themselves into the ANG-CIO and regulating their wages and working conditions by contracts especially designed to meet their peculiar situation; and we think the Guild's experience, and the principles set forth in its contracts, can suggest solutions to many of your problems.

"It has been said that collective bargaining won't work in baseball because it is impossible to write a single wage scale appropriate both to Stan Musial and the newest rookie or a job security clause which will protect one player against replacement by a better player.

"Maybe you can't. But you can, as we have done in the Guild, negotiate minimum wages graduated according to the length of experience, beneath which no player may be paid, and permit the better players to negotiate individually for pay above the minimums.

"And you can, again as we have done in the Guild, prohibit arbitrary and unreasonable dismissals, with disputed cases going to arbitration, and provide notice and severance pay graduated according to length of service for those released."

ANG-CIO contract clauses, Novak went on, suggest approaches to other problems of baseball players. He cited a few:

"Item: night games. Guild contracts require premium pay for night work.

"Item: scheduling afternoon games after night games. Guild contracts require that an appropriate number of hours elapse between shifts.

"Item: winter baseball. Guild contracts specify that employes may engage in any outside activities they desire so long as they do not directly compete with, or exploit, their employer.

RALPH KINER
Voice of experience calls

"Item: the reserve clause. Guild contracts specify that publishers shall not 'enter into any agreement with any other publisher binding such other publisher not to offer or give employment to the employes of the (first) publisher.'

"That will give you an idea. If you think we can be of assistance, I will be glad to meet with you at your convenience. There are no strings attached; it's just that your problems (including the reaction of management) are so reminiscent of our own that we'd like to help."

Durkin Quits Cabinet, Hits GOP On T-H Stall

In quitting, Durkin said the Republican Administration reneged on its promise to support his plan for revising the Taft-Hartley Act.

He referred to a 19-point program for Taft-Hartley amendments which the White House early in August was reported to have sent to chairmen of the Senate and House Labor Committees—and then quickly withdrawn because of big business pressure.

IN COMMENTING on the resignation, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said:

"We in the CIO hailed the appointment of Martin Durkin as Secretary of Labor because we felt it was an indication that the Eisenhower Administration intended to carry out its campaign commitments to strengthen the Dept. of Labor.

"However, the Republican 83rd Congress has done nothing but slash at, weaken and cripple the department. Every effort on the part of the Secretary of Labor to strengthen the department and carry out the commitments of Pres. Eisenhower has been frustrated.

"Under these circumstances, Martin Durkin, in all good conscience, had no choice but to resign his office."

The White House did not grant Durkin the courtesy of releasing his letter of resignation along with Eisenhower's acceptance of the action "with deep regret."

MARTIN P. DURKIN
Labor Secretary resigns

Durkin, 59, president on leave of the AFL Plumbers, was the first to quit the Eisenhower Cabinet.

WHEN DURKIN was named, his appointment was blasted by the late Sen. Taft (R. O.), then GOP Senate leader, as "incredible." (Durkin, a Democrat, had supported Adlai E. Stevenson for President.)

During his term in office, according to Washington press reports, his T-H proposals were under fire from a big business cabal led by Commerce Sec. Weeks. And recently the U. S. Chamber of Commerce has been tearing into Durkin's efforts to get T-H amended with "fairness and justice"—as the President has promised.

(For other reasons, some of Durkin's decisions as Labor Secretary also were under fire from the CIO Textile Workers. On Labor Day, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve suggested that Durkin resign because (1.) he had set aside an order upping the textile minimum wage to $1.20 an hour and (2.) big business domination of the Administration.)

In the last few days, it was reported in Washington, Durkin had been seeking to convince Eisenhower to send a strong, liberal message on T-H amendments to the forthcoming AFL convention. Failure to get such a message, it was reported, was the immediate cause of the resignation.

DURKIN'S LETTER of resignation was dated Aug. 31. It was not announced until after he had conferred briefly with Eisenhower, who was in Washington for a day for the funeral of Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson.

Durkin said he believed Undersecretary of Labor Lloyd A. Mashburn would serve as acting head of the department.

At his press conference Durkin declared flatly that his principal reason for resigning is that "I don't believe that there will be any compliance with the agreements (concerning Taft-Hartley amendments) which we entered into."

He said that he had "no comment" when asked if he felt Eisenhower had "let him down."

Durkin said that he had talked to the President personally, and that Eisenhower had asked him

CIO Asks FBI Inquiry On Southern Beating

AN IMMEDIATE FBI investigation of the brutal beating of a union organizer in Ashland, Miss., and prosecution of local police officers involved in his pistol-whipping were requested.

The plea was filed with Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr., by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg on behalf of Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers.

It followed the CIO's own investigation of the kidnapping and vicious attack on James Jackson, ACWA-CIO organizer, who had answered a plea from employes of the Ashland-Benton Corp. for aid in forming a union.

Goldberg charged that "local police and law enforcement officials are directly involved and participated in this organized and deliberate effort to use force and violence to prevent the organization" of workers in Ashland. The company makes Army shirts.

He recalled that he recently wrote Brownell expressing confidence the Attorney General "would rigorously investigate and prosecute state and local officials" who "deliberately infringe upon the basic constitutional rights" of Americans.

THAT LETTER was inspired by attacks on the Justice Dept. and the FBI by three governors, who objected to enforcement of federal civil rights legislation.

In describing the kidnapping and beating of Jackson to Brownell, Goldberg wrote:

"On the night of Aug. 31 . . . he (Jackson) visited the home of an employe of the Ashland-Benton Corp. in Ashland. His visit was interrupted by an armed gang of men who arrived in four automobiles, entered the house, and forcibly carried him off in one of their cars.

"Mr. Jackson was taken some miles away and then told that he and all other organizers for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America—a list of whom was read to him by the leader of the gang—should get out of Mississippi and stay out.

"They threatened to kill him if he did not comply. Then, they, pistol-whipped and mercilessly beat him, as a result of which he is now in the hospital with a broken arm and serious internal injuries."

Carpenters Rejoin AFL

THE CARPENTERS last week rejoined the AFL a month after they walked out.

Announcement of the return of the 822,000-member union to the AFL was made in a joint statement by AFL Pres. George Meany and Pres. Maurice A. Hutcheson of the Carpenters. It followed at a joint meeting of committees representing the AFL Executive Council and the brotherhood.

They said AFL officers would seek to bring to the AFL convention in St. Louis next week a recommendation to "definitely eliminate raids between AFL organizations."

The Carpenters had withdrawn after the Executive Council endorsed the no-raiding pact with the CIO.

Labor Day Celebrations—

HST Says GOP Betrays The People

AMERICAN workers were urged to "put up a good fight, day in and day out, for the things you believe in" by former Pres. Harry S. Truman in an address at a joint CIO-AFL Labor Day rally in Detroit.

The former President took off the gloves he has been wearing since he left office and hurled them defiantly at the Republican Administration which succeeded him. The talk was carried on nationwide television and radio hookups.

He sharply accused his GOP successors with betrayal of the people's interests and disregard of the country's defense needs. At the same time, he defended the late Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal and his own Fair Deal administrations.

How Sorry They Are

"The majority of the people last fall voted for a change in the political party which controls the government," Truman said.

"That was their perfect right, but oh, how sorry they are.

"I don't think they voted for a change in the social and economic principles that have made us so strong and prosperous. But that's the kind of a change we're getting.

"There are plenty of signs of a return of that old philosophy that the object of government is to help big business—on the theory that if big business is well enough off, its wealth and income will trickle down to the rest of the population to keep the system going."

Trickle-Down Theory

He cited the government's boost in interest rates as one sign.

"That may be to the benefit of the money-lenders," he added tartly, "but it surely does hurt the rest of the people . . . It is a perfect example of that discredited old trickle-down theory."

Truman listed additional indications "that the government is no longer so concerned with the welfare of all the people."

The public housing program "has been condemned to death," he said; minimum wage law enforcement funds "have been drastically cut," and the farmer has been told he ought to "go it alone" as he did in the depression after World War I.

"You should hear the farmer and the cattleman weep and wail and ask forgiveness for voting as he did last fall," the former President interjected. "At least that's true in my part of the country."

He assailed the Republican Administration for its "betrayal of the Hells Canyon project," warned that the power lobby "is doing its best to take over Niagara Falls," and that "the bell is tolling" for the Tennessee Valley Authority, rural electrification "and all the rest." He called on his audience to "look what they've done with your immense offshore oil interests."

"Now, my friends, you didn't have to take these things lying down," he added. "You can't hope to change the philosophy of those people who are now in Washington; but if you watch them closely and raise your voices loud and clear, you may be able to salvage some of these things.

"After all, they are just politicians, and they are influenced by public opinion."

A Better America

Reuther, who shared the platform with Truman and Gov. G. Mennen Williams (D.) of Michigan, extended the greetings of all CIO members to the nation and pledged "our full cooperation in the building of a better, happier, more secure America for all."

In an ABC Radio address, he described talk in some circles of a depression as "dangerous and reckless," and bolstering Communist propaganda, and declared American labor is determined that there will be no "ruinous deflation."

"American labor has unlimited faith in the ability of America and the free world to win the struggle over all forms of tyranny," he concluded, "and we believe the future holds unlimited possibilities for human betterment."

'Reckless Reaction'

In other Labor Day speeches:

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) told an audience at Hibbing, Minn., that the GOP Administration is "big business, give-away minded."

Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) said at Des Moines, Ia., that Republican policy is best defined as "the open door for special interests."

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) called on a Madison, Wisc., audience to "stop the Republican crusade of reckless reaction."

In a sermon at the first annual Labor Day mass in Washington, Rev. George G. Higgins, associate director of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, said that the federal government has not carried out its duty of serving as an example in labor relations to private industry, which "has probably been more intelligent and more enlightened in its personnel policies."

'What's Good For General Motors' Gets A Slight Amendment—

In denouncing the "old philosophy that the object of government is to help big business," former Pres. Truman took a poke at Defense Sec. Wilson, a past president of General Motors. Said HST:

"There was that fellow-Detroiter of yours, who gave his views on how to run the government when he said, 'what's good for General Motors is good for the country.'

"I could go along with that if he included the people who work for General Motors and all the rest of the working people of the country, the farmers, the white collar workers and small businessmen—not to mention Ford and Chrysler."

THE ROLE of organized labor in "the down to earth processes of democratic growth" was hailed by Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers in a Labor Day message to the union's more than one million members.

"The need for democratic progress is so great and freedom's enemies are so aggressive," he said in a call for labor unity, "that positive steps are needed to bolster the forces of progress.

"Forward - looking Americans need unity of action. In keeping with this need, the forces of free organized labor which are growing ever more united internationally must rapidly forge unity here at home.

Honorable Unity

"No technical obstacle to labor unity is so great as to prevent united efforts, cooperative relationships and prompt, honorable organizational unification of the great free labor unions of our nation."

The USA-CIO president warned that not all enemies of progress and freedom are Communists. Non-Communist foes of human advancement in the U.S., he said, "have grown bolder and more cunning."

The past year, he said, was one in which "government for the people left Washington and government for profit moved in."

The CIO has kept its pledge to support Pres. Eisenhower when his actions would benefit the general welfare, he declared.

Big Business Whims

"Unfortunately, those instances were rare," he added. "We opposed him when his actions coincided only with the whims of big business. Unfortunately, that was too often."

As a result of the GOP give-away program, he went on, "the American people—all of them except the few wealthy and selfish groups—have been literally robbed by a cynical Congress, and the fact that a strong, politically astute man was not sitting in the White House."

Carey called on all CIO members to join in a major drive to organize the unorganized.

Reuther Urges High Wages, Production To Block Depression

WHEN THE worker has money to spend, there is little danger of a depression, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told 25,000 union members and their friends at a Labor Day rally in Akron, O.

Unions hold a key to prosperity because wage gains won at the bargaining table boost purchasing power and thus employment, he explained.

"We've got to achieve a balance of purchasing power and production power," he said. "You give each worker purchasing power and the factories will continue full blast."

He charged that forecasts of a depression by some American businessmen give comfort to the Communists.

"A depression is what the Communists are counting on in this country," he said. "A depression is man-made and what man makes can be changed."

Reuther blamed the 1930 depression on "an acute case of under-consumption" and not on "overproduction, as the economists said." Labor, he said, will work and fight to head off another crash.

With other freedom-loving groups, labor is pledged to build a world in which we can have bread and freedom too, he declared.

"We in the CIO have said that the shortest route to fighting communism is a full stomach," he added. "If we want to fight communism, we must fight poverty and hunger."

The labor movement has come a long way in giving the worker respect and dignity, but the job isn't finished yet, he said.

"We've got our eye on a guaranteed annual wage goal that will allow the wife of the worker to plan a 52-week budget just as the wife of the executive now does," Reuther said.

"We don't want to be paid for not working. What we want to do is shift the burden of full employment off the backs of the workers onto the employers, where it belongs."

The CIO leader, who also is president of the Auto Workers, called for an opening of the congressional money pipeline for schools, housing and medical needs and social security.

"When you talk about better housing, schools, medical care or social security, they give you a patriotic speech but close the pipeline, and instead hand you a couple of drops from the eye-dropper out of the congressional medicine chest," he charged.

Reuther told the crowd to "be careful about what happens in Washington."

"They're going to try to balance the budget at your expense," he warned, adding that a federal sales tax is getting top level consideration.

He called the Taft-Hartley Act a "negative approach" to labor problems.

The CIO, he pledged, is working toward an honorable merger of all labor groups into one big central body.

"But we are not going to trade our principles for political expediency," he said. "We will work hard at bringing about an honorable merger, and we trust others will go about it in the same spirit."

Reuther was introduced by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers. Leo E. Dugan, Akron CIO Council executive secretary, was master of ceremonies.

Mess In Washington

The more things change, the more they are the same—particularly when it comes to business corruption of government.

Way back last Spring, just a few weeks after the Eisenhower inauguration, the Republican Administration's face was red over the operations of GOP National Chairman C. Wesley Roberts and his $11,000 Kansas hospital deal. Roberts had to quit.

Now comes the coffee-klatch club of Warren L. Stephenson and his "four-percenter" operations in the field of million dollar Navy contracts.

Although Stephenson sought business at 4% while the going rate was 5% in past malodorous deals, he was far from a Three-Eye League Republican. Ardent Taft man before the convention, Stephenson traveled on the Eisenhower campaign train. Then he was executive secretary of the GOP Inauguration Committee. He was high in the swank GOP club across from the Capitol. And he was angling for a top government job. Then he stubbed his toe.

Testimony before the House Armed Services subcommittee revealed that Stephenson was just one of many influence-peddlers who never had it so good.

An intermediary in his operations was one Jon Jonkel—the McCarthyite press agent whose operations in the 1950 Maryland senatorial campaign were so high-powered that he had to pay a $5000 fine for violating the State's corrupt practices act.

Another Stephenson tipster on secret government contract operations was one Stanley L. Bishop. His method of operation was to float around coffee bars in U. S. buildings. "If you stand there long enough and if you stand there for two cups of coffee," he told the committee, "you will get enough information to last you for a couple of weeks."

As for Stephenson, he has allowed that he was a bit "indiscreet." And the committee has voiced a few pious sentiments to the effect that this will never happen again.

For our money, the "four percenter" deal is just what you can expect when—as Interior Sec. McKay boasted recently—"we're in the saddle as an Administration representing business and industry."

First Lesson

First formal meeting of Pres. Eisenhower's Government Contracts Committee is going to be held in Washington this week, and it has its job cut out for it.

Among other tasks, the committee—which includes CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany as members—is supposed the guard against bias in U. S. contracts and conduct an educational program against discrimination.

A good place for the committee's first lesson would be with Sec. of Agriculture Benson and others in the Agriculture Dept., who just a few days ago shelved a government anti-discrimination clause on farm price support loans.

The Good Fight

Harry Truman used a scalpel and gentle humor, rather than the "give 'em hell" technique, in his Labor Day address at Detroit's CIO-AFL rally examining the meager record of the Eisenhower Administration.

"Put up a good fight, day in and day out, for the things you believe in," the former President urged for a defense of the Fair Deal against rampaging reaction. That's a good call to arms for the campaigns of '54.

September Mourn!

In Other Words—

A Year Of Increasing Worry

In a speech at a Labor Day rally in Mansfield, O., CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey recounted the CIO's recovery from the deaths of Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood during the past year, and called for greater effort in the coming year to organize the unorganized, improve contracts and get better legislation. In addition, he gave a sharp criticism of the Republican Administration, a digest of which follows.

By JAMES B. CAREY

IT WAS A YEAR OF WORRY on the political front—worry which has not diminished as the days roll by. For it was a year in which government for the people left Washington and government for profit moved in.

What I am about to say will be harsh and critical. It will be necessarily harsh and critical, for that is the only interpretation the facts warrant.

We in the CIO have a perfect right to return this indictment, for we have supported the new Administration every time it took a position which would benefit the general public.

It is tragic, but at the same time typical of this Administration, that I must report to you we were able to support it far less often than we were forced to oppose it.

Whims Of Big Business

The CIO, before Pres. Eisenhower took office, pledged itself to support him every time his actions would benefit the general welfare. We have kept our pledge. Unfortunately, those instances were rare.

We opposed him when his actions coincided with the whims of big business. Unfortunately, that was too often.

In good conscience we cannot support, nor can we condone, the congressional give-away program which has seen America's tremendous offshore oil lands handed over to a few states dominated by the rich oil companies.

Here in Mansfield, and throughout Ohio, I know there are thousands of children going off to school in a few days who are the direct victims of that give-away.

These youngsters—and some of them are yours—will be going to school in buildings which are antiquated and unsafe. Many of these buildings are fire traps. Many are unhealthy, many are overcrowded, and in all of them the teachers are underpaid.

With only a fraction of the wealth beneath the offshore waters, these children could get the kind of education they need and which we all want them to have.

The President kept his campaign promise to the oil companies. He evidently felt that promise to be more important than the future of America's children.

Perhaps he didn't realize the import of what he was doing. Perhaps he was ill advised. Perhaps he felt he must redeem his campaign promise regardless of the lot of America's children. Perhaps this action should be chalked up to inexperience.

Door To Depression Open

Whatever the reason, the President of the U. S. has lent the great prestige of his office to a raid on the public resources which is without parallel.

And the American people—all of them except the few wealthy and selfish groups—have been literally robbed by a cynical Congress, and the fact that a strong, politically astute man was not sitting in the White House.

Nor was that the only example of the way that corporate greed and lust for profits were aided and abetted during the last legislative session.

The flood gates against inflation were torn down. The excess profits tax was only saved for a brief period. The skids were greased for the imposition of a national sales tax. Our atomic energy secrets were earmarked to be handed over to big business. Our natural resources like Niagara Falls were tagged to be given to private enterprise. Our synthetic rubber plants were being transferred to private ownership.

And the door was opened for a new peacetime depression.

This was the record of seven months of the 83rd Congress. This was the record of eight months of big business control of the White House.

This was a record which we of labor had predicted during the last campaign.

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

IT MAY COME AS A SURPRISE to many but almost every economic group in our country receives some special aid from the federal government. This aid, totalling over $39 billion in five years, is paid out of general tax revenues.

Below is a breakdown of what it costs the government to provide each group with these "aids and special services," as listed in official reports of the budget of the U. S. government:

Expenses for Aids and Special Services
(In Millions of Dollars)

	Actual 1952	Estimated 1953	Five-Year Total 1949-1953
Agriculture	$463	$547	$2,857
Business	1,041	1,018	4,430
Labor	200	206	1,006
Home Owners & Tenants	−129	−123	−374
Veterans	4,710	4,411	24,768
General Aids	1,364	1,530	6,576
Total			39,263

This is just a partial picture. There are many other expenditures which aid more than one group. In addition, the budget points out that groups receive special benefits for which federal funds are not expended. Businesses, for example, have benefited from special tax exemptions, accelerated amortization, depletion allowances, exemptions from income taxes, tariff protection, flood control, low-cost electric power and other aids, the budget reports.

Who Gets Federal Subsidies?

Here is a more detailed explanation of the benefits from budget items received by each group:

AGRICULTURE—Funds were spent for farm price supports, expenses of the international wheat agreement, Sugar Act payments for removal of surplus commodities, administrative expenses of the loan program, and other direct aids to farmers.

BUSINESS—Funds spent which primarily aided business were for: (1) lower postage rates which meant a deficit for the Post Office; (2) operating subsidies for navigation and other aids to the shipping industry; (3) aids to air navigation; and (4) net losses from defense production benefits.

LABOR—Largest expenditure for federal-state program of unemployment insurance and public employment offices.

HOME OWNERS AND TENANTS—Primarily for loans and other financing aids, grants to local authorities for low-rent public housing and for slum clearance and redevelopment. Included here, also, are the administrative costs of rent control for six million units while it was in force.

"However," the budget report adds, "net receipts from insurance or mortgages and savings and loan share accounts, as well as from mortgage purchases and other housing programs, exceed all budget expenditures for housing by over $100 million in all three years."

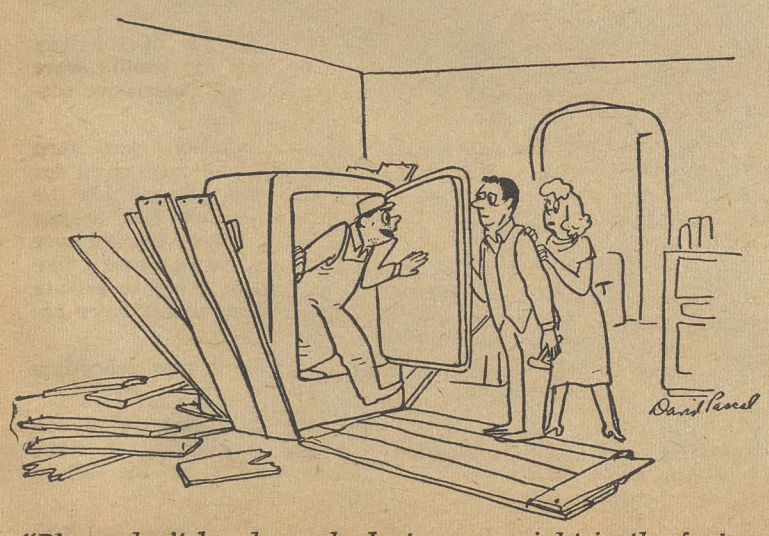
This explains the minus figure in this group illustrating that the government has not lost money in direct aids to home owners and tenants.

VETERANS—More than one-half of this figure is for disability compensations and pensions. Also included are unemployment allowances for veterans who could not find work after release, educational and vocational training.

Another listing in this category is payment to the railroad retirement account to cover cost of railroad workers for time spent in military service.

GENERAL AIDS—Aids and special services extended to more than one of the above groups: (1) public assistance to those in need—blind, aged, disabled, and dependent children; (2) low-priced hot school lunches; (3) Public Health Service, hospital operations and medical care; (4) various aids to Indians.

Willard Shelton is on vacation. "It's Your Washington" will be resumed in the next issue of The CIO News.



"Please don't be alarmed. Just an oversight in the factory shipping department."

It Happened In Tuscaloosa—

Rubber Workers Change Face Of Southern Town For The Better

Recently a goon squad beat up a CIO Clothing Worker in a small town in Mississippi, while in Alabama a "right to work" law aimed at unions was signed into law. The other side of the South —the story of CIO unionism and what it brings— is demonstrated at Tuscaloosa, Ala., in this report by Bill Abbott of the CIO Rubber Workers Education Dept.

By BILL ABBOTT

GUS WAS A NEGRO in the deep South . . . and he had sore legs. Gus worked for the Tuscaloosa, Ala., plant of the B. F. Goodrich Co. His job was lifting heavy, crude rubber slabs. It was hard, grinding work and each day his legs began to hurt him a little more.

One day the company told Gus he was through. He had a leg ailment the doctors called "varicose veins" and he couldn't do any more lifting. After years of service to the company Gus was cast off like a worn out shoe. Ironically, he was fired because he had given so much of himself to his job.

In the South Negroes have been brought up not to question what white folks do. You work and sweat all your life, and then one day they tap you on the shoulder and say, "Too bad, Gus, but we can't have you do the job anymore." You just stand there and take it.

Objected To Pushing Around

But this was the year 1950 and there was a CIO Rubber Workers union in the plant. A union organized by young guys, mostly white, who didn't like to be pushed around . . . and guys who didn't like to see others pushed around.

The men in the shop started talking about Gus' trouble. They said there were other jobs he could do, and that it was a damned lousy way for a company to treat a worker who had given it the best years of his life. They said they didn't like it one bit, and with their union behind them they complained.

But the Goodrich Co. stalled and did nothing. After all, for years corporations played whites off against Negroes, Negroes against whites. This was the South. And besides . . . it was good for profits.

To the company's astonishment the workers in the plant didn't see things this way. They had a union and to them the word meant everybody pulling together and helping each other out. When they learned that Goodrich wasn't going to give old Gus a fair break they left their jobs in protest.

For five weeks they stayed out. Southern whites lost five weeks of needed pay, all because management had pushed a colored man around. When the work stoppage ended Gus was the first person to pass triumphantly through the plant gates.

This incident illustrates one reason why Local 531 of the URW-CIO is changing the face of a Southern community.

They Couldn't Be Stopped

Tuscaloosa, resting in the heart of the deep South, before the union came in was a narrow-minded, corporation-dominated Southern city.

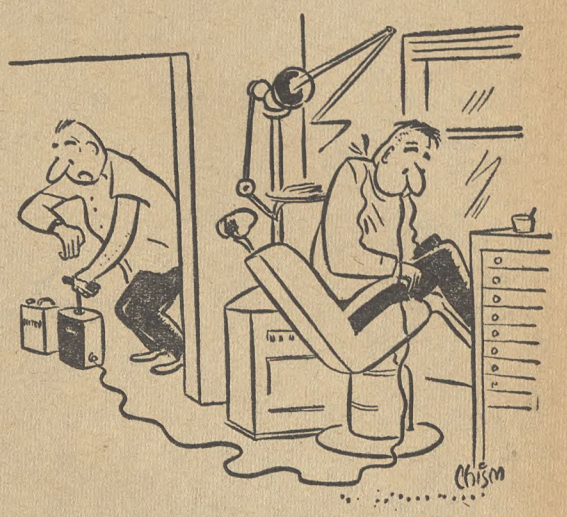
When rubber workers began organizing the Goodrich plant in 1946 they found all the powerful forces in the community bitterly arrayed against them. The town's one newspaper, businessmen, civic leaders and the police all worked hard to stop the union.

But the union wouldn't be stopped, and in April 1947 Local 351 received its charter from the URW-CIO.

During the six years that followed these militant, hustling rubber workers turned a hostile community into a friendly one. The union now considers the Tuscaloosa News "not unfriendly"; businessmen and civic leaders cooperate fully with labor; and the police don't bother workers on strike.

Even the schools invite union officers to speak before classes on the goals of the CIO. And because the union considers itself a responsible community institution it brings out greater voluntary contributions for Community Chest Red Feather drives.

The union's spectacular success against almost overwhelming odds is due chiefly to the quality of its membership. The average member is in his twenties and devoted to the ideal of a strong labor movement bringing a better and more dignified way of life to the working Southerner. He exudes an intense pride in his union and its achievements.



"Now just lay back and relax; it's stubborn but we'll get it out!"

A big reason for his pride is the fact that today Tuscaloosa rubber workers are among the highest paid workers in the entire South. Before the union was organized the average male Goodrich worker made 97c an hour. Seven months after the local received its charter he was making $1.29 an hour, and today he earns $1.92. And this is 20c an hour above the national average in all manufacturing establishments—North and South.

This bread and butter accomplishment of better than a 100% wage increase means more money spent in the community, and this, in addition to benefiting URW members, considerably aids small businessmen of the town.

The fight for better wages and working conditions hinges on an informed and militant membership. Edward Smallwood, Local 351 vice president, feels that an education program can help do the job of keeping members informed and training them for leadership.

Labor Education Helps

He proudly tells of his union's education committee which shows films with its own projector and regularly puts on education programs. Recently, the committee sponsored a "Know Your Contract" institute for officers and shop stewards. This helped the union leader who handles day to day shop problems to better understand workers' rights under the union contract.

Local 351's enthusiasm bubbles over to the Tuscaloosa CIO Council, which is headed by D. H. Turner, one of the local's past presidents.

The Council has an organizing committee which had greatly helped to organize woodworkers, a hardware store, a bakery and two clothing stores.

Committee members get no pay or special recognition. They spend hours night after night talking unorganized workers into joining unions because of their boundless faith in organized labor as a means of raising living standards and promoting social justice for all Southerners.

An almost unheard of thing in the South is to organize white collar workers. But Local 351 organized Goodrich office workers despite big parties thrown by the company in a vain effort to win the girls away from the union.

Union elections and meetings provide an excellent training ground for democratic leadership. In the case of Local 351, Southern whites and Negroes vote and participate jointly in their union government. Unlike Alabama's state and local governments there are no poll taxes or other governmental restrictions here.

Local 351 feels that democracy is something you live every day of your life. Unionism like that of Local 351 is in a very real sense creating a new, more democratic and prosperous South.

South's Growing Unions Play Community Role

Increasing political action on the part of members of the CIO Rubber Workers' Local 351 in Tuscaloosa, Ala., is destined to have great impact on that city.

Fresh from recent victories in county elections, CIO unions in the area now plan to concentrate on city political contests. Local 351's 1200 members already wield much influence in Tuscaloosa's 46,000 population.

It Works In Los Angeles—

Buying Plan Saves Dollars For CIOers

BUYING directions are given to Mrs. Pat Flores by Council Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford.

CASH SAVINGS and quality merchandise Lunceford promised Mrs. Flores under Los Angeles CIO Council's buying plan were numerous in warehouse store. Salesman Peter Banning shows some refrigerators.

BUYER Mabel Tamme displays mixer, on which saving is $10, in second store. It offered similar savings on other equipment.

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

A CONSUMERS' purchasing plan that potentially can save CIO members "literally hundreds of thousands of dollars a year" has been worked out by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

The plan operates through a non-profit corporation, the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council Consumers Club, formed after some two years of careful investigation and preparation, said Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford of the Council.

Council officers serve as directors of the corporation, and a Consumers' Committee, with representatives from each council affiliate, acts as an advisory body. John Noblett, council staff representative, carries on the day-to-day activity.

The plan makes available to the 100,000 CIO members and their families living in the Los Angeles area "practically anything from food to furniture at substantial savings to them," Lunceford said.

"The plan is worked out not only to save our members money, but to make it easy for them to shop," he said.

Arrangements have been completed with various large outlets carrying a wide variety of merchandise, so that the CIO shopper can make several types of purchases in one place, he added.

"For example," Lunceford pointed out, "we have an arrangement with one large warehouse concern where a CIO member can buy at wholesale prices anything from more than 3000 items—including meat, staples, household stuff, or toys."

One of the most important advantages to the plan is that it is under direct CIO control, Lunceford pointed out.

"Our members and our unions were being continuously bothered by all kinds of so-called 'discount plans'," Lunceford said. "Some of them, of course, were trustworthy, but too many failed to live up to their claims. And there were such a great number of them that things were getting considerably confused.

"Now that CIO has its own operation, through the non-profit corporation, we can protect our members, simplify matters a great deal, and bring about larger and larger real savings, because the tremendous purchasing power of our entire membership can be used as a bargaining force."

SAVINGS TO CIO members also are improved because the council does not take the profit which discount houses must add to stay in business, Lunceford added.

How does the plan work?

"Very simply," Lunceford said. "Any CIO member who is in the market for practically anything simply calls us up—ADams 1-9321, or ADams 4-0244. He tells us what he is looking for, and we direct him to one or more places where the item can be bought.

"Right now, we are having cards printed that will be passed out to all CIO members. But until they are ready, all they have to do is show their union card. That's all there is to it."

Some Aimed At Fair Deal—

GOP Hoes Lush Crop Of Commissions

EVEN the weather is being investigated in Washington these days, and it's going to have to put up with it, whether it likes it or not, just like us taxpayers.

This inquiry, like many others on a wide range of subjects now being carried on by the lush crop of "commissions" which have been created since the Republicans took over last Jan. 20, isn't, strictly speaking, one of the congressional "investigations."

It does, however, have congressional blessing. In fact, Congress thought so much of the idea that in passing Public Law 256 last Aug. 16, it voted not only top pay plus expenses for members of the weather probing committee, but also gave them an executive secretary at $12,000 a year.

Duplication Develops

The Advisory Committees on Weather Control thus created is the only new special commission, committee or advisory board that got such an executive specifically authorized by Congress.

What no one in Congress pointed out when the law creating this ACWC was passed is that the Eisenhower Administration had already jumped the gun and was already investigating weather on its own even without congressional authorization.

More than a month before the ACWC was born, an Advisory Committee on Weather Services, composed of eight leading private meteorologists, had been set up in the Commerce Dept. It isn't clear yet whether both committees at the same time will try to blow up some political storm clouds for the Weather Bureau, or whether the first group will now be washed out by the second.

This duplication of Republican efforts to investigate and even "control" the weather is typical of the overlap of many of the commission probes now going on.

CHIEF of new commission looking over U. S. economic policies abroad is Inland Steel Co. Pres. Clarence B. Randall.

Not only are some duplicate special commissions or committes set up in government departments, but others, like the new Hoover Commission, for example, are simply going over ground already covered by past commissions.

Likewise, the fact that some Presidential commissions overlap some probes going on in Congress apparently concerns no one.

Under the Eisenhower Administration the special commission merry-go-round is whirling at near-record speed. Nothing like the present number has been seen since the last Republican Administration of ex-Pres. Hoover.

Congress passed legislation creating no less than 11 different commissions, special committees and advisory boards in the last session. Most of these measures originated with the President and were enacted at his request.

In addition, Eisenhower has created others on his own authority. At least four Executive Orders deal with such commissions, and still others have been formed by the President's informal direction.

Examples of the latter are the Advisory Board of Economic Growth and Stability, which meets under Arthur F. Burns, economic adviser to the President, and the President's Committee on Intl. Information Activities.

Some Examples

Agencies created by executive order include the Government Contract Committee, the National Agriculture Advisory Commission and the President's Advisory Committee on Government Organization.

The latter seems a sure overlap of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, which Congress authorized at the Administration's request, in Public Law 108. This will be headed by ex-Pres. Hoover, who supposedly completed the same job when he was chairman of the Hoover Commission set up for the same purpose under the Truman Administration.

Those who acknowledge the outstanding job which the earlier Hoover Commission did can't help wondering why, if the work was done right (as they believe it was), another costly survey should be needed now. Some liberal observers have warned, however, that the new commission may be "stacked" in such a way that it will recommend an end to New Deal-Fair Deal programs like public power and similar public welfare services.

That this might be in the wind was indicated when Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.), a sponsor of the Hoover Commission resolution, declared:

"This will give us an opportunity to reverse the trend of the last 20 years and get the government down to a compact, manageable size."

Expanding Government

But, at least with respect to commission-making, the Republican Administration is expanding, rather than contracting, the government.

Besides his own special committee to investigate the Weather Bureau, Commerce Sec. Sinclair Weeks, for example, set up another similar one to look into the Bureau of Standards. Many of these departmental committees, however, reach far beyond administration to policies affecting all of the people.

One example of the latter is the new National Committee to Study the Anti-Trust Laws set up by Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr. This group—with many big corporation lawyers as members—plans to give anti-monopoly legislation "a complete going-over."

Just about the only proposal for a commission that apparently hasn't got a chance of coming into existence seems to be the one the public is asking for with increasing pressure. This is the demand for a commission to study the value and methods of both special commissions and congressional investigating committees. —M.P.

Ike's Special Boards Are Even Talking About The Weather

Here's a list of some of the Presidential commissions, committees and boards created under the Eisenhower Administration:

Advisory Board of Economic Growth and Security. Chairman: Arthur M. Burns.

Advisory Committee on Weather Control. Eleven members, plus an executive secretary. (Public Law 256).

At $50 Per Day, Cost Climbs For Multitude Of Inquiries

ENTIRELY APART from GOP promises of economy in government, a record number of "commissions" are currently being paid in Washington.

Members of most of the special committees, advisory boards and commissions which the Republicans set up in the first session of the 83rd Congress draw pay at the rate of $50 a day, plus expenses.

This means that the pay Congress authorized for the 25-member Commission on Intergovernmental Relations will cost taxpayers $1250 just in salaries for its members every day it meets.

Strangely enough, the only paid new commission that Congress didn't vote the $50-a-day rate was the one it set to recommend a boost in the salaries of members of Congress. The 18 members of this commission will each get $25 a day plus travel expenses. This rate is less than half of what congressmen themselves are already drawing.

A few commissions, such as those for the Bicentennial of Columbia University, the Corregidor Bataan Memorial, or the Jamestown-Williamsburg-Yorktown Celebration, serve without compensation.

BUT IN most cases, the public never gets a full accounting of what the operations of these investigative and advisory bodies cost. Clerical and investigative staffs are usually provided by assignment from government departments, and their salaries and other hidden costs frequently run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Such items as the printing and publishing of sometimes voluminous reports, postage and telephone expenses, and the cost of the office space their staffs occupy are often major commission expenditures for which John Q. Public gets no direct accounting. He must, however, foot the bills.

GOP Faces Red As Inaugural Aide Named As '4 Percenter'

THE CASE of the Republican "four-percenter" was revealed last week by the House armed services subcommittee.

He is Warren L. Stephenson, Washington socialite, who traveled on the Eisenhower campaign train and was executive secretary of the presidential inaugural committee.

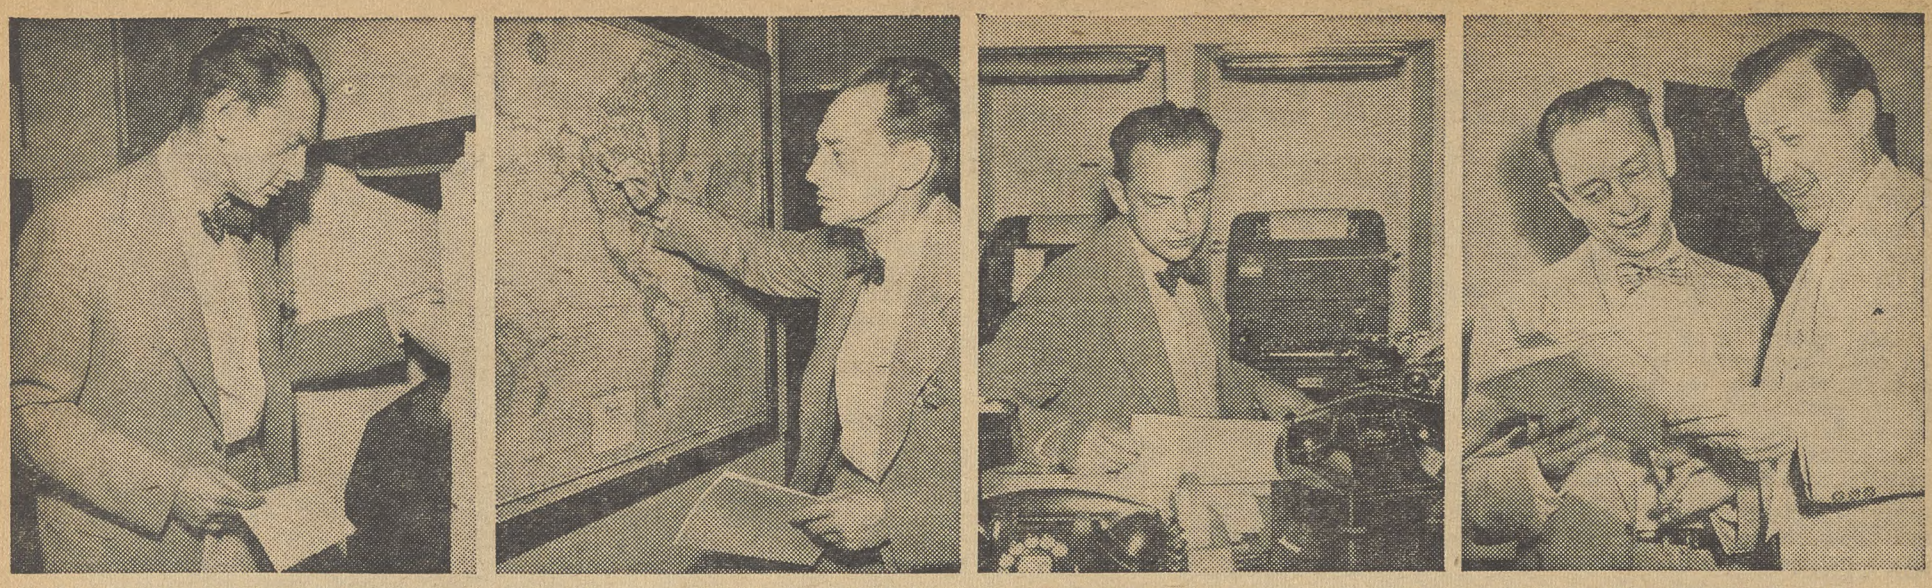
House investigators plan to make public the secret testimony in which Stephenson is said to have offered for a 4% fee to help a California manufacturer sell launchers for the Navy's "Mighty Mouse" rocket.

(The prediction early this year by Fortune magazine that there would be more—not less—corruption under the GOP seemed to be coming true. The $1.25 a copy magazine forecast in January, on the subject of "Republican corruption," that "There will be some — maybe quite a lot.")

One member, Rep. Hardy (D. Va.) said the hearings show clearly that "neither party has a monopoly on influence peddling. The only difference which the change of Administration has brought is that there seems to be a cut-rate price of 4%."

Charges that five-percenters operated in the capital figured prominently in the GOP campaign last fall.

The subcommittee questioned Stephenson about his 4% offer, his reported claim that he had contacts in the Navy and where he got supposedly secret prices submitted by his client's competitors.



A COMMENTATOR'S DAY.—Preparing a daily news broadcast takes hours of preparation, study and careful writing, judging from the experience of John W. Vandercook. His CIO-sponsored program, "John W. Vandercook and the News," now is broadcast nightly on ABC Radio. At left, Vandercook keeps a close eye on the news service teletype. Next, he checks a new break on the map, recalling his lengthy travels as writer, newsman. Each afternoon, the newscast is written and rewritten before broadcast time. At right, Vandercook chats with CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther a few days before he began on Labor Day to report "something new in the news . . . all of it." Hear him each week night on ABC.

CWA Gains In Pacts With Independents

THE CIO COMMUNICATION Workers are getting a better break from independent telephone companies than from affiliates of the gigantic Bell System. This was announced last week by CWA as the strike against Indiana Bell entered its eighth week.

Wage boosts averaging 8.6c an hour, negotiated by the union with independent concerns in the past few weeks, "are considerably higher than the average for Bell System agreements negotiated so far this year," the union said.

CWA pointed out that, while the range of settlements varies with each contract, wage levels in some locations are as much as $1.50 to $4 a week above Bell System rates for comparable towns.

INDEPENDENT firms signing contracts recently included: Bluefield, W. Va., Telephone, Ohio Consolidated, General Telephone of Wisconsin, Missouri Telephone, Looking Glass Prairie Telephone, Gilroy Telephone, General Telephone of Ohio and General Telephone of the Southwest.

Only one new contract was reached by CWA with a Bell System affiliate within the past week—and that was with the smallest link in the chain, Cincinnati & Suburban.

The pact provides increases ranging from $2 to $5 a week for 2500 workers. The pay hikes were effective Sept. 6, two weeks before the old contract expired. Some job upgrading and improvement of several other contract clauses also were won.

Insistence of Indiana Bell on a termination-of-strike clause was prolonging the walkout of its employes.

John L. Crull, CWA vice president, said the proposal was one "no self-respecting union member could possibly accept."

He declared it would give the firm "the right to fire anybody on allegations of misconduct without any recourse to arbitration or grievance procedure by the union. In short, the company wants a free hand to break the union and asks the union to tie its own hands behind its back."

"CWA members in Indiana have put on a magnificent battle against the world's largest and richest corporation," Crull said. "They are not going to fold up now."

Help Asked

"We cannot allow the Indiana Bell Telephone Co. to inflict the first death blow to Indiana labor," said the State CIO Council in a new appeal to affiliates for financial assistance for the Communications Workers strike.

Arkansas PAC Girds For Primary

The Arkansas CIO-PAC is conducting a vigorous campaign to qualify every CIO member and family in the State to vote in primary elections in the summer of 1954.

Six congressmen and a senator will be nominated at that time. Charles M. Catton, Arkansas CIO-PAC secretary-treasurer, last week pointed out that "only those possessing poll tax receipts dated prior to Oct. 1, this year, may vote" in the primary.

Insurance Label Drive Set

"BUY YOUR Insurance From A CIO Agent." That's the slogan of the union label drive of CIO's newest international union — the Insurance Workers of America.

In announcing the drive, the union said the CIO agents "can give fellow trade unionists the best possible advice in planning and purchasing insurance" and can help "other organized workers in supplementing the security benefits written into their contracts."

The union urged prospective insurance purchasers to ask the agent to show his annual membership card. The CIO affiliate represents agents of John Hancock, Metropolitan Life in New Jersey, metropolitan New York and Pennsylvania; Home Life, Monumental Life, Quaker City Life, Unity Life and Insurance Association of Syracuse, Pioneer Life, and Lincoln Republic Life.

CIO Joins In Mourning For Chief Justice Vinson

CIO JOINED the nation in mourning the death of Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson last week.

The affable Chief Justice, who died at 63 of a heart attack, did not always see eye to eye with labor in cases that reached the Supreme Court.

However, Vinson last year dissented when the majority of the court held that former Pres. Truman had no constitutional right to seize the steel industry, in an effort to bring about settlement of the strike of the CIO Steelworkers, an action favored by the union.

Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, sent a letter to Mrs. Vinson in which he said:

"Although the Chief Justice was not known as a particular partisan of the labor movement, his contributions to the country as a whole, as legislator, judge, administrator and Chief Justice of the United States, were such as to warrant labor's deep and abiding respect for him.

". . . He led a unanimous court into new areas of enforcement of federal anti-discrimination . . . He expressed for the court his firm conviction that federal policy, once established, could not be undermined by the states.

"Even where he was not in the majority . . . his voice was a strong one in support of the power of the government to protect the nation.

"THROUGHOUT his life, his devotion to the interests of the nation, and his ability to rise above the claims of sectional or partisan loyalties, could never be questioned."

Pres. Eisenhower said that Vinson has served "with efficiency, dignity and integrity." Truman said Vinson "was a great man, a great justice and a great citizen of the country."

A Democrat, Vinson served 14 years as a Representative from Kentucky. He also served as director of the Office of Economic Stabilization, Federal Loan Administrator and head of the Office of War Mobilization.

Washington speculated over whom Pres. Eisenhower would name as Vinson's successor. Prominently mentioned were Gov. Earl Warren of California and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York.

TWU Presses For N. Y. Bus Line Boost

THE CIO Transport Workers are demanding action on their demands for improved conditions for members employed on the public transportation system and private bus lines in New York City.

A meeting of the enlarged Joint Executive Committee of TWU Local 100 has been called for Sept. 22 to press for a wage increase of 25c an hour for the 44,000 employes of the city system. TWU Local 100 represents both the city and private bus line workers.

At a recent meeting the local's executive board demanded immediate action on the arbitration award in its dispute with the private bus lines. The dispute went to the arbitration board following a month-long strike last January.

The strike won an arbitration stipulation which recognized the union's demand for a 40-hour week without loss in take-home pay.

'Stassenated—'

FOA Head Contributes New Word—Means 'You're Fired'

By GENE KELLEY

"STASSENATED" has joined "riffed" in the federal government worker's vocabulary as another way of saying "you're fired."

"Riffed" is an old word to government hands, coming from reduction in force orders that hit agencies when Congress orders budget cuts. "Stassenated" is the new term, coined by and for those whose jobs have been axed by Dir. Harold E. Stassen of the Foreign Operations Administration.

Slashes in federal employment are causing concern not only to those directly involved but even to merchants in Washington, where the heaviest cuts are being made. Business, they say, is off because federal workers have job-jitters.

STASSEN, onetime governor of Minnesota and twice a Republican presidential hopeful, recently ordered "aptitude tests" to help decide which 400 of FOA's 1700 Washington personnel would be fired.

Staking his reputation and a 2c bet with another top Administration official on his ability to pass the test, Stassen was beaten by that official and many of the workers in his own agency. Many of those who scored higher were notified shortly after they were through.

Roger Dougherty, chairman of the CIO Government & Civic Employees unit in FOA, charged publicly that it cost the government $250,000 to conduct the tests. The union had tried to have Stassen call off the "quiz kid" tests.

FOA was set up Aug. 1 to consolidate the Mutual Security Agency and the Technical Cooperation Agency (Point Four). The latter program for extending aid to underdeveloped countries has been severely hampered by the firings ordered by Stassen.

MORE THAN 77,000 federal workers have been discharged since the Eisenhower Administration took over in January. A large number of these were career civil service employes with as much as 20 years' seniority. Over 18,000 were dismissed during July.

In some agencies like FOA, selection of those to be fired is entirely at the discretion of the director. Veterans rights, seniority and other factors may be ignored.

—Herblock in The Washington Post
"Hmmm—Some Of Them Look Suspiciously Nervous."

The State Dept. revealed last week that it had dropped 5000 employes in the U. S. and overseas.

Some reflection of the Administration's charity-towards-business attitude was seen in the firings. In the Federal Trade Commission, three of the four economists who prepared a federal suit against the oil cartel were ousted.

Stephen J. Spingarn, Democratic member of FTC, reported their dismissal as three major U. S. oil companies filed denials of the restraint of trade charge in federal court.

SOCONY-Vacuum, Gulf Oil and Standard Oil of New Jersey, among other firms, were charged with engaging in conspiracy to restrain interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and petroleum products.

Spingarn, who retires Sept. 25, said the dismissals of the economists seemed "like an awful coincidence."

"It is things like this that make me alert," he added.

The FTC said firings of 40 to 50 workers were made necessary by budget cuts imposed by Congress.

U. S. Anti-Bias Order On Farm Loans Shelved

BANKS HAVE been told they can ignore an anti-discrimination ban in their government contracts. The Agriculture Dept. gave southern bankers the green light on bias almost on the eve of a meeting of Pres. Eisenhower's government contracts committee, which has the task of preventing just such discrimination.

Banks handling farm price support loans were advised in May they must abide by a contract clause banning discrimination against employes or job applicants because of race, creed or color. When bankers in the South bitterly protested what they called an "FEPC" clause, they were told it was optional and they could ignore it if they wished.

Asst. Sec. of Agriculture John H. Davis waived the rule requiring observance of the discrimination ban. Pres. Roosevelt in 1943 first invoked a clause calling for non-discrimination on the part of all government contractors.

ASKED if his action had been discussed with Pres. Eisenhower, Davis declined to make a direct answer, referring reporters to Denver where the President was vacationing.

Eisenhower's government contract committee is working on policies and procedures to secure compliance against discrimination by holders of federal contracts. The committee headed by Vice Pres. Nixon already has a number of complaints to process.

CIO Pres. Walter Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany are among members of the committee.

In setting up the group the President said heads of contracting agencies should take "appropriate measures" to secure compliance but he did not set any standards for what is "appropriate."

7 Indicted For Peonage In Alabama

SEVEN ALABAMA white men were charged last week with kidnapping and forced labor of four Negroes, in an indictment issued by a federal grand jury at Birmingham.

The jury also found one of the Negroes, Herbert Thompson, was fatally beaten when he tried to run away, but returned no indictment in the slaying because the State would have jurisdiction in a murder case.

Six of those indicted are members of the Dial family, which operates a farm near Boyd, Ala., just across the Mississippi.

The seven were charged with paying the fines of Negroes to obtain their release from jail and then forcing them to work in the fields to repay the money.

Deadline Near For Scandinavia Trip

NOMINATIONS for the second CIO-Scandinavian Labor Education Workshop, a two-week school for working members of CIO unions to be conducted in Denmark and Norway, will close Sept 20.

Selection of those who will make the trip will be announced by Sept. 23. On Oct. 4, they will meet with CIO officers and staff members for a briefing session in New York before the flight to Europe by chartered plane.

The venture, which was inaugurated in 1952, is sponsored jointly by the Danish and Norwegian Federations of Trade Unions, and Workers Education Associations of Denmark and Norway, and the CIO Depts. of Education & Research and Intl. Affairs.

Plans are being completed by Dir. Michael Ross of the CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs; Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative; Associate Dir. George T. Guernsey of the CIO Dept. of Education & Research; Eric Hauerslev, of the Workers Education Association of Denmark, and Anders Mork, of the Workers Education Association of Norway.

The first week of the workshop will be spent at Breidablik, a Danish folk high school, with the CIO members guests of the Danish Federation of Trade Unions. The following week the delegates will be guests of the Norwegian federation in Oslo and at Ringsaker, a labor college 100 miles north of the capital.

The program is planned so that the CIO visitors will meet workers in their own industries in both countries.

Information and application blanks may be obtained from the CIO Dept. of Education & Research, attention of Associate Dir. George T. Guernsey, 718 Jackson Pl. N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Congress Flunked Out On Drug Safeguards In New FDA Law

WHEN CONGRESS passed a new law restoring the Food & Drug Administration's inspection powers, FDA thought it was all set up again to give the country adequate protection against contaminated and misbranded foods and unsafe drugs.

But a close look at congressional debate on the issue (a highly important factor in any court decision interpreting the law) has convinced FDA officials that they didn't get all they thought they did. Congress came through on food protection, but flunked out on drug safeguards.

The law gives back to FDA the power to require food, drug and cosmetic factories and distribution outlets to submit to FDA inspection at any time, upon presentation of proper credentials by FDA agents.

A few annoying and time-consuming regulations are included for FDA to comply with, but otherwise the law, at least on the surface, is the one Pres. Eisenhower promised after the Supreme Court ruled that the law was vague on the subject of inspection and upheld an Oregon firm which refused to admit an FDA agent.

Penalties Aid Consumers

The law now provides penalties for such refusals, assuring the nation's consumers that they will be reasonably well-protected against such things as rat filth in cheese, horse meat labeled as beef, cow manure in milk and other forms of food adulteration or misbranding.

But a close examination of what congressmen and senators had to say while the law was being debated led FDA Commissioner Charles Crawford to conclude that the lawmakers intended to draw a line between a factory or distribution center's physical works and its records.

In other words, it's okeh for FDA to inspect the factory, the warehouse, the vehicles in which foods, drugs and cosmetics are transported and all pertinent equipment, such as machinery or containers. But it's not okeh for the inspector to take a look at records, such as prescription, formula, complaint or personnel files.

Crawford feels that this can have a very damaging effect on FDA's war on illegal drug traffic, particularly at the drug store level, because prescription and complaint files have provided the most important evidence in bringing violators to justice and the courts have been very severe in their penalties for drug offenses.

Prescription Files Vital

For example, if a druggist bought 100,000 prescription sleeping pills from legal sources (all such sales are recorded) and has none on hand even though his files show that he sold only 10,000 to fill prescriptions, it would be obvious to the FDA agent that 90,000 had somehow been disposed of without proper authorization from a physician.

Credit for thus limiting the inspection powers of FDA goes to lobbyists for the National Association of Retail Druggists and the American Pharmaceutical Association. The two outfits are engaged in a prestige war to show which can do the most for retail druggists.

So Crawford has had to instruct FDA inspectors "to ask permission" to see such files, but not to "press" for permission to see them if refused. Whether FDA will seek a court test of the issue remains to be seen. (LPA)

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THE SENATORS who have been investigating the controversy over battery additive AD-X2 might do well to also probe the high costs of aspirin and other household drugs every family frequently buys.

Certainly Dr. Allen V. Astin, director of the National Bureau of Standards, gave them a lead at the recent congressional hearings on AD-X2, that should also be an eyeopener to moderate-income families.

Savings On Drugs

One of the criticisms against the battery additive is that its actual ingredients cost pennies while the packaged additive sells for $3. A veteran reporter who attended the hearings tells this department that Dr. Astin noted that $36 of AD-X2 have 5c worth of ingredients. Then a Senator asked how much $36 worth of aspirin costs. About 5c, Astin replied.

What's especially revealing is that some newspapers printed Astin's comment about the 5c worth of AD-X2, but no newspaper this department or the reporter who attended could find printed the comment about the worth of aspirin.

Every day thousands of families pay 59c to 62c for a bottle of 100 aspirin tablets under a famous brand name like Bayer or Squibb, when they could buy with perfect assurance 100 aspirin tablets under retailers' or jobbers' private labels, for as little as 11c.

Ask For The Private Brand

The same high pricing extends to many other household drug remedies and toiletries. Some widely-advertised, branded digestive tablets have as their main ingredient that old stand-by, bicarbonate of soda, but cost much more.

People pay $1.35 up for Empirin compound while the equivalent APC tablets (aspirin-phenacetin-caffeine) sell for 55c or less. You may pay 60c a bottle for Phillips milk of magnesia, or 29c for a private brand of milk of magnesia of equivalent ingredients.

Many retailers now have their own private-brand drugs, including independent local druggists, chains, the large department stores and mail-order houses. But you may have to ask specifically for the private brand. If you simply ask for aspirin tablets, the clerk frequently hands the higher-priced advertised brand.

You can feel entirely safe buying the cheaper private-brand drug from a reliable store as long as it carries the three little letters "USP." Those letters stand for United States Pharmacopoeia, the official set of formulas for common drug products. The "USP" label thus assures you that the product is made to the official standard.

In addition, you can often compare the ingredients listed on the labels of drug and vitamin products. Or if the label has the letters "NF," meaning National Formulary, you can also feel assured it meets the official standard.

Sometimes Better Drugs

Not only are the private-brand vitamin products and children's cod-liver oil preparations cheaper than the nationally-advertised brands, but sometimes the potencies of the less costly brands are even higher. The number of units or milligrams of each vitamin is stated on the label for you to compare.

For example, a private-brand vitamin B complex sold by a certain retailer costs only half as much as a well-known advertised brand, but has higher potencies in two vitamins, the same in two others, and is lower in only one.

Give AMA An Idea And It Cries 'Socialized Medicine!'

THE PRESIDENT of the American Medical Association stuck his head firmly in the sand last week and solemnly proclaimed that no family need suffer "catastrophic" financial loss because of extended or chronic illness.

The organized physicians' leader, Dr. Edward J. McCormick, Toledo, O., said there is no necessity for anybody to use up all his savings and sell his house to pay for medical care.

"There is no reason for anyone to go without medical care in this country," he bristled, "irrespective of race, creed, or the state of their finances."

McCormick was reacting to the timorous suggestion of Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby, of the Health, Education & Welfare Dept., that private enterprise find a way to "save any average family from destruction by the catastrophe of illness," and thus defeat what she described as the "threat" of "socialized medicine."

THE CIO, the rest of organized labor and practically everybody else in the country are opposed to socialized medicine. They are in favor of health insurance, and have established many voluntary plans. The doctors' lobby is against them all.

McCormick had no solution to the financial problem of catastrophic illness, but said organized medicine has one in the offing. (It still hasn't come up with an answer to national health insurance.)

"The American Medical Association has been working on this problem for years," he asserted, "and we think it's being solved. Certainly there is no need for government action."

CIO Opposes 2c Bus Fare Hike In L. A.

THE CALIFORNIA CIO Council is battling a proposed 2c increase in Los Angeles bus fares.

Jack Berger, the Council's attorney, has asked the State Public Utilities Commission to deny the increase sought jointly by the Los Angeles Transit Lines and the Pacific Electric Co.

He said the firms' revenue has decreased because the poor service and increased fares have caused many commuters to use autos. Reasonable rates and adequate service would encourage the ever increasing population to use buses, he argued.

Berger pointed out the Council represents 200,000 families in the State, most of them residing in the Los Angeles area. He said that the proposed fare increase and the abolishment of school children's commutation tickets would add to their living costs.

Grocery Chain's Profits Zoom

Safeway Stores reported that although sales were only 7.64% higher in the 24 weeks ended June 13 than for the similar period in 1952, net profits rose 120%. They were $6,192,232 against $2,759,097 in 1952.

Earnings per share were $1.83 against 78c in 1952. Lingan A. Warren, Safeway president, said the profit increase was due chiefly to the removal of controls.

CIO Gives $400,000 To Flint Relief

CIO MEMBERS in Michigan have given liberally of their cash and labor to help in building homes destroyed by the June tornado disaster.

CIO members and unions gave more than $400,000 of the $900,000 contributed throughout the State for tornado relief.

In "Operation Tornado" hundreds of CIO members added to this financial assistance by contributing their labor on a recent weekend for substantial work on rebuilding 190 Flint area homes destroyed by the twister.

EIGHTY-SIX homes were completed with roofs, and in some cases local workers volunteered to come back and finish the job.

The CIO members were joined by members of the AFL building trades, groups of women, unskilled helpers and other community groups as well as union members from Lansing, Muskegon, Midland, Saginaw, Detroit and Cleveland, O.

All home owners were asked to do was to have the foundation laid and materials on hand to build the new homes. A group of Flint commercial builders put their crews to work in the case of a few prospective home owners who were unable to finish the work before the deadline.

The Flint CIO Council donated $1500 for accident insurance to cover all volunteer workers and solicited workers. The council assigned three officers to full-time work on the project: William Schwartz of the Communications Workers, and Walter Coggins and David Lambert of the Auto Workers. Charles Bower of Muskegon, CIO representative for the Michigan Welfare League, also came to help.

Legion Hears From CIO, A Big Veterans' Group

SPEAKING AS head of "one of the great veterans organizations of this country," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther addressed the recent American Legion convention at St. Louis.

"Hundreds of thousands of CIO members have served their country in the military service, both in times of war and peace," Reuther said. "Our unions recognize the problems of the veterans, and I think that increasingly, the veterans are coming to realize the problems of the unions."

He said one of the problems faced by veterans and the rest of the nation is false governmental economy, which he called "the partner in crime of unnecessary waste." Reuther declared:

"I say it is no economy but social waste if our society, rich as it is, cannot provide to veterans and non-veterans decent homes at decent prices and decent rents; adequate schools for our growing population of young people; the type of medical care which now, too often, is reserved only for the very wealthy; and a real social security program that will make easier the years of retirement of our constantly aging population.

"The Communist party, both above ground and below ground, is a menace. But it is a menace with its back to the wall. It is not the sort of menace that, by any stretch of the imagination, requires us to destroy our Constitution, turn our back on the Bill of Rights and pass legislation in Washington and the state capitols that will undermine basic freedoms."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

A BITTER LABOR DAY present given to the organized workers of Alabama was the so-called "right to work" bill passed by their state legislature and signed into law by their governor.

Almost word for word, it is the same vicious law that has done so much to hurt thousands of workers in the state of Virginia. Our men who have had to face this law in operation know that the only real rights it confers on anyone, is to give employers the right to break strikes under the protection of state police.

Just as the Communists have learned to hide their causes behind fine sounding names, the reactionaries who are behind these laws use the words "right to work" to dupe many innocent and well-meaning people into supporting them.

Naturally, the reactionaries do their most effective work among those who are least informed. It is a fact that the Alabama law was pushed through mainly by representatives from rural areas, where there was little or no industry, and little or no union organization.

A RECENT ISSUE of CIO's Economic Outlook pointed out the setup in many state legislatures, and the great power given to rural areas, far out of proportion with their population. To these farmers, small tradesmen, local civic leaders, the reactionaries pour out a bitter hatred for labor.

Your leadership in CIO recognized the problem. Already, we have launched a nightly series of radio programs, so that the American people may be better informed, not simply our own people in the unions, but all the people. Our state councils have done fine work in heading off similar bills in many state legislatures—and I certainly include the leadership of the Alabama CIO Council which fought from the word go, right down to the last moment.

WE CAN DO MUCH MORE. The reactionaries have behind them the money power of the most selfish elements of Big Business. We have behind us the visions and aims and ideals, backed by millions in manpower, of the trade union movement. The reactionaries spend dollars. We have to spend time, and more time, and more time, reaching people, reasoning with them, talking to them.

The reactionaries like to lump together all the social gains we have made, in the past 20 years, and call them "creeping socialism." In these days, when many people seem to be more afraid of words than what is behind them, such slogans can be harmful—but they can only be harmful if we do not take a positive stand and point out the truth; that the real danger to our nation is a kind of creeping totalitarianism, hiding behind fine words to take away from the people those social benefits they have won at so great a cost.

to remain in the Cabinet. Under questioning, he acknowledged that if Eisenhower had changed his mind about not supporting the 19 amendments earlier agreed upon between the Labor Dept. and the White House staff, he would have been "able to continue" as secretary.

DURKIN SAID that while he did not feel free to discuss the agreement, most of the amendments accepted by the White House representatives had been included in Sen. Taft's proposals for revision in 1949 and early this year, as well as in legislation sponsored by Taft and others in 1951.

He termed the agreed-upon amendments "favorable to labor and also to employers."

Durkin said that he was not yet ready to say that the Administration is "unfriendly to labor" or that "anti-labor segments have gotten control." He said he's "reserving judgment" until the Administration position is made known.

"Administration policy is still to be made," he said. "When they'll state the Administration position regarding changes, and what they will be, I don't know. As of now, no position has been formulated."

Durkin said that the Labor Dept. had been instructed by the President to meet with designated White House representatives and "try to work out an understanding." He said he felt the President's representatives had "full power" to represent the President, who personally had attended one of the meetings.

"We believed that when the agreements were accepted, they were finally approved," Durkin declared.

"As a member of a labor organization I have always tried to abide by agreements, and as an official I had the duty to see that members of our organization complied with terms of contracts and to see that employers did likewise."

As recently as Aug. 11 Durkin defended the Eisenhower Administration from an attack upon it by the acting president of his own union. He said then that he believed the President intended to adhere to his campaign promises to make the Taft-Hartley Act "fairer" to labor.

THE REASON for his present change in attitude, he said, should be attributed to what happened after Aug. 11.

"I now feel that this agreement is not going to be carried out," he said. "I was told so."

Durkin said that his reasons for resigning, besides the decision that the agreement was not to be carried out, also involved the fact that the Administration still has not taken any position at all regarding T-H amendments and "because I want to return to my old position" as head of the AFL Plumbers. He took over again as head of his union on Sept. 11.

UAW Cracks Farm Implement Front As Deere Revises Pact

CONTRACT revisions following the "living document" principles reached earlier with major auto firms have been signed by the CIO Auto Workers and John Deere & Co., big agricultural implement manufacturer.

Dir. Pat Greathouse of the UAW-CIO Agricultural Dept. hailed the Deere pact as "the first major break in the farm implement industry's united front against the living document principle."

He predicted that the Deere agreement would have an immediate effect on the rest of the industry.

"I am sure that they will come to terms with the union on long overdue contract revisions which they have so far unreasonably resisted," he said.

DEERE EMPLOYS 15,000 workers in seven plants. The present contract, signed in Dec. 1950, runs to 1955 and covers units in Dubuque, Des Moines, Waterloo and Ottumwa, Iowa, and three plants in East Moline, Ill.

A major revision calls for conversion to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' new consumers' price index with a 1% adjustment in wages for each 1.018 point movement in the index. This is comparable to the General Motors formula that calls for a 1c adjustment when the index moves upward .6 points.

Other revisions include:

The annual improvement factor increase remains at 3%. Since these percentages are applied to average rates as of 1950 which were $1.70 an hour, the factor increases will average 5.1c an hour.

OF THE 14% current cost of living "float," 10% has been frozen into the base rates, an average of 17c an hour added to base pay.

Restoration of the 1% pay cut instituted June 1 by establishing the index figure of Dec. 1952 as the transition point to the new index. This agreement results in an additional 1% increase the first pay period after Sept. 1.

Greathouse said that provisions of retired workers under group insurance plans had already been established with the Deere Co.

"From an average hourly rate of $1.70 an hour in 1950, Deere workers have progressed to an average rate of $2.18 an hour with signing of the new contract revisions," Greathouse said.

"Workers in skilled trades classifications have received a total pay raise of 49c an hour since 1950, an amount equal to the total skilled trades increases in the auto industry," he added.

Wisconsin CIO Plans Displays

Wisconsin union-made products will be on display when the State's CIO Council convenes in Milwaukee Oct. 15-18. The display will acquaint CIO members with products made by union people in Wisconsin.

Council Pres. Charles Schultz hopes the effort will help bring industry into the state and develop better employer-union relationships.

URW Signs At Goodyear For 12c Pay Boost

A THIRD agreement containing an hourly wage and welfare package totalling more than 12c an hour was signed last week by the CIO Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

The firm was the third of the industry's Big Four to reach a settlement with the URW-CIO in the current round of reopenings on wages and welfare benefits. Negotiations with the last, the U. S. Rubber Co., were continuing in Cincinnati late last week, with an extended deadline due to expire at midnight Friday.

THE GOODYEAR settlement, like those at the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and the B. F. Goodrich Co., calls for wage increases of 2.5c to 5c an hour, with the rest of the package going to improvements in company-paid insurance and hospitalization programs for employes and dependents, and a third week of vacation after three years' service instead of the previous five years.

The pact covers 35,000 Goodyear employes. Wage increases are retroactive to Aug. 31. The other benefits become effective Oct. 31.

Oil Union Gains In Canada Power

Local 649 of the CIO Oil Workers has won increases up to 34c an hour for maintenance and operating workers and up to $64 a month for technical personnel of the Saskatchewan Power Corp.

ACW Gains 12.5c Boost For 2700

A 12.5c HOURLY wage increase covering 2700 workers employed in eight plants of the Palm Beach Co., one of the largest U. S. clothing firms, has been announced by the CIO Clothing Workers.

The union said the terms of the agreement renewing the contract between the ACW and Palm Beach was the climax of a series of conferences held in various cities.

In addition to the pay boost, the renewed contract provides for broader hospitalization and surgical benefits, a more liberal vacation plan and other standard benefits of ACW contracts.

Negotiators for the union included ACW Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason and Abraham Chatman, assisted by William Isaacson, the union's general counsel, and Ruth Vaughan, manager of the ACW's Southeastern Regional Joint Board.

Miss Dickason, who is southern director of the Amalgamated, said the wage boost and other benefits will bring the total increase to an average of about 15c an hour for the employes.

Shoe Workers Organizer Dies

Harry D'Alessandro, of Lynn, Mass., an organizer for the CIO Shoe Workers since 1950, died suddenly Sept. 6. Funeral services were attended by Pres. Russell J. Taylor and Sec.-Treas. James Mitchell of the shoe union.

Looking To '54—

Big Boys Raise Slush Fund Against Douglas

(The 1954 congressional elections are coming up fast. Here is the first of a series of articles about outstanding senators and their views on next year's campaign.)

By MILTON PLUMB

FOR TWO YEARS in succession, the two groups of political experts probably best qualified to make such a designation have named the Illinois' hard-working Paul Douglas (D.) the nation's "ablest Senator."

The title came first from a poll of over 200 Washington newspaper correspondents; last year it was bestowed again in a national survey of political scientists, the men who make a living out of their specialized knowledge of government processes.

Yet, despite the high respect he has earned as a legislator, Douglas has already been picked by big business as a prime target when he comes up for reelection next year. All indications are that he will run into one of the heaviest-financed campaigns ever launched to defeat a Senator.

BACK TO THE PEOPLE.—Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) is spending most of his time between congressional sessions talking directly with the people of his state. He'll come back to the Senate with a clear understanding of workers' needs after many hundreds of sessions like this one outside factory gates in all parts of Illinois.

It wasn't an accident when Americans for America, the new super-"patriotic" front for the same old group of Tories, located its national office in Chicago, Douglas' home district.

This midwest take-off on the Committee for Constitutional Government went through its preliminary political squirmishes last year. The pattern it followed of backing reactionary candidates like Rep. Busby (R. Ill.) and trying unsuccessfully to defeat liberals like Rep. Yates (D. Ill.) was one for which its leaders have long been noted.

Backers of the AFA include rich bankers, cattle and oil men, advertising executives and business tycoons. Frank Gannett, founder of the CCG, of course, is among them.
